Cleveland Theatres Change Hands

The Select Amusement Company of Cleveland bought the Enjoy-U theatre this week. This is the second house purchased by the Select Company within the past few weeks, the other being the Moonlight on Broadway. It is the intention of the company to obtain the control of no less than six motion picture theatres in Cleveland. It will then purchase its features outright for its own houses.

The Yale theatre building, Cleveland, has been sold by the Yale Realty Company to J. Hemstreet. The building was originally built as a stock proposition, stock selling for ten dollars a share to the people living in the neighborhood. Instead of leasing the theatre to an experienced manager, the company decided to run it, with disastrous results. Lately it was leased by Schumann, Fine & Kramer, of the Dennison Square theatre, and business is said to be good.

Sherry Entertains at Fishing Party

Saturday and Sunday William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, entertained the members of his office staff on a fishing excursion on Staten Island. Incidentally his car was stopped by an officer on the charge that it was exceeding the speed limit and the magistrate's court in West Brighton thought that it was worth $50 to the car's owner.

In the party, besides Mr. Sherry and Mr. Lappan, were Mr. Sherry's general manager, Norman J. Sennott; his general sales manager, Daniel J. Savage; his auditor, A. C. Novotny; John S. Clark, of the New York exchange of the William L. Sherry Service; Fred Langtree and James Calvin Meyers, Mr. Sherry's counsel.

Six Stars Named to Make Loan Film

Plans of the Government made known this week provide that six stars shall contribute negatives to be used for the fourth Liberty Loan in September or October. Mae Murray, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, William S. Hart, Mack Sennett and Charles Chaplin are among those of the West Coast invited by the Government to make such a picture. In most instances work has already been commenced on these, and they will be ready for shipment to the managers of the publicity department for the coming loan within a short time.

Niles Seeks Aid in Labor Problem

David K. Niles, well known within the industry, has sent the following letter to Motion Picture News, asking that it be given publicity as a preliminary to a personal letter which will be sent to whatever theatres the Department of Labor thinks best.

The letter, which follows, is self explanatory:

"The Honorable George W. Coleman, Director of Information and Education of the Department of Labor, has asked me to come to Washington to assist him in disseminating information regarding the Government labor policy. At present, our Department is especially concerned with making the American public familiar with the work of the U. S. employment service, which is aimed to mobilize and stabilize labor as a war necessity, and to do away with 'labor poaching.' The labor turnover, as you well know, has been tremendous and has resulted in the tremendous curtailing of production. As a motion picture man, I was glad to learn how essential the motion picture industry has become to the Government as a means of reaching the people. I am anxious to secure for the Government the still further co-operation of motion picture theatres, especially in labor centers where U. S. employment service bureaus have been established. With the aid of slides and perhaps motion pictures, each theatre can be of vital service to our country, and will in reality become an agent of the Department of Labor."

Ira M. Mosher, of the Palace, is directing the distribution of slides and advertisements for local theatre programs for the publicity committee of the local food administration.

The annual police outing and the Bishop Walsh consecration ceremonies were among the local events shot by Manager Earl L. Crabb for the Strand Local Pictorial Review this week.

Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, was reported in last week's casualty list as severely wounded, having received three German bullets in his right arm and two in his right leg. According to a letter which he wrote to his mother, the Germans opened fire from a machine gun nest when Lieut. Cromelin was within ten feet of them. He described his wounds as slight, dictating the letter from a hospital bed at Vichy, France. He is a member of the 12th Field Artillery.

Coast Plans New Film Service

Six or More Producing Units Expected to Release Through New Organization — Matzene Ready to Begin

(Special to Motion Picture News)

LOS ANGELES is to be the home office and producing center of a new film service organization, according to indications very apparent at the Brunton Studios this week. The addition to the film industry will consist of one parent or distributing organization conducted by a separate corporation, and for this there will be six or more producing units, each a separate corporation. The owners of the parent organization will be interested in all of the subsidiary corporations.

The promoters of this addition to the film industry have brought out several new stars, and negotiations are now pending with several well known screen players who have been starred by other companies previously.

R. G. Matzene, prominent Los Angeles photographer, who for a number of years has conducted an exclusive photograph studio in Los Angeles, and for five years has been a student of motion pictures, is the head of one producing corporation, Matzene Pictures Company, Inc. This company will make eight releases per year starring Mme. Yorska, a very successful French actress and protege of Sarah Bernhart, who is known to American theatre goers as the result of one very successful tour and forty weeks in American vaudeville.

Zane Grey, the novelist, who has disposed of screen rights on four of his stories, all of which have been produced, is the head of the Zane Grey Pictures Corporation, which will begin the production of a film version, adapted from his novel, "The U. P. Trail." W. Lawson Butt, leading man who has been seen in prominent releases of several West Coast producing companies, will, in all probability, be featured in the first Zane Grey production. Seven other plays will be made from Grey novels during the year.

Perhaps the most interesting person brought to the screen for some time is Helen Keller, who will be the star of subjects made by the Helen Keller Corporation recently organized in New York, and affiliated with the parent organization, now in the process of formation. George Foster Platt, who produced "The Bluebird" for Artcraft, is to be director of the Keller Company. Announcement of the formation of other companies will be made shortly.

The Bessie Barriscale and Louise Glaum Paralta Pictures Companies are to continue producing at the Brunton studios, and it is said the arrangement with Paralta Plays and their present release through Hodkinson will continue.

The other two producing units working at the Brunton studios are those of the Pathe organization of which Frank Keenan is star, and the Haworth Pictures Corporation unit headed by Sessue Hayakawa.

Cohen Offers Aid to Pres. Schaeffer

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, made public this week a letter which he has written to Peter Schaeffer, newly elected president of the national body, offering his co-operation. He urges that the new administration set out to build a worth while foundation for amalgamation of exhibitor bodies and that much attention be given to the development of the organization.

Spoor Answers Back About Chaplin

To a representative of Motion Picture News last week, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, made the following statement in regard to the Charlie Chaplin picture called "Triple Trouble":

"For the protection of exhibitors planning to run 'Triple Trouble,' the new Charlie Chaplin film, and who may have read a statement that Charlie Chaplin never made a picture entitled 'Triple Trouble,' I wish to state that the film is new in its entirety, just as advertised, and is not a rehash, nor a reissue under a new title. There need be no doubt whatever on this matter.

"It is true that Charlie Chaplin did not make a film for us labeled with the title 'Triple Trouble,' but we did make this film with Charlie Chaplin and no part of it has ever been shown on the screen before. The facts are that at the time of making the picture it went under the working title of 'Life.' Essanay is in the habit of reviewing its titles just as well as its pictures, before releasing them. Frequently a title is changed when we believe we have a stronger one, as well as are scenes in the picture itself.

"This was the case in 'Triple Trouble,' Essanay considering it a better and more suitable title for the picture than 'Life,' which in fact was merely a tentative title. No change was made after release.

"Essanay has many Chaplin films and it has never attempted to change any title after releasing the picture under another name. It has reissued Chaplin pictures, and has always stated that they were reissues, and all these reissues were released under the same title as originally. It has also put out two Chaplin reviews, which it plainly stated in its advertising were made up of other Chaplin films."

Fleisher Settles Down with Universal

Nate Fleisher has severed his connection with the Kleine sales force, travelling out of Cleveland, and now occupies Tom Colby's old position as city salesman for Universal. Fleisher said that he liked everything connected with the Kleine exchange, and hated to leave it, but he has been on the road for the past fourteen years, and was glad of an opportunity to remain in the city.

Farnum Marries Rubens

Alma Rubens, star in Triangle plays, was married secretly on June 14, it became known last week, to William Franklin Smith, known in pictures as Franklyn Farnum. In Los Angeles it was reported that Miss Rubens denied it, but that Farnum affirmed it, and both accepted congratulations.

Miss Rubens' contract with Triangle, it is said, contained a provision that she was not to marry during the life of the agreement.

Committee on Public Information and N. A. M. P. I.

As the result of the meeting called last week, by Carl Byoir, associate chairman of the Committee on Public Information, at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, William A. Brady, president of the Association, appointed the following committee to work in conjunction with the Committee on Public Information in matters pertaining to the picture industry:

The committee appointed is composed of Gabriel Hess, Goldwyn, chairman; L. R. Thomas, North American Motion Picture Company; Paul H. Cromlin, president of Inter-Ocean and William A. Brady.

Aragon, Gillespie Brothers & Co., Reginald Warde; Jacob Wilk, Hiller and Wilk; C. E. Sawyer, Carribean Film Co.; L. Auerbach, Export & Import Film Co.; E. H. Kaufman, Interocean; M. Moran, Interocean Forwarding, and J. Oppenheimer of Robertson-Cole Co.

United Plans Taking Solid Shape

With the date for the commencement of the active operation of the project of United Picture Theatres of America only two months off, the executive organization of that corporation is busily engaged in arranging the program of pictures that shall constitute the early releases to member-houses. Important progress has already been made, and it may be expected that an announcement to the effect that several stars will be seen hereafter only in pictures to be released to United houses exclusively will be made within the week. Several pictures that have already evoked considerable discussion prior to their release are also under consideration, and the United officials maintain that their first announcement of pictures secured will justify their assurance to exhibitor-Members that the releases under the co-operative plan will combine a uniformly high standard of quality with strong box-office appeal.

Under the United plan, none of these pictures can be shown in any but United houses, nor can the number of United houses be increased in any section after a fixed quota, based on the number of days during which an average good picture can be profitably exhibited in that locality, is reached.

New Chicago Theatre to Be the Randolph

According to a report to Motion Picture News from Chicago, the new theatre which is to be built for Jones, Linick & Schaefer on Randolph Street, Chicago, will be a model of modern perfection. It is declared that no time or money will be spared toward the modernization of every adjunct that will improve on theatrical architecture. The theatre, which will be called the Randolph, is destined for motion picture presentation in a new and artistic manner.

Aaron J. Jones, in speaking of his new project, said: "The Randolph will, so we plan, be the prettiest playhouse in Chicago. It will not be spacious, but it will be cosy. And we will present the finest pictures that it is possible to secure anywhere. The Orpheum has always been the Jones, Linick & Schaefer picture home—for steadily we have presented first-run pictures there since September of 1907—something no other Chicago theatre can claim, but the new Randolph, when finished, will be given the place at the head of our motion picture column."

Mr. Hoffman retains the New York and New England rights.

Ray Asks Exhibitor Aid in Thrift Stamp Sale

Producer Thomas H. Ince and Charles Ray, one of his stars, have worked out an idea through which they believe they can help a great deal in winning the war if the exhibitors will co-operate with them. The test has already been made, and has proven most successful at the Rosemary theatre, Ocean Park, Cal.

The plan provides that the exhibitor showing a Charles Ray picture shall carry a coupon on his program containing this proposition:

Mail this coupon with twenty-five cents to CHARLES RAY, care of Ince Studios, Los Angeles, and you will receive an autographed photograph of Mr. Ray and a Thrift Stamp.
Name .....
Address .....

By the evening of the second day after the first coupons had been used on the Rosemary programs, Ray had received thirty-seven responses. The photographs were mailed, and upon each was pasted a Thrift Stamp.

Messrs. Ince and Ray are taking this plan up with the officers of the Motion Picture War Service Association, so that the association may purchase stamps direct from Washington, and sell them to the stars to use for this plan.

Fifth Division Holds Astor "Feed"

The Fifth Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry gave concrete proof of its "essential" footing on July 31, when a luncheon was given at the Astor Hotel. Optimism, joviality, "Jack" Flinn and big preparations for a membership drive were among the principal things that went to make the affair a smashing success in every way.

Although the Fifth Division has a membership of but eighty, the Astor luncheon, which was designated as a "mitt me" species, was attended by at least one hundred.

John C. Flinn, of Metro, was toastmaster, and in addition "put over" a well timed hint that elaborate plans for a big membership campaign are now under way. This, it is expected, will boost the membership of the Fifth Division over the century mark—and then some.

Other speakers at the luncheon who made timely and interesting addresses were Walter W. Irwin, of Vitagraph; William A. Brady, of the National Association, and Paul Gulick, of Universal.

Coast Directors to Aid U. S.

8 Members Named for the West and They Will Have Charge of Scenes for Government Pictures Made in That Section

CHARLES S. HART, director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has appointed eight directors from the Motion Picture Directors' Association stationed on the Pacific Coast to co-operate with the ten men from this organization already contributing their services to this branch of the government service in the East. It was originally planned only to appoint Eastern directors to positions on this board, but it has been realized since the members of the M. P. D. A. offered their services to the government last May that representatives were needed in Los Angeles.

The eight Western members are Frank Beal, Walter Edwards, Robert Daly, Larry Weber, Ben Wilson, James Young, Roy Clements and Colin Campbell.

The duties of these men were pointed out by Captain E. H. Calvert, member of the association in the East, who is actively engaged in the Division of Films. He said that certain scenes from the West might at any time be required for insertion in official pictures made in the East and that the filming of such scenes would be in charge of this body of men.

"They will also co-operate with the Eastern body in other duties," said Captain Calvert. "These members of the Directors' Association pass on all official war pictures. Further than that, wherever the government wants a certain propaganda picture produced it is the business of this body to consider bids from the various producing companies. Not bids in money, but bids as to the type of production the picture will receive. The propaganda is then awarded to the 'highest' bidder to produce and put on the market in this country.

"It is this board's business," continued Captain Calvert, "to pass on all scenarios for such pictures and to supervise production details. Through the board's services producing companies have at their disposal practically the entire right of way of the country. Scenes of camps, ships, military activities and the like can be secured through this board. The newly-appointed Western members will perform these duties in their territory."

William Clark Confers with Pettijohn

Following a week spent at the executive offices of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, William J. Clark, Grand Rapids, treasurer of that organization, left last Tuesday for Chicago.

Mr. Clark will return this week, at which time it is understood an important announcement will be made regarding Affiliated's activities. This announcement, it is believed, will have to do with the active operation of the Affiliated plan.

One of the objects of Mr. Clark's trip to New York was to confer with Charles C. Pettijohn, the General Counsel of the organization, and Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of its Board of Directors, regarding the physical handling of the Affiliated product.

It is understood that negotiations are in progress whereby the matter of the shipping and inspection of Affiliated prints and paper by a nationally organized distributing system will be placed before the Board of Directors of the Affiliated within the next few days.

Coast Studios Experience Difficulty

Many rumors were current the week of July 28 in Los Angeles of a threatened strike of union grips at the Triangle studios. A federal labor mediator and managers of Triangle are said to have adjusted the differences, and all returned to work.

Eighty extras of the various studios were placed under arrest by officers enforcing the "work or fight" ruling. Film companies must now depend upon older men for mob and atmosphere scenes, according to an edict of the police and draft boards of Los Angeles.

Fox Film—Personnel and Its Policy

Second Row: Robert Churchill, Denver; Field Carmichael, Detroit; C. E. Penrod, Indianapolis; C. W. Young, Kansas City; Edward S. Flynn, Minneapolis; Louis Rosenbluh, New York City.
Bottom Row: Frank C. Burhaus, Pittsburgh; W. J. Citron, San Francisco; D. M. Thomas, St. Louis; C. F. Sennings, Washington, D. C.; Maurice West, Montreal; Benjamin Rohers, Toronto.

IN its fourth year as a producing and distributing company, the Fox Film Corporation, announcing its policy for 1918-1919, points to its record of achievements as justification of the aims it affirmed when the corporation was formed. These aims, says a statement from the company, can be summed up in about two sentences. They are: "Making and selling motion pictures must be conducted on sound principles which obtain in any business."

A point that makes the Fox Film Corporation unique is that Mr. Fox is an exhibitor himself, and the films he makes must be such that will prove profitable to him in his capacity as theatre owner.

The executives of the Fox Film Corporation are all men of large affairs and of proven ability. Their training is not limited to the film business alone.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is probably one of the most far-seeing, resourceful men in the business today. Long a newspaper man of varied experience, he also has the added advantage of having been prominent in the affairs of the biggest corporation in the country—the corporation of the City of New York. As secretary to Police Commissioner Waldo, Mr. Sheehan showed a thorough grasp of the intricate problems of city administration, demonstrated that he was a leader of men and a builder, and proved that he had the necessary vision to do big things in a big way.

In Herman Robbins, assistant general manager, the corporation has a man who has a thorough knowledge of every angle of the film industry, a man of ideas and proven capacity for directing big affairs.

A shining example of Mr. Fox's policy of surrounding himself with men of affairs is James E. MacBride, assistant to the general manager. Mr. MacBride, who recently joined the organization, resigned as Civil Service Commissioner of New York City to become associated with the Fox forces. Although he was drawing a large salary from the City he received such a flattering offer from Mr. Fox that he felt obliged to accept. He has had a wide experience in advertising and publicity work. He won distinction as the manager of the remarkably successful campaign of John F. Hylan for Mayor of New York.

Winfield R. Sheehan, General Manager of Fox Film Corporation

The district managers are Harry F. Campbell, stationed at Boston; Clyde Eckhardt, at Chicago; George Mann, at Los Angeles, and Paul C. Mooney, at Cleveland.

The branch managers in the United States are as follows: Sam Dembow, Jr., Atlanta; William Shapiro, Boston; Thomas W. Brady, Buffalo; Harry W. Willard, Chicago; Lester Sturm, Cincinnati; Sidney Abel, Cleveland; E. H. Wachter, Dallas; Robert Churchill, Denver; Field Carmichael, Detroit; C. E. Penrod, Indianapolis; C. W. Young, Kansas City; Morgan A. Walsh, Los Angeles; Edward S. Flynn, Minneapolis; Allan S. Moritz, New Orleans; Louis Rosenbluh, New York City; Sydney Meyers, Omaha; Jack Levy, Philadelphia; Frank C. Burhans, Pittsburgh; Joseph B. Roden, Salt Lake City; W. J. Citron, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; D. M. Thomas, St. Louis; C. F. Senning, Washington, D. C.

The Canadian managers are Maurice West, Montreal; Benjamin Rogers, Toronto, and Joseph Liebermann, St. John, N. B.

The statement continues:

The sales policy of the Fox Film Corporation is a simple one: Fair and square merchandising based on the principle that the exhibitor has some rights and that the business cannot live unless everybody concerned with it gets his fair share of the profits. This policy has been the rule ever since the foundation of the company, and that it has been successful is proved by the growth of the Fox business.

William Fox Launches Fall Drive

Announces Two New Brands of Pictures, with Six Stars, and Promises Lively War Specials—Life of Pershing Now Being Done

TWO new groups of pictures with six stars, the details of releases on three other groups and the announcement of a number of timely pictures, including one war subject made under the direction of R. A. Walsh; a picture based on the life of General John J. Pershing; one based on the story of the world's most beautiful woman, and a submarine phantasy—are described in the statement of 1918-1919 policy issued this week by William Fox.

The two new groups are Victory Pictures and Excel Pictures, and the policy of expansion involved in their inauguration, it is declared, will be characteristic of all Fox activities during the forthcoming season. Mr. Fox is quoted as being of the opinion that the war will continue to result in a general bettering of conditions in the motion picture trade.

Six Groups in All

During the 1918-1919 season, beginning September 1, Mr. Fox will issue six groups of productions, all except two series to be on a basis of twenty-six releases a year. The groups include: A series of big timely pictures, Standard Pictures, Victory Pictures, Excel Pictures, Sunshine Comedies and Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

There will be no specified number of unusual productions. No release dates will be announced at this time for the pictures already completed and additions to the present list will be made strictly on a quality basis, after the productions have been completed and passed upon by a reviewing board. Releases will not be as a group but as individual attractions, on the open market, or otherwise as may be decided later. Announcement has thus far been made of four of this type.

"The Prussian Cur" was produced by R. A. Walsh and said to have cost $250,000. This production has a very large cast, including Miriam Cooper and Captain Horst von der Goltz, self-confessed German spy, who is responsible for the story and who has revealed minute details of the system inaugurated by Ambassador von Bernstorff for crippling America's war industries.

"Why America Will Win" was staged by Richard Stanton and is based on the life of General John J. Pershing, who is America's hero of the hour and who is certain constantly to be more and more strongly in the limelight as the endless battle on the Western Front progresses. It is claimed by the producer that a force of trained investigators spent many months obtaining and verifying the data from which the scenario for "Why America Will Win" was written. One of the big features is the reproduction of the seventy-five-mile gun used in the bombardment of Paris.

Big Kellermann Film

"Queen of the Sea," featuring Annette Kellermann, is heralded as a bigger and better production than "A Daughter of the Gods." It is radically different, it is declared, from any other picture ever made—so different that its originators have coined the term "Submarine phantasy" for describing it.

"Why I Would Not Marry"—A story of the world's most beautiful woman and her life problem.

Standard Pictures

Theda Bara	8
William Farnum	8
All-Star Casts	10

The big releases include a war production, a picture based on the life of General Pershing; an Annette Kellerman submarine phantasy, and the story of the world's most beautiful woman and her life problem.

In addition to the foregoing productions, Mr. Fox during the coming season will complete a picture based on Theodore Roosevelt's story, "Put the Flag on the Firing Line," and also will exhibit "Salome." The latter, of course, is a Theda Bara super-production.

All booking arrangements are in the hands of Samuel F. Kingston, who has offices at the headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. Details are not available at branch offices of the company.

The new season for Standard Pictures, which are now just a little more than one year old, will begin Sunday, September 1. These productions will be released, as heretofore, on a basis of twenty-six a year, with Theda Bara and William Farnum as the principal stars. Each of these actors will produce eight pictures and the other ten will be productions of a big timely nature with all-star casts.

Zane Grey Stories

The first Standard Pictures release of the season will be the William Farnum de luxe production, "Riders of the Purple Sage." This is a dramatization of one of Zane Grey's best Western novels. The production was made in Utah and in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, in Arizona.

William Fox, Head of the Fox Film Corporation

Another Zane Grey story, "The Rainbow Trail," will furnish the basis of the second William Farnum release of the season. This is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage."

Miss Bara's first two productions will be "When a Woman Sins" and "The She Devil." The former, it is announced, brings this actress back to her best days and affords her another opportunity for the creation of a vampire role.

"The She Devil" is reported to be materially different from anything Miss Bara hitherto has done. It is the story of a beautiful, domineering coquette, playing her will on her many admirers.

Victory Pictures will be released on a basis of twenty-six productions a year under a group contract, the first release being early in September. This new series will alternate with Standard Pictures and will consist of productions featuring Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh, exclusively in stories taken from works of the best known modern novelists and from big plays that have had successful runs in dramatic theatres on Broadway.

The first of these pictures will be "Fame and Fortune" which is a dramatization of "Slow Burgess," a very recent novel by Charles Alden Seltzer. Tom Mix appears as the star.

Miss Brockwell's first picture in the Victory series will be "Kultur." "The Strange Woman" will be her second. This story also has been novelized and the sales of the book are reported by the publishers to have exceeded one million copies.

George Walsh's debut as a Victory Pictures star will be in "I'll Say So," a play directed by his brother, R. A. Walsh, who has directed many of the biggest William Fox successes.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Edel?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

HURRAY! Hurray for what? Why "Hurray" for our Motion Picture Orchestra. It's getting along famously.

Remember that we had Jesse Lasky for the cornet? And Harry Schwalbe for the oboe? And we thought of calling in Bill Brady for the bass drum?

Well, now we have a pianist who can double on the pipe organ. Yes, and a pianist of no mean ability.

It's Harold Edel—Managing Director of the Strand theatre, New York. The same Edel and the same Strand that you read about in the manufacturers' advertisements whenever he condescends to say that a picture went over big at the Forty-seventh street house.

Harold Edel is eligible to our Motion Picture Orchestra. But now that we have admitted him we don't suppose we can have S. L. Rothapfel wield the baton. To say the least, there might be a clash of artistic exhibitor temperaments—a discord, as it were.

But Harold Edel is a real pianist, as the instrument in his office will show, and the harmony he brings forth will prove if you happen in his office some morning when he is seeking inspiration for a presentation idea via the ivory keys.

If you stick around a while, and the inspiration doesn't come, you will probably be able to follow him out to the empty auditorium and hear some strains from the pipe organ.

And by the way, we have been reading picture theatre advertisements so long that it is difficult to merely say "a pipe organ." We are always tempted to say "the monster $500,000 pipe organ," or "the mammoth $5,000 pipe organ," or some sort of elephantine dollars and cents instrument.

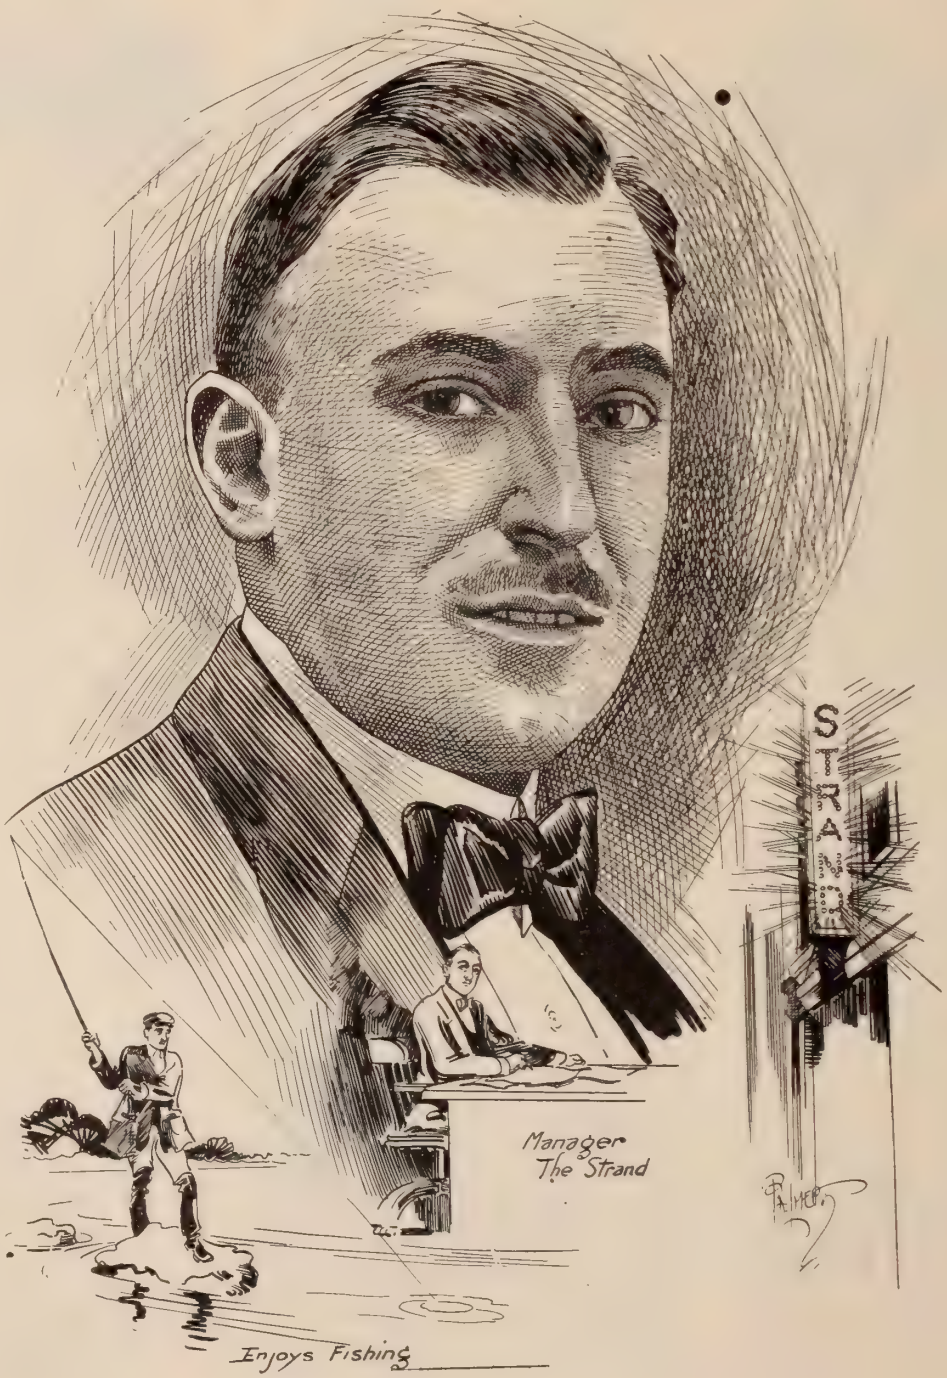
Getting back to Harold Edel we had probably better begin at the start of that manager's interesting career. First crack out of the box we'll tell you his age. The fact that we know it shows that Manager Edel has none of the sensitiveness on that point possessed by most motion picture personalities.

Harold Edel was born in Greenville, S. C., twenty-nine years ago.

And he must have slipped something over on Thomas A. Edison and entered this world with a bit of film in his mouth—for in 1904, just turning the age of fifteen, we find him managing a penny arcade on Fourteenth street.

The owner of the penny arcade was the late Mitchel Mark. And one of the most consistent tributes paid the late Mitchel Mark was his uncanny ability to pick the right men to handle different branches of his many activities.

Young Edel must have "showed something" as a youthful arcade manager, for he was soon given charge of a picture theatre seating one hundred and twenty-five in Lawrence, Mass.



After six months here, Mitchel Mark again polished a higher rung in the ladder and the still youthful Edel was transferred to Cleveland, to manage for the next two years the Coliseum and Globe theatres. Picture men who remember when the Alhambra in Cleveland's exclusive section was the most luxurious motion picture house in the country, will also remember that Harold Edel took charge of the house at its opening and until he became General Manager for the Kinemacolor Company in Canada, in which capacity he presented the famous Durbar pictures from coast to coast.

Later he became manager for the Mark-Brock enterprises in Buffalo, serving with that concern until the new Strand theatre of that city, in which he purchased an interest, when he

Brunet Favors Sane Limit on Films

Declares Output of Five and Six Reel Features Exceeds Demand by Four to One—Feels That Increased Output for Coming Year Will Do Industry No Good

"I HAVE come to the conclusion that now is the time to place a limit, a wise and sane limit, on the output of features." This is the keynote of an important statement by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in a statement given out this week. "The output today of five and six reel features exceeds the demand by four to one," Mr. Brunet goes on to say, "and yet, according to published announcement, some of the big producers intend to place upon the market an increased number of five and six reel pictures. Indications are to the effect that the 1918-1919 market will be super-saturated with so-called features.

More Films—Less Quality

"As increased outputs almost invariably mean a lessening in quality, exhibitors will soon face a situation where they will find themselves back to the old 'regular service' days, and attempts will be made to force them to play entire programs which reflect the evils of a 'made on time' schedule.

"We saw the trend of events and prepared for it. For a number of months we have been selecting the cream of our feature product. If a picture met with the severe tests of star, story, production and direction which we put upon it, we placed it aside, holding it ready for the proper time to put it out. Now we are fully prepared to enter the field of specialized features with a year's supply of Extra-Selected Star Photoplays. We will release them one every four weeks. The success of our Selected Service Booking Plan, which we put into operation last March, was contributory to our decision.

"The Extra-Selected Star Photoplays are of the highest quality—that quality of which 'The Yellow Ticket' and 'More Trouble' are such excellent examples. They are positive box-office attractions which will readily lend themselves to the highest type of exploitation methods. No one who sees them will be disposed to dispute our statements in this connection.

Extra-Selected Photoplays

"We will put out these carefully selected pictures under the name which I have already mentioned—'Extra-Selected Photoplays,' using in connection with that title the name of the star.

"The Extra-Selected Photoplays will not be the only features which we will put out. From time to time we intend to release others, the product of our present contributing studios and outside producers. We will release no features under the Pathe name, however, that do not thoroughly satisfy us as to quality, and our plans do not contemplate a greater quantity than one Pathe feature every other week.

"In addition to the classes of features which I have mentioned Pathe will also handle first class 'outside' product on regular or occasional release schedule, such as The American Film Company's star series featuring Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell. These 'outside' features will be handled entirely apart and distinct from the Pathe features and should not be confused with them. As has already been announced, the American features will be handled by the American's own salesmen, operating from the various Pathe Exchanges.

"The state of the market is and has been for some time such that it has been very difficult if not impossible to keep good features working continuously. Thus the obtaining of the maximum expectancy of returns on any feature has become impossible. There has been a feverish haste to get business on the latest feature. In consequence those which have preceded have been almost, if not entirely forgotten. Many of the best features which have been made have been practically retired before they have played 50 per cent of the available houses. By diminishing our feature output we can devote much more time to the marketing of each feature, to the careful study of the best exploitation methods for the exhibitor to use. Furthermore we can be certain of a much higher average of quality than is humanly possible under the one or more feature-a-week conditions.

Year's Supply Selected

"A full year's supply of Extra-Selected Star Photoplays has already been selected, but the order of release after March 9 has not yet been determined upon. As soon as we have decided upon it, we will give further details.

"Needless to say we will continue to issue serials, scenics, comedies and short length subjects as in the past. 'Hands Up,' with Ruth Roland is to be released August 18. Present indications are that it will be a wonderful success. Pearl White has started work upon a new serial which will probably be ready for release before the closing episode of 'Hands Up.' The 'Official War Review' which we are putting out in one reel each week, is already tremendously popular. The tie-up between the Post Travel Series and the newspapers is working to the interests of all, and is making the pictures popular wherever they play. The Harold Lloyd comedies, good as they have been during the past, are showing a constant and highly pleasing improvement. We will continue to release them one every other week, each in one reel. We are fortunate to have been able to secure the services of Stan Laurel between the two theatrical engagements and the Rolin Co. made for us five comedies with him as the star. The first of these will be released along the first part of October. And of course our news weekly, the oldest and best known of them all, is another of our short releases which is found on the programs of a majority of the theatres of the country, and is so popular that frequently it receives the same amount of publicity and advertising that the theatres give to their feature.

"Our plans for the coming year were completed so many weeks ago that we are now in the enviable position of being months ahead on our prints, posters and advertising matter. We expect to have our features in the exchanges a long time in advance of release. The value of this to the exchangemen and exhibitor is obvious.

"We are convinced that we are working along the right lines, and have been greatly pleased to note the enthusiasm of our exchangemen over our change in policy.

"It augurs well for Pathe business during the coming season that the last three months have been the biggest in our history.

"Over the Top" Wins New Laurels

"Over the Top," Vitagraph's patriotic special, "gets them where they ain't," according to S. C. Wallace, manager of the Idle Hour Theatre at Cambridge Springs, Pa. In a letter received at the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, Mr. Wallace stated that although his town only has 1,200 inhabitants "when they are at home," he showed "Over the Top" to 1,335 persons. He added that in addition to making "good money" the picture was "highly complimented and was given the glad hand often, which will help out with the next big picture I put on."

Novelty for Opening of "Eagle's Eye"

W. J. Slimm, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland, and manager of the Marquis theatre, Crawford road, Cleveland, opened "The Eagle's Eye" at his house this week in good, old, patriotic style. Mr. Slimm engaged the services of a patriotic song leader and advertised that opening night would be a patriotic song night, in which every one was invited to participate.

Metro Exchanges Report Record

Year Declared to Have Been Most Successful in History of the Company—Plans for Still Wider Activities Discussed

METRO exchange managers are returning to their homes this week after having attended the third annual convention of the exchange managers. Meetings were held at the Hotel Astor and covered a period of three days. Thirty-two managers from all parts of the United States and Canada were in attendance.

Unusual importance attached to this meeting because of the discussion of further expanding the already enlarged Metro policies. It was reported that the past year had been the greatest in the history of the company. Officers of the company told the representatives that the Eastern and Western studios have been constantly busy during the past year and that the pictures made have surpassed those of other years in their successes.

One of the important matters discussed was the future plans for the super-production of Screen Classics, Inc. These elaborate screen masterpieces, which Metro distributes, have played to capacity houses in all sections of the country, many exhibitors heretofore opposed to week-run pictures breaking their long-established rules and doing business even beyond expectations. Among the Screen Classics features made the past year were "Blue Jeans," with Viola Dana; "The Legion of Death," in which Edith Storey was starred; "Draft 258," with Mabel Taliaferro; "The Slacker," with Emily Stevens; "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly, which the Frohman Amusement Company made and which William L. Sherrill presented on the Screen Classics, Inc., program when Metro distributed it; "The Million Dollar Dollies," in which the Dolly sisters made their screen debut, and "To Hell with the Kaiser," featuring Lawrence Grant with Olive Tell.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, presided at the meetings. Others participating were Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro; William E. Atkinson, business manager; Harry Cohen, special representative of Metro All Star Series pictures and Screen Classics, Inc., super-features; E. M. Saunders, representing Boston; Cresson E. Smith, Chicago; Joseph Unger, Regal Films, Limited, Canada; Harry Lustig, special representative of the Pacific Coast; S. A. Shirley and W. C. Bachmeyer, special representatives of the Middle West, and exchange managers from Atlanta, Albany, Washington, Philadelphia, New Jersey, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Des Moines, Kansas City, Mo., St. Louis, Detroit, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and other sections of the country. Arthur James was among the speakers.

Excel Pictures, the other new trademark brand, also are to be released on a basis of twenty-six productions a year, alternating every other week with Victory Pictures. The stars thus far announced for those productions are Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland and Jewel Carman. The arrangement of releases provides the opportunity for exhibitors to run a week stand with Standard or Victory Pictures and an alternation of Excel Pictures.

Henry Lehrman's Sunshine Comedies will be released by Mr. Fox during 1918 and 1919 on a contract basis. The same care that has been taken in the past to make these offerings distinctive and of standard-setting quality will be exercised throughout the coming season.

The Bud Fisher Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons are to be continued as William Fox releases during the 1918-19 season. These 500-foot subjects, released weekly, are rapidly extending their territorial bounds, according to the distributor, and now are being shown in practically every city and town in the country.

In a policy statement he has issued to exhibitors, Mr. Fox emphasizes the fact that his productions always have first been made with a view to filling his own requirements as the owner of a chain of theatres extending from the Atlantic seaboard to the Mississippi River. This becomes a more important consideration every year because of the constantly increasing scope of his activities as an exhibitor. His best guarantee of good service is the fact that he is manufacturing primarily for himself.

"What Kind of a Fellow Is —Edel?"

took charge of that institution, which brings us down close to the time two years ago when Mitchel Mark scoured the country for a manager for his Strand in New York and then let his eyes come back and rest on the worker who had grown from boy to veteran in his service. And so New York gained Harold Edel.

With room for but one more fact we might add that Harold Edel's favorite sports—aside from the piano and pipe organ—are golfing, fishing and hunting. His club—the Long Island Commuters—our own.

Export and Import Settle Down

The Export and Import Film Company reports that it is now comfortably settled in the suite of offices on the eleventh floor of the Godfrey Building.

The tasteful furnishings, a cool Japanese reception-room and the still cooler projection room are said to have gained popularity among the buyers viewing pictures in the Times Square district.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

"The Border Legion"

Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth the Stars

(Produced by T. Hayes Hunter. Release plans will be announced later)

A STRONG story well told makes this offering entertaining for the majority of audiences. The attention of the spectator is held fast throughout, as the action never lags.

It is the Western outlaw type of a story based on the famous novel of the same name by Zane Grey.

Joan Randall discovers Jim Cleeves, her fiance, has been lying so she returns their engagement ring. He begs for another chance but she says he is too much of a coward even to steal.

His manhood is awakened. He leaves for the mountains and joins a band of outlaws. Joan, learning of his step and feeling guilty, follows to bring him back. She is caught by Jack Kells, the leader of the bandits, and held for ransom. At an outburst of lustfulness. Kells attacks her but she fights back. In the struggle she shoots and nearly kills him. During his fight with death she nurses him back to life. This act ingratiates him to Joan. He promises he will protect her.

The band returns and finding the woman demand her as part of the spoils. Kells protects her. The outlaws led by "Gorilla" Gulden, the second in command, hold a conference and decide to get the woman or kill their leader. Kells tells Cleeves, who was ignorant of Joan's presence, that he must kill Gulden for the sake of a good woman. Joan overhears the conversation, jumps from the roof, overtakes Jim and begs him not to stain his hands with blood. They mount horses and run away.

Learning of the runaway Kells goes after and overtakes them. He shoots Jim and is about to harm Joan when she reminds him of his promise to protect her. His manhood again awakens just as the band reaches the place and demands the woman. In attempting to defend her he is shot and felled.

A posse arrives there in time to disperse the outlaws. Kells dies in the arms of Joan begging forgiveness. Jim and Joan return and are united.

Hobart Bosworth portrays his role convincingly. Miss Bates is somewhat self-conscious. The direction is very intelligent and the atmosphere realistic. There are some beautiful mountain scenes in it.

This picture ought to appeal to the average run of patrons. I am afraid it will prove a little too strong for high class audiences.

"Bound in Morocco"

Lots of New Stuff in "Doug's" Latest

(Artcraft—Aug. 5. Directed by Allan Dwan)

"BOUND IN MOROCCO" will entertain your patrons. Mr. Fairbanks introduces in it several new stunts, such as jumping over a wide water pool, sliding down a roof and landing on the villains, and many others.

The plot, by the director himself, transplants Mr. Fairbanks to Morocco, where he has an exciting time with the Arabs in trying to save an American girl who has been abducted and added to the harem of the chieftain.

In order to gain admission into the realms of the harem, Doug. impersonates an Arabian dame—he is really funny in this new form—although he succeeds in rescuing the girl he is arrested by the native policemen for overspeeding on the sands of the desert. Ignorance of the laws was no excuse.

While in jail and chained, some conspirators planted a bomb between his feet, intending to send him post haste to St. Peter, but some one had a heart and saved him. He was given three minutes to get out of town. Grabbing the girl and her mother, he gets in his automobile and runs for his life but has some more fights before he gets through with the Arabs.

The usual speed marks this picture also. It should prove a winner with any kind of an audience.

"America's Answer"

(Official Government War Pictures. Released by the Committee on Public Information. Screen Time, 90 M.)

THIS picture has been released by the Committee on Public Information with the purpose of acquainting Americans and the world in general with what our government is doing in this war and how it does it.

From the very first the mind is impressed with the immensity of the task. This impression is increased as the different scenes are unfolded before the eye as in a parade. When the end is reached the spectator can't help but realize that we are in this world war doing our bit and that we intend to see it through.

The picture gives a fair idea of the different engineering as well as administrative problems our army and navy had to solve, such as transporting the army and material over a stretch of more than three thousand miles, excavating marsh lands over there and building wharves and warehouses on them, constructing railroads, assembling the locomotives, building lumbermills near forests donated by the French Government, erecting hospitals, refrigerating plants, feeding and clothing the army and many other things. It also shows why we are eating rough bread and why our patriotism has been appealed to in reducing the sugar and other foodstuff consumption.

The exhibition of the aeroplane flights showing almost all the daredevil stunts such as the spiral, turning somersaults, flying upside down, turning completely over and many other thrilling evolutions are awe inspiring. They are alone worth the price of admission as an entertainment.

In addition to the above it gives a glimpse of the battle of Cantigny in which our troops gave the Germans the first taste on a big scale of the fighting qualities of the American soldier.

Were it possible for the Kaiser to have had a vision foretelling the disclosures of this picture he would never have dared challenge us by sinking the Lusitania and committing other atrocities against Americans.

Book it and show you are doing your bit.

"Fedora"

Pauline Frederick in a Sardou Play

(Paramount—Aug. 12. Directed by Edouard Jose)

WHEN Victorien Sardou wrote Fedora there was no thought of the motion picture, therefore this review is not in any way intended as a reflection against the value of the book as a literary masterpiece nor its dramatic worth as a stage play. I am simply judging the picture from the point of view of the present-day picturegoer and whether it supplies the kind of entertainment he demands.

There is no doubt in my mind that this offering will please a great number of picturegoers but I am also certain that it will displease a number equally as great, in spite of the fact that it has been given a happy ending which is at variance with the book.

Fedora, a Russian Princess, is engaged to Count Vladimir, the dissolute son of the prefect of police. Loris Ispanoff, finding his wife in Vladimir's apartments, murders him and escapes.

From certain clues the identity of the murderer becomes known. The Princess undertakes to go to Paris and entice Ispanoff to go back to Russia for the purpose of revenge.

After reaching Paris she allows him to become infatuated with her. She extracts from him a confession of the murder and notifies the authorities in St. Petersburg. Due to this information his brother becomes wrongly suspected and is put to death. His mother dies from grief.

When Ispanoff is informed that the Princess is the cause of his brother's and mother's deaths, he attempts to murder her by choking. Just at that moment his friend, who had just returned from St. Petersburg with a pardon from the Czar, enters the room and tells Ispanoff that the Princess acted against him thinking he had committed the murder for political reasons. They were again reconciled.

The picture has been produced well, but Miss Frederick did not seem at home in the first three reels.

"The Fallen Angel"

(Fox—July 28. Directed by Robert Thornby)

THIS offering, as the title indicates, might be termed a questionable subject, but it is well produced. It will absorb one's thoughts from the beginning to the end. The effect it will have on the spectator will be the same as reading a very interesting novel. Had the theme been clean, the picture might be considered among the best of the year.

The scenario has been taken from the story "You Can't Get Away With It," by the famous writer, Gouverneur Morris, published recently in the Cosmopolitan magazine. It tells of three orphan sisters who, at the death of their father, were left without any means of support.

Jill, the eldest, was working in a department store at a small salary, trying to support her sisters and herself on it. Her unhappily married employer was attracted by her beauty and sympathetic looks and, not being able to secure a divorce from his wife, made Jill the proposition of defying society and becoming his. He gave her time to think it over, but also warned her that she could not get away with it for all the time and that some day she had to pay.

She was first shocked, but, seeing no way to escape the drudgery, eventually gave in. She was placed in a finely furnished apartment.

Shortly afterwards he died, but made provision for her before his death. In time she met a young man. They both loved each other. He proposed marriage to her, but, thinking of the past, she refused. He pressed her for the reason and thereupon she confessed. He insisted on the marriage being performed, but she gave him two years in which to think it over, and if at the end of that period he would be still of the same mind she would be waiting for him.

After the two years were over he returned, but was of different mind. He now proposed that they should forget marriage and live in a happy way. She indignantly scorned him and ordered him from the house. She was heartbroken and had lost faith in humanity.

Although the story is of the risque type, it is redeemed somewhat owing to the fact that the heroine consented to become the unlawful wife of her employer, not from choice but of necessity. She also attracts the sympathy of the spectator when she rejects the dishonorable proposals from the only man she ever loved.

This picture, of course, is not for family patronage. It is better suited for large-town theatres that cater to more or less cosmopolitan crowds.

"A Pair of Cupids"

A Clean and Corking Offering

(Metro—July 29. Directed by Charles J. Brabin)

YOU will be pleased to know, I am sure, that this Bushman-Bayne contribution is a good one. It comes fully up to the standard set by this pair in their recent pictures. We are getting accustomed to expect nothing less from them.

The fun is derived from a simple story by Luther A. Reed, in which two babies, as well as the principals, figure prominently.

Uncle Henry favors a match between Peter, his nephew, and Virginia, his ward. Peter's chief occupation is chasing dollars, Virginia's teaching table manners to her pet dog. But he will not marry a baby doll, while she, in revenge, will under no circumstances consent to become the better half of a money-making machine.

Things go on in this manner until Uncle Henry conceives a plan whereby he hopes to bring the two young folks together. He borrows Mrs. McGrogan's twins, upon a guarantee of twenty-five thousand dollars against their loss. Quietly he deposits a baby apiece at the respective doors of the homes of the hero and heroine. Finding themselves with infants on their hands, they decide to keep them, and thus practice papa and mamma, respectively.

Comes the day when two mean crooks point to old man McGrogan a chance to put a tender hand on the twenty-five thousand and split it in three ways. The plan excludes any risk on Mac's part for his twins. They kidnap them. The alarm is given, which sets Peter and Virginia in motion. For the first time it becomes known that each had a baby. They join hands in running down the kidnappers. Peter discovers their hiding place and, being a hero, beats and gags the kidnappers in rescuing the babies. Mrs McGrogan now rushes in and claims her precious twins.

Babyless, Peter and Virginia stand facing the cruel world. The plan their future life together, looking forward to the day when they will not have to borrow anybody else's babies.

The production, on the whole, is pleasing. It will get real laughs. Being of the clean kind, it ought to entertain any audience

"Playthings"

Fritzi Brunette in a Well Handled Risque Story

(Bluebird—August 12. Directed by Chas. Gerard)

JUDGING this picture from a dramatic point of view I can safely state that it is one of the best released on the Bluebird program recently. The action is steady, the suspense good, and it contains some tensely dramatic situations especially towards the end.

The plot, by Sidney Toler, is of the risque kind, and although it deals with "fire," it is not vulgar, being handled delicately. It is the very familiar tale of the boss's son who entices a pretty girl, working in his father's store, with false promises of marriage. Of course the usual consequences follow. A girl disillusioned, while the man is looking for new conquests.

In the end a fine young man, a former rejected suitor, comes to the rescue. Her past is no bar to their happiness.

Miss Brunette handles her role admirably. She photographs well. The supporting cast is also excellent. The direction and photography are of the best.

Owing to the nature of the story this picture will prove suitable to the more cosmopolitan audiences rather than to family patronage.

"Alias Mary Brown"

Pauline Starke and Casson Ferguson Please in This

(Triangle—Aug. 4. Directed by H. D'Elba)

THIS offering will please your patrons in spite of the fact that some of the situations are impossible. Picturegoers are more or less inclined to overlook such matters so long as they get entertained.

The plot, by E. Magnus Ingleton, concerns a hero who became a "second story man" in order to get revenge on some unscrupulous men who had robbed him of his inheritance by presenting false claims after his father's death. His mother dies shortly afterward from lack of such comforts of life as money could furnish.

During his crook career he saves an innocent girl, who had run away from home, from the hands of a supposed friend. In the end they fall in love and marry.

Miss Starke's work is very satisfactory. Casson Ferguson co-stars. It is his initial appearance under the Triangle banner, and he certainly acquits himself well. He is given a sympathetic part

The picture is clean and should prove suitable for any kind of an audience.

"No Children Wanted"

Gloria Joy's Second Is Even "Better Than First"

(Oakdale-General Film—Released in August. Directed by Henry King)

THIS is the second picture made with little Gloria Joy as the star. It is even better than the first one. Her acting shows a decided improvement. It can be readily noticed that she can express emotion, and she goes at it as if an old-timer.

The story, of course, is a simple one. It shows how a little child softened the hearts of her parents, who did not give her the loving care she deserved. Incidentally her photograph helped soften another heart—that of an old man who intended to do harm to her father because the latter had featured him in his novel as a bad character.

Children as well as grown-ups will be delighted with the scene showing her running away from school. She comes across a little tot about three years old, whom she induces to follow her, and assumes the responsibility of protecting her. They then come across a goose, who also joins them. There is a great deal of comedy in that.

"All Man"

Harry Morey and Betty Blythe in Strong Crook Drama

(Vitagraph—Aug. 5. Directed by Paul Scardon)

CROOK plays, when well done, never fail to entertain. "All Men" has been well produced. It will please your patrons.

The story, by Donn Byrne, is interesting. It introduces the hero as an honest, physically strong laborer, working hard for a living. He becomes dissatisfied with his lot after certain doctrines, such as "why should he slave to enrich his boss," were put in his head, so he joins a band of crooks.

In cracking a safe he is injured and taken to the home of a woman friend of his pal. During his convalesence they fall in love and when he recovers she joins the gang.

While on another job the police are informed and close in on them. In order to give the woman and the gang a chance to get away, he stays behind. He is arrested and, after a trial, sent up the river for five years.

At the expiration of the sentence he goes to the woman and finds her awaiting him and ready to continue the old life. He refuses, leaves her, goes to the country, buys a farm, marries and settles down to quiet life.

His wife learns accidentally of his past. She leaves him and applies for a divorce. The people of the town scorn him as a former jail bird. Angered against society he decides to go back to the crook life again. But the woman, whose husband is now dead, and who also is determined to lead a straight life, comes to him in time to prevent him from leaving the narrow path. They find happiness in their union.

The action is kept up steadily throughout.

The picture is clean and will undoubtedly appeal to all classes.

"A Nine O'Clock Town"

Charles Ray Will Satisfy in This Picture

(Paramount—Aug. 5. Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger)

IN spite of the absurdity of the plot this picture will entertain in as much as it has been produced as a comedy drama. People will get their money's worth.

The hero is presented in a story contributed by the director himself, as the know-it-all type of a young man trying to impress his father with the amount of wisdom he believes himself to be the possessor. The old man will not listen to the flowery talk, therefore the hero is angered and leaves for New York, which offers bigger field for brainy young men. This was perfectly agreeable to father. There he gets a job at eight per, but makes the old man believe he is holding a very prominent position.

Mother being the only person on earth who believes in his bluffs persuades father to turn the store completely over to the son. After taking possession, the hero starts selling goods at a reduced price, enough to bankrupt him in a short time. In the meantime a Vampire and her husband attempt to work a blackmailing scheme on him by luring him to her rooms. It looks for a while as if the trick will succeed but it eventually fails.

A man who has a chain of stores in the neighboring town is watching the hero. Recognizing his ability to get the crowds, he buys him out for a large sum of money, at the consent of his father, and makes him manager of the store. In the end he marries a young girl who stood by him.

The picture is clean and will have an appeal to all audiences.

"Bread"

"It's a Heavy Loaf," Says Harrison

(Universal Special—Aug. 26. Directed by Ida May Parks)

WHY not name this picture "The Adventures of a Loaf of Bread"? Such a title would be more appropriate as the most prominent situation in it is the chase of a loaf of bread.

The whole thing is slow and uninteresting. It takes some five and a half reels out of the six to get to the point. After it gets there it says nothing that would arouse one from slumber. Apparently this picture was produced with the purpose of showing how beautiful and sympathetic Miss McLaren could be made to look.

As the author, Evelyn Cambell, wills it, the heroine is introduced as a nice looking country girl who gets the stage craze. She wants to become a great actress so she can wear pretty clothes. She comes to poor old New York and meets a manager through an actress whom she met in her home town. Of course the manager wants her to love him for what he is going to do for her but she refuses to listen to him and here is where her troubles begin. She leaves the theatre and rents a room.

Unable to get a job and being left with only three cents on her hands she decides to buy a loaf of bread with it. While returning from the bakery in a driving rainstorm she is pushed by a pedestrian and she drops the loaf on the running board of a passing automobile. The loaf takes wings and she goes after it.

After a run of several blocks she comes to the conclusion there is no use going any further, so she stops and commences to dream what she could have been were she not poor. A news kid wakes her up and tells her the cops are after her. She takes to her heels.

In order to make her escape she rushes into a strange house. There she finds the manager with other fellows and lots of pretty girls having a good time. Her loaf is occupying the place of honor in the centre of the table. She tells them while they are making fun of her loaf she is dying of starvation, and faints. There comes the hero now who lifts her in his arms and places her on the couch. After the proper medical attention she recovers and the hero and the heroine marry.

"The Ghost of the Rancho"

Bryant Washburn a Real "Hero" in This

(Pathe—August 11. Directed by William Worthington)

ANYTHING is possible in the movies. Some people are aware of this fact, so in selecting stories for picturization are not discouraged by their impossibility.

The scenario of this plot, by Jack Cunningham, is based on the story by Arthur Henry Gooden. It presents the hero as a young man, the pet of his wealthy grand-daddy. Having lots of money to spend, he goes wild over wine and pretty dames. The old man is about to disinherit him, but he begs for a last crack at high life before he quits. The wish is granted.

During the banquet they frame him up to believe he has committed a murder. He escapes into Mexico. Being a regular hero, he has no trouble. He is always present when a lady needs help to drive away the assailants. He invariably beats the Mexicans, no matter how many there are. In one instance he drives the greasers away by impersonating a ghost and rescues the heroine.

All these things happen on a ranch that proves to be the property of his grand-daddy. When the fact that "he found himself" becomes known to the old gentleman he rushes to the scene to tell him the murder he was supposed to have committed was a fake and also to congratulate him for having become a man, and incidentally he blesses his marriage to the heroine.

You may be able to get by with this if your audience is not over critical.

"The Beloved Blackmailer"

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley the Stars

(World—August 12. Directed by Dell Henderson)

ALTHOUGH there is hardly anything new in this offering fine handling and the comedy element in some of the situations make it a pleasing entertainment. It is the kind your patrons will not take seriously but will enjoy well.

The story, as conceived by Harry O. Hoyt, introduces the hero as an overpetted rich young man. His parents would not allow him to do even an ordinary amount of physical exercise.

His sweetheart, the heroine, would like to see him big and strong, therefore she arranges with a physical instructor to kidnap him. This is the only means by which he could be set free and thus be given a chance to make a man out of himself.

In order to ruin the father of the heroine, who dares oppose his will, the hero's father, a Wall Street magnate, raids the stock market. Pretending she is the one who kidnapped his son, the girl sends him a letter threatening to return him dead unless he refrains from ruining her father. The trick succeeds, but when it is exposed, the big financier is powerless to do any further harm as the boy, now a strong man, and the girl have already been united in marriage. This brings about a reconciliation.

The bullies in the supporting cast are a scream. They are as true types as I have ever seen. They will get good laughs. Miss Greeley is very attractive. Mr. Blackwell is convincing in his role.

The picture is clean and should appeal to all audiences.

"Petticoats and Politics"

Suffrage the Theme of Anita King's Play

(Plaza-Hodkinson-General Film Co.—Aug. 26. Directed by Tod Browning)

IT has been a long time since a subject of this nature has been produced. Apparently this field has been overlooked by the producers, so this picture is somewhat fresh.

"Petticoats and Politics" is an amusing comedy drama dealing with suffrage. Although absurd it is highly entertaining.

Justice is administered very loosely in the little town of Red Dog, so L. V. Jefferson, the author, tells us, and the women are up in arms. Led by the heroine, they decide to formulate a political plank, go for votes and contest the different offices. They of course win the election. They install themselves in all the branches of the civic administration.

How the poor male sex is maltreated by the female when they have things their own way, is told very amusingly. The men are made to take care of the babies, do the house work and oodles of other things. Those who refuse to obey are put in the pen.

Not being able to stand justice as the female sex would have it, the men revolt and usurp their authority. But not until the heroine finds her lifelong mate in the person of an advocate of their cause who had dropped nobody knows whence, but who had lent them a helping hand.

The picture is clean and suitable for any kind of an audience.

"Out of the Night"

(Produced by Frank Keeney—Released by Wm. Sherry. Directed by James Kirkwood)

THIS is a morality drama. It presents the heroine as a girl who erred not of choice but of necessity. However, it has been produced intelligently and in refined atmosphere, free from any vulgarity and salaciousness. It has a sure heart appeal owing to the sympathetic part given not only to the heroine but to the hero as well.

The story is based on the stage play by E. Lloyd Sheldon. It holds the interest well throughout the picture.

The cause of the heroine's fall is given as the desire to obtain money to bury her sister. The excuse is not strong enough for a picturepleay and "Movie" fans may have a hard time trying to predispose themselves to be lenient to her. However, the fact that the hero stuck to the heroine against the objections of his father, even though after he became aware of her past, will ease it up to a great extent.

Herbert Rawlinson is the leading man and he gets lots of sympathy owing to his assuming the human part.

This picture will hardly prove suitable to family patronages, but ought to take well with all other audiences.

¶ Charles G. Branham, manager of the Minneapolis Strand said last week in Motion Picture News.

¶ Enough said?

The World Market

Carlos to Go Abroad for William Fox

The announcement that Abraham Carlos, general representative of the Fox Film Corporation, will start soon on an extensive trip through Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico and Central America, is among the interesting news contained in that corporation's policy announcements for the coming year.

From the statement issued the indications are that the Foreign Department of the Fox Corporation plans increased activities in the export field during the coming year.

In addition to the Carlos trip, another Fox representative will travel down the West Coast of South America. At the present time the Fox Film Corporation has five branch offices in South America.

J. Frank Shea, European representative of the corporation, back from London after a year in that capital, reports that Fox pictures are now strongly established in that market. "Les Miserables," "A Tale of Two Cities," and "Cleopatra," are among the productions that secured especial notice.

A print of "A Daughter of the Gods" has just arrived in China, while Spain and Italy are also being developed as Fox markets. Recently the Foreign Department has taken over almost an entire floor in the corporation's offices in the Leavitt Building.

More "Stolen Orders" Sales Made

Following the announcement by the Robertson-Cole Company last week of the sale of "Stolen Orders" for the United Kingdom and colonies, it became known this week that John Olson & Company, through Harry Kosch, had purchased the rights on the Brady feature for France, Morocco, Tripoli, Algiers, Egypt, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Japan, China and the Philippines.

Some Shanghai Figures

Tables of exports from Shanghai to the United States or its possessions during the past year contain the interesting note that 35,545 feet of motion picture film were exported to the Philippines during 1917. The declared value of the film is $3,198. During 1916 there were exported from Shanghai to the Philippines 32,815 feet, with a value of only $421 declared.

Bolton and Stone Get World Films

Inter-Ocean's English branch announces the sale of the United Kingdom rights to the 1918-19 World Pictures to F. Bolton of London, and H. B. Stone of Nottingham.

A WORD OR TWO IN PASSING

THE thought occurs to us:

The exporters active about Times Square have an association pretty well representative of the field.

The picture industry has a National Association to which the exporters have applied for admission as a branch with separate identity.

The Exporters Association, under the leadership of David Howells, has succeeded in chalking some real achievements up in its brief career.

The National Association, mainly, we take it, through the prompting of Paul Cromelin, has scored some real accomplishments on behalf of the exporters.

So far—so good. And bully for the exporters' organization and hurray for the National Association.

But—

There's a rift in the lute somewhere. There's a chasm of misunderstanding—be it ever so narrow—between the two bodies working towards the same end. No harm has been done to date. Much good has been accomplished. But until there is a merger of identities, until the two become, to some extent, correlated, there is danger.

For one of these days, when the exporters are seeking a favor from a Government official, some one is going to blurt out: "Why that National Association doesn't represent the exporters. We are the exporters—they only represent a few."

Then there will be one grand explosion. Mr. Government Official will say, "Aha! They are fighting among themselves. They don't know what they want—guess we'll give them what we want."

The beans will be spilled.

And—to change the metaphor—all the king's horses and all the king's men won't put Humpty Dumpty together again.

So, as the thought occurs to us, we write this little hint to the National Association: "Speed up action on that proposition to form a separate exporters' branch."

Get together boys—speak with one voice and you will shout!

N. A. M. P. I. Protests New Export Rules

The National Association has addressed a communication to the War Trade Board presenting the viewpoint of the industry regarding the new export regulations first discussed in Motion Picture News two weeks ago.

The drastic guarantees which must be given by the film buyers are pointed out by the Association as likely to defeat the purpose of the Committee on Public Information in securing wide distribution of films showing America's ideas and ideals.

The communication also points out that if these regulations are not enforced by Great Britain, Italy and France, that the foreign buyers will turn to those countries for films. In this connection, however, it is the opinion of many exporters in New York that the War Trade Board largely followed practice in those countries in drafting the new rules.

Official Belgian Pictures Reach New York

Announcement was made this week by W. Lindsay Gordon, that all the official Belgian war pictures are now available to the trade at the office of the Belgian Military Mission, 207 West 34th street.

Among the films recently received are some showing the Belgian soldiers in their most recent encounters with the Hun, the work of teaching trades to invalided Belgian fighters, the Queen's nurseries for thousands of homeless children, and other interesting incidents.

Mr. Gordon, well known as a photographer and writer of feature lectures, has been chosen director of publicity and official photographer to the Belgian Military Mission by Major Leon Osterrieth, Chief of the Belgian Military Staff.

Mitchell, of Ideal, Dead

From The Idealletter we learn with regret of the death of Joe Mitchell, Liverpool manager of Ideal, and known to many English film men now active in New York export circles. Pneumonia is given as the cause.

Before taking over the Liverpool branch Mr. Mitchell was for some time attached to the Birmingham office under his brother, N. Mitchell.

Vitagraph in Argentine

New York Film Exchange, of Buenos Ayres, has announced in recent advertisements the acquisition of the Vitagraph programme for 1918-1919 for the territories of Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay. Releases began on June 21.

WHO'S NEXT?

PICTURE producers learned a little about the foreign market last week from the advertisement on Page 691 of Motion Picture News.

The Robertson-Cole Company announced sales of twenty-seven productions for forty territories covering the globe—or, to eliminate the duplication of territories and productions—twenty-three separate pictures for sixteen different territories—IN ONE WEEK.

Walter Hoff Seeley is a modest person, but if pressed he might admit that he thinks this a record for actual sales negotiated in one week of business—without any untoward speeding up or striving for a mark.

The figures certainly stand out.

Who else has a record to enter the lists with? Have you some figures that should really be the world's record? Let's hear from you.

Who's next?

Cromelin Advocates "War Matinees" for Heroes

Paul H. Cromelin, president of Inter-Ocean Film, and a keen student of international film conditions, believes the "war matinee" in British kinemas to which wounded soldiers are invited minus charge will eventually be seen in America. The British exhibitor, Mr. Cromelin found, had worked up a degree of public good will that more than balanced the few seats given away.

"It has been the English picture man's great chance to combat censorship faddists and other enemies of the screen," says Mr. Cromelin, "and I am sure the American exhibitor, ever progressive, will want to seize this same opportunity.

"In most English military hospitals the convalescing patients are allowed out from two to six o'clock in the afternoon. The matinee show of the neighboring exhibitor is wide open to the soldier. The latter knows exactly the treat he is 'in for.' A doctor who asked a thrice-wounded Tommy how he expected to spend his first afternoon in Blighty was nonchalantly told: 'At the pictures, sir, of course.' It is easy to see why the films hasten Tommy's recovery.

"The real rulers of the new America will be its returning doughboys. They will hold the balance of political power even as the G. A. R. did after the Civil War. They will smash censor tyrants and compel Sunday opening—if we win them.

"I can do nothing better than remind the American exhibitor that two salient facts stand out as the result of the Great War. One is, 'In time of peace prepare for war.' And the other, 'In time of war prepare for—peace.' England is showing Motion Picture America its great opportunity."

Secure Increase in Cargo Space to England

As the result of a conference held in Washington recently with Lord Reading, British Ambassador to the United States, in which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was represented by President William A. Brady, Paul H. Cromelin and David P. Howells, a modification has been secured in the ruling in regard to the restriction of film shipments to Great Britain wherein the amount of space actually allotted is now increased from 200 to 500 cubic feet per month.

The following letter has just been received by President Brady from Richard Crawford, secretary of the British Embassy in Washington:

"DEAR SIR.—With reference to my letter to you of the 19th instant, I am now instructed by the Ambassador to acquaint you that the amount of space actually allotted for the transport of motion picture film is 200 cubic feet. In view, however, of the representations made by the deputation of your association, Lord Reading has now made arrangements whereby this allotment will be extended to 500 cubic feet per month.

"Yours very truly,
"(Signed) RICHARD CRAWFORD."

The meeting above referred to was secured by T. P. O'Connor, M. P., who is the film censor of Great Britain and who presented President Brady and his associates to Lord Reading. The committee was accompanied by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

The members of this committee feel highly elated at the success of their labors, as the space which they have sought, namely, 500 cubic feet per month, has been granted.

This announcement was made at a meeting of the exporters and heads of the export departments of the producing and distributing companies held at the offices of the National Association Monday.

"Mickey" in Foreign Territories

Following the announcement by W. H. Productions Company that "Mickey" would be handled on the State Rights market, comes the news regarding the handling of the production in foreign countries.

The distribution for the United Kingdom has been secured by the Selected Masterpiece Company, 86 Wardour Street. Spain and Portugal will be handled by Carlos Vasseur, Calle Lauria, 96, Barcelona, Spain. Distribution in Brazil has also been secured.

Australian Film Profits

A recent financial statement of the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company of Australia, shows a gross profit of approximately $85,000 during 1917. An interim dividend brought the net profits to approximately $55,000, stated as an increase of $15,000 over 1916.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Note your comment on our ad which appeared in issue of the "News" under date of July 27th.

I do not know who started this column entitled "Your Idea and Ours," but exhibitors who fail to read this column—benefited by the wonderful suggestions of your offer of advertising criticisms—are missing the best part of the "Motion Picture News."

I can safely say that your criticisms have saved me hundreds of dollars in effective advertising, as well as taught me considerably about displays, etc.

Am enclosing, herewith, copies of to-day's paper showing two different ads on "THE MORTGAGED WIFE" and the one design appearing in the "Constitution" was a special drawing by the "Constitution's" artist—the idea is suggested by the "Moving Picture Weekly" magazine.

I will continue to send you copies of my ads and would thank you to show same together with your frank criticism for the mutual benefit of brother exhibitors and ourselves.

Am sending both pages of the "Journal." Do you think I am taking up too much display space in comparison with the other theatres? My contention is that a good picture, regardless of the make or star will run a week. What are your suggestions and which of the two ads do you think the most effective—the Journal ad or the Constitution?

Yours very truly,
THE TUDOR THEATRE,

Plugging Away in Los Angeles

All the Advertising Theatres Keep at It Every Day and Commercial Rate Makes Them Use More Space

LAST week we illustrated what the Sunday papers of Los Angeles are doing in the way of supplying motion picture news matter. We are publishing this series of articles with the frank declaration that we want to encourage the newspapers to do more for motion pictures by printing more matter and to do more for their readers by publishing the sort of matter that the thousands of photoplay fans of every community are longing for.

And to do this, we repeat, it is necessary for the theatres to cooperate by liberal advertising. There are many cities where the exhibitors themselves need to take the lesson of the Los Angeles situation to themselves, for here a few of the houses, those in the downtown group are doing practically all of the advertising, but they are doing it on such a large scale that they have encouraged practically every paper in the city to do more for motion picture matter than almost every other in the country.

It is because the Los Angeles situation has such a strong meaning for newspapers everywhere that we have advised the exhibitors to call the attention of the newspapers to these articles, to encourage the papers to do more, and that we urge the theatres to do their part fully. Last week we surveyed the general situation in the California city, the rates of the newspapers, etc.

Now just for a moment let us refer back to the pages of the Sunday issues that were reproduced in the last number of the NEWS. We called your attention to the fact that the Examiner gives nothing more than reading notices and representation in the layout to the advertising theatres. The Times devotes the first page of its "Music and Song" section to motion pictures, printing a five-column drawing together with some story of interest from the studios. In the issue that we are considering it happens to be "Chaplin's Funny Feet Walk Into a War Comedy." There is a column headed "Screen" in which there are reading notices for the various houses and this "runs over" to another page on the inside of the section where there is a layout of the attractions at the first run houses. There is another column headed "Studios" which gives the news from not only the Los Angeles picture plants, but from those all over the country. This is interesting matter, but the general make-up policy of the paper prevents its appearing as attractive as it might.

When we come to the Sunday Express-Tribune, the Sunday edition of the Evening Tribune we find still more matter devoted to motion pictures. There are five pages here devoted to motion picture or other amusement matter, with separate headings used for each of the stories. For most of the theatres there is a double column heading used and the news angle of the picture is gotten into the head. While there is more space accorded each theatre under this plan, still the matter is made more interesting and the readers will enjoy this sort of stuff without feeling sure all the time that they are being fed free advertising. There is a column of gossip and other news matter under smaller heading, together with a strip on current attractions.

In this issue we reproduce the Saturday departments of the afternoon papers. First let us look at the Saturday edition of the Tribune. On the first page we find stories of the attractions at the Kinema and Superba theatres, together with single column pictures of the stars. There is a two column layout on the offerings at the legitimate and vaudeville houses and then more than a column of gossip of the studios and screen. The second page has two column headings and single column cuts for the attractions at the Symphony, Tally's and the Auditorium and shorter stories for some of the other theatres. We have similar stories for the Alhambra and Clune's Broadway and then matter from the legitimate and vaudeville houses. It will be noted that with the exception of the column of short matter, the whole space is devoted to reading notices, though like the Sunday issue they are disguised into appearing real news.

First page of the section from the Saturday Record is largely devoted to offerings at the vaudeville and legitimate houses though there is some motion picture notices. The next page of the issue that we have before us is mainly a mess. Here news matter is mixed up with the reading notices and we even have an inappropriate thing as the day's death list in France on an amusement page! The short items which appear on this page, with one exception, have nothing to do with motion pictures. The motion picture layout appears on the third page and here again the short matter is general news. The fourth page is general news matter.

The Express is the poorest of all the Los Angeles papers on motion pictures, with the possible exception of the Examiner which does not pretend to give anything but reading notices.

Now we have told you that the motion picture section of the Herald appears in the Tuesday issue, but just so that you can see all that the Los Angeles papers are doing we have reproduced the Saturday dramatic and motion picture pages. The latter includes a layout in the attractions to open Sunday, reading notices for each of the theatres and a half column of "Flickers" gossipy little news items from the studios. Until we consider the Tuesday edition of the Herald we are going to withhold our final observations.

Let us look at the class of advertising that is done by the Los Angeles papers. It is largely the same through all the papers, with the exception of the Times which has its own peculiar rules about the style of type that it will allow to be used.

Grauman's devotes its space to advertising the theatre instead of any particular star or production, though the feature is given prominence. Still the name of the theatre is made the most prominent thing about the display and then the entire program is given. In the issues illustrated this theatre used twelve inches, four columns.

Clune's Broadway used hand-drawn designs and features the star very largely, occupying thirteen inches across three columns.

Alhambra and the Miller each use ten inches double column with a cut of the star and type matter for the remainder.

In the issues that we are studying the Symphony is announcing its reopening and for that reason the display largely calls attention to that fact and to the entire bill.

Superba uses attractive advertising with a striking picture of the star, the title of the picture and the name of the theatre prominently displayed.

Kinema theatre, as we have told you long ago, features the arrow in all its advertising and during this week is using four columns ten inches with a picture of Mary Pickford as she appears in the current production and a little sales talk on the picture—this display declaring that it is her last picture of the season.

Tally's used three columns, thirteen inches in the Sunday Express-Tribune and the Tuesday Herald with smaller space in the Examiner and the Times, but the designs are all the same with a completely drawn ad. showing a scene from the production.

Clune's Auditorium used the same space in advertising "Hearts of the World" which is having a record run there.

Palace used 6½ inches double column in several of the papers, all drawn ads.

Garrick, Riviera, Liberty, Portola, Optic and Regent use small space across two columns in some of the papers while the Burbank is slightly more generous.

The main thing that strikes one about all of the Los Angeles advertising is that it is prepared not with the mere purpose of filling space, but that many of the theatres are willing to take large space and then use striking designs and only the minimum amount of advertising matter. There are a few theatres that have prob-

Two More Smaller Cities on Board

SOME additional members of the Advisory Board are announced this week. We had expected to be able to announce some other names, but it is likely that the delays in the mails are responsible. There will be further representatives of the smaller cities placed on the Board.

H. C. Horater, with whose work you are familiar from the several articles that have appeared in these columns comes from Toledo, O., to add his advice to the splendid array that we have been able to assemble.

C. A. Lick, manager of the New thaetre, Fort Smith, Ark., is one of the new representatives of the smaller cities. His town has a population of 27,136. There is an interesting article on advertising the theatre in this issue.

Another representative of the smaller cities is George J. Schade, who is doing big things in Sandusky, O. Sandusky is rated at 20,127 in the census.

But there are to be representatives from still smaller cities. Most of these are in the West and we have not had time to hear from them.

Look through the columns of the News week after week now and you will find a mass of mattter from the smaller cities. There will be several stories next week and more the week after.

And in the meantime read the opinions on the exploitations of pictures that follow. Two of them come from new members of the Board.

WILLARD C. PATTERSON, manager of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., is one of the best advertisers in the country, but in this article he looks at the question purely from his own point of view—that of a man who has ideas and who has the facilities for exploitation of pictures. His recommendations of having special art work done for each picture, however, would be practical to a very small percentage of the exhibitors. But it is an interesting view from the point of a man who can do things.

"What's the matter with exploitation?" Certainly a big subject, with many angles!

Why is it necessary for exhibitors to ask the manufacturers how to exploit a picture? The manufacturer today gives you the outline of the story, the name of the star, the author and a general idea concerning the production.

We should not expect him to make the picture and then tell us how to play it.

The exploitation of pictures differs with manufacturers. One of them might lay out a campaign of advertising to properly exploit one of his productions and the "come-back" from nine out of ten exhibitors might be: "That idea would never get the money in my town," or "It would cost too much" to exploit it in that fashion.

Two exhibitors in different towns might adopt in detail the entire exploitation scheme of the manufacturer for a certain picture: in one of the towns the picture would be a big success and in the other town a miserable failure. Such things have happened—not once, but many times.

No set rule can be used in the exploitation of pictures. To my mind the main requisites of an exhibitor in the exploitation of pictures are: brains, imagination and a knowledge of the picture he is to advertise. This last, in my opinion, is very essential. The exhibitor, by all means, should see his picture before offering it to his patrons.

The manager of today can usually be depended upon to find some feature in any picture that, if properly exploited, will attract attention. The subject of a picture not infrequently meets a condition that exists in a town, and the manager there, if he be wide awake, can seize upon the coincidence and turn it into box-office profits.

If the manufacturer has failed, in your opinion, to furnish you with the proper class of advertising paper, use your brains and get out some sheets that will exploit the picture properly. There is a sign painter in every town, no matter how small, and many of them are clever enough to make "cut outs," banners and the like.

If the cuts and "mats" that are sent out by the manufacturer are not just what you want, go to the newspaper that carries your advertising, consult with the artist and have your cuts made according to your own ideas. In my opinion, originality in display counts for a great deal in the exploitation of pictures.

I am not condemning the cuts and "mats" sent out by the makers of pictures. They are usually good, but there appears to be a sameness about them that detracts from their pulling power. But if the manufacturers are content to use the same adjectives and phrases in describing their pictures there is absolutely no obligation on the part of the exhibitor to use this line of exploitation.

The exhibitor who is constantly asking the manufacturer: "Tell us how to exploit this picture," is laying a poor foundation for himself and his theatre. When you see a picture and buy it, be satisfied in your own mind that it is a good picture. When you are satisfied on this score, methods of advertising its points of excellence will naturally suggest themselves to you.

I see errors in the exploitation by other managers and I know they detect the errors in my way of advertising, but the exhibitor who is successful is the one who does not depend upon the manufacturer except for one thing—the picture itself.

In my opinion, the exploitation must be done by the exhibitor and that, too, practically without aid from outside sources. His own ideas must be used. If he is fortunate enough to see something in the advertising matter and scheme sent out by the manufacturer that fits into his own idea, he is, indeed, lucky.

I venture the assertion that an exhibitor of the calibre of Mr. Barret McCormick, of Indianapolis, looks at his picture first and not at the advertising matter sent him by the manufacturer, and it is dollars to doughnuts that if it is a good picture and the manufacturer's exploitation is bad, Mr. McCormick makes up his own line of advertising.

Look at your picture first. If it is impossible to view it in advance of presentation, be sure to get together all the available data regarding it. Look around at what others are doing. If you are manager of a first-run theatre make every effort to see the picture you have bought. Get the story thoroughly in your mind. Study it from every angle.

Then, when you have a concrete idea of what your offering is and have formulated a plan for exploiting it, lay out a campaign of advertising in detail, and go to it! Don't be afraid to take a chance. Don't play a good picture to a financial failure just because the manufacturer did not tell you how to play it.

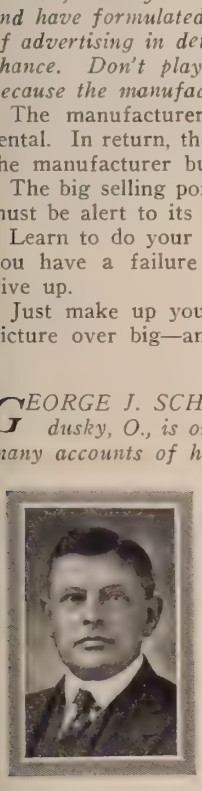
The manufacturer expects nothing from you but your film rental. In return, the exhibitor must learn to expect nothing from the manufacturer but his picture.

The big selling point of any picture is up to the exhibitor. He must be alert to its advertising possibilities.

Learn to do your own thinking. Practice originality and when you have a failure along a certain line of exploitation, don't give up.

Just make up your mind that you are going to put the next picture over big—and do it!

GEORGE J. SCHADE, manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., is one of the most enterprising of exhibitors and many accounts of his exploitations of pictures have appeared in these columns. He says that he finds it very difficult to exploit pictures from the matter provided by the producers. He points out that the producer should give these selling ideas. He is strong in making good to the public just what he promises in all of his advertising matter.



We find it very difficult to exploit pictures from press sheets furnished by the producers. The whole system is wrong. The producer finds a market for his film through various advertising mediums, forcing the exhibitor to take the picture on his say so. For the past year, we have not taken the word of the producer, all films shown in my theatre are screened before being bought. In this way we get an idea of how to exploit same, either soft pedal, or large splash, and very often Hokum in newspapers, is the proper way to put a picture across.

The exhibitor wants the manufacturer to show him the way to sell the producer's product to his patrons, give us the little ideas that help make the picture, show us how to put the plot or theme of the picture before the public in such a way that it will arouse their curiosity. Don't misrepresent, don't promise too much, but make good on what you do promise them.

We take advantage of every little twist in the story to exploit the picture. For instance, in "Tarzan of the Apes," we used a large auto, with banners on each side reading "Tarzan of the Apes, Schade Theatre Today." In the rear of the car were five boys, one to represent Tarzan, and the other four boys dressed as monkeys, wearing large sized monkey heads. The heads were made in a false face factory at an expense of about one dollar each. Each boy had a shrill whistle which he blew to attract attention. The car worked the city from 1 to 2.30 p. m. and from 7 to 8.30 p. m. each day for three days, and packed them in the theatre for three days, and in July, too.

Can you find this idea in any of the Tarzan Press Books? It is just such ideas as this from the producer that will put the exhibitor on easy street. His theatre will then make money.

We do not depend on the local newspapers for anything. We buy and pay for all write-ups and press notices, and in this way we can control the matter we want used and the amount of space. Very often we reduce our space in the newspapers and resort to "ballyhoo" methods, using circus heralds, etc.

But we always endeavor to tell the truth in our advertising. We try not to misrepresent. Very often we have put pictures over by this method that would otherwise have been total failures at the box office. Our patrons saw just what we said they would, and they were satisfied.

P. E. NOBLE, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., takes a good healthy wallop at the publicity material that is furnished him. He scores the press books and so of the so-called "service" matter which tells him obvious things that he can do and which fail to tell him the main thing that he must know—about the picture itself. He declares that day after day he is being furnished with the same old stuff. He tells what he does want:

I don't think the time will ever come when the managers of the larger houses throughout the land will want the producer to frame his advertising for him word by word, or be perfect in the exploitation of any particular picture, but I do believe that the time is coming when the producers will have to show us the means they have for exploiting the picture when they sell it. It seems a shame, but day after day we are greeted with the same old stuff; half of the time some of the "stills" are not even duplicated in the production. The photographs we have wished upon us are not only poor specimens when you judge the selection, but the photography is so poor that it is ofttimes true we have to inveigle our artist into a corner, buy him a perfectly good two-for-a-quarter and coax him to draw a pen and ink sketch or a pencil drawing of the star in order that we may have something in our advertising rather than just type.

We have spent as high as nine and ten dollars for paper on subjects (buying all styles), trying to find some suitable scene to work up for a lobby or some particularly catchy looking "bit" for a cut-out and finally wound up without using any of it.

And the press matter and cuts. They are simply abominable; scenes that mean nothing and usually made up so poorly that the best you get in the paper is a black spot, and with your announcement over the top of BLANCHE WHATKNOTT, FAMOUS BEAUTY OF THE JASKY STUDIOS, NOW AT THE AMERICAN, it does look funny, and also inefficient.

The press matter, I have not the slightest idea what is the cause for it or the reason why it is gotten together; I hardly believe anyone uses these so-called books of enlightenment, and if they do I can imagine the business they do.

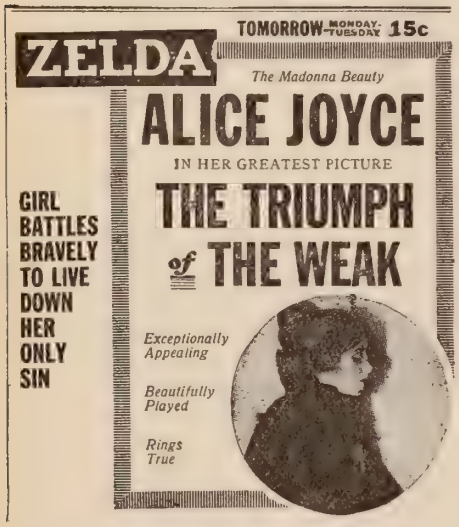
They tell you about the lobby decorations and the way to dress the usheresses up and a lot of things that any mortal on earth would know, BUT they do not tell you the things you want to know. That particular bit of information concerning a picture that gives you the lay of the land all in a nutshell.

Good breezy catch lines to work on and good editorial matter that you can walk up to a city editor's desk and not be afraid to hand in. These things, together with a lobby display that means something, I believe is one of the things that will have probably as much to do with the selling of a picture in the future as anything else can ever have.

Good looking photographs with scenes that mean something. Attractive paper. Sensible press books. Mats that a newspaper can run. Information that tends to enlighten the exhibitor rather than muss up his good graces and sweet disposition. These are the things we need.

Your Idea and Ours

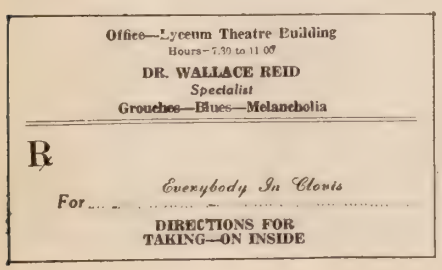
PRACTICALLY every time that we have criticized one of the displays of the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn., we have urged that theatre to get a name plate instead of using type. We are mighty glad to see from the latest bunch of specimens sent in that it has done so. The result is a great improvement in the general appearance of the displays. It has been made in several sizes for use in different kinds of displays.



Now this is a good advertisement to a degree, but it would have been much better, in our opinion, if the cut of Miss Joyce had been made large enough to have filled the entire space between the horizontal borders and if the matter "Exceptionally Beautiful, Beautifully Played, Rings True," had been omitted and the sentences telling of the girl who battled bravely would then have been the only descriptive matter. Now that hit the theme of the picture and the idea of advertising is to sell the theme. When you have done this further matter leaves the impression of most readers that you are not certain of your appeal and that you have added something else as a "persuader." One good selling argument does not need to be backed up by weaker phrases.

A thought in times saves many an explanation.

HERE is an idea that is new to us so far as advertising a motion picture is concerned. It comes from Hardwick Brothers, who operate the Lyceum theatre in Clovis, New Mexico, and who are just as live wires as any in the whole country. Of course, the prescription idea is old, but here the prescription idea is carried out on an envelope 2 by 3½ inches, but the novelty of the idea comes on the inside, for there one finds a large capsule, and in this, printed on tissue paper, is an announcement of Wallace Reid in "Believe Me, Xantippe." This is in the form of a newspaper advertisement, and gives the selling punch of the picture, and then the whole spirit is carried out in the final lines: "To be taken Thursday night, June 30, at 7.30 or 9.30. It took time and trouble to roll each one of those announcements, but it was worth it.



Hardwick Brothers are liberal advertisers, and, although Clovis has a census population of only 3,255, the theatre does big business, with admissions at ten and twenty cents, with the war tax added. You will hear from this firm often in these columns.

The patron is always right, of course; but that's no reason why you should be always wrong.

C. EDGAR MOMAND, manager of the Garden theatre, Flint, Mich, is devoting the greater part of his advertising to the theatre itself. Mr. Momand was recently transferred to Flint, where the competition is evidently very strong.

In this advertisement, five inches double column, he has devoted the greater part of the space to illustrating or talking about the theatre. Of course, this was not the first announcement of "My Four Years in Germany," and that explains why more space was not given the feature.

STAR THEATRE
Now Playing

EVERY week there continue to come to "Your Idea and Ours" newspaper displays, which were taken from the advertisements which had appeared in the Motion Picture News. Pretty soon the producers are going to realize that they ought to use this paper to give the exhibitor, in turn, a sales argument to the public.

Now the Star theatre, Portland, Ore., has here a most attractive display, yet the man who designed this simply tore out of the June 8 issue of the News the announcement of Universal and used the entire picture as the background, lengthening out the side of the building and lettering in the name of the theatre, and then leaving mortises for the other attractions. Now, in the larger of the two mortises, the first sentence is from the Universal advertisement, but the manager of the Star has added the second, and wisely, for that brings the love element into the display.

But you never tell your doctor "Everything is going to h—ll."

TEASER advertising, when it is well done, is mighty valuable to a theatre. The objection is in most cases that expressions used in the teaser campaign are misleading in that they fail to tie up completely with the first definite announcement

This picture is a drama of the American home and of mothers', daughters' and lovers' hearts. Not one scene of it is laid in Europe. Not one scene reveals a battle, or preparation for battle. or that they are so obvious as to lose all of the element of mystery.

Orpheum theatre, Williamsport, Pa., has developed one of the best of these ideas that we have ever seen on the advance campaign on Madge Keennedy in "The Service Star." The little reproduction of the service flag, the entire thing single column and an inch and a half deep, was scattered through the pages of the Williamsport Sun for several days in advance of the first announcement of the title of the picture and the star. Now note that there is nothing at all about the teasers to suggest what "The Flag of All Mothers" refers to. Obviously every one knows that it is an advertising stunt of some sort.

This is sane and sound teaser advertising and we earnestly commend it to everyone who is to show this picture in cities where it has not had a first run. Even then, the value of it would be only slightly weakened. One thing that commends this is that the whole thing can be set in any newspaper office. All that is needed is heavy border and a star, which you will find even in the smaller newspaper offices.

"The Service Star," by the way, has been responsible for a large amount of good advertising, and we have noted that in many cities the managers have been putting over the selling argument on this picture intelligently.

We reproduce one display from the Metropolitan theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. Here the theatre has used a cut-out of a half-tone of Madge Kennedy holding the service flag in her hand, and then below it has used a portion of the "editorial" that was prepared by the Goldwyn offices.

You can crowd 1,200 people into an 800-seat house, and you can crowd half of them out for keeps.

MERE space does not give pulling power to an advertisement. Remember that. We like to see theatres going into big space, for the reason that we believe that this policy will bring increased profits if it is consistently followed.

Now, since the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has reopened it has done some good advertising, but here is a particularly bad one, and the fact that a quarter of page of space was used does not save it. It would have been messy, though in a slightly less degree, had a full page been employed. The sense of values must be maintained in the largest as well as in the smallest display. One looking at this gets the impression that the designer did not know what was the point to bring home. In the first place, the series of cuts are confusing and utterly meaningless, even if they printed well, which they didn't. The name of the star is hidden between the lines "presenting" and the line just below. RECENTLY we commented on some of the advertising of the Parkview theatre, Johnstown, Pa., and at the time we said that the greatest fault of it was the heavy rule border that was used on practically all of the advertising. The advertising manager of the Grand Amusement Co., who does the advertising for the four theatres of the company, has seen the value of the suggestion and has greatly improved the appearance of the displays by using lighter border. In the case of the display on Kitty Gordon in "The Interloper" he has used a light double rule which runs from the cut in the upper left hand corner around the bottom of the ad and back into the cut. The white space that is left at the top gives good effect.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

AS much as we would hate to see him leave the exhibition field, sometimes we think that we would like to see S. L. Rothapfel in the role of a producer. An hour's talk with him when he is willing to forget the theatre, gives one the impression that he has splendid ideas of what pictures should be, and that he would introduce things novel and interesting that are not to be found in as many pictures these days as we would like to see.

All of which comment is caused by the presentation of one of the new Robert C. Bruce-Educational scenics at the Rialto theatre this week. Some months ago we sat with Mr. Bruce and Mr. Rothapfel during a discussion of what pictures should be—especially the scenic productions. It is not taking the slightest credit away from the wonderful work of Mr. Bruce to say that he owes a great deal to the encouragement that has been given by the master of the Rialto and Rivoli. On that Sunday afternoon we talked over putting poems into scenics, in following the spirit of them through the photography. One of the fruits of that afternoon is "The Tides of Yesterday," marvellous picture of simple beauty.

It follows the overture at the Rialto—selections from "Traviata" which was so brilliantly rendered that the audience broke into applause several times before the picture had come to and end. The Bruce picture is set around the Longfellow poem, "The Tide Rises and Tide Falls," and there are a succession of shots at the seashore, with the tide coming in and going out on peaceful shores, and then battering against the rocks, in the day, and at night and with the twilight on the water. "Scotch Poem" is the music for this number and the entrancing score sets the picture off to perfection. And the audience appreciate the delicate bit that the combination of words and picture and melody that results, and shows it by the applause.

Before the Byzantine setting, with the curtains on the panels at either side illuminated in red, and the center set in blue, the center dome in gold and blue and orchestra bathed in blue, Miss Annie Rosner then sings the waltz song from "Gypsy Love." Now here is a remarkable thing. It was mighty hot Sunday when we saw this original presentation of the week's bill, and it was calculated to take something unusual to draw applause from that audience. And consider, too, that this Byzantine had been used probably a dozen times at the Rialto, but this time, and every other time, it has appeared different with the lighting that is used, and when it was displayed again this last Sunday the audience broke into applause. It was not alone because of the setting itself, but because the overture and the scenic has put the soul of artistry into the hearts of all the spectators.

Can you see the difference in having a wonderful setting shown right after a slap-bang affair, and having it carry out the spirit of what has gone before? Now in analyzing a presentation there are differences between leading up to a number and following in a number. Both of these Mr. Rothapfel does, but this is a clear case of carrying out the spirit of what has gone before, for right after it comes the Animated.

"Sunshine March" is used for the opening, Gaumont pictures of the inspection at Camp Devens, Mass., which includes instruction in driving the big army trucks and pictures of artillery returning to camp after a day's drill. The same music continues through Screen Telegram views of using the placer mining system for recovering bullets that have been fired into the banks at Camp Logan, Texas. Hearst-Pathe pictures of American soldiers sightseeing in England calls for "Merry Baker's Dance," and from the same source are pictures of the Fourth of July baseball game between the Americans, in England, with King George and many other notables in attendance. "Are You From Dixie?" is the music here. Then comes Ford pictures of "Pay Day in Dogdom," pictures of terriers, wolf hounds and police dogs, and here "Poppyland" is just the right music. This continues through Gaumont pictures showing the baby buffalo just born at the Baltimore Zoo.

Screen Telegram shows pictures of New York kids keeping cool by turning the hose on themselves, and "This Is the Life" is played. Now up to this time we have had an interval of human interest stuff, without any special thrills, but it starts up now with Screen Telegram pictures of one of the big new observation balloons while "Aviation Tournament" is the accompaniment. Then, from the same course, come pictures from Washington on Secretary Burleson taking over the wire control and "Keep the Home Fires Burning" is used. Gaumont supplied the real punch, and we are shown Secretary Baker and Gen. March, chief of staff, receiving the day's news from Gen. Pershing. We are given the text of the telegram and, of course, there is wild applause and then under the caption, "Here are the boys a year ago," we have marching thousands en masse at one of the training camps. "Here They Come" is the music for this final smash.

After Desere LaSalle has sung the aria from "Benvenuto Cellini" we are led into a bunch of laughs with the feature, Charles Ray in "A Nine O'Clock Town." There is no theme for the music, but it is all light and appropriate. "A Perfect Day" is the opening selection and this turns into "Sometime," with the scenes the night before the opening of the Emporium, and then to "Lovelight," when the girl is introduced. "Do What Your Mother Did" and "Yankee Girl" follow, and then we have the comedy of his connection with the New York department store, "Perrot and Pierrette" is played without the introduction. "Jaz-a-mine" is used for the scenes at the cabaret, then one of the numbered selections and "Song D'Ete," when Charley shows up at the store late and finds he has no job. "Cutey" follows and then "Oriental Nights" in the scenes back in the "Emporium," followed by "Mamma's Blue." "Salome Valse" is used with the parade of the corset model from New York, and jazz effects imitating the village band. The organ carries the music themes to the point where the millionaire offers to buy the store, and here we have "Capricious Annette" used up to the time that the father comes to raise Cain with his son, and then "Blame it on the Blues," with "Poppyland" for the happy ending.

"High Jinks," the next orchestra selection is in keeping with the spirit of the feature, and "Her Blighted Love," the very funny Mack Sennett comedy that follows. There are ten musical selections used in this, starting with "Follow the Girl." There are lots of laughs gained when the maiden lady is telling her story on the witness stand, when the orchestra, with mock pathos, plays "You Made Me What I Am Today," "Hearts and Flowers," "Hellow I've Been Looking for You," "Harrison Fisher," "He's My Pal," "You're in Style," "I Love Sand," a galop, and "I Never Knew" are the others.

There is an equally good hot weather show at the Rivoli, opening with "Bachanale" from "Samson and Delilah," for which there is one of the artistic John Wenger settings—one of those "different" creations that one long remembers. After a few bars of the music the curtains part

CUTTING PROGRAMS

English Paper Rule May Be Applied to This Country

IT'S a good time for managers to consider putting their program announcement into the smallest amount of space possible.

Britain's latest rule may forecast similar action in this country. Of course, the transportation element enters largely into the paper supply question abroad, for all of it has to be imported, but right with us the transportation question is resulting in cutting off the unessentials.

England has ruled that the programs must not occupy more than four pages six inches and in no case will coated or art paper be allowed.

It means crowding down the matter and if the rule is applied in this country it means getting meat into everything that you say.

Rialto and Rivoli

and reveals a Moorish setting, with an opening at the back showing the blue sky filled with stars and at either side of a stand are Moors holding torches. They stand immovable during the rendition of the number—providing the atmosphere.

Then follow Pathe-Post pictures of "Antigua, British West Indies," and for the first of this "Rule Britannia" is played, followed by three English dances.

Then with the main lighting dome in blue and orchestra bathed in blue, with no lights above the stage, Miss Gladys Rice charmingly sings "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny." For this the setting of Wenger showing the weird rocks and two arrow-like trees is used, with the stage almost in darkness.

"Jack Tar" march is used for the openings of the Animated which first shows pictures of 10,000 jackies at the Newport naval station, with some very fine marching scenes. These are Hearst-Pathe product, and then are followed by Gaumont pictures of the new game being played at Cambridge by the jackies, with "Sailor's Hornpipe" as the accompaniment. Then come pictures from Hearst-Pathe of launching the destroyer "Delphy," "Before the Mast" being played. The same service supplies views of the Cape Cod Canal, which has been taken over by the Government, and the orchestra swings into "Good Luck, U. S. A." Then we have pictures of the reception to the Japanese Red Cross, with the Jap national anthem is played until Director Davidson appears and then the music becomes "Onward Christian Soldiers."

Then comes the Official War Review, opening with Americans on watch in the shell holes, the methods of communication with the rear, using carrier pigeons and souvenirs collected where the Huns have been pushed back. Through these views "Liberty Bell" is used, and when the pictures change to the British fighting the battle of Democracy in Palestine we have "Siamese Patrol," played with the brass muted. Then come pictures of air raiders attacking open towns in Italy, and here "Il Guarany" is used. Then we have pictures of the flags of Freedom displayed in Milan, and for this "Allied War March" is played effectively. Then comes a wonderful punch with Gen. Foch and his staff honoring American soldiers, and you can imagine that the big audiences literally go with their enthusiasm while the orchestra crashed out "Pere de la Victorie." The Animated comes to an end with American sailors forming the words "Viva la France!"

Right after that with the spirit of France still in the hearts of everyone Greek Evans sings "Rose of Picardy." For this the lights are all in red and there is an evergreen on either side of the stage.

Then follows the feature, Douglas Fairbanks in "Bound in Morocco," and nearly all of the music for this is of the weird, Moorish line. For instance, it opens with "Scene de Serail," and then goes into "Orgies of the Spirit," and then "Fairbanks March" with the pursuit of Douglas. "In the Sudan" is used for the introduction of some of the Moorish characters, and then "Narcissus," played with violin solo for the appearance of the girl. There is a clever touch when he sees the Liberty Loan button on one of the Moors and the music becomes "Yankee Doodle." Following this "Crickets Serenade" is played without the introduction and then come "March Turque," "Eastern Romance," played very fast and "Djamileh." At the point where Fairbanks is seen with the revolver we have once more the "Fairbanks March," and then as he enters the harem the music becomes "Whirling Dervishes," followed by "Dance of the Hindus." At the point where Fairbanks is "pinched" we have "Marche Arabe," followed by a one step, then one of the numbered selections and "Walnut Tree" played very slowly as the bomb explodes. As they are discovered the music becomes "In the Seraglio" and then "Fairbanks One Step" with the music changing to "Bambula," as he cuts off the shiek's beard, then another numbered selection for the battle and Narcissus" at the end. There is a unique ending for the picture with the caption, "One Hundred Years Later," showing two large tombstones surrounded by a number of smaller ones—quite an original way of bringing in the usual finale.

Then the orchestra plays selections from "The Merry Widow," and soon there is humming all through the house. The comedy is Happy Hooligan in "His Dark Past," and it is filled with laughs while the music plays no little part in the enjoyment of the picture the selections being "Mr. Dooley," "Siam," "Hezekiah" and "Your Wife."

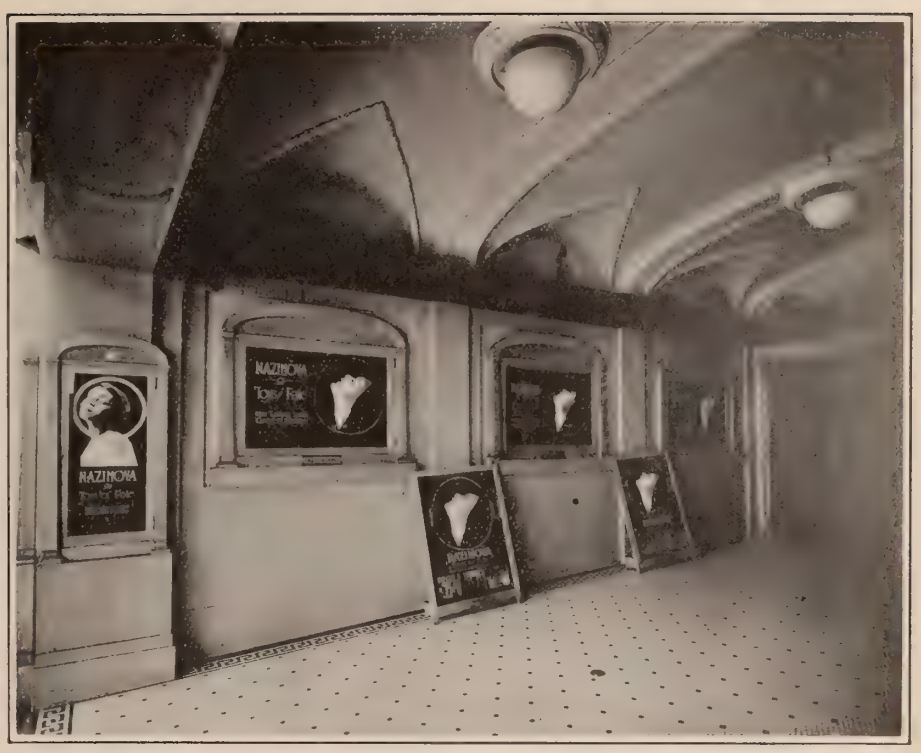
We have remarked once before that the Rialto and Rivoli furnish the examples of light bills. In these hottest days of the summer you will find that your audiences do not want to be forced to think. They are busy enough getting rid of the perspiration without having to use their handkerchiefs to wipe away tears.

That doesn't mean that your bills should not be as good or that your presentations cannot be just as elaborate. It does not mean that you are to let down in the summer season, for this is the very time that you should guard against such things. Many exhibitors give the first invitation to bad business, by cutting down expenses noticeably.

Now here is the difference. You do not notice the big chorus effects during the summer at the Rialto and Rivoli that we told you about week after week in the winter season. There is a very good reason for it—simply that these numbers are too heavy for hot weather times. You cannot imagine grand opera delighting audiences in August.

But the music selections being used these hot days are selections from light or comic operas, old time songs, or others with the sentiment of the war in them. And Mr. Rothapfel is trying to have all his pictures happy ones, or with the element of self-sacrifice in their heart appeal without appealing to overpowering emotions.

That's something that exhibitors can well afford to think about—and the producers too. There is so much psychology to the picture and the music with it, that the weather has its effect.



Futurist designs were used in the lobby display at Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles. The displays were confined to the frames in the sides of the lobby and regular one sheet frames, the face of Mme. Nazimova being strongly featured in all of them

How Rothapfel Presented "America's Answer" for the Government to Help All Exhibitors

LATE Sunday afternoon we sat in the Cohan theatre and when we could keep our eyes off a very stunning Goddess of Liberty with a very low-necked dress we watched S. L. Rothapfel perspire as he sought to whip an orchestra, gathered here and there into shape. Two hours later the first presentation of "America's Answer," the second of the Government war pictures, was given to an invited audience, and Monday evening the first public showing stirred the hundreds that packed the theatre to enormous enthusiasm. By that time it was a finished product of the Rothapfel way of doing things.

But it sure did take work, and Mr. Rothapfel and his able production manager, Joseph LaRose, were busy every minute of the time in order to get the picture arranged, and when you figure that not only had the sets to be planned, the performers to be drilled, and the music to be arranged, but the picture had to be changed around a great deal in order to get the proper sequence of events. There could not be the slightest comparison between the picture in its original form, and as it was presented at the Cohan—and all the result of knowing how to reach the symphony of the silent drama.

During the run of the picture the auditorium of the theatre is draped in American flags. It is tastefully done, and in fact everything about the presentation is in good taste. Of course the picture is intensely patriotic, and it is to be expected that stirring music would be the rule, but there is never anything glaring or bombastic.

As the lights of the theatre go out the footlights come up red on the curtain, and with the orchestra all standing up goes the curtain revealing one hundred sailor boys in uniform with the song leader, and immediately the orchestra starts "The Star Spangled Banner," and the national anthem was never sung with more vigor, nor did it ever appeal to the hearts of an audience more strongly as the fighting hymn of our fighting men as it does when the boys who are offering their lives for it make the immoral words ring through the theatre.

With bugle and drum roll they march from the stage as the audience continues its cheering and then we see the decorations of the settings with a wide-spread eagle over all and the seal of the nation and of the Commmittee on Public Information. The curtains in the background are in red and white stripes, and as the sailors leave the whole curtain gradually becomes pink, and then they part to revealing a special setting which shows soldiers in the front line in the position to meet a sharge, while a huge figure of Liberty bearing a big American flag stands guard over them. On the right we see one of the towns set fire by the huns, but on the left are factories, emblematic of the manner in which America is putting her every resource behind winning the war.

Again we have the adjutant's call and the roll of drums, with the orchestra bursting into "Over There," while imitations of firing come from the wings, and then we have a second set showing a front trench, and then from the blue sky there breaks out the Spirit of Liberty from the sky, and as the lights dim down behind the girl the title of the picture comes in flaming letters against the curtain, and then the screen is slowly lowered. The position of the screen is in the center of a huge circle that fills the width of the stage, the seal of the Committee.

First come pictures of workers and fighters united under the flag, and then the Statue of Liberty, and a picture of the President, with the music, "Battle Hymn of the Republic." The music changes back to "Over There" when we are shown pictures of Gen. Pershing and his staff, under the caption, "Your Leader Over There." The scene was taken in the winter, and the men are all in heavy coats and the snow is falling. Then with the title, "These are the ships, etc.," we get remarkable pictures of battleships going ahead at full steam, destroyers circling about to protect the transports, their decks brown with hundreds of soldiers. "Columbia" is played twice through for these pictures. Then we are shown the preparations being made for their reception and the construction of docks on the other side with "Hands Across the Sea," played once through and then "World's Progress" march. There is a clever shot when the noon hour comes and the men drop work, and here the mess call is given followed by "There's a Million Heroes."

Now during this constructive work even a glimpse of the locomotives with "U. S." on their sides bring applause, and a little later in the picture we see the audience cheering such an unromantic thing as a pile of logs. Then an element of comedy is brought in with a group of negroes dancing to "Chicken in the Straw"' and then we are taken back to the transports arriving in France, and first we have the chorus of "Over There," and then a couple of bars of "Marseillaise," and then the chorus of "Over There" continued in trio. As the men are seen marching away from the ships the march becomes "La Pere de la Victoire," the introduction of which is played twice until we have the title, "Here They Come," and there are fine shots of the marching men with "Here They Come" the music and the audience simply goes wild. We get a laugh and more enthusiasm with the title, saying "But the bluejackets wouldn't leave until they had seen them safely on Main street," and with the escorting sailors we have "He's My Pal."

"Giddy-ap" is played during the scenes of unloading the transports, and then as we are told that the forests of France are kind to us in furnishing the timber, "Woodland Whispers" becomes the air. With another title showing the boys at work near the Swiss frontier the air again shifts to "Ole Virginny" which is played twice through. After that we have more scenes of the construction work with "Mary Lee" played once through and followed by "Million Heroes." With the title giving us one of the reasons why we are eating war bread over here the music appropriately becomes "My Dough

CREEL ON PICTURES

Tells First Night Audience Their Importance in the War

AN incident at the opening of "America's Answer" shows the importance of the motion picture during the war, from the point of view of the government, and made the opening notable.

During the intermission Captain Robert Warwick, one of the best known stars and now in the service of Uncle Sam, and who has just come back from Europe appeared in uniform and introduced George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

Mr. Creel, in opening, referred to the great importance that the government placed on the motion picture in helping win the war. He called attention to the specific picture that was being shown and declared that the government was going to continue to use the motion picture to show the people of our country and others what we are doing.

PRESERVE THIS

It's a Full Account of the Way to Put on Second U. S. Picture

WHEN Director Hart of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information looked around for some one to stage all the government pictures he selected S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto and Rivoli. Mr. Rothapfel gave his time and every effort to the work and the result is a splendid presentation.

In this article you will see in detail how it was done, get the music for the picture. You are likely to play this "America's Answer," and if you have it in mind be sure that you preserve this account so that you can use it in your own preparation. You may not be able to present the picture on the same scale, but certainly you can modify the things done here and improve your show a hundred per cent over what it ordinarily would be.

Manager Julius Johnson, of the New Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis, was able to secure wonderful cooperation of three of the largest stores in giving displays on "Over the Top," which played to capacity for a week at his theatres. At the left is the window at the Powers dry goods store and at the right at Dayton's. There was a third display by the Donaldson Glass Block Boy," and this continues through the scenes at one of the huge bakeries.

French women making camouflage calls for "Valse Bleaue," without introduction and until the trio, and then as we see our soldiers marching down the camouflaged roads we have "Miss Liberty" played once through. Then come pictures of the huge piles of hats and shoes being combed over, and with this "Sly Boots" is played until we have scenes of French women repairing the boys clothing, and "Sleeping Roses" is played without introduction continuing until we are shown the grandmothers of France helping in the work for our boys, and here we have "Marseillaise" (pp legato strings). Then as the train takes the boys away toward the front "Dixie Volunteers" becomes the air, and continued to a little incident where an American soldier is drilling a Chinaman and here we get four bars of "My Dreamy China" with drum solo. Far back from the front hospital we are then shown Base Hospital No. 8 with "What Are We Going to Do?" and then as there come on the screen pictures of the women Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. workers we get a real thrill as the chorus to the "Daughters of the American Revolution," in which "America" is counterpointed, is played twice through. This brings the first part to an end.

For the opening of the second part "Gate City March" is used. This includes some bars from "Old Folks at Home," "Dixie" and "My Maryland," and is played with pictures of the boys on the march to the front-line trenches and wallowing through after this is "Liberty Lads." Eight bars of "Home Sweet Home" are played with the remainder of home, and then after that come "It's Time for Every Boy to Be a Soldier" and "If He Can Fight," with no vamp. Then at the title, "Up the Roads" we have "Over There" until the drum solo, and then with the sight of the French children watching their soldier friends go by we have the chorus of "Marseillaise" repeated, and then with the aircraft guns one of the Rothapfel numbered selections is used, with the battle sounds, and then comes pictures at one of the temporary hospitals and the air is "My Angel of the Flaming Cross." "Invincible Eagle" is used for pictures of our aeroplanes in France, stopping all but the drums when the pictures of Lufberry come on the screen, and this quickly fades into "Memorial Day in France," and here we have the drum roll, and then "Taps" and a reproduction of the firing of the three volleys. By-the-way, it is well to remark that the only pictures included in this whole picture that were not made in France were those of the aeroplane stunts in the clouds. These were done by Mr. Rothapfel during his recent picture-making trip for the Marine Corps.

After the memorial days shots "Sombre et Meuse" is played for the decoration of American soldiers by the French, and until the pictures of Major Roosevelt and his battalion, and then the air changes to "Stars and Stripes." There is a great reception for these pictures and they are followed by "The Battle of Catigny," remarkable pictures of real fighting, the first in which the Americans participated. First the music is "Battle of San Juan Hill," played twice, and then it turns into some of the specially prepared music, giving the battle effects, and then as we see the marines go forward we have "Marine Hymn," followed by "Yankee Doodle" and another of the numbered selection.

Finally at the end comes "America's Answer" in living letters, formed by sailors, and the orchestra breaks into "Daughter of the American Revolution," and at the counterpoint of "America," the whole audience, cheering, comes to its feet.

Compared with any other strictly war picture, feature or what not, that we have seen the presentation that Mr. Rothapfel has arranged is wonderful. Now the Division of Films has not asked Mr. Rothapfel to do this for the benefit of the people of New York alone, but that the exhibitors of the country may be given the proper hints on how to present this wonderful picture and make the most out of it.

There's just one thing that we want to mention. During the scenes of cutting the lumber there is a real saw mill used behind the scenes. When we heard it from the front of the house we thought it a wonderful imitation, but Joe LaRose showed us he had the real thing by introducing it to us.

There's realism in the way that these pictures are presented. Everything was "done to the turn" and there wasn't a thing jarring in it. Of course, mere description does not give you all the fine points, but we believe that there is enough here to encourage exhibitors, even those with limited facilities, to do the most. And those that have any music at all, even if it is only a piano, can get lots of hints here.

10 Bathing Girls Used with "The Venus Model"

A bathing girls' fashion show, given at the Kinema theatre by ten living models, was one of the special features in connection with the week's showing of Mabel Normand's "The Venus Model," based upon a tale of a girl who found fortune in a bathing suit. The bathing suit fashion parade, introduced by Manager Nat Holt, was particularly timely at this season when the beaches about Los Angeles are enjoying the greatest popularity of the year.

Manager Holt had planned for this bathing parade early in the season, and upon viewing "The Venus Model" decided to stage it in connection with the presentation of this picture.

The girls came on the stage while the chorus of "Splash Me" was being played by the orchestra, and one of the ten then sang "There Must Be Little Cupids in the Briny," accompanied by dancing of the entire ten. A tiny bather, a wee girl of five, sang the verse and chorus of "Splash Me," and the stage lighting was dimmed as the beach beauties left the stage. Immediately the Mabel Normand subject was projected.

ably better advertising than any of the Los Angeles, but we do not know of any city where there are so many of them that are consistently intelligent advertisers.

Now while we have not shown you any of the pages from the during the week issues, let us say right here that all the advertising theatres of that city are always plugging away. They use space every day in the week and they keep their attractions constantly before everyone.

The theatres that do advertise also deserve credit in the fact that most of them advertise not only on Saturdays and Sundays but during the week in all of the papers and there are a good many of them in Los Angeles. This has resulted largely from the fact that the commercial rate which they grant the users of big space allows the theatres to cover the whole field and encourages their advertising managers to take the big spaces whenever possible.

Another encouraging fact is that most of the Los Angeles papers see that there is real interest in photoplay matter. Where they have to carry the reading notices nearly all of them give news twists to this matter and it will be digested by the readers.

The Los Angeles situation is interesting because you will remember that it was only a short time ago that the theatres were doing very little in the way of advertising—during the time that all the papers were charging the amusement rate. When the newspapers saw the light and granted the commercial rate on large copy the theatres that we have mentioned became consistent advertisers. We believe that such is the case everywhere.

But it is a case of the theatres and the newspapers getting together. The theatre hasn't any right to expect the name of his house to be used in every line of matter that goes into the paper. And the newspaper hasn't any right to consider everything that refers to motion pictures mere "reading notices." The great element of the public—the interest in the photoplay—has to be taken into consideration.

We believe that all of the newspapers of Los Angeles have men who devote their whole time either to amusements as a whole, or to the photoplay alone, and in some cases this man also handles the advertising.

There is a great deal in the newspaper sending the right sort of a man into the field.

Next week we will sum up the various elements of the Los Angeles situation with some general observations that will apply to all cities. It has been necessary to lay the foundations in these two articles to show what all the elements are doing. Next week we will show you some pages from the Tuesday Herald and tell you the sort of matter that the fans as a whole want to read and the sort of matter that is most worth while to you, the exhibitor, in building up interest in the theatre and to the newspaper owner as a circulation builder and a circulation holder.

How Laurie Puts Over His Appeal Without Any Offense Given

A. J. LAURIE secured a smashing display on "Enlighten Thy Daughter" through an impressive setting, and put over the appeal with all the clean sensationalism possible and none of the offensive.

"While the picture," comments Mr. Laurie, "carries a strong moral lesson and has been endorsed by the clergy and leaders in thought all over the continent, yet it presented some features that were likely to shock patrons if not properly displayed. The point in the display was to emphasize the moral aspects of the picture and to minimize the other features."

Mr. Laurie has the right idea of such a picture, and he displayed his matter with good taste. The center design featured two girls at the edge of an abyss, one of them with her eyes bandaged and about to plunge into the depths and the mother coming to the rescue of the other and removing the veil from her eyes in time to save her. Certainly that tells the whole story very plainly to those who should know it, and leaves no false impression on children.

This center display was made out of cardboard, and a frame being twelve feet wide and eight feet high. It can be seen in the reproduction where the cardboard starts and the frame portion begins. The three figures are shown in cut-outs. This scene is taken from the prologue of the picture, and so is the sentence beginning, "The highest duty," etc. The other messages are those of Mr. Laurie.

At either side of this display was a large painting showing scenes from the production.

Fire Engines Do Stunts for "The Still Alarm"

Getting the city's fire department to work for you is not an easy job, but this was the stunt that was accomplished by C. Poster Mason, manager for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Denver, Col., for the showing of "The Still Alarm" at the America theatre. He was able to arrange with the fire department to go through a thrilling exhibition in front of the theatre and the result was immense crowds who were naturally attracted to the displays on "The Still Alarm."

CALLED AWAY

And So McCormick Advertising Article Goes Over to Next Week

S. BARRET McCORMICK, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, was called out of the city by business last week and therefore there was delay in the preparation of the fourth of his articles on advertising the motion picture. It will appear next week.

Manager of Theatre in City of 27,000 Tells How He Makes Theatre The Thing

By C. A. Lick

Manager New Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.

Fort Smith has a census population of 27,136, but there is not a city in the country that has a theatre taking the fullest advantage of all branches of exploitation more successfully than the New. Mr. Lick tells in this article about the methods that he uses in advertising his pictures in advance. His advice will apply to the thousands of theatres that make their bookings weeks before the pictures are actually shown. Mr. Lick is the man who adapted the Statler Hotel service rules into a booklet for his own theatre employes and the first to issue a booklet giving the biographies of the stars playing at his theatre.

I HAVE been in the advertising business, directly and indirectly, for some thirty years, and naturally have accumulated some peculiar ideas, and the most positive of them is not to boost the other fellow's game. Of course I do not mean by this that we do not advertise the name of our picture and the star and cast appearing in same, for this is absolutely necessary.

We pay particular attention to our lobby and front display, as we consider that this is just the same as a merchant's show window. My main thought, however, is put in on how to make past and prospective patrons realize that they are taking very little chance when attending the New theatre; that they will always get their money's worth in music, attention, cleanliness, comfort, etc., even if the story does not happen to please them.

We divide the art of advertising into three divisions, properly called the three "P's"—personal, press and poster. We use all three, but particularly specialize on the personal division. We have every person working for us trained to talk, and very often issue a typewritten bulletin to everybody from the janitor up, telling them of the qualities of certain productions. Another form of personal advertising is our mailing list. We have an addressograph and a choice selected list of about eight hundred names, to whom we send personal communications about once a week and sometimes oftener.

We are also very strong on the billboard end, and very often a picture carrying a twenty-four sheet poster with it is given preference over a picture with less poster display, which is much better.

Of course, the advance advertising that producers supply is absolutely necessary for even the best advertiser to lay out his campaign. The big pictures come so fast that it is impossible to keep up with them without this service from the producer, and I must say that in come cases this service is woefully lacking.

Now, I want to tell you of one thing that has done the New theatre more good than any other one form of advertising. We book our pictures some two or two and a half months in advance. We order our

We have some twenty one-sheet frames, enameled white, which are filled with one-sheets and hung promiscuously in the lobby. We never attach a date to any of these one-sheets or photogravures and we forbid any employee around the house telling the date of any production, even if they should happen to know it. When a patron asks an attache what the date is on a certain picture, he is referred to a large date board that we have in the main entrance. This date board is about 3 x 5 feet, with some twenty-four strips on which are printed the name of star, the attraction and the date.

When they are referred to this board to find out when Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" is to be exhibited here, they will probably look over the entire list of bookings for some two months, thus familiarizing themselves with these coming attractions, so that when they are advertised on the screen, billboards, in the papers

Actors and Experts Essential

Ruling From Crowder's Office Places Picture Business Among Useful Occupations

WASHINGTON — All question about the status of motion picture actors and skilled studio workers in regard to the "work or fight" law was set aside Saturday by a ruling issued from the office of Provost Marshal General Crowder through which draft boards are obliged to consider film actors musicians and all skilled persons employed in the creation and presentation of moving picture productions as engaged in productive employment.

The most important interpretation of the "work or fight" law expresses the decision rendered by Colonel Warren, head of the appeals section of the Provost Marshal General's office, and definitely classes the industry among the essentials. It had been generally supposed that motion picture actors would come under the same classification as "legitimate" stage players but there was considerable uncertainty about the Government's attitude towards studio and theatre employes.

As it stands now there is nothing to fear from arbitrary rulings of draft boards and the problems of producers, who may retain their expert assistants, and house managers permitted to keep their operators, should be considerably lessened.

The favorable ruling is said to be a direct result of a petition submitted to the Provost Marshal by the Motion Picture War Service Association, the recently formed Los Angeles organization. In this petition, the contribution of the motion picture business to war work and its necessity in entertaining millions of people were set forth

NEW

Mr. Lick recently ran a series of four quarter page advertisements on motion pictures as an essential during the war. This is the third and reproduces the ruling that actors and experts are essential and by mailed circulars, they are in a receptive mood for same and think that they already know the picture. There is hardly a day goes by but what there are from fifty to a hundred people go up to this board to find out the date on some certain picture and I personally have heard them a great many times reading the different bookings and remarking, "Oh! there is Charley Ray. We want to be sure to see him;" and "There is Frank Keenan; I haven't seen him in a long time."

This latter scheme is, I believe, original with the New theatre, and it would not appeal to any of my fellow exhibitors unless they are booking far in advance. The trouble with this scheme is that many exhibitors hardly know what they are going to play the following week. I assure you that we have had an awful time with some of the exchanges in getting our bookings laid out as far as two months in advance. Of course, it inconveniences us sometimes, as we might run across a picture that would get us more money, but we make an

An Essential Wheel in Uncle Sam's Great War Machine

Gen. Crowder has placed motion pictures on the Essential List

THESE are the days when the only industries that can survive are those that have a staunch and definite part in the winning of the War. The producing of motion pictures is one of these. More than a year after the United States entered the War America's motion picture industry finds itself stronger, more favored, more necessary than ever before.

The motion picture is in the War to win the War. It has labored faithfully and efficiently for such patriotic movements as the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, Food Conservation, and Ship Building.

President Wilson has publicly thanked the exhibitors for turning over their theatres to Four Minute Men and for war propaganda. The greatest motion picture stars, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, have toured the nation in the Liberty Loan campaigns. The motion picture has willingly paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes. The exhibitors have opened their doors for war work, but have only just begun their splendid share in the War.

The motion picture's mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home. It is the national amusement, filling a national need.

NEW

THE BEST IN MOTION PICTURES

This fourth quarter page repeats that Gen. Crowder has held the motion picture necessary to winning the war. This was a splendid way to advertise the New Theatre invariable rule of never changing bookings after they are once set, and we believe the advance advertising will more than offset the short time our fellow exhibitor has in which to advertise this special feature he has picked out.

Recently I used a series of four large advertisements (forty inches) emphasizing the fact that the Government has put the New theatre, among some 15,000 other picture houses, on the essential list. This has done much to overcome the slump that we had about the time Liberty Bond and War Saving Stamp drives were going on. You will notice these ads are boosting the New theatre, and that we have not paid out our good money to foist any particular star or production.

I want to say that in my opinion it takes a great deal more thought to advertise the theatre than it does to advertise a certain star or a certain production, but it pays in the long run.

Mme. Petrova Makes Record in Twin Cities

Addressing audiences in two of the largest cities of the country in the same afternoon and selling $5,000 worth of Thrift Stamps in one and $4,000 in another, is the record-breaking feat that has just been accomplished by Mme. Petrova. Of course it happened in Minneapolis and St. Paul

According to the preliminary arrangements, Mme. Petrova was to spend a day in each city, but she had to come all the way from Seattle, and in the meantime Mr. McAdoo had changed the schedules so that she was practically a day late in reaching her destination and then she had to yield to many hospitalities. She arrived at Minneapolis late at night, and the next morning she motored to St. Paul, where she sold $3,000 worth of the Liberty pasters at a noon meeting. This meeting was preceded by a big parade and after the stamp sale she headed a parade of naval cadets to the Dunwood Institute parade grounds, and then went to the New Garrick, where she sold $5,000 worth. It was then a quick trip to the New Garrick, Minneapolis, where she got $4,000 for the government before taking a train for Milwaukee.

advertising matter this far in advance also.

Fox Plans Complete Service on Every Picture

FOX FILM CORPORATION is starting out the year of 1918-1919 with elaborated ideas for aiding the exhibitors in the exploitation of pictures. Careful plans have been laid for giving real service on each production that is released during the year with a special eye to providing matter for the live wires of the country. Strong recommendations for advertising will go along with the other matter.

In addition to merely furnishing the material for the exploitation, the publicity department is going to outline the especial appeal of each production and endeavor to show the exhibitors just what things to play strongest so as to get the greatest box office returns. And along with this advice there will be supplied full material to use in taking advantage of every angle. This material will be supplied to the exchanges in advance so that no time will be lost.

Elaborate press books have been issued already on a number of the productions. For instance, thirty-two pages are devoted to "Why America Will Win," a big patriotic production which is based on the life of Gen. Pershing. There has been a great publicity plan prepared in connection with this picture as a 35,000 word story of the life of the American commander had already been syndicated and will appear in more than a hundred of the largest dailies. In addition there is a series of shorter stories, elaborately illustrated, containing somewhat the same matter which has also been syndicated to a number of papers. Exhibitors are urged to see that this story is used by their local paper so that they will get the direct benefit.

Fox points out that the big dominant note to be followed in all of the advertising of this picture is Victory. It is pointed out that the picture can be coupled up with the progress of the war, for certainly there is no more dominant figure today. Many other noted characters appeal in this picture including the President, Col. Roosevelt, Gen. Foch, King George, Premier Clemenceau, the kaiser, the crown prince and other German officials.

This press book includes a full series of advertisements, both illustrated and in ordinary type. The illustrations are largely cuts of Gen. Pershing. There are, of course, ample press notices already prepared to take care of any emergency.

One of the big features of the exploitation will be the distribution of a million copies of a sepia-toned photograph of the American commander.

Fifty-four pages are occupied with the advertising suggestions on "The Prussian Cur." This is another picture bearing on the war, treating of German spy activities in this country both before the war and since this country entered hostilities. While the greater portions of the scenes are laid in this country there are many abroad, the kaiser and his minions being introduced. In fact, this picture tells of the wiping out of the submarine menace, the absolute supremacy of the air and then the final victory over the Huns.

Left-hand pages of the press book are devoted to a large number of scenes from the production, together with the advertising aids. There is a great variety of newspaper advertising which will be published in cut form and there are many other specimens in type display only. In addition the striking paper is illustrated. There are two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and one 24-sheet. In addition there are twelve 8 x 10 black and white photos, twelve 11 x 12 colored gelatins and three 22 x 28 colored gelatins together with serial gelatins of Miriam Cooper, the featured player. There are six single column and six double column mats on the production. Eight two-column cuts and mats and four one-columns provided for the advertising matter, together with slides and music cues.

In addition to the usual press notices there are a series of stories provided bearing on the spy menace in this country and telling of the things that have been made a matter of record through the activities of the American Secret Service. There is also a series of five stories based on the career of Capt. Horst von Goltz, the head of the German spy system in this country, and the exhibitors are advised that they can get splendid results if they are able to have this matter reproduced in their local paper just before the opening of the picture. It is good interesting matter and it will probably be printed where the ordinary press matter would be cast aside.

On this picture, too, there will be a million copies of special poster work distributed, this being a cartoon of the kaiser.

A full assortment of press and advertising matter is supplied with the William Farnum picture, "Riders of the Purple Sage." There is an extended series of press notices about the star and the picture, and the author of the novel from which it is taken. Besides an assortment of type advertisements there are single and double-column advertising layouts and four one-column and four double-column cuts and mats of the production, besides one, two and three-column cuts and mats of the star. Two one-sheets, two 3-sheets, one 6-sheet and one 24-sheet are provided in the paper and there is the usual supply of photos for the newspapers and lobby display.

Fox points out that one of the points to be played up in connection with "Queen of the Sea" is the beauty and the swimming accomplishments of the star, Annette Kellerman, as well as the massiveness of the production and that more than a year was occupied in its making. Most of the press matter supplied in the exploitation book bears on these points.

In this connection there are a series of articles by Miss Kellerman and also nine short lessons in swimming by her which the exhibitors will be able to get many of the newspapers to use.

Naturally the figure of Miss Kellerman and the hundreds of sea nymphs are played up in the advertising and the paper. There are two one-column, two two-column and one three-column prepared advertisements and a variety of type displays. Two one-sheets, two 3-sheets, one 6-sheet and two 24-sheets are all striking. In addition there are the unusual number of photos and a series of poses of the star.

Exploitation books on "Cleopatra" and "Salome," in both of which Theda Bara is starred, are in different form, telling the story and the character of the productions. They are elaborately illustrated and give a fine idea of what can be achieved in the way of advertising. The various Fox exchanges will supply a full line of advertising aids and lavish paper on these productions as on William Farnum in "Les Miserables."

A special design of press book has been prepared for each of the Victory Pictures. In a new form, this book will con-

Striking Window Displays Bring Business to Central Park in Summer

READERS of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS are familiar already with the splendid display work that is being done at the Central Park theatre, Chicago. This is one of the handsomest houses in the country in every respect, and it is fitting that the exploitation as conducted by Alexander Frank should be artistic.

Mr. Frank uses none of the stock paper which is sent out by the film companies in his lobby work. Instead, as we illustrated for you in a recent article, all of this matter is especially prepared in the art rooms of the Central Park, and no two of the displays are alike. Simplicity in the illustrations and the lettering are striking points.

Now Mr. Frank has been able to go a step forward and to get the use of a show window next door to the theatre. This window is twenty feet wide and ten feet deep, and therefore gives excellent opportunity for unusual display. It is estimated that more than 60,000 people pass this window each week, and so there is great advertising value.

These displays are made a week in advance of the attractions. Everything except the raw material is made in the Central Park studios, none of the so-called advertising aids furnished by the producers being used. For instance, in the display on "Missing" the pillars were made of Compo board with a fern placed on top of each and then the displays made from cut-outs of the three sheets. All of the lettering is done by Mr. Frank.

While smaller theatres could not operate on the same scale as the Central Park, exhibitors will find that it is a mighty good thing to arrange displays like this in connection with one of the local stores or by using a vacant building. Before investing heavily at the start, try out the idea on some picture that you know is a good one and you are likely to get surprising results.

According to reports from Chicago, the Central Park gives these windows a considerable portion of the credit for the fact that the theatre is doing just as big business during the supposedly poor summer season as it did in the winter months.

tain a large number of helps for exhibitors in exploiting the productions of Tom Mix, George Walsh and Gladys Brockwell.

For the Excel Pictures the Fox News, in new and more attractive dress, will be issued bi-weekly, each number being based on one of the pictures in this series.

Besides all these helps the Fox Film Corporation will give enlarged service direct to newspapers throughout the country, through the mailing of still photographs the William Fox Press Service, mats and other material which is calculated to increase the prestige of Fox stars and productions.

Virginia Theatre Gets Credit for Fourth Flag Idea

For the first time since the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been established we have made an error in giving the credit for an idea to the wrong theatre. Recently we printed an account of a flag arrangement used by the Bedford theatre, for a Fourth of July bill announcement, and we stated that it was located in Brooklyn. However, this flag stand was the work of R. S. Brewbaker, manager of the Bedford theatre, Bedford, Va. The flags were bought by wholesale, the announcement of the picture and the cost of making the flag stands was neglible. The entire cost was 1⅛ cents each.

Hyman Opens Offices to Book Pictures for U. S.

Edward L. Hyman, former manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, and member of the Advisory Board, has reached New York and has opened headquarters at 1520 Broadway, where he will be head of the picture division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. Mr. Hyman will have charge of the selection of all the pictures to be shown in the various Liberty theatres in the army camps throughout the country.

When Mr. Hyman entered the service of the Commission he was assigned to Camp Wheeler, at Macon, Ga., and afterwards he was shifted to Camp Gordon, Atlanta, and in addition was given the task of selecting all the films for ten of the theatres. Very shortly after that he was given his new post, which he has assumed after conferring with the heads of the Commission in Washington. He is now making arrangements so that the very best of the pictures may be secured for the Liberty theatres while they are new.

In the past the pictures that have been shown for the soldier boys have been, to a considerable extent, junk, except when some special picture was secured, and consequently they became unpopular, but the careful selection of good subjects immediately restored them to full favor.

Perry Becomes Manager of Camp Upton Theatre

Charles C. Perry, until a few days ago manager of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is the latest manager to enter the service of the Commission of Training Camp Activities. He has just reached New York to take charge of the Buffalo theatre, one of the Commission's houses, at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y.

Mr. Perry has been one of the most successful of the young managers of the country and he attracted much attention by the manner in which he conducted the Strand, making it a big success.

Live News from the Producers

"Sue" Chosen for Bessie Love

Will Mark Winsome Star's Debut Under Vitagraph Banner in Blue Ribbon Features—Based on Bret Harte Story

"SUE," the play made from Bret Harte's story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plain," has been chosen as the first subject in which Bessie Love will appear on the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program. Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, makes this announcement, adding that the first Bessie Love production will be released on November 4. It will be made at the Vitagraph Western Studio, under direction of David Smith.

The news last week that Miss Love had been added to the list of Vitagraph stars was one of the outstanding features of motion picture developments, because it indicated that Vitagraph, in signing a new star of Miss Love's importance, is carrying out its promise of expansion recently made by the president of the company.

This is the second change Miss Love has made since she started her career as a motion picture actress. Beginning with David W. Griffith, at the Triangle-Fine Arts Studio, she received her first training at his hands, and then was under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. When Griffith and Ince severed their connection with Triangle, Miss Love continued with her original company, remaining until about a year ago, when she accepted a contract for a series of pictures to be released by Pathe. Having completed these, she was made an offer by Vitagraph and accepted it. The length of time provided for in the contract is not known, but it is stated that Vitagraph has her signed for a long term.

Albert E. Smith declares that he has already outlined plans for Miss Love for a year in advance, and promises exhibitors that he will present her in a series of pictures specially selected for her which will surpass any feature in which she has ever been presented.

Bessie Love, Whose Winsome Personality Will Register Itself on the Screen for Vitagraph

"Miss Love is that rare combination of comedienne and dramatic actress," said Mr. Smith, "and in order that she may do herself justice it is necessary that she be given stories and roles that are suited to her. With this in mind, and taking into consideration her youth, we have rounded up a number of first-class plays for her and they will be given the finest production modern methods and manufacturing facilities afford."

"Sue," the initial Vitagraph production in which Miss Love is to be shown, is an old play in which Annie Russell scored one of the successes of her career. It was produced in New York some twenty odd years ago.

Ascher Brothers Book World Pictures

The claim of World Pictures that staff organization properly co-ordinated means maximum efficiency seems to be conclusively demonstrated by the results of a recent private showing in Chicago of "The Beloved Blackmailer," with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley starred; "Merely Players," with Kitty Gordon; "To Him That Hath," with Montagu Love; "T'other Dear Charmer," with Louise Huff," and "Just Sylvia," with Barbara Castleton. As a result of the impression created by these features Ascher Brothers, beginning September 1, will present World Pictures in twenty-eight of their houses. Incidentally this is said to be the third largest booking controlled by any one firm in the United States.

World Film was also able to book on this showing the Ziegfeld, Orpheum, Lyric and Bijou theatres for first-run presentations.

William Fox Purchases "The Road to Berlin"

The announcement comes from the Fox Film Corporation that William Fox has purchased "The Road to Berlin," by Gladys Wright-Ukers, for production by William Farnum.

Work on this production, which, it is said, affords admirable opportunities for Mr. Farnum's type of playing, probably will begin after the completion of the Zane Grey books which have just been bought by William Fox. Mr. Farnum recently completed one Zane Grey book, "Riders of the Purple Sage," which will be released in September, and is now at work on another, "The Rainbow Trail," also scheduled for early release. The two other Grey novels which he will film are "The Lone Star Ranger" and "The Last of the Duanes."

Triangle Studio Handles All Publicity

A change has been made at the Triangle with respect to the publicity department, which has been taken over and will be conducted at the studio under the supervision of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, owners of the exchange system, distributing subjects made by the Triangle Film Corporation. S. J. Warshawsky and Charles Hill have been sent to Los Angeles, and are in charge of the department. This change means that all publicity matter pertaining to Triangle subjects will be handled from the studio in the future, the matter being sent direct to all newspapers throughout the country.

General Claims Success for Ebony Comedies

High speed humor, with a number of clever new comedy touches, is to be found in the newest Ebony Comedy release, "Fixing the Faker," according to the General Film prospectus. This is said to be one of the best of the new series.

The Ebony Comedies are proving unusually popular with exhibitors looking for summer program novelties, General reports, and easily establish themselves as pulling attractions. Inasmuch as the new series promise an even higher grade of comedy, General Film anticipates a lively demand for the comedy novelties during the fall months.

New Barriscale Subject Is Chosen

Kathleen Norris' widely read novel, "The Heart of Rachel," has been selected for Bessie Barriscale's next Paralta play, and the filming of the production is at this time under way at the Brunton Studios at Los Angeles, Cal.

Kathleen Norris is a San Francisco girl, although she is now living in New York. She first gained attention as a writer of short stories, which she contributed to many of the popular magazines. In 1911 came her first novel, "Mother," which gained instant popularity and is still a good seller. Since then she has produced a book a year. "The Heart of Rachel" was published in 1916.

Fox Adds Victory Pictures to List

Also Announces Three Stars to Appear in Excel Pictures, with Both Brands Released at Two-Week Intervals—First Releases Come in September

IN its broadside announcement of elaborate production intentions for the coming year, the Fox Film Corporation has included plans for two new brands which will shortly make their appearance. These new brands are Victory Pictures and Excel Pictures, each to present three stars. Both will be released on the basis of twenty-six a year, or one each two weeks.

These two brands, the Fox organization states, are to be a big and important part of the Fox policy for 1918-19. Months of careful planning and preparation, prefaced by a thorough investigation of the exhibitors' needs, were gone through before it was decided to present the six individual stars in productions booked under the two new brand names.

Tom Mix Comes First

Victory Pictures will be made by three William Fox stars—Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh and Tom Mix. The plans for Victory Pictures in 1918-1919 call for twenty-six productions, to be released at two-week intervals. The first Victory Pictures will be released early in September. It will be Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune," a Western drama that is based on the magazine story, "Slow Burgess," by Charles Alden Seltzer.

The second will be Gladys Brockwell in "Kultur," which reveals the intrigues by which Germany forced Austria to declare war on Serbia. The third will be George Walsh in a picture which bears the temporary title of "I'll Say So," which name may be changeed. This is a story of the love and patriotism of a young American, and will be followed by the fourth Victory Picture, Tom Mix, in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A."

In announcing Victory Pictures the Fox Film Corporation declares that this series is the logical development of the William Fox policy to meet the demand of exhibitors—a policy which has been adhered to throughout the history of the corporation. It has been estimated that the Victory Pictures series will give a great flexibility and thus enable exhibitors better to satisfy their patrons.

The stars who will make Victory Pictures during the coming year have not been taken, willy-nilly, from the regular stage, regardless of their ability as screen players. They have grown up and developed in the William Fox organization and their popularity is based on good, solid achievement and honest, intelligent work.

Excel Pictures Ready

The stars announced for Excel Pictures are Virginia Pearson, Jewel Carmen and Peggy Hyland, all three of whom have won enviable reputations since joining the Fox forces.

Miss Pearson, Miss Hyland and Miss Carmen have already completed the first of their Excel ricture releases, which will be offered to the exhibitors of the country early in September. Miss Pearson has just finished her first Excel Picture, "The Queen of Hearts," under the direction of Edmund Lawrence, which is declared to be the greatest play this star has yet enacted. Miss Hyland made her first Excel Picture, "Marriages Are Made," under the direction of Carl Harbaugh and the first Excel production by Jewel Carmen is "Lawless Love," a Western play based on a story, "Above the Law," by Max Brand, which appeared in one of the popular magazines.

Herman Robbins, Assistant General Manager, Fox Film Corporation

Decision to put these three Fox stars in Excel Pictures is said to be a direct result of a thorough canvass of the exhibitors of the country. The development of these stars in ability and popularity has been one of the outstanding events of the past year, and that they should be put in Excel Pictures is a logical outgrowth of their steady progress.

Miss Carmen, since coming under the management of William Fox, has shown a steady, definite advance, due to her thorough workmanship, a close attention to the demands of her art and a genius for portraying difficult situations in a convincing way.

Miss Hyland has shown a sure and unmistakable progress both in her work and in the demand for her that exhibitors have voiced.

Exhibitors Write

In announcing Miss Hyland as one of the stars of Excel Pictures, the Fox Film Corporation points to numerous letters from exhibitors, the burden of all being that they like Miss Hyland, they like her plays and they want to get more of her pictures. By putting her in a series that will be released on a basis of twenty-six a year, the Fox Corporation will thus enable Miss Hyland to make more pictures. But in making more pictures, there will be no let-down in the quality; in fact, purchase of stories by some of the best known authors writing for the screen insures even better pictures for this star than those she has yet enacted.

The forthcoming Excel Pictures made by Virginia Pearson are said to furnish greater opportunities than she has had in any plays she has yet done. Miss Pearson's well known ability to portray strong dramatic roles has earned her a position in the front rank of American screen actresses and prediction is made by the Fox corporation that during the coming year she will shine with even greater brightness than she has in the past.

The plays for Miss Pearson under the Excel Pictures banner will be chosen with great care and eye to increasing the prestige which she has made by her excellent work since joining the Fox forces, and exhibitors who have written to the Fox home office asking for more Pearson pictures will be satisfied, the statement says, both by the quantity and the quality of this player's productions in 1918-19.

Fox Depends Greatly on the Director

"No motion picture is greater than its director," is the policy which the Fox Film Corporation has followed in the past, and it will continue to be the rule during the year 1918-19, according to a statement by the corporation in announcing its program for the coming year. Pointing to the directors of its films as a corps d'elite among motion picture directors, the Fox Corporation asserts that during the coming year these directors will be given every means to produce even better pictures than they have in the past.

In the opinion of the Fox organization, the men who make Fox pictures are the flower of directorial genius. These men are J. Gordon Edwards, who directed "Cleopatra," "Salome" and twenty-six other William Fox productions; R. A. Walsh, creator of "The Honor System," "Woman and the Law," and what is considered his greatest picture, "The Prussian Cur"; Frank Lloyd, who made "Les Miserables"; Richard Stanton, whose patriotic play, "Why America Will Win," is expected to be the box-office sensation of the year; Edward J. Le Saint, Lynn Reynolds, Edmund Lawrence, Harry Millarde, Kenean Buel, Carl Harbaugh, Robert Thornby and Henry Lehrman, creator of the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies. which have proven so popular.

The roster of producers gives an indication of the quality of work promised next year.

Vitagraph Promises Big News

Year's Productions and New Releasing Plan Expected to Be Announced Next Week—Liberal Booking System Forecast

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, are preparing to make an important announcement to the trade relative to plans and policies for the forthcoming year. They expect to have it ready for publication next week. While no details are available, it is understood that both Mr. Smith and Mr. Irwin will issue statements to the exhibitors of the United States and Canada, the one outlining production plans for the 1918-19 season, the other setting forth the distributing plans for the period.

From the meagre information at hand, it is learned that Vitagraph is preparing to launch an entirely new policy in production and a radical booking plan, the latter said to be a system which will permit exhibitors to book Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features on any basis adaptable to their business.

"We are rapidly getting matters in shape," said Mr. Smith, "so that we can tell the exhibitors and the public at large our plans for an entire year. We have already done this in connection with our serials, having given exhibitors the dates and stars for the next twelve months, and we will soon be in a position to make the same sort of announcement regarding our Blue Ribbon program. There is a vast amount of detail connected with the plan and a terrific amount of preparation necessary before we can discuss it. However, I may state that we will be ready next week, and at that time we will give to the public complete plans for the forthcoming year. To do it now would be inadvisable, because before making this announcement I intend to have our plans as to stars, stories and productions so complete that there will not be any chance of a slip-up."

Mr. Irwin, discussing the new release plan which is contemplated by the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, said:

"We have been at work for many weeks now on a booking plan which we think unequalled for fairness and flexibilities. In fact, I believe that when we announce it and exhibitors have had a chance to analyze it they will vote it the most liberal proposition that has ever been made to them since the beginning of motion picture making."

Stage Reaches Out for Little Madge Evans

Madge Evans, the juvenile World star, is said to be in great demand for legitimate productions, there being no less than three producing managers who have during the past two weeks made overtures for her services in forthcoming plays that are to be seen in Broadway theatres. The latest offer came through Eleanor Gates, author of "The Poor Little Rich Girl," who after looking over the field for a child to play the leading role in her forthcoming production, selected Madge for the role. This production will be made in association with Klaw & Erlanger and rehearsals for it will begin on August 5. So impressed was Miss Gates with the ability of Madge that, finding she was unable to secure her services, she seriously considered postponing the rehearsals of her play until such time as Madge was free. She was informed that Madge began a new picture, entitled "Snug Harbor," on August 1, and that it will take four weeks to complete it.

"Over There" Advances

Select's patriotic production, "Over There," is said to be mowing down the small towns the way the Yankees are tearing through the Huns. Down in Denton, Md., where the natives are in the habit of hitting the virtuous hay in the neighborhood of nine-thirty, they stayed up until the wicked hour of one-forty-five. The manager of the theatre where "Over There" was shown had to give three night performances to accommodate the crowds.

Fox Expects Record Farnum Year

The coming season is expected by the Fox Film Corporation to prove William Farnum's greatest. For this famous star, whose work during the year just past has firmly established his position as the premier actor of the screen, have been purchased a series of books which will, beyond doubt, be the most successful pictures this star has ever made.

The first of these stories to be released will be "Riders of the Purple Sage," a dramatization of the famous novel by Zane Grey. This story, with its scenes laid in the Grand Canyon of Arizona, is described as "the greatest Western drama ever made." Considered the best story Mr. Grey ever wrote, "Riders of the Purple Sage" is expected to rank next to "Les Miserables" in the success it will establish. This picture will be released some time in September, it is expected now.

Mr. Farnum and his company have returned from the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where they have been making scenes for the next of his great Zane Grey pictures. This is "The Rainbow Trail," the sequel of "Riders of the Purple Sage," and it forms a fitting twin play for that production.

"The Tiger Woman," Petrova's Next

The fifth production in which Madame Petrova is scheduled to appear carries probably the most impressive court-room scenes ever recorded on film. The story of "The Tiger Woman," an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," details vividly the battle for the life of an innocent woman accused of a mysterious murder. The screen version of Gertrude Atherton's novel has been prepared for Madame Petrova by Mary Murrillo. The production which marks the appearance of Madame Petrova in her fifth special starring vehicle has been directed by Ralph Ince, also responsible for the actress' latest feature, "Tempered Steel." Ince, who is noted for the spectacular effects common to practically all of his production work, determined to make the court-room scenes of "The Tiger Woman" on a larger scale than ever before attempted. The results achieved by the producer have been good.

Gillstrom Joins Fox as Director

Arvid E. Gillstrom, one of the best known directors of comedy-drama productions in the country, has joined the forces of William Fox, it is stated by the Fox Film Corporation. He will begin work soon on a production starring Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox "baby grands." The title of the picture has not yet been chosen, but it is said that the production will give the children ample opportunity to display those talents which have made them the leading juvenile players.

Mr. Gillstrom has had a long and successful career in directing screen comedies. Born in Gotenberg, Sweden, he was educated in the School of Mines, Colorado, and in his youth served as a mining engineer and prospector. His screen career has been almost wholly along comedy lines, and many of the comedy effects which are now in universal use were originated by him. He has a keen sense of the ludicrous, besides being the possessor of a thorough appreciation of dramatic values.

Brunton Studio Houses Eleven Companies

The Brunton studios at Los Angeles are rapidly filling up with producing organizations, among the latest being one promoted by R. G. Matzene, Los Angeles photographer, who has formed the Matzene Pictures Company, Inc., with Mme. Yorksa as the star. Another is the Helen Keller Corporation, organized recently in New York. George Foster Platt, director, arrived July 21. The Zane Grey Pictures Corporation will produce "The Up Trail," by Zane Grey. Four other organizations are in the process of formation, and it is said all will produce at the Brunton studios.

Fox Puts Bara on High Pedestal

Theda Bara, in the opinion of the Fox Film Corporation, stands today as the most consistent winner of all feminine screen stars in the world. Now at work on her thirty-second production for William Fox, this player, whose success has been one of the high lights of the motion picture industry, has behind her a record of solid achievement.

In making this statement, however, the Fox Film Corporation promises that in the coming year Miss Bara, if present plans are carried out, will be seen in productions which will outshine even those that she has already done.

A glance at Miss Bara's productions shows a list of screen triumphs that will no doubt stand for many years.

Miss Bara's first release under Standard Pictures during 1918-1919 will be "When a Woman Sins," which describes the regeneration of a modern vampire.

The picture that probably will follow "When a Woman Sins" is the super-production, "The She-Devil," a drama of a woman without a conscience. In this picture Miss Bara has splendid opportunities which she is peculiarly fitted.

Select Names Four Features for August

SELECT Pictures Corporation announces that it will release during August four productions, the excellence of each of which is such that the four establish a new high level of quality for a month's output. The latest attractions of Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge are included.

"The Savage Woman," about which so much has already been written, is the Clara Kimball Young production for the month. This picture was originally scheduled to be released at the end of July, but such is the magnitude of this production that it was found impossible to complete and provide prints on the picture before the early weeks of August.

Probably the second of the Select releases during August will be "The Death Dance," which is Alice Brady's next picture. This is a story of New York life in which Miss Brady is seen in the role of a breezy modern girl who determinedly follows a course of clean living and upright conduct in the face of many embarrassing situations. The story is credited to Marie Eve, the photoplay being prepared by Paul West—the last work which this veteran scenarioist did before leaving for the Western Front. J. Searle Dawley directed the picture and the quite extraordinary camera work was done by H. Lyman Broening.

Fox Buffalo Office Reports Big Business

UNDER the direction of Clayton Sheehan, special representative, and Thomas W. Brady, manager, the Fox Film Corporation's office at Buffalo reports a big increase in business in all lines of Fox films.

"A Daughter of the Gods," R. A. Walsh's drama; "Woman and the Law" and "The Blindness of Divorce" are reported as being particularly popular. Manager Earl Crabb, of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, has extended the run on "A Daughter of the Gods" because of the unusually heavy business. The lobby displays used at the Strand during this showing have attracted attention, it is said. Mr. Crabb is an artist and designed the displays himself.

The run of the Annette Kellermann picture has also been extended at the Drohen theatre, Dunkirk, N. Y., and at Haven's Opera House, Olean, N. Y. Fred Bitner, who has just taken over this latter house, reports an exceptionally heavy business. He has injected new life and new ideas in the management, and has livened up the attractiveness of the theatre. Mr. Bitner has just booked the complete Fox series, including "the Big Six of 1918" and the William Fox Standard Pictures.

Fox service has also been taken by the Como and Abbott theatre, Buffalo; the Andrew theatre, Salamanca, which has also booked "the Bix Six," and the Princess theatre, Corning, N. Y. The Symphony theatre at Binghamton has resumed the Fox service and has found business better, it is said.

Manager Harold Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, has resumed the showings of the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies, and is also playing the regular Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon program.

The Morgan theatre, Auburn, is now using the Fox service, Mr. Sheehan reports, and the smart summer house at Loon Lake, N. Y., the Casino, has also booked the Fox pictures. Manager Jack Matthews has taken on the Fox service for the Plattsburg Opera House.

William Kelly in Metro Production

Olive Tell has as her leading man for her initial picture as a Metro star none other than William J. Kelly. "Secret Strings," which in its original form was a short story from the pen of Kate Jordan, published in Ainslee's Magazine, and later converted into play form to serve Lou Tellegen, has been scenarioized by Miss June Mathis for Miss Tell. Mr. Kelly has the role formerly played by Tellegen.

Although a newcomer to Metro, Mr. Kelly is not unfamiliar with work before the camera, having co-starred with Jane Grey in "When My Ship Comes In," and also in "Romance" and "The Woman's Resurrection."

The Motion Picture and the War

By Harry Levey

Industrial Department, Universal Film Company

(The following is an address by Mr. Levey before the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, at San Francisco, recently.)

SINCE the day of our entry into the world war it has been imperative that the whole nation should be made to feel that it was an active, vital and necessary participant in the struggle. For, as has been many times said, war is no longer merely a fight between armies representing nations, but a combat of the nations themselves—in the fullest sense a personal, spiritual, social, political and industrial conflict.

To put it another way: The things we fight for are ideas and ideals and that demand understanding and unselfish personal devotion.

As a nation we were not aroused to what was needed of us and we could not wait for the casualty lists to make us realize that every one of us was on the fighting line.

The call was plain and the two great moulders of public opinion—the press and the motion picture industry—responded instantly. A study of the newspaper files of the past year is a revelation of able, independent leadership in right thinking about the issues of the war. Even the President's crystalline clarifications of our world-relations were largely anticipated by the thoughtful men in the editorial chairs of the country.

The motion picture men—a younger but no less potent force—followed promptly. There were specific messages that it could bring home with especial force. The country must be aroused to the need of food saving. Our industry at once volunteered. Within a month many millions of our people had been reached by the moving eye-appeal of pictures. The follow-up has been continuous and it is by no means over. The nation has saved as it has never saved before and a fair share of the credit must certainly come to the picture producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Closer to the War

The activities of our fighting forces were, of course, news and motion pictures of every phase of preparation were eagerly sought. This culminated in the arrival of film from abroad showing our soldier lads actually in France and, at last, on the firing line. This film was made for the Committee of Public Information and distributed to the weekly news releases through the Red Cross. Later the Committee itself undertook the distribution. But that is beside the point.

The big fact is that the screens of the country were filled with motion pictures that stirred the pulses of a nation. They brought us closer to the war and to our responsibility than any other thing had done or could do. We woke up. The "ayes" had it.

Followed the dramas of the war, stating in story form and more or less clearly but always with force, the issues at stake. Of these the deluge has just begun and their value is immeasurable.

But of more direct and special interest are the films made for special war purposes. A typical example of this is the four-reel subject Universal made for the U. S. Fuel Administration.

The purpose of this subject is to show the operators of hand-fired manufacturing plants how, by better firing, they can save some 20 per cent on their fuel bills and thus contribute to the 100,000,000 tons of saving that is required for war purposes. Unpromising as this subject at first was for pictorial purposes the final results were a most satisfactory surprise. The parallel narrative method was employed. A properly operated small plant was thrown into contrast with a carelessly operated one. The full day's operations were carried through, with frequent cut-backs from one plant to the other and sufficient contrast in scene, lighting, business and casting to keep the two narratives clearly separated. The distribution of this film is to be made by the Fuel Administration and the purpose is to reach not only the operators of plants, but, through them, the fireroom staffs.

Also Fuel Help

The importance of an adequate fuel supply to the prosecution of the war is plain enough and there is no doubt that the most direct and effective way of bringing this lesson home is by the graphic exposition of the screen.

Along a somewhat different line was the motion picture appeal for labor to carry out our shipbuilding program. Here the patriotic appeal—the need for destroyers and merchantmen to help feed our allies—was strongly emphasized. The labor to be employed would be largely of foreign birth and the need was to link up their perception of duty and opportunity with their anxiety for the land of their birth.

I need not go into the efforts of the industry in helping the Red Cross. The results are all fresh in our minds. The campaign was vigorous and undoubtedly effective—another substantial proof of the oft-repeated claim that the eye-appeal has a potency beyond anything else.

There is, however, one other motion picture achievement in connection with the war that marks a milestone. In the midst of the storm of denunciation that broke over our aircraft program a couple of months ago and the wave of national discouragement that ensued, a need was felt for a message of reassurance to our forces in France. It was certain that they were hearing some of the roarings of the storm and equally certain that they had troubles of their own.

While the storm was at its height, the long months of preparatory strain and effort was bearing fruit. Our battle planes had reached production and a steadily increasing stream was starting for France from at least one of the many factories depended upon. The number was still small but the application of American factory methods to the building of airplane engines in existence was assured—and it would soon be adequate to our needs.

Tells of Airplane Film

The operators of this plant—the Dayton-Wright Aeroplane Company of Dayton, Ohio—believed that the frank telling of the story of what they had done and were doing would be a valuable contribution to American and allied morale. They wanted General Pershing and his forces to know that "the Yanks were coming," so far as aeroplanes were concerned—that we were behind them heart and soul.

They chose motion pictures for their message—a most significant innovation. Here was to be a semi-official military report in film.

Naturally military information was involved and the way was not easy, but the assent of officers of the War Department was secured and the film made—in eight reels. It showed how quantity production had been worked out on the American plan for the supplying of battle planes and took the spectator through the big factory step by step. Then it showed the planes in the air, being maneuvered under the power of Liberty motors and a most spectacular exposition of modern war aeronautics gave the film a thrilling finish.

When this film was shown to administration officials it was at once seen that it would have extraordinary value as a message of hope to the American people as well as to the forces abroad and that without revealing information not already known to the enemy it would give the American people a stimulating inside view of one important phase of our war participation. Negotiations for the public showing of this film are in progress as this is written.

If it were possible to estimate the film footage devoted to war purposes in the first year of our participation the total would undoubtedly be astonishing, but this is less important than the resulting proof of the films' incalculable influence. And I think all film men will agree with me that what we have done is but hint of what is still to be done.

More and more every month the silver sheet is being called upon to play its part in the world's affairs and the part is always a larger and larger one. There is still bigger work for it to do in the gigantic task before us of welding the nations of the world into a united family with common aspirations and ideals. Therein its task is immeasurable for it is the common language of all nations—the only one capable of stating so that all can understand the great epic of the Brotherhood of Man.

Miss Chadwick will work at the Pathe studio in Universal City, but has purchased a little cottage at Hollywood.

Exhibitors Awarded Victory Pledges

Government Devises Plan to Show Appreciation for Patriotic and Propaganda Pictures Shown—Official Recognition Will Be Given Each Theatre

PATRIOTISM brings its own reward. Although that has been proven in countless instances before, the exhibitor has additional causes to be proud of his efforts in teaching loyalty and truth through the screen.

It was announced this week that the Division of Films of the United States Government, Committee on Public Information, has devised a plan whereby the Government may convey to the public its appreciation of the efforts of exhibitors in presenting United States official film features as part of the committee's propaganda to acquaint American citizens with their country's efforts and accomplishments in the great war.

In short, the move is a direct method of honoring any exhibitor who shows in his theatre one of the Government official films.

Victory Screen Pledge

Beginning with those exhibitors who have booked "Pershing's Crusaders" the Division of Films will send direct from its New York headquarters an official diploma which will be known as a Victory Screen Pledge.

It is a handsomely designed and printed vellum sheet, 19 x 26 inches, bearing the official seal of the Committee on Public Information, and worded as follows:

"Victory Screen Pledge.

"This is to certify that the———— theatre has enlisted its screen in the service of the United States Committee on Public Information through the Division of Films for the purpose of illustrating the industrial and military accomplishments of the United States of America in our Country's fight for Liberty and Freedom.

"In recognition of the patriotic action of these American citizens, who through the medium of Motion Pictures are contributing to the cause of Democracy by the dissemination of Public Information, this Victory Screen Pledge is presented and permission for its public display is hereby given.

"Signed, Committee on Public Information,
"George Creel, Chairman.
"Through the Division of Films,
"Chas. S. Hart, Director.
"For Country, Liberty and Victory."

"Pershing's Crusaders" Cited

Charles S. Hart, Chairman of the Division of Films, states that: "The purpose of the Government in presenting these pledges is twofold.

"First, the Committee on Public Information wishes to express its appreciation of the exhibitors' patriotic co-operation in Government propaganda work. The films, such as "Pershing's Crusaders" and other features which will follow from time to time can hardly be classed in the same category as the ordinaary profit-earning release.

"Certainly the exhibitors will earn a profit on every Government film which they show, but many of them, impelled by patriotic motives, will cancel previously booked attractions for which they will have to pay, in order to run Government features. We find that in the case of "Pershing's Crusaders" exhibitors are employing extensive advertising campaigns and making unusual efforts to bring the film to the attention of the public.

Victory Screen Pledge, Awarded to Exhibitors Who Show Government Pictures

"I personally believe that such efforts should not go unacknowledged by the Committee on Public Information, and the Victory Screen Pledge is the best means we could contrive to enable exhibitors to convey in a dignified manner to the public the patriotic aid the screen is contributing to the winning of the war. We have tried to make these pledges sufficiently impressive as to deserve a prominent place in the picture theatres of America where they may be displayed, so that the exhibitor's fellow citizens may see and appreciate just what he is doing."

Provision is made in the pledge for the adding of additional titles of Government films as they are released so that in time to come the Screen Pledge will convey to posterity the fact that the theatre which displays it took its part in the winning of the war alongside the newspaper, the statesman—even the soldier himself. It will record the fact that the screen has fully done its part—no man or institution could do more.

Lewis May Quit Serials for Drama

An announcement from Western Photoplays, Inc., this week carries the declaration that, as a result of the edict of his wife, Virginia Pearson, forbidding him to engage in any more hazardous feats for the screen, Sheldon Lewis will, at the completion of the serial in which he is appearing with Leah Baird, forsake that type of screen production.

During the past several years Mr. Lewis has been almost continuously at work in serials. His exploits and adventures as the "Clutching Hand," "The Iron Claw," etc., have made his name well known in "fandom."

Fire Burns "The Kaiser" to Jewel's Regret

A fire which destroyed one of the three prints of "The Kaiser" working in the Denver territory will cost Jewel productions a large amount of business during the next twelve days unless another print can be obtained, the company stated this week.

A wire received by Manager Armstrong of Jewel's Denver Office from Joe Yager, of the Rex theatre, Trinidad, Colo., stated that as the result of a fire in his booth the night before, all that remained of "The Kaiser" was a couple of charred and twisted metal reels. Details of how the fire started are lacking.

"Prussian Cur" Brings More German Exposes

"The Prussian Cur" is described by the Fox Corporation as a film epic that goes back through half a century of history and reviews every important phase of the world war. It also is said to be a startling exposé of the workings of German spies and propagandists in the United States, and depicts Horst von der Goltz, the man who hatched the Welland Canal plot.

The action opens with a dramatic contrast between peace-loving America and war-mad Germany. Abraham Lincoln, at the close of the Great Rebellion, congratulates a reunited nation on the birth of a new freedom. But in Europe, a few years later, Wilhelm I of Prussia, having crushed France in the war of 1870, plans with Bismarck and his Junker nobles to build a mighty military empire.

In America our people, going on their ways of peace, are warned by Ambassador Bernstorff that the "Lusitania" will be sunk. His warning is scorned, the giant liner departs, and hundreds of innocent lives are lost. Eventually Bernstorff is sent home, President Wilson delivers his War Message to Congress, and the United States and Germany plunge into war.

The hour has struck for the arch-butchers in Berlin. The Allied fleets have driven the U-boats from the seas, the air is filled with swarms of American airplanes.

Ince Prepares "False Faces"

Irvin Willat and Jerome Storm Chosen to Direct Special Feature —Henry B. Walthall Will Star in the Picture

IRVIN WILLAT and Jerome Storm have been chosen by Thos. H. Ince to direct "False Faces," the production in which Henry B. Walthall will be starred either by Paramount or Artcraft, as a special feature. Work is to begin on this Louis Joseph Vance story in about a week. It is a difficult picture to stage, requiring many exceptionally large and important sets including much submarine stuff.

Charles Ray, the Thos. H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, recently commented upon the sort of roles he is playing, using his latest picture, "String Beans" as an example:

"I can say frankly," declared Ray, "that I like this type of picture and part best of all—it is a typical country boy character and I think the best I ever had. Incidentally, people seem to have gained the idea that this so-called 'boob' or 'rube' type is natural with me but that is absolutely untrue. It required some of the hardest study I ever undertook to get the gestures and expressions down right. Before I played my first role of this description I used to practice in front of a mirror at home in the evenings, but somehow this didn't seem to fill the bill. I got so tired of seeing my face that I hated it. Then I was seized by a brilliant idea. I got a small camera and a flashlight apparatus. Then I would put the camera on a table, focus it on a handkerchief on the floor, assume my pose, reach forward, touch off the flash, jump back and assume my pose, press the bulb and take the picture—all in a breath you might say. Then I'd have the films developed and I could study my expressions at leisure. From just this sort of study and practice I've developed the characters I've played under Mr. Ince's careful supervision.

"You see, it isn't the idea to burlesque the character. It must be natural, unassumed, real and inoffensive, yet full of the homely humor and good natured 'smart aleck' quality that is so often found in the young fellow who thinks he's a devil in his home town but is green as grass. Also there's the other side—the pathos of it; the pitiful efforts to get somewhere, be somebody, do something worth while. Those boys are the ones who make some of our greatest men—and it isn't my purpose to parody them or make them seem silly or foolish. Rather to show how from small beginnings, from positions of little promise, out of environments pinched and narrow, there develop great characters who make up the sinew of our wonderful nation."

Enid Bennett is between pictures and is considering a new story which may be substituted for the C. Gardner Sullivan picture she has been figuring on doing next for Paramount.

Dorothy Dalton is hard at work on her new picture for Paramount which is a war story with much new material. H. H. Van Loan, who wrote the story from which C. Gardner Sullivan did the continuity, is waiting to see at least part of it run off before he goes to New York.

William Fox Favors Plays and Stories

THE coming season will see produced by William Fox some of the most famous stories and plays written in the last few years, according to an announcement from the Fox offices. This is merely the execution, it is stated, of William Fox's belief that none but the best books of the most popular authors should be shown in motion pictures.

Having already completed "Riders of the Purple Sage" William Farnum is now at work on "The Rainbow Trail," sequel to the "Rider" story. Both of these plays are picturizations of books by Zane Grey, the author of Western novels.

So successful was "Riders of the Purple Sage," when shown at a private screening in New York, that William Fox immediately purchased two more of Zane Grey's books. These are "The Last of the Duane," and "The Lone Star Ranger," and each of them has sold into the millions of copies in book form.

For Tom Mix Mr. Fox has also bought a noteworthy list of books. These include "The Two-Gun Man," and "The Coming of the Law," by Charles Alden Seltzer, and "The Highgrader," by Robert McLeod Raine. Mr. Seltzer also wrote "Slow Burgess," a popular magazine story, which has just been filmed by Mix under the name of "Fame and Fortune."

Another well-known literary work which Mr. Fox has just bought is "The Strange Woman," the stage success of William J. Hurlbut, which ran a full season on Broadway a few years ago and later toured the principal cities of the country. "The Strange Woman" will be an early release of Gladys Brockwell's under the Victory Pictures' banner. This play is considered peculiarly fitting for Miss Brockwell's talent and methods, and in film form is expected to be one of the really big productions of the coming season.

"Buchanan's Wife," one of the most popular of the novels of the late Justus Miles Forman, who lost his life when the Hun torpedo struck the Lusitania, has been bought by William Fox and will soon be started in work.

Donovan Arranges for Release of Diamonds

Frank P. Donovan, director of the Diamond Film Company of New Orleans, left for that city July 31, after ten days in New York. While in New York he arranged for the General Film Company to release a series of six one-reel comedies which he will start on his arrival in New Orleans.

Lillian Walker's First Nears End

"The Embarrassment of Riches," the first of the series of eight "happy" pictures, as they have been termed, in which Lillian Walker is to star, is nearing completion at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, it was announced this week. Work on the second production, which has already been selected, will follow closely upon the final scenes of the first picture.

With the announcement of the releasing arrangements for the Lillian Walker series will probably come also the details of the organization of the new producing combination, of which the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation is one of the units.

This new combination has for its purpose the production of pictures for distribution on a co-partnership basis.

The pictures produced by the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation will be but one of several star series to be presented by the new combination. It is known that the output of three additional stars have already been contracted for, and it is said that the new organization will include several producing firms which have heretofore been classed as independents.

The name and the personnel of the new company is being withheld until the announcement of its plans in detail.

Lester Park, the president and general manager of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, is said to be closely identified with the producing combine.

Mr. Park has been active for more than a year in furthering a closer relationship between exhibitor and producer and the new combination, as well as his own releasing arrangements, are expected to reflect his activities in this direction.

"Les Miserables" Gateway for Carmen Success

From playing small parts to a star in the William Fox Excel Pictures, all within a year, is the record of Jewel Carmen, the "girl with the champagne eyes."

Miss Carmen had her first training on the regular stage, later entering the films. After playing several minor roles, she was cast for the part of Cosette in the William Farnum production, "Les Miserables." William Fox, observing the talent she showed in this production of Hugo's masterpiece, made her a star and since then she has been appearing in Fox Special Features.

Throughout her appearance in Fox plays, Miss Carmen has shown a steady improvement in ability.

"The Hypocrites" Marks Up Big Bookings

Bookings for George Loane Tucker's screen version of "The Hypocrites," starring Elizabeth Risdon, have been so numerous and important as to indicate a repetition of the triumph scored by the stage play twelve years ago, General Film Company announced this week.

The demands for "The Hypocrites" are particularly strong in the New England territory, according to J. D. Levine, manager of the General's Boston branch.

World Begins Work on "The Driving Power"

Montagu Love under the direction of Oscar Apfel begins work next week at the World Studio at Fort Lee, on "The Driving Power," the story of which was written by Harry O. Hoyt. Mr. Love in this picture will be called upon to create another unique character to hang in his gallery of screen creations.

In "The Driving Power" World Pictures believes it has a story of unusual dramatic tensity dealing with politics of a metropolitan centre, where the will of the people expressed by their voice at the polls is suborned by a political boss whose word is law. Dying, he calls his son to his bedside and bequeaths to him all the power he possesses. The son is built of different stuff and determines to rid the city of the political incubus which has throttled the will of the people, and he destroys the machine that has controlled the municipality for many years. In doing this he brings his father's shame into the limelight. All of which is done for a woman's love.

Incidentally World Pictures calls attention to Mr. Love's work on the screen as an evidence of versatility of characterization that no other star has equaled.

Caruso Begins Work on First Picture

Enrico Caruso, the tenor, who was recently announced as the latest acquisition to the stellar ranks of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has already started work at the Fifty-sixth Street studio on the first of the two Artcraft pictures in which he is to appear. Elaborate preparations had been made for the production by Director Edward Jose and his staff of assistants, to the end that when the tenor was ready for the camera the filming of the first scenes moved with rapidity and smoothness.

The picture in which Caruso will make his first appearance on the screen is from a story by Margaret Turnbull, titled "My Cousin." It is a romance of that section of New York City known as Little Italy and contains a charming love story, it is said.

Mme. Petrova Completes Patriotic Tour

MADAME OLGA PETROVA returned to New York on July 30, after completing a thirty-day personal patriotic tour for the United States Government. The star visited every large city in this country, campaigning in behalf of the thrift and war saving stamp movement. The tour was carried out under the auspices of the War Saving Stamp Committee of Washington, D. C., under the direction of the local War Saving Stamp Committee, and she received the utmost attention and assistance in her efforts for the Government.

Leaving New York on June 22, the emotional artiste visited the following cities in the order named: Atlanta, June 22; New Orleans, 25; Houston, 26; Dallas, 27; Fort Worth, 28; Kansas City, 30; Des Moines, July 1; Omaha, 2, Denver, 4; Salt Lake City, 6; Los Angeles, 8; San Francisco, 10; Portland, 12; Seattle, 13; Butte, 14; Minnepapolis, 16; St. Paul, 17; Milwaukee, 18; Chicago, 19-20; St. Louis, 21; Indianapolis, 22-23; Newark, 24; Louisville, 25; Cleveland, 26; Pittsburgh, 27.

Before starting her personal patriotic tour, Petrova promised Mr. Benedict, of the War Saving Stamp Committee at Washington, that she would raise at least $200,000 during the course of her trip. Bobbie North, manager of Petrova Studios, who accompanied the star, stated last night that the sale of thrift and war saving stamps went well over the half million mark, exceeding the expectations of all concerned.

In addition to enriching the treasury of the United States Government to the amount of more than half a million dollars, the patriotic star also made a personal appearance in each of the theatres controlled by the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in the various leading cities visited by her. During these appearances, in addition to her war talk, she gave an interesting performance, composed of songs, recitations and a rendition of the patriotic number, "Freedom for All Forever," written by Lieutenant B. C. Hillman, a former Canadian officer. Coincidental with the personal talk which Petrova made in the theatres of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, her latest screen production, "Tempered Steel," was presented in order that the various audiences might glimpse the Polish star in the flesh.

Her return to New York following the completion of her governmental itinerary was timed in order to permit her viewing "The Tiger Woman," the fifth special production turned out by the Petrova studios. This picture, which is an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's novel entitled "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," was scenarioized by Mary Murrillo and directed by Ralph Ince. It will be released in the near future.

Famous Players Announces New Bookings

CONTRACTS negotiated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with the three pre-release houses of New York, the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli theatres, have just been announced by Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution.

These contracts involve the booking of Paramount and Artcraft feature productions for eighty-six weeks in the Rialto and Rivoli, forty-three weeks for each, and thirty-five weeks in the Strand. This total of 121 weeks' bookings, Mr. Greene points out, insures, according to the schedule plans of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the year commencing September 1, not only at least one Paramount or Artcraft feature each week of the year in one or another of the three Broadway picture palaces, but nearly every week there will be at least two and in some weeks three being shown simultaneously. This leaves only thirty-five weeks, out of the total of 156 in the three theatres, available for the booking of productions other than Paramount and Artcraft.

In addition to the feature productions booked, the Rialto and Rivoli have contracted for forty-six Paramount short subjects and the Strand for sixteen.

The complete list of productions booked by Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel for the Rialto and Rivoli: Eight productions starring Marguerite Clark, three with Pauline Frederick, eight with Lila Lee, seven with Dorothy Gish, eight with Enid Bennett, eight with Charles Ray, two with Enrico Caruso, eight with Douglas Fairbanks, eight with William S. Hart, eight with Elsie Ferguson, three with George M. Cohan, six Cecil B. DeMille Special Artcraft productions, nine Paramount and Artcraft special productions, ten Paramount-Arbuckle comedies and twenty-six Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies.

Manager Harold Edel, of the Strand, has contracted for the following: Four productions starring John Barrymore, three with Lina Cavalieri, eight with Wallace Reid, two with Mary Pickford, two with Billie Burke, eight with Shirley Mason, three with Fred Stone, five D. W. Griffith Special Artcraft productions and sixteen Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg comedies.

Sawyer Seeks Location for Ince Feature

Arthur H. Sawyer, of General Enterprises, Inc., returned to New York this week, following a trip to Atlantic City. The purpose of his visit to the seaside resort was to survey the possibilities of locations for the forthcoming "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," the story of which calls for several scenes along the Atlantic coast line, together with a spectacular effect to be staged on the water. Mr. Sawyer reported that he has discovered several ideal spots for these scenes and stated that he completed arrangements while in Atlantic City whereby the places in question have been secured through option and will be used exclusively in the initial "Ralph Ince Film Attraction."

No Three Aces In the Motion Picture Deck Are Better Known at the Box-Office Than Theda Bara, William Farnum and Gladys Brockwell, William Fox Stars

Pershing's Life Film Finished

William Fox Corporation Plans to Show Production to Public Shortly—"Why America Will Win" Is Name

THE announcement comes from the William Fox offices that Director Richard Stanton has completed "Why America Will Win" and that it will be ready shortly to be shown to the public. The picture is based on the life of General John J. Pershing, commander of the American Expeditionary Force in Europe, and is promised to be one of the most sensational box-office successes ever made.

Very seldom is the biography of a great man published before he dies. But William Fox foresaw the day which has just arrived when General Pershing would hurl the American army through the Hun lines on their way to final victory.

"Why America Will Win" was produced not merely as an answer to the vital question, but also to give every American a true insight into the character and life of the U. S. army commander.

Director Stanton and his assistants spent months in investigating the true facts of the history-making events in which General Pershing has played an important part. His birthplace, the scene of his early schooldays, as well as the fields of his later victories, were combed to obtain the exact settings and the true atmosphere necessary to portray the events with vivid realism.

The keynote of "Why America Will Win" is victory. Every event, every campaign that this man has planned and fought has resulted in victory. He was victorious over Geronimo and his fierce Apache warriors. He rescued Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and his Rough Riders and saved the day for the Stars and Stripes on the shell-swept hill of San Juan.

One after another he subdued and brought under the American flag the savage tribes of the Philippines, completing the pacification of the islands in a battle unique in history—the battle of Bagsag, which was fought in the crater of an extinct volcano.

The Fox studios created six huge armies to picture the great battles of the different decades. It was necessary to reproduce the courts and palaces of the rulers of the great countries of the earth to form settings for the many historic events.

"Why America Will Win" shows the human side of General Pershing, the man, the husband and the father.

Marcus Loew Books Paramount-Artcraft

WHAT is probably the largest single booking contract ever made in the history of the motion picture industry has just been consummated by Marcus Loew with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This contract calls for sixty Paramount and Artcraft feature productions for each of twenty-one theatres in Greater New York and vicinity. In addition, thirty-six short-reel subjects have been booked for the year in each house. The total sum involved is said to be in the neighborhood of $400,000.

The productions contracted for, each for one week's run in each theatre, are as follows: Two featuring Enrico Caruso, three with Fred Stone, three with George M. Cohan, eight with William S. Hart, eight with Douglas Fairbanks, eight with Charles Ray, two with Mary Pickford, four with John Barrymore, eight with Wallace Reid, five D. W. Griffith productions, nine Paramount and Artcraft special productions, ten Paramount-Arbuckle comedies, and twenty-six Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies.

This guarantees almost a continuous representation for Famous Players-Lasky in Loew's houses—a trade-marked picture every week of the year.

St. Louis Exhibitors Guests of Goldwyn

Four St. Louis exhibitors whose efforts at the Boston convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America were largely responsible for bringing next year's gathering to the Mound City, were guests of Goldwyn in New York last Saturday. The St. Louis boosters are Thomas J. Lavin, of the Melba theatre; Edward Pohlmann, of the Bridge theatre; Joseph Mogler, owner of the Mogler and Bremen theatres, and Lewis V. Stephens, of the Juniata theatre. They were accompanied by Charles F. Hatfield, secretary and general manager of the St. Louis convention and publicity bureau, a part of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce.

The visitors were driven to the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., and escorted through the various buildings by A. Lehr, manager of productions. All four exhibitors are Goldwyn customers and were eager to meet the stars of the productions then present. They were cordially greeted by Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand. Later they had the pleasure of seeing the three artistes at work on their coming releases.

Peggy Hyland Shows Rapid Progress

Although she has been in motion pictures only a comparatively short time, Peggy Hyland has developed so rapidly that her selection by William Fox as one of the stars who will make Excel Pictures was inevitable.

This English girl is considered by Fox one of the real beauties of the screen; but her talent does not stop with a pretty face. Bringing to her work the benefit of a long stage experience on the British boards, she bases her screen work on the sound foundation of a thorough training in the fundamentals of the art of acting.

Miss Hyland has made only three pictures for William Fox, but these have been considered so successful that it was decided to put her into Excel Pictures.

The play she has just completed, under the direction of Harry Millarde, is "Bonnie Annie Laurie," a drama of a Scottish girl's love and patriotism. She is now at work on a big production which will be released as her first Excel Picture. The title of this play is "Marriages Are Made."

Ball Game Tops Universal Outing

The employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's Home Office and Laboratories had their annual outing at Donnelly's Grove July 20. As usual, the most important event was the ball game, in which the Laboratoryites beat the Home Office. The strategy of the H. O. was to allow the Laboratory to score a few runs in the first inning and then to shut down on them and beat them in the home stretch. The opening of this campaign developed as planned, but that was the only part of the campaign which developed that way.

Nat Rothstein, the most generous pitcher who ever hurled the pill, permitted the factory eighteen runs in the first two innings.

Hampton Changes Things in Scenario Field

There is, after all, something new in the motion picture producing industry!

Jesse H. Hampton, who has just assumed the management of J. Warren Kerrigan, is the daring and rather revolutionary-inclined individual to upset the monotony of the average studio, with his announcement that he will have a scenario department, at the head of which will be a scenario editor WHO WILL NOT BE PERMITTED TO WRITE STORIES OR SCENARIOS FOR ANY OF THE HAMPTON PRODUCTIONS.

In other words, Mr. Hampton proposes to benefit by his experience as a magazine publisher and will install a scenario editor whose duty will be to pass upon stories, get in touch with the best writers of the day, and to see that nothing worth while gets away from the Hampton studios in the shape of a good story that will adapt itself to the purposes of the screen.

Mestayer with Triangle Corporation

Harry Mestayer, who journeys to Los Angeles fresh from New York to create the role of the parson in Jack Lait's new play, "One of Us," which was given its premier by Oliver Morosco recently at the Morosco theatre, is again in pictures. He was engaged by Triangle for the leading role in "High Tide," which has just been completed with Gilbert P. Hamilton directing and which is scheduled for release on the Triangle program for the week of August 18.

Mestayer is almost as well known in pictures as on the stage. He will be remembered for his work in "Stop Thief" and "The House with a Thousand Candles." Included in his supporting cast are Yvonne Pavis, John Calhoun, Jack Rollen, Leo Pierson and Frederick Vroom and those who have seen the picture predict that "High Tide" will make an exceptional program production.

Tom Mix, Jewel Carmen and George Walsh, Three Winning Stars, Whom William Fox Will Present In a New Brand of Pictures

Fox Picks Well for Victories

Tom Mix, George Walsh and Gladys Brockwell Expected to Put New Brand Over with a Bang—Pictures Now in Making

THE choice of William Fox in designating Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and George Walsh as the three stars to inaugurate the new brand of Victory productions has given rise within the Fox organization to the statement that the head of the Fox concern is a wise "chooser." This opinion will no doubt be echoed throughout the country by exhibitors who have done well with pictures in which these stars have appeared.

In speaking of Mix, the Fox publicity bureau said:

"Less than a year ago William Fox saw Tom Mix in a comparatively minor role in one of his pictures. The absolutely new, fresh and unhackneyed style of Mix's acting fairly lifted Mr. Fox out of his seat, and as soon as telegraph wires could carry the message West Tom Mix was a star.

"That was only a few months ago; and Tom Mix's name soon appeared on the list of stars making Fox Special Features. Mix, under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, was put on a play called 'Cupid's Round-Up.' It went over big. This was followed by 'Six-Shooter Andy,' and from all over the country letters began to pour into the Fox Film Corporation office asking who this new man was."

Concerning George Walsh, the company said: "By being chosen one of the three stars who will make Victory Pictures for William Fox, George Walsh, the 'human thunderbolt,' has added another chapter to the amazing story of his career in motion pictures. The success of George Walsh and his rapid climb to the top rung of the ladder of stardom are the phenomena of the motion picture industry."

Of Miss Brockwell the statement said: "Gladys Brockwell is a motion picture actress who takes her work seriously. And taking it seriously, she puts every ounce of her energy and thought into the making of better Gladys Brockwell pictures. The result is that since joining the William Fox forces her popularity has grown steadily and consistently until demand for her pictures became so insistent that William Fox was obliged to put her in Victory Pictures. The first of these Victory Pictures to be done by Miss Brockwell will be 'Kultur.'"

Miss Brockwell first appeared in motion pictures in 1913 and has been with the William Fox forces on the West Coast for the last three years.

Miss Brockwell had important roles in "The End of the Trail," in which William Farnum starred, and in "Fires of Conscience," also a Farnum subject. She gave such splendid performances in each of these productions that Mr. Fox elevated her to stardom in "Sins of Her Parent," and she has been starred ever since.

"Flower of Dusk" Promises Unusual Art

Art scenes of great beauty in connection with Viola Dana's forthcoming Metro feature, "Flower of the Dusk," are said to have been conceived and executed by Henri Menessier, art director, and John H. Collins, who directed the production. "Flower of the Dusk" is a screen version of Myrtle Reed's well-known novel of the same name published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, and it is claimed star and director have succeeded in capturing the elusive charm that, together with its unique story, has given the book a wide-spread vogue.

Rural scenes for "Flower of the Dusk" were taken at Yorktown Heights, New York, where a part of "Blue Jeans," Miss Dana's multiple reel Screen Classics, Inc., version of Joseph Arthur's famous play, was produced.

Otto Joins Triangle

The most recent addition to the Triangle directing forces is Henry Otto, who has had years of experience in the motion picture game. His first Triangle picture is "Wild Life," in which William Desmond is the featured player. Harry Connely is Otto's assistant. Josie Sedgwick will again be seen as Desmond's leading woman in "Wild Life."

Davies Sign Dazzles Broadway

Huge Electric Device Involves Maze of Complicated Figures Worked Out in Countless Bulbs of Many Tints — Unique Advertising

AS the pedestrian on New York's only Broadway walks up the glittering stretch of the Gay White Way on the nights that the fuel administrator lifts his official mantle of darkness, his attention is at once compelled by the glaring and imposing electric sign on the northwest corner of 46th street and Broadway, proclaiming Marion Davies in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." The publicity campaign with which Marion Davies was announced to the public in her first Select production, in which she was directed by Julius Steger, was responsible for the presence of this dazzling sign in the heart of New York's "Lobster Square."

Few people realize as Marion Davies smiles expansively—and expensively—upon them, the amount of work and detail involved in the construction of an electric sign of such proportions. The sign is in th very heart of the theatrical, hotel and restaurant district of the world's metropolis, and it is estimated that 200,000 persons pass it daily, a circulation and condition that doesn't exist in any other part of the globe.

If the casual observer isn't impressed by the artistic appeal of the big electric medium, at least the figures will command his attention. The rental for a sign of this character is in keeping with the value of the site—$30,000 a year, or about $600 a week on a contract covering an entire year. It is forty-five feet wide and fifty feet high, and after having been fabricated at numerous shops scattered throughout the country, required the services of three expert sign assemblers for as many weeks to place it in position.

The oval panel devoted to Miss Davies' smiling countenance is nineteen and one-half feet high. There are a few more figures to startle the unsuspecting reader. The decorations and explanatory text surrounding the portrait are composed of 3,100 electric light bulbs of high wattage. Twelve distinct shades are employed to emphasize the desired color effects. Some idea of the magnitude of the sign may be obtained from the fact that the letters forming the credit line to Julius Steger, who directed the picture, are two feet high. The letters of the title, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," are three and a half feet high, while the letters that form Miss Davies' name are six and a half feet high.

Parsons Comedies Secure More Territory

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces completed arrangements for the distribution of "Smiling Bill" Parsons' Capitol Comedies throughout many foreign lands in addition to the United States.

In the United States "Smiling Bill" Parsons' pictures are distributed through Goldwyn's exchange in twenty principal cities. In Canada the Monarch Film Co., Ltd., offices in Toronto; Montreal, St. John, New Brunswick; Winnipeg, Manitoba; Calgary, Alberta and Vancouver, B. C., will distribute his productions. Prints of his pictures are now being forwarded to Goldwyn exchanges in other foreign lands and the smiling "Smiling Bill" will soon greet his audiences in all the brilliant comedies in which he has delighted millions in America.

The necessity of a world-wide distribution is, in itself, unmistakable evidence of the quality of "Smiling Bill" Parsons' comedies. "Smiling Bill" is a born comedian, rather than a tailor-made one. His wit is natural. His humor is genuine. ""Smiling Bill" doesn't have to be coaxed by a director or follow the cut-and-dried lines of ordinary comedy. Everything that he is and everything that he does typifies the type of jolly, effervescent man that one loves to meet to drive dull care away.

Garrett Enthuses Over Leah Baird Serial

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., reports that after a quick trip to Newfoundland to watch the making of some thrill scenes in the new Leah Baird serial, he is more enthusiastic than ever over the prospects of this production on which he owns the world rights.

The new serial will be in sixteen episodes. After his Newfoundland trip Mr. Garrett declared, "Every foot of the serial will be packed with thrills."

"Exhibiting Is Selling," Says Schlesinger

Writing to Sales Director J. L. Kempner from Detroit, Leon Schlesinger, special representative of the Manx-Man Company, emphasizes the success of the firm's "Face-to-Face with the Exhibitor" policy. Mr. Schlesinger expresses regret that he could not have embarked on such a trip before.

"For exhibiting today is a selling game," says the Schlesinger communication, "and the theatre man wants service just as the modern retailer expects it of the manufacturer. The exhibitor wants to see the manufacturer's representative, too, and to talk the sales angle with him. If he can see the sales angle he will buy your picture. Otherwise he is not likely to be interested, as it takes real merchandising on his part to put a picture over.

"I have very easily convinced newspapers and British-Canadian Clubs of the subtle Anglo-American propaganda contained in 'The Manx-Man.' Having a war hero like Lieutenant Ainley in the leading role is a great help. After planting the publicity I have had no trouble lining up the theatres. In Buffalo I interested a half dozen exhibitors before I left—after just two days there—and the first house to sign was the Strand. Here in Detroit I have four contracts already, beginning with Kunsky's Washington."

Mr. Schlesinger has since wired Mr Kempner from Chicago, that he is visiting leading exhibitors in that city, and headquartering at the local Goldwyn exchange "The Manx-Man" is a Goldwyn specia release.

Appraisal Shows Huge Investment in Fox Studios

An investment of millions of dollars is represented in the William Fox studios in Hollywood and in the East, according to an appraisal recently made by officials of the Fox Film Corporation. It is in these studios —veritable mills of drama—that the Fox stars and companies and directors turn out the plays that are sold by William Fox.

At Hollywood the Fox studio covers more than 100 acres, opportunity being given for every phase of motion picture making. This studio, which is the largest on the West Coast, is equipped with the most up-to-date appliances and every facility possible is afforded the directors for the making of their productions. Huge buildings give ample room for the "interior" shots and various open-air stages provide the necessary settings for many exteriors.

In the East William Fox has studios in three boroughs of New York and also at Fort Lee, N. J. Some Fox company is almost always at work at the Biograph studio in the Bronx, and the Victor studio in Forty-third street, has been the scene of a number of Fox productions. Within the last few months Mr. Fox has taken over the old Blackton studio in Brooklyn, renovated it and fixed it up generally, until today it is one of the most complete studios in the business. Virginia Pearson and her company, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence, have just completed "The Liar" there and are now at work on another play.

Mutual Sets Date for Goodrich Feature

The first of Edna Goodrich's new series of features for Mutual, "Her Husband's Honor," a domestic drama from the pen of Maibelle Heikes Justice, author of "The Glory of Yolanda," "The End of the Trail," and "Durant of the Bad Lands," is to be released on August 5, Mutual has announced.

"Her Husband's Honor" was chosen from a great collection of plays submitted for Miss Goodrich as the one best suited to her requirements. The plot deals with a young wife's determination to save her husband from impending ruin. Discovery of the danger that threatens him transforms her from a butterfly of fashion into an earnest woman, dangerous in her keen pursuit of a definite object—"Her Husband's Honor."

Miss Goodrich's second production of the present series, "Treason," is already completed and will be announced for later release.

Jack Sherrill In It

It was announced this week that "Once to Every Man," by Larry Evans, is now in production. Jack Sherrill is starred, with Mabel Withee opposite him in the leading feminine role. The company has gone to Saranac Lake, N. Y., for all exterior shots.

Miss Withee was formerly a member of the Winter Garden cast, in "Sinbad," with Al Jolson.

Goldwyn Names Six Fall Films

Geraldine Farrar First on List That Runs from September to October—Will Rogers Engaged for Production

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION believes in starting a drive with its "big guns." This policy becomes apparent with the announcement that the first six fall releases of Goldwyn under Star Series for the coming season are to be:

September 2, Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," by Tex Charwate. Directed by Reginald Barker. September 9, Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl," by Tex Charwate. Directed by Charles Giblyn. September 16, Tom Moore in "Just for Tonight," by Charles A. Logue. Directed by Charles Giblyn. September 23, Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth," by Charles A. Logue. Directed by Clarence G. Badger. September 30, Rex Beach's great story, "Laughing Bill Hyde." Directed by Hobart Henley. October 7, Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires," by J. Clarkson Miller. Directed by Hobart Henley.

Miss Farrar's first production to be released under the Goldwyn imprint is said to be a dramatic, present-day story of New York and Monte Carlo. Under her new auspices Miss Farrar is surrounded and supported by what Goldwyn claims is the best cast she has ever had in a motion picture. Herbert Rawlinson, himself a star of long standing, is her leading man. Violet Hemming, a star both of the stage and screen, has the other important feminine role, and other big parts are played by Hassard Short, Percy Marmont, and Maude Turner Gordon. Mr. Barker has done a big, brilliant piece of directing.

Mabel Normand returns to the broad comedy that made her famous for her first Star Series production. "Peck's Bad Girl" is the ideal type of vivacious, animated, happy-go-lucky story that Mabel Normand's tremendous following desires to see her have. In the cast are Earle Foxe, Corinne Barker, Ryley Hatch and other favorites.

Goldwyn springs a surprise with the announcement that Will Rogers, an unrivalled entertainer and an unparalleled persoality in the American theatre, is already at work in Rex Beach's great story, "Laughing Bill Hyde." Many producers have tried to lure Rogers to the screen and never before have they had a chance of success. But Rex Beach insisted on having Will Rogers for the name role of his story, "because," says Mr. Beach, "Will Rogers is Laughing Bill Hyde, just as he stands, without make-up. All that we will do is to take his personality just as he is known across the country and put it into film." This first big Beach production is being directed by Hobart Henley and the scenario is the work of Willard Mack, editorial director of Goldwyn. "It is the best scenario ever made of one of my stories," says Mr. Beach.

Traver Company Has Big List on Western Coast

Jose Traver and company, with headquarters in Santiago, Chile, have a campaign under way now for an interesting list of productions. The Traver house controls these pictures for the Pacific coast of South America, including Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

The roster now being booked includes the following products: Goldwyn, Vitagraph, Four Square and U. S. Exhibitors.

Hodkinson Starts Sales Forces

Country Divided Into Three Parts, with Division Manager for Each —Salesman Located at Each General Film Exchange

THIS week the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is putting into effect its new field forces whereby Paralta, Plaza and Douglas Natural Color Pictures, now forming a part of Hodkinson Service, will be represented by their own salesmen operating through the exchanges of the General Film Company.

During the past two weeks W. W. Hodkinson has been recruiting, through the medium of MOTION PICTURE NEWS advertising, seasoned film men who know the faults of the industry and are in sympathy with the Hodkinson plan of service and the slogan of a fair deal to the exhibitor.

Each exchange will be represented by a Hodkinson salesman. The entire United States has been divided, for the present, into three sections, the salesmen representatives in each section being under the supervision of a division manager. John A. Stevenson will control the Southern division and P. N. Brinch the Western. C. E. Shurtleff, though continuing his duties as general sales manager, will cover the Eastern division until a manager is appointed. These three men are of long association with Mr. Hodkinson and thoroughly familiar with his ideals and business creeds.

P. N. Brinch, who left New York last week, will install picked salesmen representatives in the West, his division covering all the territory west of Omaha and Minneapolis.

C. E. Shurtleff will make a short tour of the East to get the salesmen representatives installed, returning to the home office to continue his duties as general sales manager. W. A. Bach will retain his capacity of assistant general sales manager.

The first of the salesmen representatives to take up his duties of giving personal service to Hodkinson customers is Arthur S. Abeles, who will handle the territory covered by the New York branch office. Mr. Abeles was previously with Pathe for four years, acting first as New York branch manager and later as special representative.

Other Hodkinson representatives have been appointed as follows: C. W. Perry will be located at Detroit. Joe Levey, in charge of the Omaha office, after long experience with Fox and Select, went into the State Right business for himself. Hoyt G. Morrow, who will have charge of the Dallas territory, has served many years in a managerial capacity for both theatres and exchanges, his latest associations being Dallas manager for Artcraft and First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

World Releases "Inside Lines" in August

Much interest has been aroused among exhibitors everywhere by the announcement that World Pictures will on August 26 release "Inside the Lines," with Lewis A. Stone, star of the original stage production, in the stellar role. This special production will be released on the regular World program.

"Inside the Lines" is the picturized version of the stage success which had a long run in New York City. It was written by Earle Derr Biggers. In the screen version Marguerite Clayton is seen in support of Mr. Stone.

Pathe Heads Return East

Ferdinand Zecca, Director General of Productions, and L. E. Franconi, head of the Film Editing Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., have returned to New York, after a stay of nearly three weeks in California. During their absence, Messrs. Zecca and Franconi visited the studios of Astra, Diando, Rolin and Anderson-Brunton Company, whose product is released by Pathe.

Famous Players Opens Projection Room

What is undoubtedly one of the largest and best appointed private projection rooms in New York has recently been completed and is now in daily use at the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The new room is located on the ninth floor of the building at 485 Fifth Avenue and is 15 x 35 feet in dimensions. Twenty-eight opera chairs have been installed, placed in five rows, each row being set slightly above the row in front of it, affording everybody an unobstructed view of the screen. The seats, of extra large size, are upholstered in Spanish leather. The screen, which is aproximately twenty feet from the first row of seats, is nine feet in width by seven in height. The pictures are projected from two new Simplex machines.

The room is finished in a rich brown color, the walls being wainscoted and trimmed with oak and painted in imitation of Spanish leather, with a conventional border design. Heavy gray velour curtains hang at the windows, which are of orange glass, while a gray velvet carpet covers the floor. The semi-direct lighting system is used, the light being shed from six lamps hung from the ceiling.

Sherman Does a Good Turn

Dustin Farnum, the actor, and Zane Grey, the author, are vacationing together this summer. A year ago they did not know each other, except by reputation. They were brought together by Harry A. Sherman, of the Sherman Productions, who secured the screen rights to Zane Grey's novel, "The Light of Western Stars," and engaged Dustin Farnum to play the leading part.

Gerard Picture Going Big in Ohio

Following a five weeks' down-town engagement, "My Four Years in Germany" played its first neighborhood engagement at the Dennison Square thatre, Cleveland, last week, and did a phenomenal business, according to Manager Fine. "We ran the picture four days," Mr. Fine said, "and could easily have kept it over the rest of the week."

Serials Prove Good in the Hot Weather

Serials are proving winners for hot weather in the Salt Lake territory, according to advice from G. A. Hager, Manager of Universal Film Exchange, Inc., in Salt Lake City.

Serials throughout the territory are said to be booked solid. Exhibitors claim that the regular clientele which the to-be-continued stories bring them is the principal thing on which they depend to beat the so-called "summer slump."

The same conditions obtain in the Colorado territory, where many of the exhibitors are re-booking some of the older serials with good results.

It is for this reason that Universal's serials, "The Lion's Claws," "The Red Ace," "Liberty," "The Mystery Ship" and "The Brass Bullet" are being worked to such an extent that an emergency call for extra prints has been sent to New York.

Farrar Reaches Cody, Wyo., for Scenes

Geraldine Farrar has arrived in the Far West and is now in the midst of "The Hell Cat" in the country once the stamping ground of the pioneer Buffalo Bill.

On account of war conditions the long trip was accomplished under unusual difficulties which told upon Reginald Barker, the director, and the company of twenty, but which seemed only to stimulate the star and to make her more eager to reach her destination.

When Cody was finally reached, Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen, who accompanied his wife, were received at the Hotel Irma by Mrs. Irma Cody Garlow, daughter of Buffalo Hill and proprietress of the quaint hostelry.

New Industrial Film

The Industrial Department of Universal, under the management of Harry Levey, presented at a private showing at the Broadway theatre, New York, on July 30 its latest industrial film, "Hearts and Jerseys." The picture is a comedy-drama in five reels and was made for the American Jersey Cattle Club. Most of its circulation will be in communities somewhat more bucolic than Broadway, Universal announces.

May Irwin is one of the players in the feature.

Triangle Presents Dick Rosson In "High Stakes," a Current Production

Sheldon Lewis, Leah Baird, Charles Hutchinson and Joseph A. Golden Rest After Luncheon While Shooting Scenes for Miss Baird's Serial, "The Messenger of Death"

Title Chosen for New Leah Baird Serial

THE international title campaign conducted by Leah Baird has come to a close. The majority of film fans decided against the opinion of Miss Baird, and the original title selected by President and Director-General Joseph A. Golden of the Western Photoplays, Inc., has been settled upon as the final selection for the serial in which Miss Baird is being starred.

Many curious and odd suggestions were received—from every nook and corner of the world replies poured in. An overwhelming majority, however, counted in favor of the choice originally placed on the serial, as being the most appropriate and the most interest compelling.

"The Messenger of Death" is the ominous title of the coming fifteen-episode serial starring Leah Baird. From Maine to California, from South America to Europe, in the towns of our own West and in the Far East—the above mentioned words will flash for many months to come.

Miss Baird cheerfully states "The King is dead, long live the King—the present title is the choice of thousands, and I have congratulated Mr. Golden heartily." She furthermore added, "Do you know the more I have thought it over the better I like 'The Messenger of Death,' and all along as I saw that exhibitors were voting for it, I was ready to capitulate in favor of Mr. Golden. However, in many ways our contest proved of value and benefit to us, so upon behalf of Messrs. Golden and Alperstein and myself, I wish to thank the many many friends who have tendered us valuable suggestions and ideas."

Vitagraph Serial Wins Boston Exhibitor

"A FIGHT FOR MILLIONS" apparently has blazed the trail for future Vitagraph serials in the Park theatre, Boston, judging from a telegram which John D. Soriero, manager of the house, sent to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. The Park comes under the head of those "non-serial" houses which Mr. Irwin stated last week, had booked the newest Vitagraph chapter sensation featuring William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

The Park is a downtown house and plays the best productions offered for the screen. It had only run one serial in its history, prior to starting with "A Fight for Millions" two weeks ago, and the continued screen story had been taboo there until Manager Soriero saw several episodes of Vitagraph's latest offering screened. He booked it and opened to one of the largest crowds in the history of his theatre, then sent the following telegram to the general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization:

"Vitagraph serial, 'A Fight for Millions,' starring William Duncan, is a wonderful serial. First episode held audience spellbound at Park theatre. I consider it one of the best of season. Exhibitors that have never run serials will make no mistake booking it. Our house plays to the best people in Boston and New England. This serial will prove a good business builder to every one who plays it. I cannot speak too highly of the episodes I have seen. I could write more, but it is not necessary."

Quits Scenario Field

Adelaide Leitzbach, playwright-scenarioist, for the past year a member of the scenario staff of the Fox Film Corporation, announced this week that she has withdrawn from the Fox company.

Fox Policy Invites Exhibitor Contracts

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, General Manager of Fox Film Corporation, has advised the Fox Exchange Managers of the new policy by which their groups of pictures will be released during the season starting September.

"We found that every motion picture exhibitor had a problem of his own," said Mr. Sheehan, "and we have tried to find ways and means of solving the various situations that exist. We feel that every exhibitor in the United States can arrange, by our new releasing method, to make a financially successful contract with Fox Corporation for next season. For instance, any exhibitor can walk into our exchange and book the four big individual productions, or two or three or the entire four as best suits his booking and playing dates. We have planned for a year to make four such productions, and we have every confidence that Annette Kellermann in 'Queen of the Sea,' the R. A. Walsh production, 'The Prussian Cur'; 'Why America Will Win,' based on the life of General Pershing, and the great morality picture, 'Why I Would Not Marry,' will prove complete successes wherever played.

"Standard Pictures, 26 in number, including William Farnum, Theda Bara and other stars, will be the best that money, brains and energy can produce. In the Victory group pictures, including Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh, there will be staged the best stories, plays and themes that are available in the world market of today. In the Excel group of pictures we have made a series of five-reel features that will compare with the best on the market.

Peggy Hyland, Fox Star

"By our arrangement of three groups of pictures, the exhibitor can book 26, 52 or 78 feature pictures in addition to the four big productions. Mutt and Jeff will create laughs at the rate of one picture a week during the next year, and Sunshine Comedies, greater and bigger than ever, will be released at the rate of 26 during the twelve months."

The four big productions, as well as the September releases on the Standard, Victory and Excel groups, will be screened for exhibitors at the Fox Exchange by applying to the manager, Mr. Sheehan states.

Three Metro Productions Near Completion

UNDER the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, the manager of productions for Metro, three of their most anticipated photoplays will see completion this week ready to take their place on that concern's list of early releases.

First is "Our Mrs. McChesney," the screen adaptation by Luther A. Reed of Edna Ferber's stories starring Ethel Barrymore and directed by Ralph Ince. Miss Barrymore is surrounded by a large and notable company.

Edith Storey in "Shadow and Substance" and directed by Herbert Blache, assisted by Edward Lawrence, is the next on the list. "Shadow and Substance" is a drama of the rugged Northwest, by Lois Zellner, and in addition to being a story replete with action and human interest, is one calling for unusual sets, some of splendor, some of picturesque quaintness, and with its exterior scenes showing marvelously beautiful scenery.

"Flower of the Dusk," the well-known Myrtle Reed novel scenarioized by John H. Collins, which is Viola Dana's current starring vehicle, is also practically completed. Mr. Collins has also directed this picture, in which Metro's popular star has one of the best opportunities for a display of all her histrionic ability of any in her career, playing, as she does, Constance North, the young mother, in the prologue, and Barbara North, the daughter, in the play. Director Collins chose a cast not only of exceptional players, but one who virtually brings to life the dearly loved characters of the book. Prominent in the company are Guy Coombs, who plays Lawrence Austin; Howard Hall as Ambrose North, Alice Martin, Bliss Milford, Charles Sutton, Maggie Beyer, Mrs. L. Ford, Jack McGowan, Margaret McWade and others.

Lyons-Moran New Style Gets Approval

In departing from the old slap-stick style of comedy and adopting as the basic idea for their pictures the little troubles that beset every man and his wife, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are said to have scored a direct hit upon the bull's eye of popular approval.

Their newest subject is entitled "Damaged God," and is scheduled for release during the week of August 19. It is claimed to be an excellent example of the new type of comedy released under the brand name of Lyons-Moran Star Comedies.

Irene Castle Stays in Motion Pictures

Irene (Mrs. Vernon) Castle is not to retire from the screen, it became known this week, when Carolyn Wagner, secretary to Mrs. Castle, informed a representative of Motion Picture News that the dancer-picture star is considering several offers from producing organizations, and that she is very likely to accept one of them after she has continued with her patriotic work as long as the country wants her.

It was Mrs. Castle's intention to go to France to aid the Over There entertainment movement, but it is probable that she will remain on this side, doing special work to help offset German propaganda.

Mrs. Castle's secretary, unintentionally mixing press-agentry with enthusiasm for the star's patriotic work, stated that it is as yet uncertain what the special work will develop into, but that a "tremendously stirring and thrilling patriotic scenario has been prepared for Mrs. Castle, which will rank alongside of 'Hearts of the World' and other big features of the kind." It was not stated whose would be the master hand to shape this production into the masterpiece Mrs. Castle's secretary expects it to be.

Metzger Settles with Jewel in East

Gus A. Metzger has come out of the West to take charge of Jewel's New York City Exchange. Metzger is a pioneer in the film business of Oregon and because the word "pioneer" carries with it the idea of whiskers reaching down to the fourth button of the vest, we take the liberty of stating that this particular Jewel executive is not that kind of a pioneer.

Mr. Metzger arrived in New York at 8:30 o'clock on a Monday morning. At nine he was at his desk on the seventh floor of 1600 Broadway and had taken up his duties as general manager of the Jewel Exchange, succeeding the late Sol Burman.

Edna Goodrich, In Mutual Pictures

Gilson Willets, Scenario Writer of the Pathe Staff

Castle Subject from Pen of Gilson Willets

Gilson Willets, who is now a member of Pathe's scenario staff in New York, has written twenty-five books, some of which have been best sellers in their day. "The First Law," one of his most successful volumes of fiction, forms the basis for the picture of the same name in which Irene Castle stars and which was released by Pathe as a regular program feature July 28.

Mr. Willets also wrote "Hands Up," the Ruth Roland serial, the first episode of which will be released August 18.

In addition to writing the final episodes of "Hands Up," he has finished plays for Baby Marie Osborne and Frank Keenan, both to be filmed on the coast this winter. He is now at work on a new drama for Fannie Ward.

Lytell Picture Nears Completion

Bert Lytell's newest picture, "Unexpected Places," is said to be rapidly nearing completion at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. Less than a week of camera work remains to be done before the film will be assembled and edited. It is Lytell's fourth subject since becoming a star under the Metro banner, the others having been successively, "The Trail to Yesterday," "No Man's Land" and "Boston Blackie's Little Pal."

"Unexpected Places," which is a screen adaptation by A. S. Le Vino of Lieut. Frank R. Adams' fiction story, is declared wholly unlike any of the Lytell pictures which have preceded it. The star has the role of an enterprising reporter.

Rhea Mitchell, formerly a star in her own right, who was leading woman with Lytell in "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," again plays opposite him in "Unexpected Places." Others in the supporting cast are Edythe Chapman, Colin Kenney, Louis Morrison, John Burton, Stanton Heck and Jay Dwiggins. E. Mason Hopper is the director.

About New Pictures

The Earle Williams Vitagraph company, on July 13, completed its newest picture, "The Man from Brodney's," from the story by George Barr McCutcheon. This picture was made under the direction of Jack Conway and had Grace Darmond in the role opposite Earle Williams.

Montagu Love and his company, including his director, Oscar Apfel, who have been to Wilmington, N. C., making exteriors for his new picture play, "Pirates' Gold," have returned to Fort Lee. The interiors are now being taken.

A Hudson Bay trading post, really a lumber jack's general store, is one of the many very interesting scenes in Edith Storey's new picture, "Shadow and Substance," a five-act feature photodrama by Lois Zellner, which is now being filmed under the direction of Herbert Blache, assisted by Edward Lawrence.

Alice Brady, the screen star whose latest Select picture, "The Whirlpool," has just been released, has been made sponsor for a government war ship, at the request of the crew on the Submarine Chaser 19.

Work was finished on the current Baby Marie Osborne picture, "Dolly's Vacation," this week. Every night this week the company has been taking night scenes in a big iron foundry.

Two of the best-known young women in pictures are in the cast of "The Temple of Dusk." They are Jane Novak and Sylvia Bremer. Both of these actresses have appeared in numerous successful pictures.

Bert Bracken has finished assembling his latest feature, "Vengeance Is Mine," which stars the well-known Mitchell Lewis of "The Barrier" and "Bar Sinister" fame, and the film is now ready for shipment.

Clarence Badger has started work on his second Madge Kennedy picture, "The Kingdom of Youth." He spent over a week and a half going over the script, scene for scene, with the scenario department and nearly a week selecting his sets and exterior locations.

Many beautiful outdoor scenes are now being taken for "Young America," the George K. Spoor feature taken from the Cohan and Harris stage success. These elaborate exterior settings greatly enhance the beauty of the picture.

In Louise Glaum's new Paralta Play, "A Law Unto Himself," which is being filmed at the present time, at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles, under the direction of Wallace Worsley, Miss Glaum will be surrounded by a supporting cast including Samuel de Grasse, Joseph J. Dowling, Edward Coxen, Irene Rich, Elvira Weil, Burwell Hamrick, George Hackathorne, Peggy Schaffer and Jess Herring.

Many of the scenes for "Kildare of Storm," the early Metro release in which Emily Stevens will be seen as the star, were made on the estate belonging to Major Parsons, who is now in France with the American Aviation Corps.

F. McGrew Willis, author of J. Warren Kerrigan's latest Paralta Plays' offering, "A Burglar for a Night," has provided Mr. Kerrigan with one of the most congenial roles that well-known screen star has had since he deserted the speaking stage in favor of the celluloid records of romance and adventure.

Dorothy Green, who lately returned to the screen via the World Film, left with the company Friday night for Marblehead, Mass., to film exteriors for "Pirates' Gold."

When Fred Stone makes his second appearance in the films, through the medium of Artcraft pictures, in "Johnny Get Your Gun," he will have for his leading woman, Mary Anderson, one of the most skilled of motion picture ingenues.

Douglas Fairbanks, who recently completed "Bound in Morocco," his new Artcraft picture which will be released August 12, is now at work with Ted Reed on the scenario for his government propaganda picture to be used in exploiting the Fourth Liberty Loan.

Al Jennings has turned his first six-reeler, "The Lady of the Dugout," over to Ernest Shipman for selling purposes, and is now at work upon his second feature in which a highly sensational episode with the late O. Henry is screened.

William H. Clifford has completed "A Prisoner of War," the fifth of the Shorty Hamilton five-reelers.

Marion Davies, Whose New Picture for Release by Select Is About Half Finished

Seibel Likes Outing-Chester Films

A snappy testimonial to the box-office value of the Outing-Chester adventure pictures released by Mutual is presented in a letter from William H. Seibel of the Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., who writes:

"Please send us two one-sheets for each of the Outing-Chester travel pictures as far ahead as you can, commencing with the second issue. Also write me letting me know in what rotation they will be played by us. If all the following reels are as good as the first—Oh, Boy!! I was with Lyman H. Howe for nearly eight years, and I have a sneaking idea that I know real pictures when I see them."

S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, has booked the entire series of Outing-Chesters.

General Provides Films for U. S. Ships

General Film service is being used to provide entertainment for a number of United States warships stationed in southern waters, according to word received this week from the Atlanta branch. A contract for supplying the U. S. S. "Dorothea," the service including fifty reels every two weeks, was awarded after the government had received bids from nearly a dozen companies, representing the strongest kind of competition. General Film's bid was selected, according to a government official, "for price, for service and for courteous attention."

World Cuts Titles to Fit Electric Signs

WORLD FILM, having consulted with a large number of exhibitors, will endeavor whenever possible to shorten the titles to such pictures as they produce as will make it possible for the exhibitors to display them on the electric signs in front of their theatres. The motion picture theatres throughout the country are rapidly installing electric signs, and as the space on these advertising mediums is limited as regards the number of letters that can be employed, it becomes necessary to shorten titles of features. If there is any value in a title, then advantage should be taken on it. The space on these signs generally permit of the name of the star and if the title of the picture is not too long it also can be displayed. The original title of Madge Evans's new picture, which will be put in work on August 1, was "The Latch String Hangs Out." To make it possible for all theatres to use both the name of the star and the title of the picture, it will be released as "Snug Harbor."

In regards to newspaper advertising, where an exhibitor has contracted to use a certain amount of space each season, he will be benefited by this change of policy, as a title of an average length of ten or fifteen letters can be displayed to greater advantage than one of twenty or thirty letters. The same amount of space is used but the letters are larger and carry further.

Paramount Credits Star for Picture's Success

As evidence of the increasing popularity of Dorothy Dalton and fulfilling the predictions made for her latest Ince production for Paramount, "The Kaiser's Shadow," the success scored by the picture recently at the Columbia theatre, Portland, Ore., is cited by Paramount. C. M. Hill, branch manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Portland, felt so good over it that he believed himself justified in sending the following telegram to the home office in New York:

"So great has been the attendance at the Columbia theatre during the past few days for the showing of Dorothy Dalton in 'The Kaiser s Shadow' that all records for attendance for this season of the year have been broken and popular demand has made it imperative to extend the booking from five days, as originally booked, to the whole week."

Tefft Johnson Directs Madge Evans

Tefft Johnson, the director, has been engaged by World Pictures to direct Madge Evans in "Sung Harbor." Work on this picture started at the studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey, on August 1.

Mr. Johnson was born in Washington, D. C., and educated at Georgetown College. After having played twelve years with David Belasco, supporting Mrs. Leslie Carter in "Heart of Maryland" and Blanche Bates in "Under Two Flags" and other Belasco successes he became a screen actor. He has appeared in productions of Edison, Vitagraph, Fox and other companies. As a director the most notable of his efforts were disclosed in "The Turn of the Road" and "The Writing on the Wall." He also directed the Bobby Connolly Series of two-reel comedies. He produced a series of juvenile comedies familiaraly known as "Sonny Boy."

Stern Increases Comedy Organizations

So great has been the demand for the comedies put forth by the Century and L-Ko Comedy companies, reports Julius Stern, president of these organizations, that the force engaged in production work has been increased more than 100 per cent.

Among the many recent acquisitions to the Century and L-Ko producing staff are Directors Charles Parott, Vin Moore, Charles Avery, Jimmy Davis and Craig Hutchinson.

The artists recently placed under contract are Billy Armstrong, Harry Gribbon and May Emery, all of whom were formerly with Mack Sennett; Babe Hardy, whose work with the King Bee aggregation of fun-makers elicited much favorable comment; James Donnelly, a former Keystonite, and Phil Dunham, who will be remembered for his work in L-Ko comedies a year or so ago.

Two new cameramen have also been added to the L-Ko and Century roster. They are Robert Walter and George Robinson.

Moreno Serial Reaches Eastern Studio

The first episode of the Vitagraph circus serial in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are to be co-starred has already reached the Eastern studio, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. Work was started on the serial July 1, he says, and the first episode was finished within two weeks. This was made possible, according to Mr. Smith, by the completeness of the arrangements which had been made before Mr. Moreno arrived at the company's studio in Hollywood. Paul Hurst, the director, had all his working scripts in shape, Miss Holloway was fully prepared, and all of the tents, wagons and other paraphernalia which were necessary for the production were ready.

Mr. Smith says that he expects to be able to announce the title of the serial within the next week or ten days. He and Cyrus Townsend Brady wrote the story from which the fifteen-episode play has been made.

Los Angeles Manager Compliments "Tinsel"

Among the many congratulations received by World Pictures on "Tinsel," in which Kitty Gordon is starred, is the following telegram sent by B. C. Steele, manager of the Symphony theatre of Los Angeles.

"Ricord Gradwell, president World Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, N. Y.: I want to congratulate and thank you for your production, 'Tinsel,' starring Kitty Gordon. People who know gowns, people who know acting, people who know photography—in short, those who know motion pictures—are highly elated over 'Tinsel.' We are doing capacity business and, what is more, every one is going away satisfied. Give us more pictures like 'Tinsel' and there won't be any more cry about the war hurting the movie business."

(Signed) B. C. Steele, manager Symphony theatre.

Eleven Metro Directors Active

East and West Coast Studios Finish Productions and Prepare to Start Work on Others — Some New Directors Added

ELEVEN directors are busily engaged in preparing multiple-reel features for Metro Pictures Corporation, in the firm's East and West Coast studios. The roster includes Edwin Carewe, Albert Capellani, John H. Collins, Charles J. Brabin, Herbert Blache, Wilfred Lucas, Ralph W. Ince, John Ince, Harry L. Franklin, E. Mason Hopper and William S. Davis.

Several big productions have been completed in both studios, with Maxwell Karger, manager of productions, supervising the output at the New York centre, and George D. Baker in charge at the firm's Pacific coast studio. Other pictures are approaching completion, with still others in the full swing of production. Ethel Barrymore, Viola Dana and Edith Storey are the stars who have just completed feature pictures in the eastern brace of studios at 3 West Sixty-first street and at the Biograph studio, while Harold Lockwood, Bert Lytell, May Allison, Anna Q. Nilsson and her co-star, Franklyn Farnum, have finished photoplays in the West. The productions thus made ready for release in Metro's All-Star Series are "Our Mrs. McChesney," starring Ethel Barrymore, directed by Ralph W. Ince; "Flower of the Dusk," with Viola Dana as star, directed by John H. Collins; "Shadow and Substance," starring Edith Storey, with Herbert Blache directing; "A King in Khaki," a Screen Classics, Inc., production starring Harold Lockwood, directed by Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Yorke Film Corporation; "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," starring Bert Lytell, directed by E. Mason Hopper; "The Return of Mary," a starring vehicle for May Allison, Wilfred Lucas directing; and "In Judgment Of," co-starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum, directed by William S. Davis. These differ widely in theme and handling, and illustrate Metro's policy of providing a well-balanced program.

Ralph W. Ince and John Ince are the latest additions to Metro's staff of de luxe. Ralph Ince comes to Metro by a special arrangement with Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin. He will direct the fortunes of a new Metro star, Hale Hamilton, in the Izola Forrester-Page Mann five-reeler, "The Fourflusher," formerly called "The Tightwad," to be given immediate production. Katharine Kavanaugh is making the adaptation from the original story, and Mr. Ince is choosing a suitable cast. Mr. Hamilton has already shown his quality to Metro patrons in "Opportunity," in which he appeared opposite Viola Dana, and in "The Winning of Beatrice," with May Allison. His success on stage and screen has been marked, notably in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford."

Wilfred Lucas is one of the most recent acquisitions to the directing staff of this busy concern. Mr. Lucas has been directing May Allison in "The Return of Mary," a screen drama by Hale Hamilton, now practically completed. Miss Allison's next picture will be "The Testing of Mildred Vane," written by Charles T. Dazey, the author of "In Old Kentucky," and adapted by George D. Baker.

Kappeler Appears with Gladys Leslie

Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph's girl with "the million-dollar smile," will have another strong supporting cast with her in her next Blue Ribbon feature, the working title of which is "The Nymph of the Foothills." For her leading man she has Alfred Kappeler, recently leading tenor in the Broadway production "Oh, Look," and leading man for Ethel Barrymore in the Metro production of "An American Widow." Another member of Miss Leslie's support will be Walter Heirs, comedian.

This picture, like "Wild Primrose," which is to be released on August 12, is directed by Frederick Thomson. Miss Leslie's leading man in "Wild Primrose" is Richard Bathlemess, so often seen opposite Marguerite Clark and Nazimova. He was especially engaged to play the leading male role.

Coming Program Offerings

Omaha Has All-Goldwyn Week

Strand and Rialto Find Business Good with Unusual Programs Starring Big Favorites—Managers Want Star Series List

GOLDWYN'S summer releases, with three of its most popular stars, held the center of the stage of the silent drama at both the Strand and Rialto theatres, Omaha, last week.

Goldwyn productions held forth at the Strand theatre the entire week, the first half being given over to Mabel Normand in her Goldwyn comedy-drama, "The Venus Model." The latter part of the week featured Mae Marsh in Goldwyn's modern drama, "All Woman." While these two productions were drawing capacity houses at the Strand, Madge Kennedy in the stirring patriotic drama, "The Service Star," was magnetizing the box-office of the Rialto.

H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto, was quick to take advantage of the patriotic "punch" contained in "The Service Star" and ran full double-column newspaper advertisements, with specially designed patriotic borders. The hand-lettered head-line of the ad. arrested attention with: "A Message to YOU from the Rialto theatre ON the Most Important Subject In All the World." This was followed by an eloquent editorial on "The Service Flag as the Insignia and Emblem of the Heart," and a brief outline of the story of the play. The newspaper advertising was supplemented by other vigorous forms of exploitation and the press was most generous with write-ups and notices.

Mr. Thomas reports: "'The Service Star' batted 1,000. The people stood up and yelled, so intensely thrilling was the action of the play."

Mae Marsh, Popular Star in Goldwyn Pictures

The Strand also did excellent business with Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model" and Mae Marsh in "All Woman."

The fact that the Strand and Rialto were playing Goldwyn pictures simultaneously gave the amusement page of the Omaha newspaper the appearance of being a Goldwyn press sheet. The large advertisements of Goldwyn attractions dominated the page and the effect of such a broadside obtained exceptional results.

So gratifying were the results of "Goldwyn Week" that the directing heads of the Strand and Rialto have declared their intention of booking Goldwyn pictures under the new Star Series plan, which is in practice the coming season.

Universal Proves Its Interest in Shorts

EVIDENCE that Universal is paying special attention to its short subjects is said to be evidenced in "Roped and Tied," a two-reel Western drama scheduled for release on August 17.

Featuring such players as Neal Hart, Eileen Sedgwick, Joe Rickson and Lola Wright, the newest Universal short subject, is declared to be full of dash and vim that went so far towards popularizing the subjects some years ago. It tells the story of the adventures that befall Dide Lewis, a wealthy young cattle baron who comes to Hell Gate, Montana, in search of recreation.

A visit to the dance hall run by Minnie Ralston results in a meeting with Lola Dorn, one of the girls in the place. Lewis falls earnestly in love with Lola and so arouses the jealousy of Minnie, who in the meantime falls in love with him.

Matters are complicated when Roddy Jensen, a hanger-on, also falls in love with Lola. The men declare war on each other. Minnie takes a hand by warning Lola to steer clear of Lewis because of her prior claim. Minnie's story soon spreads over Hell Gate and is generally believed. Lewis is justly angry and determines to clean up the town in revenge, knowing that nothing would so irritate the lawless element as much as a wave of reform.

In the meantime Roddy, determined to win Lola at any hazard, frames up on Dide in an endeavor to shake Lola's faith in him.

With Lola's help Lewis sets about to reform Hell Gate and succeeds in closing permanently the dance halls and gambling houses.

It is cited that this production is only one of the Universal short subjects to which special attention is being paid.

General Scores on Oakdale Bookings

Advance bookings and inquiries for the Oakdale Productions featuring Gloria Joy have been enthusiastic, General Film Company announces this week. "The Locked Heart," the first Oakdale to be released, has been booked for the Loew houses in New York City. Other important bookings in New York are reported by Branch Manager J. A. Hammell, while other managers are reporting that their facilities for handling the Oakdale series will be taxed to the utmost.

One feature of the Oakdale Productions which is said by General Film to be winning the approval of exhibitors, is the entire absence of objectionable details, such as booze scenes and domestic incidents of a risque nature.

"No Children Wanted," the second release in the series, presents the child star in a sympathetic and highly entertaining story of domestic life for which General Film predicts unusual success.

"Unchastened Woman" Does Well in Ohio

"The Unchastened Woman," the first Rialto-Deluxe feature, has caused quite a sensation in the Cincinnati territory, according to reports received by Motion Picture News from J. F. Brett, manager of the George Kleine System branch at Cincinnati. Mr. Brett advises that Cincinnati was slated to get the picture September 1, but since it was screened for the principal cities the exhibitors insisted upon a pre-release showing.

The picture opened at the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., July 7, for four days. On the opening night the house had a hold-out for two hours, it is said. The theatre seats 2,600 people. Other bookings are the Walnut, Louisville; Circle, Indianapolis; Alhambra, Cincinnati; Charleston, Bluefield, Huntington, all in W. Va.; and Chillicothe, Marietta, Springfield, Ohio. Another print has been ordered to take care of other bookings.

Stewart's Own Play on Triangle List

The U. S. Mexican frontier forms the background of "Cactus Crandall," the featured production offering Roy Stewart and scheduled as the first release on the Triangle program for the week of August 11. A production which strikes a patriotic keynote, "Shifting Sands," is the second release for the week, and features Gloria Swanson.

"Cactus Crandall" was written by Roy Stewart himself and he plays the hero in this production, which is described as a Western thriller.

Nestor Announces a Laugh

William Franey in a modern version of "Young Lochinvar" entitled, "The Pie-Eyed Piper," is the Nestor comedy scheduled for release on Monday, August 19. Franey is supported by Zasu Pitts, Lillian Peacocke and Milton Moranti in this burlesque on the old poem.

J. Warren Kerrigan's Newest Paralta Play Is "A Burglar for a Night"

Four Girl Stars in Ray Production

In Charles Ray's newest Paramount picture, "A Nine o'Clock Town," which was produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and which will be released August 5, the young star will have the advantage of the support of a quartette of well-known and undeniably clever actresses: Jane Novak, who will have the chief feminine role; Dorcas Matthews, an Ince favorite, with a decided penchant for portraying young women who snap their pretty fingers in the face of convention; Gertrude Claire, for several years prominently identified with Ince "mothers" and the like, and Beverly Travers, a young actress who will be seen in the role of a corset model, a new style of screen "Vampire."

Victor L. Schertzinger, Ray's director, wrote "A Nine o'Clock Town," and is said to have given his star innumerable chances for some new screen accomplishments that ought to prove interesting and entertaining.

Arbuckle Finishes Comedy for August

At his studio at Long Beach, Cal., Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has completed his Paramount-Arbuckle comedy for August release. The title is "The Cook," and it is said to be even funnier than "Good-Night, Nurse," which was released three weeks ago.

In "The Cook," Arbuckle assumes the role of the boss of a kitchen of a beach cafe, and the ingenious contrivances which he employs to make the cuisine game easy promise to meet the appreciation of every housewife. Of course there is a ludicrous and highly entertaining plot in which "Fatty" as an ardent lover has his troubles with persistent rivals.

Luke, the terrier, has a strenuous and exceedingly useful role, playing the part of a friend in need on more than one occasion. The heavyweight comedian is assisted in the fun-making by Buster Keaton, Al St. John and Alice Lake.

Program Glances

A masterpiece of film craft is the description given in an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation of "Queen of the Sea," the $1,000,000 submarine phantasy which will soon be released as a William Fox Extraordinary Picture, Annette Kellermann is the star of the production.

If the old saying, "Love levels all ranks," is true, the newer one, "War levels all ranks," is doubly true. This will be forcefully revealed, it is promised, in "The Great Love," D. W. Griffith's first production for Artcraft, to be released August 12.

In "Her Blighted Love," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy release scheduled for July 29, there are said to be a goodly number of funny little jokes poked at lawyers. Charley Murray has one of the leading roles.

Evidence of Harry Carey's popularity in the West was recently forthcoming when the Strand theatre, at Denver, played "Hell Bent" to capacity business although circumstances prevented the management from advertising the picture properly.

Although all of Douglas Fairbanks' Artcraft pictures have been distinctive in their subtitling, "Bound in Morocco," the star's newest picture, released on the Artcraft schedule August 5, is declared to set a new standard in this respect.

The next Theda Bara super-production to be released as a Fox Standard Picture, it is announced by the Fox Film Corporation, is "When a Woman Sins." This picture, which is described as a powerful story of the regeneration of a modern vampire, is fully expected to create one of the sensations of the season.

Amazing pictures of an American outpost on the west front in France are the most important contained in the Official War Review No. 5, released by Pathe July 29. In the scant shelter of a shell hole our boys are shown blandly and grinningly awaiting a German attack.

Select Pictures Corporation has come into possession of a most interesting letter written by Dave H. Schuhmann, the lessee and manager of the Florence theatre in Pasadena, Cal., telling how that theatre linked in one showing, for a four-day run, Constance Talmadge's "Up the Road with Sallie," and Charlie Chaplin's latest release, "A Dog's Life."

In "All Man," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature announced for release the week of August 5, by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, Harry Morey is said to have a role that is superior to the one of Joe Garden, that which won him recognition in "Within the Law."

"A Hoosier Romance," the Selig production to be released August 19 by the Mutual Film Corporation as a special, is the first of the poems of the world-famous poet, James Whitcomb Riley that has ever been produced as a photoplay.

"That Devil Bateese," a five-reel Bluebird which affords Monroe Salisbury an opportunity to return to the type of role which originally brought him fame and popularity as a Universal star, will be released by that organization during the week of August 12.

One of the final scenes of "Our Mrs. McChesney," Ethel Barrymore's shortly to be released feature, filmed at Metro's Sixty-first Street studio, was a veritable feast for the eye, inasmuch as it was the exact replica of a fashion show in New York City, and what is more, was an actual exhibition of the advanced styles for our coming season.

All the workings of a Maine lumber mill now engaged on contracts for the Government's shipbuilding program, are shown in Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn production, "Back to the Woods." Miss Normand alone is responsible for this touch of realism.

For the second time within a month, an O. Henry story released by General Film Company has been featured on the program at the Rivoli theatre. "Mammon and the Archer," an intimate and appealing heart interest story of high life in New York City, was shown by Directing Manager S. L. Rothapfel during the week of July 21.

One of the cinematographers of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph recently returned from a trip to Bermuda with a series of pictures covering the high points and beauty spots of the 365 islands of the group, and they are a leading feature of Pictograph No. 130, released July 30.

"Tarzan" Sequel Booked Through First National

Telegraphic advice to Los Angeles from William Parsons, general manager of the National Film Corporation of America, are to the effect the company's second super-picture, "The Romance of Tarzan," has been sold to the First National Exhibitors' Association, who handled "Tarzan of the Apes."

While in the East, Mr. Parsons made arrangements for the future releases of the National Company which provide for the making and sale of six De Luxe features annually starring Billie Rhodes; twenty-six two-reel comedies featuring Mr. Parsons, and two super-pictures each year of the size of the Tarzan subjects. The National Company has already purchased film rights on suitable stories for their next super-picture and have several under consideration as starring vehicles for Miss Rhodes. It is expected Mr. Parsons will shortly return to the Coast to continue the making of two-reel comedies for Goldwyn instead of remaining in the East where he had planned to work at the Goldwyn studios.

August Marks Year for Standard Pictures

Just a year ago this August William Fox released the first of his Standard Pictures, "The Spy." During the year that has passed twenty-three Standard Pictures have been completed, and, in stating that these pictures have made a record of rare excellence, the Fox Film Corporation says something that it expects will find an echo in the heart of every exhibitor who has booked them.

But William Fox is not content to rest on this record. For the coming year Standard Pictures, according to present plans, will surpass anything that has yet been attempted by the organization. The best writers, the greatest stories, great events of the hour as well as outstanding events in history—all will be used to make Standard Pictures.

"Belgium" Through Classic Films Company

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," full-page advertising of which appeared in Motion Picture News of August 3, is being handled on the straight-to-the-exhibitor plan by the Classic Films Distributing Company, recently formed in Chicago. This organization is also handling state rights of the film, in addition to "Battle Fronts of France."

The officers of the new corporation are: Henri Hanause, president; Fred H. Sears, vice-president, and M. L. Fulton, secretary and treasurer.

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," is a photo-history of the kingdom of Belgium from its very early history to the time of its devastation by the Germans. The scenes were taken by order of the officials of Belgium and are historically correct, and made up of scenes taken on Belgian soil.

"Battle Fronts of France" is a feature made up of pictures taken by the French government during the present war and gives authentic information regarding the great battles on the other side up to and including the time of the arrival of General Pershing and our American boys.

Kleine Reports Demand for Chaplin Film

"Triple Trouble," the new Charlie Chaplin comeedy, which was produced when Chaplin was with Essanay, but just released, is reported to be booking rapidly by the George Kleine releasing system. It opened for a week's run at the Castle theatre, one of Chicago's loop houses, on Sunday, July 28, and several first runs have been arranged in other large cities.

The play is said to be strictly up to the minute, touching on the world war, with considerable humor at the expense of the Kaiser. Chaplin, though a humble janitor, is instrumental in preventing German spies getting hold of the formula for a "wireless explosive," which they are trying to steal.

Virginia Pearson, In Photoplays Supreme, Produced and Dictributed by William Fox

Excel Brand Gets Pearson Talent

The choice of Virginia Pearson as one of the stars whose work will be seen in William Fox Excel Pictures is said to be the logical outcome of Miss Pearson's record in the last year. This player, who adds to her conscientiousness a keen intelligence, has developed along the best lines of motion picture art, and that she should be named to appear in Excel Pictures should occasion no surprise.

Miss Pearson is now working on the first of her plays to be released under Excel Pictures. It is described as a powerful drama of a girl who solves the mystery of her father's murder and at the same time is united to the man she loves. This picture, entitled "The Queen of Hearts," has several intensely dramatic situations and has a climax that is claimed to be swift and surprising in its solution of a perplexing problem.

Worsley Directs Fourth Glaum Feature

Wallace Worsley, since joining the Paralta forces has become identified as the director of all of the productions in which Louise Glaum has been seen as the star. At the brunton Studios in Los Angeles, where Paralta Plays are being produced, Miss Glaum has completed three productions under Mr. Worsley's direction and is now working on the fourth. The plays thus far released include "An Alien Enemy," "Shackled" and "Wedlock," which was released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation the early part of July. The name of the forthcoming Worsley-Paralta-Glaum picture has not been definitely decided upon, but it will probably be known as "A Law Unto Herself." It is a picture the locale of which is laid in the Champagne district of France, and the action takes place during three periods of that country's thrilling history, ending its twenty-year duration with scenes of the pictures, which occur after August of 1914.

The picture is not a war story.

Hodkinson Ads Carry a New Meaning

A new form of advertising is to be inaugurated by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, it is announced this week. W. W. Hodkinson is a firm believer in and supporter of the two sciences popularized by the war—conservation and efficiency.

Having proven the value of conservation and efficiency in his method of film distribution, which is through the long established exchanges of the General Film Company, Mr. Hodkinson is now extending his theories and practice to his advertising in Motion Picture News.

Mr. Hodkinson says, "We are spending weekly a considerable sum in advertising I have felt for some time this could be made more efficient and serve a greater purpose if it went further than the mere exploitation of our name and the announcement of our product.

"Commencing this week our advertisements have a new mission and a new meaning to the exhibitor. In them he will find advertising and exploitation angles he may use in putting over Plaza Pictures, one of the products handled by Hodkinson service.

Anita Stewart Film Promised for September

Considerable interest attaches to the announcement that the new Anita Stewart productions will be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc. The final approval of the legal details whereby this arrangement was definitely effected occupied a large part of the time of the circuit directors during their recent session in New York. Speculation regarding the star's future, particularly from the distribution angle, will therefore be set at rest.

No time will be lost in providing Miss Stewart with a suitable subject for her debut on the circuit, and it is expected that this event will take place within about two months.

CHARLES W. HARDEN, Kansas City, Mo., announces the formation and incorporation of the Equitable Film Corporation, Kansas City, with a capital stock of $25,000. J. M. Campbell is president; W. H. Bell, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Harden, general manager. The business of the new organization will be the distribution of independent productions.

The new company has taken over the interests of the Camp-Bell Film Company, with offices in the Ozark Building, Kansas City. The Camp-Bell Company had been active in business about three months.

Mr. Harden, general manager of the new corporation, is a pioneer in the Middle West, having formerly been with The Mutual Film Co. at Kansas City; afterward manager for Fox Film Co. and district manager for Fox in the Southeast, leaving that company to accept a similar position with the Metro Company in the Middle West. He organized the E. & H. Film Co. with P. A. Engler, at Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Harden just recently sold his interests at Atlanta and came back to Kansas City where his efforts have resulted in the above combination.

Mr. Bell is also well known in film circles, having been manager of the Select Pictures office here and the Paramount office. He was also associated with the J. D. Williams enterprises for a number of years, operating in Australia and London.

Mr. Campbell is a local business man and capitalist, well known in financial circles in Kansas City.

Billy West Comedies and several features are now released by this company in the territory of Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Iowa.

"Finger of Justice" Indorsed by Pullman

"The Finger of Justice," Rev. Paul Smith's picture of vice conditions, opened July 21st at Poli's theatre, Washington, D. C., after receiving the strong indorsement and co-operation of Major Raymond Pullman, Superintendent of Police and President of the National Police Chiefs Association, who sent out hundreds of invitations over his own signature to public officials and individuals of national reputation to review the picture. "The Finger of Justice" was stopped by the public authorities in New York City after being advertised to open at the Lyric theatre.

The production also opened in Seattle, Wash., on the same date as the opening at Washington, D. C., after the approval of police and local authorities, and the manager of the theatre wired to Dr. Smith: "Picture opened to largest business in the history of the theatre. Crowds stood in line from eleven in the morning until eleven at night. This assures maximum business of this territory."

Johnson Cannibal Films Used as Features

Arrangements are now being made through which the Martin Johnson sensational travel pictures, "Among the Cannibal Isles of the South Pacific," will be shown as a feature attraction in many of the legitimate and higher class motion picture houses throughout the country.

That these pictures have struck a popular chord is manifested in the many letters that have been received by Mr. Johnson from all over the country, not only from the amusement houses, but from educational and scientific institutions as well.

With the view of supplying the latter demand, a series of short subjects will be made from part of the 50,000 feet of negative which Mr. Johnson took on his remarkable expedition, part of which will be shown at prominent universities and educational institutions, as well as to religious societies.

Corrected Statement

The following letter was received from J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. The letter speaks for itself. Through a typographical error a misstatement was made in the columns of the NEWS: "I notice in your issue of August 3rd, on page 718, you bring out an ad. on the Chimpanzee Comedies, stating that all foreign rights to these comedies are under the control of Sidney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. This is to advise you that this statement is not correct. All foreign rights to these comedies are under the control of Sidney Garrett and Ben Blumenthal, of the Bengar Pictures, Inc.

Hall Forms Distributing Corporation

FRANK HALL announces the organization of the Producers' Distributing Corporation, a new concern, formed to deal with independent directors for the distribution of their output.

The main angle of the definitely planned policy of the new organization is the promise to furnish the exhibitors who contract for the year's output of twelve special productions, with big subjects of exceptional box-office value at the fixed rental prices of ten, twenty and thirty dollars, depending upon the age of the subject. Under this plan Mr. Hall binds himself to book pictures that will rent readily for big prices at a top price of thirty dollars, regardless of the demand and notwithstanding the magnitude of their box-office values. In giving his plans, Mr. Hall said:

"We protect contract holders against any possibility of having to accept features that do not come up to their expectations and against high-handed methods on the part of distributors, by a cancellation clause which enables them to cancel their contract upon 'two pictures' notice.'"

Mr. Hall has devoted considerable time, outside of his theatre interests, to the buying and marketing of some of the most successful special productions of the past year.

"I can see no reason," he said, "why, as soon as a successful extra attraction makes its appearance on the market, the exhibitor should be made to pay a rental price for it which keeps him from enjoying a fair share of the profits. As an exhibitor I have long contended that it is not right to place the exhibitor who books a special picture, in a position where he is compelled to strain every nerve to make it do a big box-office business and then to realize very little benefit outside of the advertising it gives his theatre."

Mr. Hall announces that six of the twelve productions he intends handling during the coming year, have been contracted for and says that the director for these six has been engaged.

Rolfe Signs Two Stars to Support Houdini

Margaret Marsh, sister of Mae Marsh, and Ruth Stonehouse, both prominent stars in the silent drama, have been signed to portray leading characters in B. A. Rolfe's serial production, starring Harry Houdini, of vaudeville fame. Mr. Rolfe is president of the Rolfe Productions, Inc., recently organized for the production of independent features. Burton King is in charge of direction, with William Haddock assisting.

Speaking of his serial production, Mr. Rolfe said:

"I want this to be a one hundred per cent picture, and I rely a great deal on Houdini's showmanship and judgment in the matter of cast as well as sets and atmosphere. When it came time to select the supporting cast for the Houdini serial, we considered quite a few of the film favorites and finally, on Houdini's sayso, decided on Miss Marsh."

"Mighty Proud of My First"

So Says Harry Sherman in Speaking of "The Light of the Western Stars," Featuring Dustin Farnum

HARRY SHERMAN, president of Sherman Productions, Inc., who arrived in New York Sunday with a print of his first independent production, "The Light of the Western Stars," featuring Dustin Farnum, gave out the following statement in commenting upon his first venture in the producing field:

"Before I went into the film manufacturing business I had a chain of picture theatres in Minneapolis and environs. There was plenty of opportunity there for me to study the pictures and the public. One of the facts I learned from these observations was the disappointment of audiences in the picture versions of favorite novels. Their favorite novels were my favorite novels, and to my mind there was no logical reason why drastic alterations should be made in the stories.

"It was on this account that I determined to dispose of my theatre interests and enter the production field. Good film stories have been scarce and they are becoming scarcer every day. A pretentious production must have as its base a substantial story, otherwise such a creation is purposeless and empty from the start.

"For Zane Grey I have long had a reverence. He writes those virile stories of outdoor life—western life of the early days—that the public loves. I know the public likes them because they buy Grey's books in millions, and I know the public likes them because I have studied their likes and dislikes in my theatres. And knowing this, I had determined that if ever the motion picture rights to the Zane Grey stories should come into my keeping, I would make sure that those stories would never be 'jazzed up' by any scenario writer or director who might think they know more than the author.

"I purchased from Mr. Grey the rights to 'The Light of Western Stars.' Dustin Farnum when he made his entrance in the first act of 'The Virginian' was picked as star. Mr. Grey's character of Gene Stewart is actually Dustin Farnum.

"Those who have had an advance view of the picture are still raving about it. I have done a lot of raving over it myself, but I will refrain from raving just now, lest I be considered utterly prejudiced in my own favor. Let it suffice for me to say that I am bringing out an extraordinary feature production, and that I am mighty proud to be it."

Big Things Promised for "Sporting Life"

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S first Independent production, a screen adaptation of Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks' famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," is promised for release soon. Hiller & Wilk, Inc., who control the distribution rights, report inquiries from many exhibitors who want bookings. "Sporting Life" is a companion piece of "The Whip," likewise a Drury Lane success, which was one of the most successful melodramas ever filmed.

The big scene of this production is a graphic reproduction of an international prize fight before the London National Sporting Club. This fight takes place in a London playhouse, and Mr. Tourneur has reproduced the whole theatre, galleries, balconies, boxes, stage and pit, with the fighting platform erected in the front of the pit.

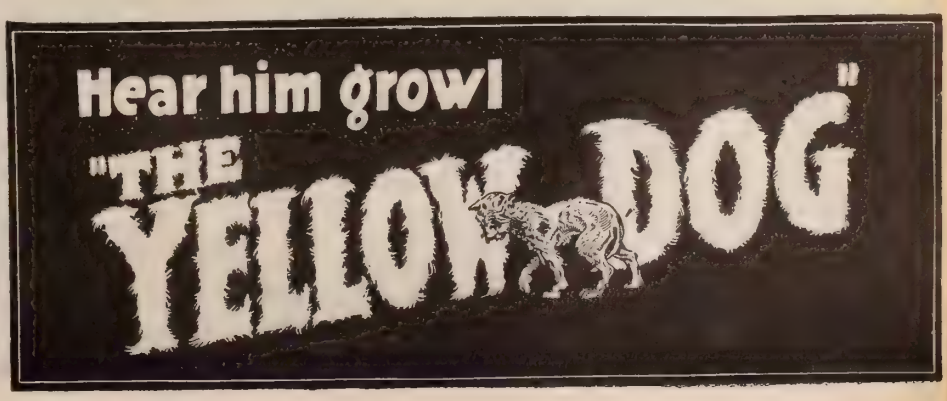
Corrected Statement

Harry I. Garson, Clara Kimball Young's manager, sends in the following correction to a statement appearing in a daily trade paper, last week:

"In the issue of Wid Gunning's daily, July 25, there was a statement to the effect that Ernest Shipman had secured the selling rights to Blanche Sweet's picture, 'The Hushed Hour.'

"I wish to emphatically deny this, and I would appreciate it very much if you would give publicity to the fact.

"Signed) HARRY GARSON."



The Week's News From Gaumont

Gaumont Official Tells Why New Serial Is Going Big—Late News in Gaumont News Weeklies

AN official of the Gaumont Company, whose serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," has been placed on the independent market, recently, in speaking of the qualities of this serial production as real, live entertainment, said:

"The great interest which attaches to this serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," depends primarily on the story, which in this instance is absorbing in the extreme. Starting off with a tense situation which quickly merges into another even more strongly dramatic, the attention of the spectator is caught before the first few hundred feet have been screened. Then follows, with an entire absence of anything resembling "padding," an amazing succession of natural situations—thrilling adventures, exciting dangers, marvelous escapes—which keep the interest at high tension. And even then there will undoubtedly be many persons disappointed because the fact that the majority of those who took part in this play are now fighting real battles in France—makes it impossible to show further daring escapades of the daring adventurer who is featured in this serial.

"That a motion-picture serial need not depend on improbable situations, or the interjection of magical agents or impossible wonders, is conclusively proven by the success which has attended the initial showing of the first episodes of this Gaumont Company's new photo-serial.

"'The Hand of Vengeance' is a mystery story, an adventure story, a detective story, a heart-interest story, a love story, a romance—all in one." The entire serial is now complete in ten two-reel spisodes, artistic posters and publicity aids have been prepared, and exhibitors will be able to see it complete before booking.

Guns and equipment, captured from the Germans, are viewed by thousands at San Francisco; a wrecked "Taube" is seen with planes torn to rags by bullets from our boys' guns, and the S. S. "San Diego," which was sunk off Fire Island while nearing New York, are some of the subjects seen in Gaumont News No. 18. Eight people are killed in a trolley wreck at San Francisco, when a street car runs wild on a hill and turns over. The Baltimore Zoo is visited by the stork, which leaves a brand new baby buffalo.

In Chicago all a soldier or sailor has to do is to salute an automobile and he gets a ride. The boys from Harvard Radio School, Cambridge, Mass., give an exhibition of a new game. It is called the "Chariot Race." Seven hundred thousand coal miners are working at top speed to prevent a repetition of last winter's coal shortage. Army pigeons make record flight from Kansas City to Chicago in eighteen hours. At Camp Devens, Mass., they have a novel way of teaching the boys how to navigate the big army trucks over all kinds of roads. An interesting scene shows how some of our boys looked one year ago today and how they appear now—all these subjects in No. 18 of Gaumont News.

Gaumont Graphic No. 17 shows the inside workings of one of Uncle Sam's big war plants where shell cases are made. One sees the shell case in all the stages of its development, from a copper plate to the finished product.

The official pictures of the National Coal Association give an idea of how the coal miners are working so that we may have coal when we need it. 12,500,000 tons in a single day is their new production record.

Other interesting subjects in this number include the French War Pictures. Enemy mines are destroyed by a two-pounder, which makes a spectacular splash when a hit is recorded. In Washington work is being rushed on Uncle Sam's biggest office building. In Chicago world's premier swimmers stage patriotic water carnival. Mexican editors attend review of our sailor boys at Goat Island.

It was announced this week that A. S. She was selected by the late Clyde Fitch to play in "Girls," and was starred in "The Lily" under David Belasco's management following Nance O'Neil. As a stock star she was popular.

Miss Young will return to California in three weeks to continue her production work. She will establish a permanent home there, and will shortly start work on the plans for her own studio in Pasadena. Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Kimball, Miss Young's father and mother, have already purchased their home in Los Angeles, and are residing there permanently.

"Out of the Night" Released August 4th

"Out of the Night," the late Frank A. Keeney production, scheduled for release August 4, is said to be big in every way. The furnishings and art objects in the studio scene are said to have had an aggregate value of nearly $200,000. The picture stars Catherine Calvert, with Herbert Rawlinson as leading man. It was directed by James Kirkwood.

The next Keeney release following "Out of the Night" will be "Marriage," by Guy Bolton. Reports of good bookings on the first of the Keeney releases, "A Romance of the Underworld," come from the Keeney offices.

Miss Calvert, the star of Keeney productions, has just completed a fourth picture, titled "The Uphill Path," with a working title of "The Girl with a Past." The story is by the late Paul Armstrong, who also wrote "A Romance of the Underworld."

Mercanton Brings French News

Has Plans for Bringing Together French and American Producers Under Franco-American Alliance—Says Business Is Very Good

LOUIS MERCANTON, executive head of the Eclipse Film Company, Paris, France, who recently arrived in this country with prints of a series of special productions made under his personal supervision and direction, at the Eclipse Studios, Paris, gives an interesting account of conditions in the French market, and gives a statement concerning his plans for bringing together the American and French producers under the head of a Franco-American alliance for the better understanding on both sides of the Atlantic of the likes and dislikes of the two countries in so far as photodramatic productions are concerned.

Mr. Mercanton is personally acquainted with conditions in America in respect to the theatrical business because of his associations with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, in the capacity of business manager, during her tour of this country over the period of six years. He also managed the theatrical interests of the late Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, the English actor.

Mr. Mercanton is probably better known to the picture interests of this country, because of his production, "Mothers of France," starring Mme. Bernhardt, shown to the American public, for the first time, about two years ago. He has been interested in the picture business in France for many years and is associated as executive head and production manager of one of France's largest producing and renting firms. Speaking of the picture conditions in France, Mr. Mercanton said:

"From the exhibitors' angle business is far better in Paris and the Provinces of France today than it was prior to the war. And American-made films are in greater demand now than before the war. The only time the exhibitor feels a depression in business in Paris is when the Kaiser decides to send a few of his aviators on a bombing expedition over Paris. Then, naturally, business is on the wane. But during normal times—and by normal times I mean times at which the Hun is not directly threatening the city of Paris with his bombs—Paris is as active from the motion picture exhibitors' standpoint as it ever was and strange as it may seem, the exhibitor has noted an increase in his business since hostile activities began. And this increase is noticeable with the increase of importation of American-made product.

"Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, William Hart, Charlie Chaplin and more recently Charles Ray, are the favorite stars of the Parisians. Pictures starring these favorites are run for a week at the Paris theatres and a capacity business is done each performance. The French like the American product—they like the French productions—they like the motion picture and right here let me say that never has there been a better opportunity for the American and the Frenchman to get together on this proposition than at the present time. Both the French and the American will profit; the industry will profit.

"Very limited production is going on in and about Paris today. This is due to the fact that all the large producing companies, such as Pathe, Gaumont, have given over their producing plants for the use of the French Government in carrying out their war work. Gaumont had only one director working when I left Paris and Pathe had none. I have done some producing but even my activities have been limited because every available man is needed in France for some sort of war work and it is difficult to get actors or even actresses.

"A few independent companies are working, including the Film D'Art Company, but producing activities, in general, are running at low ebb.

"One great drawback to the motion picture business from the exhibitors' and independent buyers' angle, is the fact that shipments to France arrive very irregularly. Eventually the prints arrive but sometimes they are a month or more late. This should be cited more as an inconvenience than as a drawback or detriment because the French expect this and wait patiently.

"During my stay in America, I am going to try and arrange some sort of an exchange whereby American stars can be taken to Paris and featured in a photoplay that will have a combination of French and American ideas as to settings, theme of story and atmosphere. Here is where the great fault with many of the American productions lies. The French do not understand the American's way of doing things. They cannot appreciate some of your dramatic productions for reproduction on the screen. These productions may be the most artistic ever made still there is that bond of understandin lacking.

"That is my purpose in suggesting Franco-American Alliance in this respec It will educate the peoples of both coun tries in what is American and what i French. Your stars could be exchange for ours and vice versa—then we woul arrive on common ground. Your picture would be more thoroughly appreciated i Paris and ours would be more thoroughl appreciated in New York.

"I have brought with me prints of sev eral productions which I have made i Paris. I have a series of pictures starrin Susan Grandaise, one of the most accom plished of French actresses. She was see by the American audiences in a series o pictures which William A. Brady bough and distributed on the World program. have a big production starring Gaby Deslys, who is known to the American public. I have 'The Torrent,' starring Signoret, a noted French actor who was seen in the role of the blind man in 'Mothers of France.' I have a series of comedy-dramas featuring Fred Wright the English comedian, and Sacha Guitry the French actor of note.

"The picture business, especially the exhibiting phase of it, has taken a big spurt in the past year. In Paris and the Provinces big modern theatres are being constructed as fast as the limited supply of steel and iron material will permit. Paris' largest motion picture theatre. Gaumont's Hippodrome, with a seating of more than five thousand, is doing a capacity business every night in the week. There are other big houses in Paris and all are doing a fine business. There is a big market for big American films. There will be a bigger market when the American and French producers get together and exchange their views on productions, when the French understand the American customs and the Americans understand the French customs.

"This is what I am going to try and do —to bring about this understanding. Then the American producer will find a ready market for his product and the French producer will place his product on the American market. The business will be made bigger and better and all will benefit by the better understanding of the other's likes and dislikes.

Fourth Liberty Loan and the Operator

THE latter part of September marks the beginning of the three weeks' drive for the fourth and largest Liberty Loan yet planned. The need for cooperation on the part of every available able bodied citizen is evident. Everyone must do his share, and after that has been done start over again. We who are at home must see that those who have gone do not need for anything, therefore, heap up the funds which spell success and down with the Hun.

This means not only the men in the cities, but the men in the small towns—the employer and the employee—the theatre owner and the OPERATOR.

Here is another chance for every member of the Operators' fraternity, one and all, to jump in and do a big work—a work which will help more than you can ever realize, no matter how patriotic you are.

It is simple, though it will demand brains and perhaps a little money, which the theatre manager should willingly put up. PREPARE SLIDES now calling attention to what is coming. You can make them yourself, as ordinary type will answer every purpose, as it is the force of expression and thought which counts and will make the impression.

In every town or district you will find a Liberty Loan Committee, the local bankers are usually members. Go to them and tell them your story as to how many people you appeal to every day and then tell them of your slide plan. Get ideas from them as to the wording. Ask them how far a fifty-dollar bond subscription will go, how much food it will buy, how many bullets it means, how far it will carry one of the boys. Find out how much money your locality raised in each of the first three loans and then appeal to the people to do better this time. Get the names of the boys who are known in the locality and who are known to your audience, make a list of them under the heading "Roll of Honor," and then appeal to the loyalty of the people to support them.

Make a lot of slides, not one or two. Go to the local photographer and ask him to help you. He can take local scenes of the men who went in the draft from your town. These can be shown on the screen. They will arouse patriotism and a great response.

Don't read this and say it can't be done, for it can, and there is absolutely no excuse for your not doing it at once. There may be other ways you can cooperate with the local committees with the consent of the manager. You may be able to arrange for the display of the Loan posters in the lobby and in front of the house. Try anyway. Tell the manager you want to help and what you intend to do. It will not only help the Government, but it will show the patrons of the theatre where you stand and what you stand for.

When the loan is under way and the local reports are made up each morning prepare a slide, showing what has been already subscribed in the district as well as the national total. Each local committee will have this information ready for you, or at least they will if you are on the job and go after it.

In towns where there is an operator organization a meeting should be called together at once. They should be on the job immediately with a special committee ready to cooperate and lay out the plans, as each local Loan Committee will welcome you and assign plenty of work for you to do.

If you want any suggestions for the wording of the slides we will be only too glad to help, though this is difficult, for the more personal and local the appeal is the more impression it will make and the more good it will do.

Get together—cooperate—work and help make the Fourth Liberty Loan a success. Put it over the top.

Westinghouse Motor-Generator Sets

Care of Motor-Generator

Type SK Generator and Motor

THE commutator must be kept clean and the brushes properly adjusted and fitted to the commutator. Wipe the commutator at frequent intervals, depending on the character of the service, with a piece of clean canvas cloth free from lint. Apply lubricant sparingly; a piece of paraffine rubbed lightly across the commutator surface will furnish sufficient lubrication. No other attention is required by a commutator which is taking on a polish and shows no sign of wear. A rough, raw, copper-colored surface should be smoothed with a piece of sandpaper or fine sandstone ground to fit. In any case the final smoothing should be with fine (No. 00) sandpaper. When using the paper or stone lift the brushes and do not replace them until all grit is removed. Never use emery cloth or emery paper on the commutator.

The brushes are set in the neutral position at the factory, and the bracket to which they are attached is doweled in position. This adjustment should not be altered, as it is correct for either direction of rotation. New brushes should be of the same make and grade as those shipped with the machine. Brushes should have only sufficient clearance in the box to slide easily.

Type AR Single-Phase Motor

To remove brushes from the holder, turn the rocker ring so that the brushes are brought between the arms of the bearing bracket. Remove the screws of the clips that hold the brushes in place. After inserting new brushes, turn the rocker ring so that the pointer is opposite the line for the proper direction of rotation.

The front bracket of the motor should not be removed unless unavoidable. If the bracket is removed, when replacing make sure that the steel pin in the brush-raising ring enters the corresponding slot in the brushholder casting. Failure to observe this may result in poor operation.

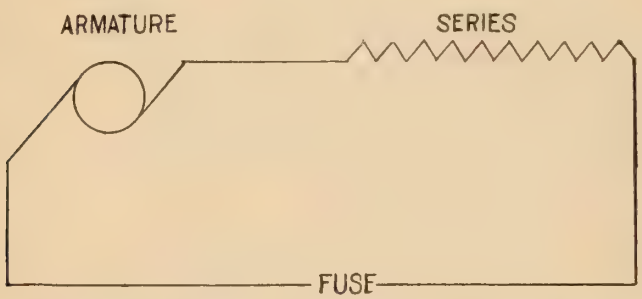

Fig. 11—Method of Making a Compound-Wound Generator Pick Up Voltage

General Pointers

When a generator is started, it may fail to build up its voltage properly. This may occur even though the generator operated perfectly during the preceding run. This may be due to one or more of the following causes:

(a) Slow speed.

(b) Open shunt-field circuit, caused by faulty connection or defective field coil or field rheostat.

(c) Open armature or commutating-field circuit.

(g) Loss of residual magnetism.

Examine all connections, try a temporarily increased pressure on the brushes; look for a broken or burned out resistor coil in the rheostat. An open circuit in the field winding may sometimes be traced with the aid of a magneto and bell; but this is not an infallible test, as some magnetos will not ring through a circuit of such high resistance as some field windings have, even though the winding be intact. If no open circuit is found in the rheostat or in the field winding, the trouble is probably in the armature. But if it be found that nothing is wrong with the connections or the winding it may be necessary to excite the field from another generator or some other outside source. Calling the generator that we desire to excite, No. 1, and the other machine from which current is to be drawn, No. 2, the following procedure should be followed:

Fig. 12—Grinding Brushes

Open all switches and remove all brushes from generator No. 1; connect the positive brushholder of generator No. 1 with the positive brushholder of generator No. 2; also connect the negative holders of the machines together (it is desirable to complete the circuit through a switch protected by a fuse of about five amperes). Close the switch. If the shunt winding of generator No. 1 is all right, its field will show considerable magnetism. If possible, reduce the voltage of generator No. 2 before opening the exciting circuit; then break the connections. If this cannot be done, set the field rheostat contact arm of generator No. 1 on button marked "IN," then open the switch very slowly and gradually lengthen the arc, which will be formed, until it breaks.

A very simple means for getting a compound-wound machine to pick up is to short-circuit it through a fuse having approximately the current capacity of the generator. (See Fig. 11.) If sufficient current to melt this fuse is not generated, it is evident that there is something wrong with the armature, either a short circuit or an open circuit. If, however, the fuse has blown, make one more attempt to get the machine to excite itself. If it does not pick up, it is evident that something is wrong with the shunt winding or connections.

If a new machine refuses to build up voltage and the connections apparently are correct, reverse the field connections; i. e., interchange the field wires which are connected to the positive and negative terminals of the generator. If this interchange of connections does no good, re-establish the original connections and locate the fault as previously advised.

All brush faces resting on the commutator should be fitted to the commutator so that they make good contact over the entire area. This can be most easily accomplished after the brushholders have been adjusted and the brushes inserted. Lift one set of brushes so that they will not be forced against the commutator. Place a piece of sandpaper against the commutator with the sanded side toward the brushes. Replace one brush in its holder and allow the spring to force it against the sandpaper. Draw the sandpaper in the direction of rotation under the brush, as shown in Fig. 12, releasing the pressure as the paper is drawn back, being careful to keep the ends of the paper as close to the commutator surface as posible and thus avoid rounding the ends of the brush. After the first brush is properly ground, it should be lifted sufficiently to prevent it being forced against the commutator, after which the remaining brushes of the set may be similarly ground one at a time.

By this means a satisfactory contact is quickly secured, each set of brushes being similarly treated in turn. If the brushes are copper plated, their edges should be slightly beveled, so that the copper does not come in contact with the commutator.

Make frequent inspection to see that:

(b) Pig-tail shunts are properly attached to brushes and holders.

(c) Tension is readjusted as the brush wears.

The commutator is perhaps the most important part of the machine in that it is most sensitive to abuse. Under normal conditions, it should require little attention beyond frequent inspection. The surface should always be kept smooth, and if, through extreme carelessness, neglect or accident, it becomes badly roughened, the armature should be removed and the commutator turned down in an engine lathe.

Sparking at the brushes may be due to any one of the following causes:

(a) The machine may be overloaded.

(b) The brushes may not be set exactly on the neutral position. If so, the neutral should be determined by running the machine in both directions of rotation and obtaining the same voltage at full load current in both directions.

(c) The brushes may be welded in the holders or have reached their limit of wear.

(f) The brushes may be burned on the ends.

(g) The commutator may be rough. If so, it should be smoothed.

(h) A commutator bar may be loose or may project above the others.

(i) The commutator may be dirty, oily or worn out.

(j) The carbon brushes may be of an unsuitable grade.

(k) The brushes may not be equally spaced around the periphery of the commutator.

(l) Some brushes may have extra pressure and may be taking more than their share of the current.

(m) The contact between some brush pigtails and brushholders may be poor, forcing the other brushes to carry too much current.

(o) Vibration or chattering of the brushes.

These are the more common causes, but sparking may be due to an open circuit or loose connection in the armature. This trouble is indicated by a bright spark which appears to pass completely around the commutator, and may be recognized by the scarring of the commutator at the point of open circuit. If a lead from the armature winding to the commutator becomes loose or broken it will draw a bright spark as the break passes the brush position. This trouble can be readily located, because the insulation on each side of the disconnected bar will be more or less pitted. The commutator should run smoothly and true, and have a dark, glossy surface.

Heating of the field coils may result from any of the following causes:

(c) Too great forward or backward lead of brushes.

Heating of the armature may result from any of the following causes:

(a) Too great load.

(b) A partial short-circuit of two coils heating the two particular coils affected.

(c) Short-circuits or grounds in armature winding or commutator.

Heating of commutator may result from any of the following causes:

(c) Too high brush pressure.

Bucking is the very expressive term descriptive of the arcing between adjacent brush arms. In general, bucking is caused by excessive voltage between commutator bars, or by abnormally low surface resistance on the commutator between brushholders of opposite polarity. Any condition tending to produce poor commutation increases the danger of bucking. Among other causes are the following:

(c) Short-circuits on the line producing excessive overloads.

The Operator's Chance to Serve

THE importance of motion picture entertainment, in war time, as well as in times of peace, has been officially recognized by the National authorities, who have ruled that the theatre owner and the operator may continue to fulfill their important mission of lightening to some extent the hearts of the war-ridden populace, and of spreading National messages and propaganda by the uneequalled methods which the motion picture affords.

Many operators were doubtless gratified and relieved from suspense by the recent ruling of the Federal authorities, but aside from National requirements there are conditions in the industry today which demand the serious consideration of all operators, and which must receive such consideration if motion picture entertainment is to remain on the high plane which the technical developments, in production and in projection, of the last few years have made possible.

Long ago the importance of maintaining films in good physical condition was appreciated by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and through the National Anti-Misframe League, organized and operated by the NEWS, a widespread effort has been made to enlist the assistance of all operators in improving the condition of films. The efforts of the League members have resulted in gratifying improvements in many prominent localities, while a co-operation between many operators and exchanges has resulted which has always brought about improvements in the care of films on the part of both the operator and the exchange.

Although much patient effort has been expended by the members of the National Anti-Misframe League on the improvement of the films which come their way, this careful inspection and repairing of films should now be regarded by all operators as a patriotic duty, regardless of whether they are, or are not, members of the N. A. M. L., and the operator who nowadays does not give his films careful examination each day, prior to running them, is indeed grossly inappreciative of the favorable attitude of the Federal authorities which permits him to continue in his vocation unmolested.

This may seem a strong statement, but it is justified by the facts regarding present conditions in the renting and exhibiting fields of the industry, for we have received nation-wide reports of undoubted accuracy which show that the majority of film exchanges are unable to secure and unable to retain a sufficient amount of trained help in their inspection departments.

Munition manufacturing has opened up a vast field of diversified occupations offering extremely lucrative wages, the equal of which cannot be paid to a large number of employes, such as are required in the inspection department of a large film exchange, and the exchanges have been forced to see their staffs of trained inspectors pass on to more remunerative positions in other industries, leaving the exchanges to face the problem of getting out shows in good running condition with the assistance of a greatly depleted staff of untrained workers. In scores of other instances, again, the exchanges have trained new workers to fill the places of their departed inspectors, only to have these also lured away by higher wages in other industries of the so-called essential class.

Clearly then the exchanges cannot nowadays be held altogether to blame for the condition of the films which they circulate, and we know that the representative distributing organizations are striving to give all films the proper inspection before releasing them to the exhibitor. As, however, they can only partially succeed in this under present existing circumstances, it falls to all operators as a duty, which may be considered of National importance, to augment the efforts of the exchanges by treating carefully the films which come into their hands, thereby preventing damage which the exchange cannot in all instances promptly repair, and also by taking upon themselves the task of examining and repairing each day's show. This thorough inspection of films has always been undertaken daily, as a matter of pride, by every first class operator and should now be undertaken as a matter of duty by all operators.

Operators, the opportunity to serve the interests of the Nation and the industry is now presented. Let none fail in the acceptance of this patriotic duty.

Uses Speed Controller to Vary Rewinding Tension

ONE of our regular correspondents, Mr. Philip Frahm, of Storm Lake, Ia., has devised a method of rewinding his films at even and adjustable speed, which he finds relieves him of using his hand as a brake on the reel being rewound, and which may prove of interest to other operators. Mr. Frahm describes the arrangement as follows:

"My rewinder used to be run by a motor belted directly to the reel standard, but I took an old Power's friction-drive speed controller which we had here, complete with the bracket to hold same, attached the motor to this, and then ran the belt from the friction pulley to the reel standard of the rewinder. I then took the speed control lever and fastened it to the rewinding table, thereby enabling me to control the speed of my rewinder. I have Power machines, but perhaps those using other makes can figure out a similar device. It beats holding the first reel so that it will not rewind too fast."

Joining Films with Odd Frame-Lines

Mr. Herbert P. Gibbs, Richmond, Va., inquires: "Is there any way in which two pieces of film, one with the frame-line between the sprocket holes and the other with the frame line on the sprocket holes, can be joined in frame? This has always been a puzzle to me."

In reply: The correspondent is not the only operator who has experimented in the attempt to join films with different frame-lines in such a way that the picture would not go out of frame at the junction of the two differently spaced strips, but the case mentioned by the correspondent is the extreme case where the frame lines vary in orientation by approximately the width of a space between successive perforations, and no manipulation in joining can restore the register, unless two splices are resorted to; one giving the first image following the join an extra height equivalent to a space between perforations, and the second join (placed a little further along in the film) being so made that the image immediately following it is of less than the correct height by an amount equivalent to one space between perforations. If this is done the length of film between the two splices will project out of frame, but when the second splice is passed the film will again be in frame corresponding to the first of the two scenes considered. This procedure is therefore not to be recommended, but has sometimes been practised in the insertion of titles, where the titles for an entire picture had a frame-line differing from that of the scenes by the amount here mentioned.

National Anti-Misframe League
Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Lihou of Erker Optical Co. Visits New York

A RECENT visitor to the office of the NEWS was Harry G. Lihou, who has charge of the motion picture apparatus and supply department of the Erker Brothers Optical Company, St. Louis, Mo., distributors for the Simplex projector in eastern Missouri and southern Arkansas.

Mr. Lihou was a member of the delegation from St. Louis who attended the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held in Boston, July 13 to 20, and was one of the most energetic workers in behalf of the plan to have St. Louis named as the convention city of the league next year. St. Louis exhibitors are indebted to Mr. Lihou's efforts to obtain this honor for their city more than they possibly realize.

For the last eight years Mr. Lihou has been associated with the Erker Brothers Optical Company, and for some time has managed the supply department. This end of the business represents a constant and consistent growth from small beginnings, until now there are fourteen men employed in his department.

Mr. Lihou makes a practice of keeping in personal touch with the exhibitors in his territory, either through flying trips made by himself at short intervals or by the visits of four men in the office whose journeys are timed to meet the requirements of special occasions.

A revised catalog containing one hundred and forty-four pages, the largest issued by the company, will be ready for distribution to exhibitors in about three weeks. Mr. Lihou explains that a much larger edition was made necessary by the increased volume of business. This increase is thirty-three and one-third per cent over the business done last year.

An advertising slide department, which is under the direct supervision of Mr. Lihou, requires the services of nine people, including a photographer, printer, artist and card writer. One of its conveniences is an improved device for making up special slides.

Camera Laboratory — Picture Making — Studio Technique

THE precise study of the characteristics of light—sensitive photographic materials may be said to date from the publication of Messrs. Hurter and Driffield's "Photochemical Investigations" (J'l. Soc. Chem. Ind., 1890), and all well-informed photographers are aware of the manner in which the H. & D. Procedure has since been elaborated upon and standardized by Drs. Mees and Sheppard of the Kodak Research Laboratory.[13] Naturally, therefore, the Research Laboratory is a leader in the field of photographic sensitometry, and we have next to secure a glimpse of the department where an accurate record may be secured of the properties of various types of photographic emulsions.

In precise sensitometry the plate or film to be tested (for speed, latitude, contrast, etc.) must receive a series of exposures of known value increasing by a known ratio, and these exposures must, moreover, be made to a rigorously constant light source of known spectral quality. After such a test plate (or strip, as it is called) has been developed for a known time and at a known temperature, the series of densities must be accurately measured, and from the density measurements the emulsion characteristics may then be computed and plotted by the well-known H. & D. methods. The precise development of sensitometric test-strips is accomplished in thermostats, with which the chemical divisions of the Research Laboratory are abundantly provided, as was previously set forth, so we proceed to describe the means by which accurately timed exposures to a constant light source are secured in the sensitometric work of the institution.

In a specially darkened room on the second floor of the Laboratory is a large bench photometer equipped with the most accurate type of seasoned, standard lamps. These standard lamps have been checked against the international standards for unit light sources, and their accuracy of performance is assured by the use of precision potentiometers to control the current and voltage of the photometer circuit.

Incandescent lamps are, however, not used as the exposing light in the sensitometric work of the Laboratory, on account of the complicated apparatus necessary to maintain the voltage perfectly constant, but instead the exposing light is a standardized acetylene flame which was popularized for this class of work by Dr. Mees (loc. cit.), and which has been developed into a highly satisfactory constant light source by the Kodak Research Laboratory. This "New Standard Light Source"[14] consists of a long cylindrical flame derived from acetylene, which latter is supplied at constant pressure through the use of a water manometer. The spectral quality of the acetylene flame, i. e., its energy distribution, is very accurately known, and it has also been established that the intensity of the acetylene flame produced by these burners in use at the Laboratory is very uniform in intensity over several millimeters of its length. To protect the flame against fluctuations due to draughts it is encircled by a metal tube, or chimney, in one side of which is a rectangular slit or window. This window, through which the exposing light issues, is inset so as to be in close proximity to the flame, and is adjustable vertically, so that the aperture may be brought opposite the most uniform and constant part of the flame. These standardized acetylene burners are a product of the laboratory, and have also been used by outside investigators of spectral sensibility and sensitometric problems.

Adjoining the photometric room, where the standard light sources are checked and calibrated, is the sensitometer room, where the multitude of H. & D. test-strips called for by the various investigations of the Laboratory are made.

In the practice of sensitometry it is usual, following Hurter and Driffield, to make the required series of exposures (increasing in powers of 2) to the standard light source by interposing a revolving sector-wheel between the light source and the plate, this sector-wheel having a series of openings increasing in angular extent by the factor 2. Much good quantitative work has been done in the past two decades using such an exposing device, but it has long been known that the values of the exposures through the smallest openings of the sector disc were not absolutely accurate, for while rapidly succeeding light impulses combine by simple addition on the retina of the eye (Talbot's law) this is not true of photographic emulsions in the case of the comparatively low intensities transmitted to the plate through the smallest apertures of an H. & D. sector-disc. This intermittency error, as it is termed, may be very large under some conditions, and to eliminate it from their investigative results the Research Laboratory has devised a non-intermittent sensitometer of altogether different type from the familiar sector-wheel. While we cannot here dwell at length upon this non-intermittent sensitometer it will be apparent at once that the use of such a device is economical of time, as well as productive of greater accuracy in the results, for it will be recalled that when exposing plates behind a sector-wheel twice the required exposure time is consumed in securing the record, since the largest opening in the H. & D. disc has an angular value of only 180°. With the non-intermittent sensitometer a test exposure of 40 c.m.s., for instance, requires only 40 seconds for its production, instead of the 80 seconds called for by the conventional method. A number of sector-disc exposing devices, however, are included in the Laboratory's sensitometric equipment.

The densities of the developed sensitometric test-strips used in the numerous investigations undertaken are measured in a special dark room where photometers for this class of work are maintained. While Hurter and Driffield used a modified Bunsen grease-spot photometer (graduated to read densities direct) for recording the densities of their test-plates, Mees and Sheppard (loc. cit.) popularized the use of the spectro-photometer in precise work, and it is with absorption photometers that these measurements are made at the Kodak Research Laboratory. A variety of such instruments are to be found in the department provided for spectro-photometric work, such for instance, as the Hüfner, the König-Martens and the Brace instruments, in all of which the comparison spectrum is equated to that of the absorption spectrum by the use of polarizing prisms. The first mentioned instrument is preferred for photographic density measurements, while the others are used in studying plate characteristics and in experiments on the visibility function of the eye.

The photographic densities recorded from the spectro-photometric measurements are based on diffuse transmissions, which are secured by placing a piece of ground pot opal glass in contact with the test-strip being measured.

In addition to work on the sensitometry of photographic plates and films the Kodak Research Laboratory have also carried out important researches on "The Sensitometry of Photographic Papers,"[15] which have resulted in valuable information as to the conditions for selecting the most suitable printing medium for a negative of given characteristics. In the sensitometry of photographic papers test-strips (bearing series of increasing exposures) are made on photographic paper in the usual (H. and D.) manner, but it is obvious that the densities of the blackened areas on the developed test-strips cannot be obtained by the measurement of their transmissions, as in the case of plates and films, but in the case of photographic papers it is the reflections of the various deposits which must be measured. This is accomplished by allowing a beam of light to fall upon the deposit to be measured at an angle, and by measuring the intensity of the reflected beam at the corresponding angle of reflection (or perpendicular to the paper, according to the type of photometer used), the resultant measurements, or reflection densities, being represented by $D = log \frac{1}{R}$, where R is the reflecting power of the deposit, which is exactly analogous to the expression $D = log \frac{1}{T}$, for the transmission densities, where T is the diffuse transmission. These reflection densities, measured under specified conditions of the angles of illumination and observation of the paper test strips are plotted against log E in the usual H. & D. manner, the result being curves showing the characteristics of the printing paper emulsions.

As the velocity of development is high in the case of photographic papers, the gamma, or contrast, practically always reaches the maximum attainable with the paper being used, which corresponds to the gamma infinity (or maximum contrast) finally obtained with a photographic plate if the development is carried far enough. The total scale of a photographic paper, which also has some influence on the contrast in the resultant prints, is represented by the distance, measured along the exposure-axis, between the points on the characteristic curve where the slope $\frac{d\,D}{d\,log\,E}$ has a value of .2, at which figure it is found that a difference in exposure of about 25 per cent is necessary to produce a perceptible difference in the density of the resultant deposit. The latitude of the paper is represented, as in plate sensitometry, by the length of the straight-line portion of the characteristic curve measured along the exposure axis, while the "rendering power" of a photographic paper is represented by the relationship of the latitude to the total scale, for which ratio the Laboratory has adopted the numerical value $\frac{\text{Latitude} \times 10}{\text{Total Scale}}$.

Methods of computing the correct exposure for photographic papers (of the developing out class) have also been laid down, the standard exposure (in c.m.s.) being that required to just print through a density of 2. Experiments on the effect of development upon the characteristic curve of photographic papers showed in the case of most developing-out papers, and in the case of bromide papers, a regression of the inertia (shifting of the characteristic curve to the left along the exposure axis), combined with the previously mentioned rapid increase in gamma.

It is of considerable importance to the worker who employs photography as the means of recording scientific data, to know the ability of the emulsions which he uses to record fine detail, and their ability to represent as distinctly separated from each other extremely fine details of the object photographed which are in close proximity to one another. As in the case of optical observing instruments, the ability of a photographic emulsion to show small and intimately close details of the object as distinctly separated in the image is known as resolving power, and at the Research Laboratory the subject of photographic resolving power has been thoroughly investigated.[16] Dr. Mees used to investigate photographic resolving power by photographing reduced images of periodically spaced gratings with a highly corrected telescope objective, and he also devised a fan-shaped test object of black angular segments very close together at the vertex but increasing in separation towards the periphery, which was photographed down to a size of 1 m.m. and the resolution at various zones estimated by examination with a micrometer microscope. This last method is of considerable utility in practical work, but the best procedure for extreme accuracy is the method proposed by Dr. P. G. Nutting, in which an extremely accurate metal straight-edge is laid on the plate (the edge being in intimate contact with the emulsion) and an exposure made to parallel light. After development the spreading of the light action inside the geometrical boundary of the straight-edge is studied, and the resolving power of the various classes of photographic emulsions may be very exactly determined in this way. The intimate details and results of the Laboratory's various investigations on photographic resolution cannot be given here, but an account of the modern work upon this subject will be found in the Camera Department of Motion Picture News, issues of September 22, September 29 and October 6, 1917.

In astronomical photography the resolution of close double stars may be affected by the manner in which the stellar exposures are developed, as has been pointed out by the Research Laboratory after a series of experiments.[17] While the images of some double stars are so small, or the two components are so close together, that they cannot be resolved by a photographic plate, the Laboratory finds that in some cases the emulsion has been blamed for failure to resolve such stars photographically, whereas good resolution could have been attained if the stellar plates had been suitably developed. With a fine grained plate it has been shown that double stars of only 0".15 separation can be resolved (if the telescope objective can also accomplish this) provided a clean working contrast developer is used in developing the records. A suitable formula for a Caustic-Hydroquinone developer has been published by the Laboratory (loc. cit.), and is recommended for this class of work.

Before concluding our interesting trip through the Kodak Research Laboratory, we inspect the light-filter department, where the justly celebrated Wratten light-filters are prepared. As is generally known, the Wratten filters are supplied in about 100 different varieties,[18] which embrace all of the usual requirements of the commercial and the color photographer, the physicist, the astronomer, the photometrist, the spectroscopist and the photomicrographer, and the worker who possesses the Wratten Light Filter booklet finds that he has very seldom to go to the trouble of preparing special filters, because the filters in the Wratten series, when used singly or in combinations, are capable of supplying light of most any desired spectral increment or region. These light filters are, in general, in the form of sheets of gelatine of given color, or the same may be secured mounted between accurately surfaced pieces of glass.

The basis of high grade filter manufacture is the collection of the large number of dyestuffs suitable for the purpose, and the exact determination of their spectral transmissions when in solution at various concentrations. The Kodak Research Laboratory possesses a notable collection of dyestuffs for filter manufacture, which would excite the envy of any experimenter on color photography, and these dyes have all been arranged in a cabinet in bottles labelled with complete information concerning the properties and use of each dye. The absorptions of these dyes have all been recorded spectro-photometrically throughout the visible region of the spectrum, and a book has been compiled showing the absorption curves of the many organic dyestuffs useful in filter making. These absorption curves of the various dyes will probably be published in book form in due course, and such an atlas would prove very valuable, as well as forming a suitable companion to the light-filter booklet.

To maintain the manufactured filters always identical, as regards their spectral transmissions with previous ones of like type, they are rigidly compared with standard filters kept on hand at the laboratory, but the duplication of the various filters is rendered certain without undue trouble by prescribing the amount and concentration of the requisite dyes which must be incorporated into a given amount of gelatine in order to secure the correct transmission for any given filter. This is analogous to the measurement of negative densities in sensitometry, where the density, D, represents the amount of silver per unit area in the photographic deposit measured. The spectrophotometric measurement of the absorption of a light filter at any wave length, or the extinction-coefficient as it is termed, is by similar reasoning a measure of the quantity of dye per unit area of the filter, so that by these measurements the correct preparation of the various filters may be rigorously checked up.

Not only must the spectral characteristics of the various light-filters be carefully ascertained, but their optical quality must also receive consideration, for in many classes of work they are associated with a camera objective, or other optical system, upon whose performance they will exert an undesirable influence if they are not themselves optically perfect within certain limits. All light filters produced at the Research Laboratory are optically tested in various ways, which are thoroughly dealt with by Dr. Mees in his paper on "The Optical Properties of Light Filters."[19] The filters mounted in ordinary glass, for instance, are placed in front of an objective which is focussed upon a test-pattern of opaque lines crossing at right angles, and the resultant image is examined under suitable magnification. If the pattern is fairly well reproduced the filter is serviceable, since the smallness of the test-image represents a more severe test than is ever met with in practical work, but occasionally, due to cylindricity of the filter surfaces, or some other defect of like nature, a filter will introduce so much astigmatism that the vertical lines of the test object will be focussed at an appreciable different distance from that at which the horizontal lines are sharply delineated, in which event the filter must be rejected as giving an unsuitable performance.

Much better results are expected of filters mounted in optical flats (perfectly plane parallel slabs of glass), and filters of this higher quality are, of course, subjected to a much more exacting test. These filters are tested by placing them before a telescope objective of about 50" E. F. and photographing a fan-shaped test object similar to that previously described as being used in the estimation of photographic resolving power. The minute image formed of the test-object is then examined under suitable magnification, and must show a specified degree of resolution to indicate the perfection of the filter.

In the case of tricolor filter sets, the images produced through each of the filters must be of the same size, for a given camera extension, in order that the resultant color pictures will appear in exact register, and every set of tricolor filters is selected to fulfill this condition with the aid of a specially designed instrument installed in the Research Laboratory. In this instrument an objective of about 10" E. F. forms two images, separated by a distance of 8", of two sharply defined sets of lines (cross-hairs). The exact distance between the two sets of lines may be very accurately measured by means of two microscopes mounted on carriages actuated by micrometer screws. When, therefore, a filter is placed before the objective of this instrument, and the distance between the two groups of lines (as imaged with the filter in place) is measured, the comparison of this reading with the distance calculated by theory for the case in hand gives the amount of alteration in the size of the image which would be introduced by the use of that filter.

Upon leaving the light-filter department we find that our survey of the Kodak Research Laboratory is now complete, and that it only remains to congratulate Dr. Mees on the splendid equipment and organization, and to thank him for his patience and courtesy in explaining the details, while hoping that on some future occasion we may again be able to traverse the same ground.

The present article cannot, of course, detail all of the important work which has been carried out at the laboratory since 1913, and we have been obliged to completely forego the mention of numerous researches which are equal in importance and interest to the ones reviewed in these pages. We must, however, make mention of an elaborate paper recently published by the Research Laboratory on "The Spectral Selectivity of Photographic Deposits,"[20] which correlates the experimental work of the institution along several lines, and opens up a wide range of new thought for the student of photography. The article is too lengthy to be adequately reviewed here, but its theme may be briefly stated as follows:

All photographers are aware that negative images frequently, or generally, possess a certain amount of color, and it is likewise known that negatives having deposits of various colors will give prints, or positives, of differing degrees of contrast, even though the negatives may appear to be of identical quality when examined visually. The relation of the color of the negative image deposit to the quality of the resultant print depends upon a number of factors, most of which have probably never been considered by the average practical photographer. For instance, a negative is viewed by transmitted light of some arbitrary quality, while the light which passes through the image deposits of the negative will again be of still another color (due to selective absorption) if the image deposit is in any degree colored, and, further, the maximum spectral sensitiveness of the material (film or paper) upon which this negative is to be printed is, in most cases, widely different from the color of the light transmitted through the negative deposits, and the plate maximum also differs greatly from the visibility function of the eye, by which the negative deposits have been examined or measured photometrically. Sensitometric data recorded visually, in the usual way, is therefore not sufficient for thoroughy investigating the capabilities of the printing processes, so the charactertistics of the negatives to be printed from have also to be determined and expressed in terms of the visibility function of the plate, if one may use the phrase, and after complete information of this sort has been obtained, in addition to the customary sensitometric data recorded visually, the problems concerning the relationship between the quality of the negative and that of the resultant print may be discussed. The paper cited, which is a very elaborate one, serves to introduce these new considerations and to lay down the notation and terminology which will be employed in future articles on this subject.

These new conceptions have already been utilized in a succeeding article on "The Sensitometry of Photographic Intensification,"[21] where the effects of the various intensifying methods (many of which yield colored negative deposits) upon the contrast and gradation of the resultant prints is thoroughly discussed in an interesting manner, which should prove instructive to photographers in general.

A host of important chemical experiments of immediate use in photographic practice are constantly being successfully carried through at the Kodak Research Laboratory, and we shall shortly present in these pages a recent communication on "A New Method of Obtaining Dye Tone Images by the Use of Copper Ferrocyanide as a Mordant," which will be followed, in due course, by other articles of importance to the cinematographer and the motion picture producer.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

Better Music—Better Business—Better Salaries

WE recently received a communication from one of our readers, a very active musical director of Jacksonville, Fla. In the course of his very interesting letter he expressed himself, in part, as follows:

Upon accepting the position of which I speak, I found the manager using the usual trashy and sensational films. The musical accompaniment was furnished by a four-piece amateur orchestra, of which the drummer, as the most advanced, had been appointed leader. The violinist of this so-called orchestra was looked upon as a prodigy chiefly on account of his youthfulness. His repertoire consisted of Schumann's "Traumerei," Lange's "Flower Song," and unfortunate attempts of Raff's "Cavatina." This extensive repertoire seemed to make him entirely unfit for the lighter services necessary in an orchestra.

The cornet player could truly raise the wind in any dance number, and his playing of marches and galops, etc., was accomplished in genuine circus style. His claims for being a professional were based upon the experiences of one season with some mysterious tent show touring the kerosene circuit with "Jesse James" or "Uncle Tom."

The pianist was a long-haired, short-legged ivory pounder with a diploma from Blank's Correspondence School of New York, London, Paris, Moscow, etc.

Before the performance this aggregation of musical talent would start with the piano pounding out G-D-A-E until the violin player was certain that he would be in perfect tune. The cornet player, after removing each valve and examining his instrument as though ready to take it apart, would usually succeed in doing everything else but playing in time and tune when the actual playing commenced.

As has always been the case, the piano had been cheaply tuned, and, to my great surprise, the manager on this occasion agreed with me that as soon as possible he would procure the best obtainable tuner in that vicinity. After this had really been done, it was found that the musicians were of too finished a product to listen to advice, nor were they willing to try and improve in any way. I finally succeeded in having them discharged, and with a real drummer and myself alone we began our crusade for better things all round. It was difficult, uphill work, discouraging and nerve-racking at times, but we had the grit, ability, library and love for our work, which proved a combination that can't be beat.

By easy stages, on and up, we led them to the appreciation of better things, until neither the audience knew exactly when or how it happened. Suddenly the ice seemed to be broken, and our appearance was the signal for good hearty applause. Shortly after this we received a substantial raise in salary, and my manager informed me that he was on the lookout for a violinist and cornet player who could assist us in our good work. After a time we were joined by two good players, and our education of the public's taste for better music from then on was rapid and given in larger doses. Within seven months from the start we had as good an orchestra of eight pieces as could be found anywhere south of the Mason and Dixon line.

We received liberal salaries, good treatment, and had more extra engagements than we could attend to. Our work in general was so well spoken of that our manager remarked at one time that he would have to bring his pictures up to our standard. He actually plucked up enough nerve to dig down deep into his strong box and book all the best and biggest features on the market. He changed his prices from five and ten cents to ten and fifteen cents, and twice a week he would pack the house with some features at thirty-five and fifty cents. He is a believer now, and no one need show him after this.

Better music led to better salaries, better patronage, better pictures in this particular case, and there is no telling, but that in time it will be the means of better and more modern structures for the exhibition of attractions.

We have had opposition to meet from more modern houses, where all tricks known to the trade and some new ones were tried, but the field is all our own now, and our place is secured in every way. Every fair-minded, honest manager could do the same. Get the best musicians available, know your men before signing contracts. To achieve results, the manager should not change conditions and interfere every time the wind veers. If he has a good leader who knows his business, he should have confidence in him and trust him to do his work to the very best advantage.

Interesting Musical Setting

WE have just received a Music Cue for "To Hell with the Kaiser," as played in the Strand theatre, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, which proves to be very cleverly selected and consisting of music of the best quality.

Mr. Alger, the musical director, has selected this program, and we earnestly suggest that musical directors and theatre managers take an example from Mr. Dundas, the manager, and Mr. Alger, the musical director, and learn how pictures should be properly exhibited.

Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, Opens

THE new Liberty theatre, Kansas City, Mo., one of the most beautiful playhouses in the West, was auspiciously opened to the motion picture public recently with many city officials and scores of representative citizens as invited guests.

In many respects the Liberty is a noteworthy achievement in theatre building. Erected exclusively for motion pictures, everything in it is adapted to them—the seating arrangement, the peculiar system of aisle lighting that makes all parts of the theatre accessible, the spacious lobby and the large foyer beyond. The Liberty seats 1,200, room for more than two hundred others, chairs having been sacrificed to gain space in aisles and between rows.

Samuel Harding, manager of the new Liberty, advertised the opening of his house on a lavish scale. His enterprise was reflected in a splendid page advertisement in the Kansas City Star. Aside from a picture of the manager and a four-column reproduction of the pretty playhouse, the page was devoted to the attractions that are to be shown.

The house is suited to display the finest pictures, the article stated. The Liberty is a proper setting for the art of Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Tom Moore and every other famous star of the silent drama. Goldwyn pictures, the story continued, will be prominent among the coming attractions at the new Liberty.

Manager Harding has arranged to present all Goldwyn pictures for a full week at the Liberty. The Goldwyn-Rex Beach productions will also have week engagements.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Fox Studio Doings

The William J. Hurlbut play, "The Strange Woman," is now in production at the Fox studios, with Gladys Brockwell taking the featured role. William Scott appears as the leading man; Ruby Lafayette, well-known character woman; Raymond Nye and Charles Clary are other important ones of the cast, which is being directed by Edward J. LeSaint. The photoplay version was prepared by J. Grubb Alexander.

Director Frank Lloyd, William Farnum and company have completed the filming of "The Rainbow Trail," and the star is now on a vacation attempting to catch the fish of Catalina Island bay. Ann Forest, until now known as Ann Kroman, plays the leading role opposite Farnum in this subject.

Lynn F. Reynolds is putting in a portion of his time in editing "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," just filmed with Tom Mix, and in writing continuity for the next subject, which will be an adaptation from the book titled "The Two-Gun Man," which will be given another title.

Albert Roscoe is playing the leading role opposite Theda Bara in the play by Neje Hopkins, now titled "The She Devil," and this will be finished within the next few days.

The Fox Company has built a large Spanish set at Brown's ranch, which will be used for many exteriors of "The She Devil," starring Theda Bara, now being made, and at this, scenes requiring more than a thousand people will be made some time during the coming week.

About Metro Players

Joseph Engle, treasurer and general manager of the Metro Company, left for the East last week, where he will spend several weeks with the other officers of the Metro Film Corporation making plans for the future of this organization. Mr. Engle was given a farewell dinner by members of the producing staff.

The resignation of E. Mason Hopper, director of Bert Lytell, has caused the engagement of Charles Swickard, who has just completed "The Light of Western Stars," starring Dustin Farnum. The definite title for the next Lytell pictures had not been settled on, but it is known the photoplay will be from an original story of adventure laid on the Mexican border. The cast is now being assembled.

Wilfred Lucas is now well into the production of the Metro subject starring May Allison, which is titled "The Testing of Mildred Vaine." As stated in Motion Picture News last week, Darrell Foss will be the leading man in this production. Others selected for leading parts are Nigel de Brullier; George Fields, heavy; and Fred Goodwins, an English character role.

Monday evening company meetings have been inaugurated at the Metro Studios by Manager of Production George D. Baker, and plan to be very helpful to the organization. All members of the studio staff are invited to attend these from eight to ten Monday evenings of each week. In a sense the meetings are of the social nature, and a portion of the time devoted to discussion of general improvements of the studio for the elimination of waste and the increasing of efficiency. This is one time that the most unimportant employee is placed on a plane with the most important person of the studio, and everyone is given his say.

Universal Newsettes

Another department was added to, or rather reopened, by the producing staff at Universal City, which will be in charge of selecting the players for each subject. Such a department was maintained last year at this producing plant, but since the closing down in February, the work of this nature, as well as the engagement of all extra people, has been done by the employment department in charge of Fred Datig. Arthur Hoyt, who has just completed an engagement with the Universal, playing an important part in "The Yellow Dog," has been named as head of the casting department. He was formerly in charge of a similar department at the Triangle studios. Mr. Datig continues as employment director.

Universal has a number of new players. Eileen Sedgwick, who formerly appeared in two and three reel subjects, and for the past year has been with the Triangle, returns to Universal to take the featured role opposite Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus" serial, being directed by J. P. McGowan. She succeeded Molly Malone, who was forced to give up her work owing to an attack of appendicitis.

Frank Elliot, the English actor who recently returned from Australia, where he toured the islands with Cyril Maude, has been engaged to play and will make his first appearance in "The Scarlet Strain," now being produced by Robert Leonard and starring Mae Murray. Royden Keith, who played in "Sporting Life," made at an eastern studio, has been named as leading man for Miss Murray, and will make his debut with her in this subject.

Anna Q. Nilsson, who has been featured leading woman of several Metro subjects made at both the eastern and western studios, is another new player for the Universal. She is to appear in support of Mary MacLaren, who is starred in an adaptation from the magazine story, "The Vanity Pool." This subject will have an exceptionally strong cast; those appearing besides Miss MacLaren and Miss Nilsson are Franklyn Farnum, as leading man; Marin Sais, Virginia Chester, Thomas Holding, and Willis Marks. Ida May Park is to direct Miss MacLaren in this subject.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

For speed, Fred Stone, directed by Donald Crisp, has set a new record for Famous Players-Lasky Companies. He began work on his first subject on June 10, and on July 20 had completed the first two subjects. The most recent one is from the stage play "Johnnie Get Your Gun." The company is now working on an original photoplay written by Frances Marion, scenario writer for Mary Pickford.

Cecil B. de Mille's Artcraft, which has just been completed so far as the making of scenes is concerned, has been titled "Then I'll Come Back to You." The principals in this subject are Bryant Washburn, Florence Vidor and E. Butler Clonebaugh.

Director George Melford is at work on the second Lila Lee Paramount subject in which Harrison Ford is to continue as leading man, and the company is working at Catalina Islands this week.

Robert Vignolia is to continue as director of Ethel Clayton, as is also Eliott Dexter, who played with her in "The Girl Who Came Back." This company is now working on an untitled original photoplay.

Walter Edwards is to direct Bryant Washburn in his first Paramount release, and William C. de Mille is now at work on a Paramount starring Vivian Martin.

Live Triangle Items

With the directorial staff increased to ten directors, all of which are now working, the Triangle studios at Culver City present the busiest appearance of any Los Angeles producing plant. The week has seen considerable additional activities put on here, inasmuch as three new directors began work.

E. Mason Hopper, who this week returned to the Triangle, has taken up the filming of "The Spirit of Adventure," a Japanese story of which he is co-author, and in which Jack Abe, a Japanese actor, will take a featured part.

A story of the ranch country, by Louise H. Kilpatrick, will serve as the first story for the production for Jack Conway, who also returned this week. This is titled "Mountain Law," and many of the scenes are laid in the ranch country.

Taylor Holmes and his director, Lawrence Windom, arrived in Los Angeles Monday, and already the light comedian is at work on the first of a series of specially written stories for him, prepared under the supervision of Dr. Daniel Goodman. This is titled "His Father's Safety Razor," and is from a story furnished by Jean Haves, the vaudeville sketch author.

Another new subject begun is titled "The Secret Code," and is being filmed by Director Albert Parker, who has Gloria Swanson as his featured player. This is spoken of as a psychological story of the means adopted by a semi-forsaken wife which has an element of mystery. The story is by Adela Rogers St. John.

The fifth new subject put in production this week will be titled "An Atom." This is to be directed by William C. Dowlan, and will have the same star as the subject he has just filmed, "Daughter Angele," in which Pauline Starke was featured. This story is by Cathrine Carr.

Paramount-Artcraft

The employment of men who have served in the trenches on the western front was inaugurated by Thomas H. Ince to insure correct atmosphere and action for the battle scenes being filmed by R. William Neill for the Dorothy Dalton subject, originally titled "The Cross of Shame," but which will be released under the name of "Vive La France." A section of the country in the vicinity of Alhambra has been leased for the making of battle stuff, and here night battle scenes were made in which 200 lamps were necessary for illuminating the big field. Tom Canhan, who was gassed and suffered from shrapnel, which caused his honorable discharge from the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in which he served in the Twentieth Battalion, is supervising the trench warfare, being staged on the hills of Inceville, where the battle scenes for "Civilization" were filmed. Three airplanes are to be used for the making of aerial warfare scenes. George Barnes is said to have accomplished some wonderful effects by riding in one plane taking scenes of a fight between two others. The ground below was kept in focus at all times, Barnes having changed the focus of the camera during the tip of a machine. Scenes were secured in which an airplane is seen to take fire from shrapnel, and at times the camera was within sixty feet of the two battling planes. None of the scenes are taken from the ground below the planes. Bert Seibel is assistant director to Neill, and John Stumar is in charge of the camera work.

Seena Owen has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to play opposite Charles Ray in his next film at present untitled. This is one of a western atmosphere similar to that of "Playing the Game," but with an entirely different story. Victor Schertzinger is director of this subject, and has William Curran as his assistant, and Chet Lyons as cameraman. The principals of the cast include John P. Lockney, Charles K. French, Otto Hoffman, Clyde Benson, Lamar Johnson and others.

Here and There

The Louise Glaum Paralta Pictures Company this week completed the filming of "A Law Unto Herself," which was made by Director Wallace Worsley. Sam de-Grasse is leading man opposite Miss Glaum in this story. This is the first story written by Francis Paget, who promises to be a successful contributor of screen stories. He is a man about sixty years of age, who has been a miner, cowboy, and soldier of fortune. He served in South Africa during the Boer War, went to South America with Roosevelt, and has had a very wide experience in the big field of adventure. About four years ago he began the study of motion pictures and daily witnessed three or more pictures. A year ago he came to Los Angeles, and since here has studied production, with the result that a few months ago he wrote his first story.

Under the direction of Howard Hickman, the Bessie Barriscale Company is progressing very satisfactorily with the production "The Heart of Rachael," an adaptation from the novel of the same name.

W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Diando, and Jack Halloway, who has been publicity writer and is now serving as comedy director for the company, will shortly enlist in the Marines, and are now finishing up their work with the Diando Company so they may leave early in August. This will increase the number of stars on the Diando service flag to nine. Hugh R. Woods, an English subject, serving as scenic artist at the studio, and Norman Manning, a Canadian, formerly studio business manager, left this week with the British subjects for Canada. Wood will serve in the camouflage division, and Manning enlisted and was accepted for the Royal Flying Corps.

The intentions of the Golden West Photoplay Company producing at the Ninth street studio at Glendale, Cal., have been outlined by G. M. Anderson, star and president of the company. His statement is to the effect that eight five-reel features will be made annually by this company in which Anderson is star. Jesse J. Robbins, who directed many of the Broncho Billy pictures, is in charge of production, and they promise the film world some "real western classics." Two subjects now completed are "Son-of-a-Gun" and "Red Blood and Yellow."

M. Raimierez-Torres, head of the Pathe Scenario department, arrived on the Coast during the past week to spend two months or more with the producing companies filming releases for Pathe. While here he will personally supervise the preparation of scripts for the several units.

Frank Keenan has begun work at the Brunton studios in a film play adapted from the Edward H. Peple stage play "The Rainbow Trail," which will be released under another title. Continuity for this was written by Jack Cunningham.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Gloria Swanson, In Triangle's "Station Content"

Dorothy Dalton's return to the Coast with five extra-size trunks full of clothes proves what every woman knows about New York. Miss Dalton is another "pictures first" person, as three of the five trunks were sent to the Ince studios, the other two to her home.

Kathleen Clifford's favorite scene in "Angel Child," her new Plaza picture, is the one in which she frolics with the garden hose to the discomfort of her family and friends. As Miss Clifford isn't quite five feet tall and doesn't weigh quite one hundred pounds, the appropriateness of the title as well as the scene is evident.

Lady Tsen Mei, Betzwood star of "When East Meets West," has insured her hands, arms and back for $10,000. According to reports the reason why will be shown when she is seen in evening clothes in the Washington scenes in her first picture. In fact, it is hinted that Kitty Gordon will have to look to her laurels.

One of the reasons for Betty Blythe's swift rise in pictures is her receptiveness and her eagerness to learn new things. She is not willing to sit back with hands folded mentally on the strength of a good early education, but is continually exploring new theories, new ideas, each one of which is going to help her at some future time in the portrayal of a role which she might not otherwise understand. The actual amount of reading and study which she does is almost astounding when one realizes that she is appearing opposite Harry Morey in a quick succession of Vitagraph successes.

Alice Terry, whose most recent appearance is in "Love Watches," was formerly one of the Washington Square Players. The success which she scored in "Plots and Playwrights" was one of the reasons why she was signed by President Smith of Vitagraph.

Colin Kenney possessing the two necessary requisites for Lord Varden, in Bert Lytell's new picture, "Unexpected Places," was cast for that part. Aforementioned requisites were, first, a decidedly English appearance as much like Lytell as possible in height, size and carriage, and secondly, a wardrobe of real English tailored clothes. Mr. Kenney was seen as the anarchist brother in "The Price of a Good Time."

Scenes for "Kildare of the Storm," an Emily Stevens picture, are being taken on the Boston Post Road estate of Major Parsons, who is now in France, but who before sailing extended the hospitality of house and grounds to the Metro companies.

Hale Hamilton, who has so recently been made a Metro star, was presented with a pearl scarf pin by King George of England when he appeared at Windsor Castle by Royal command in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford."

For a juvenile lead in "The Dream Lady," opposite Carmel Myers, Philo McCullough has had a pretty strenuous training. He has been in his six years of motion picture work a scenic man, an assistant director, an assistant cameraman, an animal trainer, a high diver and nn actor..

Mlle. Marcelle, the lovely little French girl who played her part so well in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," has been cast for "The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's war picture play. Mlle. Marcelle is the wife of Lieut. Earl Carroll, the composer, who is now an aviator in Government service. Two of Mlle. Marcelle's brothers have been killed in action fighting for France.

It is reported that Eugene O'Brien will return to the speaking stage in a Dillingham production this fall. First he will finish the next three pictures scheduled for Norma Talmadge. Ed Roseman, whose name on a program always means a good screen fight, put Victor Sutherland out of commission literally as well as figuratively in the last Virginia Pearson picture, "The Liar." Mr. Roseman was responsible for some of the best fights in "The Blue Streak," "The Sign Invisible," and "Rough and Ready."

It is rumored that Rita Jolivet will personally superintend the exhibition of the picture, "Lest We Forget," in Europe. As the picture is built around Miss Jolivet's actual experience on the Lusitania, this seems an excellent plan.

Pauline Frederick and Willard Mack, now collaborating in studio life as well as in real life, have called their newly acquired country home near Noroton, Conn, "Pollymack Farm." It looks like a fifty-fifty arrangement all the way through.

Though Mabel Normand's costumes in "Back to the Woods" look extremely simple and inexpensive, in reality they are the products of the most exclusive of Fifth Avenue shops. He saucy little tam-o'-shanter, her sweater, her snugly shod little shoes have all breathed the rarified atmosphere of the specialty shop, and rightfully, for as Stephanie Trent Miss Normand is the daughter of a multimillionaire who seeks peace and quiet as the teacher of a country school.

Mr. and Mrs. Niles Welch have had a busy time this last week saying adios to their many friends before leaving for the West Coast, where Mr. Welch will begin work almost immediately for Famous Players.

Paul Everton is supporting Violet Palmer in "Snippy," but expects to open with Josephine Victor in "The Accomplice" late in August under Cort's management.

Albert Parker, who directed "Waifs," the most recent Gladys Hulette-Creighton Hale Pathe release, is now back on the West Coast, but this time directing for Triangle. Mr. Parker was originally connected with the Douglas Fairbanks company, having appeared in several pictures with Mr. Fairbanks. He ascribes his first success in directing to the inspiration received from Allan Dwan.

Some one has ascribed the popularity of Agnes Ayres, the real O. Henry girl, to the fact that she is so restful to watch on the screen. She doesn't jump around or grimace, but moves quietly and gracefully. She dresses simply and well, but best of all never spoils the pure cameo-like beauty of her face by needless contortions.

If ever a word was defined by an action, then the word quizzical is defined by Tom Moore's smile. Many have tried to get the same effect, half humorous, half serious, questioning, yet knowing the answer, but Tom Moore is the only one who perhaps through luck is able to get away with it. Watch him in "Just for Tonight," and you will see how true this is.

Sylvia Breamer has been lured to the East Coast to appear in J. Stuart Blackton's propaganda picture, "The Common Cause." Miss Breamer was one of the three beautiful heroines in "We Can't Have Everything," which rather belied its name by exceeding the recognized quota of feminine beauty in any one picture.

Mae Marsh says that she envies from the depths of her soul all girls who can give every minute of their time to war work. So exacting is her studio life that she has no time for even occasional Red Cross work. Sometimes she forgets how much she is really doing indirectly the war and quite openly rebels at her lot.

Tom Moore and Billy Parsons promptly upon meeting each other for the first time at the Goldwyn Studio the other day made an engagement to spend the following Sunday on the golf links. Both had heard of the other's skill and were anxious to try it out. The result has not yet been announced.

There is nothing negative about Virginia Pearson, Wm. Fox star. Her home, her clothes, her manner of speaking, even her handwriting, express "personality plus." In her apartment on Riverside Drive Oriental rugs, beautifully carved furniture, luxurious hangings, old masterpieces on the walls, all furnish a perfect background for the star's own glowing self.

Six hundred and sixty-five feet of film were run off at one time for one scene in "L'Occident," Nazimova's new Metro picture. The star was before three cameras for twelve consecutive minutes, which is a record length for one scene.

The engagement of Marguerite Clark to Lieut. H. P. Williams has just been officially announced by Miss Clark's sister. Sounds like regular movie stuff, for he is a wealthy young Southerner whom Miss Clark met last April when she was in New Orleans on the Third Liberty Loan drive.

Alice Brady has been made sponsor for a submarine chaser and has promised to its crew a framed picture of herself and all the cigarettes necessary for a well regulated submarine chasing crew.

Hale Hamilton not only appeared opposite May Allison in "The Winning of Beatrice," but wrote a play for her which she is now screening on the West Coast under the title, "The Return of Mary." Mr. Hamilton is with the New York Metro starring in his own right after these two contributions to Metro's success.

"Triple Trouble" with Our Friend Charlie Chaplin as Janitor and Kitchen Mechanic

(Kleine System Released in Two Reels)

A janitor in the home of Colonel Nutt—some job for our friend Charlie Chaplin, but that is the job he has in Essanay's production of "Triple Trouble," featuring Charlie. The Colonel has invented a wonderful wireless explosive. To recount all the funny stunts that our friend Charlie accomplishes before the camera in this offering would take too much space, but suffice it to say that Charlie will keep you laughing and roaring from the opening flash to the "the end." During the course of his employment as janitor and all-round-man in the kitchen. Charlie runs head-first into a den of spies, who are planning against the Government, and the manner in which the comedian rounds them up, and the humiliating circumstances in which his friend the Count, who is at the head of the gang, is placed, give rise to first, laughs and then roars. Anything that Charlie Chaplin does is funny. His walk, his inimitable smile, his every move gives rise to comedy and laughter. This offering, released on the George Kleine system, and produced when Chaplin was with Essanay, presents Charlie in one of his funniest roles. "Triple Trouble" is not a reissue. It has never been shown to the public. It is entirely new. It will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Catch-Line for Your Program—Our Friend Charlie Chaplin, the inimicable comedian in an inimicable comedy, with Charlie as janitor, kitchen help and "Jack-of-All-Trades." First time shown.

Bushman and Bayne in "A Pair of Cupids" Something New in Comedy-Drama on Screen

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

A comedy-drama that's a "knockout," in brief this is the most fitting characterization, in a few words, which the management of the ———— theatre can give Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne's latest starring vehicle, "A Pair of Cupids." Without a doubt this is one of the best pictures in which these two stars of the screen, have been seen, and it offers a story that is in all respects, a novelty. The situations that develop when Henry Burgess "borrows" Bridget McGrohan's twin babies, so that his nephew (Francis X. Bushman) and his ward (Beverly Bayne) may be brought together, the one to forge. his business, the other her affection for her poodle dog, Frou Frou, are not alone novel, but give rise to some of the best and cleanest comedy that has ever been enacted on the screen. The story was written by Luther A. Reed, and produced for the Metro program under the direction of Charles J. Brabin. In support of Bushman and Bayne are seen, Charles Sutton, Gerald Griffin, Jessie Stevens, Edgar Norton, Lou Gorey, Mrs. Turner, Thomas Blake, Louis R. Wolheim, John Judge and Elwell Judge. Those who doubt Mr. Bushman's ability to enact a light comedy role, are especially requested to visit the ———— theatre ———— of ———— when "A Pair of Cupids" is shown on the screen. It will please old and young alike. It is one of Bushman-Bayne's best work before the camera.

William Desmond and Josie Sedgwick in "Beyond the Shadows"—Canadian Northwest Story

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

William Desmond, with Josie Sedgwick, in the leading feminine role, is the featured player in the late Triangle production, "Beyond the Shadows," written by Ralph R. Westfall, and produced for the Triangle program, under the direction of J. W. McLaughlin. Graham Pette, Ed Brady, Hugh Sutherland, Bert Apling, Ben Lewis, John Wild, John Lince and Alberta Lee are seen in the supporting cast. "Beyond the Shadows" is a tale of the Canadian Northwest. It is full of action from the flash of the title to the last scene, and presents the star in a typical Desmond role. It tells of the unscrupulous fur-traders of the Northwest. Brother is pitted against brother in a struggle for a woman and control of the fur trade in the Canadian settlement. The writer of this story, Ralph Westfall, was a former member of the Northwest Mounted Police, and knows whereof he speaks when he relates one of his inimicable stories of the Northwest. "Beyond the Shadows" has been produced by Director McLaughlin, with a true Canadian atmosphere and with true Canadian types interpreting the character roles. The Du Bois family seek their fortune in the Northwest. There are three brothers, Jean, Leon and Horace. Horace, the elder brother, remains behind to smuggle whiskey and trade with the Indians. Jean becomes a fur-trader. In after years, Horace is sent into the settlement in which Jean has located, and because of unfair treatment which Jean's family has received, Jean and Horace, the brothers, are made enemies. (Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Victorien Sardou's world-famous tragedy, "Fedora," with Pauline Frederick in the leading role, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. "Fedora" is the stage play in which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt made her biggest success. Fanny Davenport will also be remembered for her wonderful characterization in the role of Princess Fedora, the part which Miss Frederick has in the screen version. "Fedora" is considered one of the strongest of the tragedy dramas, and Miss Frederick's work in the title-role can be compared in quality of dramatic presentment to that of any of the great artists such as Fannie Davenport or Sarah Bernhardt. In the supporting cast with Miss Frederick are seen Alfred Hickman, Jere Austin, W. L. Abingdon and Wilmuth Merkyll. Edward Jose, the veteran stage and screen actor-director, is responsible for the excellent production which this work of the greatest of French playwrights has been given for presentation on the screen. The scene of the action is laid in Russia, and tells of a beautiful Russian Princess who swears vengeance on a Russian nobleman, and, to gain her end, follows him to Paris, where she professes to love him. She accomplishes her end, and then ends her life by swallowing poison. Pauline Frederick in the powerful emotional role of Victorien Sardou's "Fedora" at the ———— theatre ———— of ———— week.

Bryant Washburn in "The Ghost of the Rancho"—Comedy-Drama of the Southwest

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

"The Ghost of the Rancho," starring Bryant Washburn, his late work for the Pathe program, was written by Arthur Henry Gooden, adapted for reproduction on the screen by Jack Cunningham and produced under the direction of William Worthington. Mr. Washburn's latest offering is a light comedy with a bit of melodrama scattered here and there, comedy that only Bryant Washburn can instill, and the atmosphere of the great Southwest. What more could be expected from an hour's entertainment on the screen? Mr. Washburn has thoroughly convinced the public that he has the ability to enact the brand of drama that they like. He proved this by his work in the famous "Skinner" stories. Since his appearance on the Pathe program, he has appeared in "Twenty-One" and "Kidder and Ko," both of which have played well up to the standard of his "Skinner" stories. In his late work, "The Ghost of the Rancho," Bryant has the role of a ne'er-do-well son of wealthy parents, who refuses to take life seriously. His father orders him from the house, saying that he is not to return until he has made good. He goes to the Southwest, and establishes himself on a ranch. Here he shows the real mettle of which he is made. He proves himself worthy of his parents, and incidentally wins a charming little wife.

Bryant Washburn will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in "The Ghost of the Rancho."

Catch-Line for Program—Hero of "Skinner" Stories, in Comedy-Drama of Southwest.

William Fox's second stupendous marine spectacle, starring Annette Kellermann, will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. More than $1,000,000 was spent by the producer in the making of this picture. There are more than 1,500 people in the cast. If you remember "The Daughter of the Gods," in which Miss Kellerman was starred, you will have some idea of the magnitude of "Queen of the Sea." There are five-hundred beautiful girls who pose as mermaids. Scenes for this production were taken at Bar Harbor, Me., Bermuda, Jamacia, Florida, Mexico and California. It is the most stupendous spectacle of its kind ever attempted for reproduction on the screen. In the role of, first, a wealthy girl and then the revengeful bandit queen who gives up all her wealth and pleasure that she might be revenged on the man who has wronged her, Miss Brockwell gives a portrayal of the role of Adele Durant that is the essence of realism. Herbert Heyes, L. C. Shumway and Willard Lewis are seen in the chief supporting roles. "The Bird of Prey" was written by Charles Kenyon, who was responsible for Miss Brockwell's big success, "The Devil's Wheel." This is one of the best picture dramas in which Mr. Farnum has ever appeared and presents him in a role that gives play to those big dramatic qualities for which this star is noted in the characterization of a role on the screen. "The Plunderer" is one of the Big Six series which William Fox is re-issuing during the present year. It has a big, red-blooded theme and contains in its supporting cast of players, the names of many favorites, including Claire Whitney, who has been seen in many of Theda Bara's productions; William Riley Hatch, a well-known character actor; Harry Springler, W. J. Gross, George De Carlton, Henry Armetta and Elizabeth Eyre. William Farnum can be depended upon to give satisfaction in whatever picture he appears. His characterization in "The Plunderer" is one of the best of his career. He has the role of Bill Mathews, who, with his pal, Dick Townsend, goes to the West to operate a mine left to Dick. When they arrive they find that it is in possession of another. By the big-heartedness and straightforward dealings of Bill Mathews, they win back their mine in spite of tremendous odds.

"Out of the Night" is shown in six reels and presents a most dramatic subject for the screen. Director Kirkwood has given the picture a fine production. Most of the scenes call for exteriors and the director has chosen some beauties. "Out of the Night," although a discussion of the sex problem in a certain degree, never reveals the offensive. It is a straightforward exposition of the sacrifices made that her sister might receive the proper care. "The Ghost of the Rancho"

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

BRYANT WASHBURN has favored the role of the prodigal son in his recent pictures, and "The Ghost of the Rancho," an adaptation from a story by Arthur Henry Gooden again finds him flinging his wild oats to the four winds, only to reform at the proper time (when hurled into the midst of villainy) and under the proper conditions (when under the spell of the heroine's eyes). The picture has a climax that is a little way out of the beaten path, when the hero, Jeffrey Wall, plays ghost and scares the villains, who are Mexicans, and therefore superstitious into retreat, and it has some pretty good comedy in places. There is the usual cabaret stuff where the prodigal is lionized.

But "The Ghost of the Rancho" doesn't stand as anything above the average. When it is considered that the villain makes no less than three different attacks on the heroine, the why and wherefore of this statement may be divined. The story moves with moderate interest from first to last. The continuity in shipshape, but the adaptor, Jack Cunningham, was working with everyday material and was naturally unable to turn out anything extraordinary. William Worthington produced the picture with taste.

Rhea Mitchell is the versatile heroine of "The Ghost of the Rancho." She does a Mexican dance and operates a telegraph instrument. The supporting cast includes quite an array of familiar faces whose names are not given.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jeffrey Wall (Bryant Washburn), the spendthrift grandson of a millionaire (Joseph J. Dowling), gets in a brawl with a Mexican dancer over his partner, Mary Drew (Rhea Mitchell). A gun is drawn in the scuffle, and one of Jeffrey's friends falls unconscious to the floor. The Mexican escapes and Jeffrey pursues, vowing never to return until he has avenged his friend. In Mexico he lands at a station, where since the death of her father, Mary has operated the telegraph instrument. She shields his identity. Then Jeffrey runs into the Mexican's plot. He is a revolutionist as well as a dancer, and is interested in smuggling arms across the border. His retreat is an old ranch house once occupied by a religious fanatic. The Mexican killed him and took possession, thereafter spreading the story that the place was haunted in order to keep the curious away. Jeffrey, however, is not so easily frightened. He learns of the plot, and also learns that the Mexican has kidnapped Mary. Notifying the sheriff, he dresses himself in a sheet and pillow case and plays ghost, frightening the Mexican's henchmen away, and making the leader captive. He turns him over to the law. Jeffrey's surprise comes when his grandfather appears with the man he thought murdered. Grandpop advises Mary to Marry Jeffrey, as the Walls usually get what they go after, and Mary decides to accept.

"Bound in Morocco"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS title of Douglas Fairbanks' latest comedy suggests a new edition of some old author, but its contents reveal scant literary merit. That is as regards plot. Of course we all know that the inimitable (the word is used as Webster would have it) comedian, doesn't need to be bothered by much of a plot to make a successful picture. A skeleton is sufficient. Fairbanks is usually the meat. And, to continue metaphorically, he is not skinny at all. However, with the case of "Bound in Morocco," the skeleton itself is dangerously loose, and as a result the Fairbanksian meat has rather a hard time assuming any definite proportions. A subtitle warns one not to wink or the plot may be missed. Which is in the way of an admission on the part of Fairbanks. Because everyone winks some time or another during five reels of film.

The scene of action is Morocco. Fairbanks, listed on the program as The Boy, is bound there by an angry Sahib, which is slang for "political boss." The story in general has to do with his efforts to free himself from the clutches of the gentlemen of Morocco and to rescue The Girl from the perils of the Sahib's harem. There is a plentiful amount of riding and fighting on the desert and these desert scenes, by the way, peopled with horsemen picturesquely garbed in the flowing garments of the Arab are marvels of pictorial beauty and superb photography. There are the thrills that come with careening horses and horsemen who take dangerous falls and Fairbanks does a few stunts that are thrilling. His escape from the harem (a most attractive harem with most attractive haremites therein) is great. Here Fairbanks invades the realm of the circus trapezist and swings on a rope and bounds off a canvas roof like a regular acrobat of the big top.

It is, after all, a severe task to dissect a Fairbanks picture. And even though this, his latest, is by no means his best, the Fairbanks personality, witty subtitles and a thoroughly artistic production go to make it enjoyable. The subtitle at the end winds the picture up with a fine laugh. It reads "One hundred years later" and a shot of a graveyard follows. Such fine satire serves to send one away in a good humor.

Story, continuity (such as there is) and direction are the work of Allan Dwan. Pauline Curley is the girl and the few fleeting glimpses of her are pleasing. The reliable Frank Campeau is the villain. Another glance at the program shows him as a Basha and not as a Sahib after all. There are Tully Marshall, Edythe Chapman, Jay Dwiggins and Fred Burns in other roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Boy (Douglas Fairbanks) has gotten into trouble in a city of Morocco owing to his efforts to free the Girl (Pauline Curley) and her mother (Edythe Chapman) from the clutches of one, Basha El Hank (Frank Campeau). He is imprisoned, and is about to be blown up by a bomb when he effects an escape. Disguised as a female attendant he enters the harem and fights his way out with the girl. Furious fighting on the desert with the Boy pitted against all the villains of Morocco, results in ultimate triumph for the American hero, and the last we see of him he is speeding away to more congenial climes with the Girl by his side.

"America's Answer"

(Second Official War Film—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"AMERICA'S ANSWER" is of greater interest than "Pershing's Crusaders" for besides showing what our army in France is doing, it gives a wonderful picture of the manner in which the money of the people of the United States is being spent behind the lines and on the French seaboard in order to maintain this army. Docks and railroads under construction, the assembling of engines, the landing of huge stores of food, automobile trucks and divers army supplies, the baking of bread in great quantity, the mending of uniforms, the producing of varieties of camouflage, and the building of an immense refrigerating plant in which to store the army's meat supply, are some of the vastly interesting events shown in the seven reels of "America's Answer." And there are bodies of troops, landing, on parade, marching the long miles to the front, line upon line of them, as far as the eye can reach, and going into action. And there are hospital scenes where every inmate is given the best of care. Perhaps the spirit of the American troops is best revealed in one little scene from this section of the picture which shows a soldier undergoing an operation on his foot and laughing the while.

The film took the first-night audience at the Cohan theatre, New York, by storm. It was excellently presented by Mr. Rothapfel, a most inspiring musical score having been arranged. But if it is possible for the onlooker to put his feelings of patriotism and personal pride aside for a moment during the running of the picture, he will discern that it is intelligently edited, titled and assembled. In fact, of the many war pictures that the writer has seen, it is the best in this respect. There are times, too, when the editors have injected some humor into the explanatory subtitles, while there are a number of humorous and human interest incidents in the picture that serve to give it proper balance.

"America's Answer" performs what other war topicals have neglected to do on such a full scale. It shows the industrial warfare that this country is waging even on the soil of France.

How the forces of industrialism are mobilized on a tremendous scale to back up the fighting man at the front is vastly interesting. And furthermore it gives these men, the engineers, the carpenters, the railroad men, and scenic artists, the bakers, the butchers—it gives these men who are toiling behind the lines in France the credit that is rightfully due them.

"Fedora"

(Famous Players-Lasky—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"FEDORA," which has been acted upon the stage and sung in opera, is one of Victorien Sardou's best-known plays, and it is in this notable work that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation presents Pauline Frederick. It cannot be said that the adaptation by Charles Whittaker includes the dramatic force that was always apparent in the original play, for certain of its unusual climaxes are not stressed with the proper degree of prominence. The picture, rather, develops into an interesting characterization given by Miss Frederick, the drama itself with its numerous and generously strong situations being given second place.

Admirers of Miss Frederick's art will not, however, be disappointed in "Fedora," for the unusual love story it presents is at all times interesting. Miss Frederick gives a telling performance in the title role and plays with special significance in the latter scenes when the fact is revealed that she has betrayed the man she really loves. The story is given a happy ending, as, contrary to Sardou, the picture Fedora does not take poison and die. Ipanoff snatches the deadly cup from her lips just in time.

Edward Jose has endowed the picture with a rich and realistic production. Miss Frederick contributes her share by showing a number of magnificent gowns. Jere Austin as Ipanoff was hardly the right choice for the role of Ipanoff. He is never subtle in his actions, although the better part of the time he is quite expressionless. Wilmuth Merkyll, Alfred Hickman and W. L. Abington render adequate support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS.

Princess Fedora (Pauline Frederick), a Russian beauty, is in love with Count Vladimir (Wilmuth Merkyll), and believes that he loves her, although in reality he only seeks her fortune. He has an affair with the wife of Boris Ipanoff. One night Ipanoff (Jere Austin) discovers Vladimir with his wife and shoots him. Later Vladimir dies in Fedora's arms, never regaining consciousness. Believing that Ipanoff killed Vladimir for political reasons, Fedora readily consents to the proposition made her by General Zariskene (W. L. Abington), the chief of police, and Vladimir's father, that she pursue the murderer to Paris, where he has taken refuge, and force a confession from him. She is accompanied by Gretch (Alfred Hickman), a police official. In Paris she secures an introduction to Ipanoff, who sees much of her. In time Fedora discovers herself falling in love with the man she came to betray into the hands of the Russian police. But her sense of duty proves stronger than love and she makes all arrangements for his capture. He visits her that night and tells her the real facts of Vladimir's death. Immediately is Fedora changed. She saves Ipanoff from the police. However, it is through the information furnished by Fedora that Ipanoff's brother in Russia is found and killed. From this shock the mother dies. Ipanoff learns that a woman in Paris has furnished the information and it is not long before he discovers that Fedora is that woman. His first impulse is to strangle her but a ring of the bell prevents him. He goes to the door and learns from the caller that Fedora was innocent of the real facts surrounding Ipanoff's case when she agreed to capture him. Ipanoff rushes back into the room just in time to prevent Fedora from taking poison.

"Beyond the Shadows"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

A FAULT which, regrettably enough, has prevailed in several of the recent Triangle pictures detracts considerably from "Beyond the Shadows," the latest picture in which William Desmond is presented. This fault is summed up in the inability of the Triangle producing force to properly balance its pictures. They are presented in a monotone; there are no variations introduced. Thus introductory passages, serving the technical purpose of "planting" and the entertaining purpose of interesting with their bits of characterization and color, are played almost exactly the same as the high moments in the pictures. And so the value of each phase is lessened, the suspense and sustaining interest which should result from a crisis is missing. It is so with "Beyond the Shadows."

This picture was written for Mr. Desmond by Ralph R. Westfall, and under capable production might very well have appeared to meritorious advantage. But either the scenario prepared by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., or the direction of J. W. McLaughlin is at fault. It appears, to the eye of the reviewer unfamiliar with the individual intricacies of the Triangle producing organization, that both were.

The locations secured have the proper atmosphere for a story of the Canadian woods, the locale of "Beyond the Shadows." Mr. Desmond's personality is a hard thing to down, and it shows to pleasing advantage. Josie Sedgwick is co-starred, while others in the cast are Ed Brady, Graham Pette, Hugh Sutherland, Bert Apling, Ben Lewis, John Wild, John Lince and Alberta Lee.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS.

The Du Bois family comes to the Canadian northwest to engage in trapping and hunting. Jean (William Desmond) sets up as an independent trader, refusing to tolerate the tyranny of the Athabasca company. He lives with his father and mother (Graham Pette and Alberta Lee). His brother, Horace (Ed Brady), proves dishonest, and in another section, and under the name of McLaughlin, becomes factor of the trading station. He marries Eleanor (Josie Sedgwick), daughter of a minister, but it is not long before she discovers his cruelty and worthlessness. The factor at the trading station near Jean, Black Fagan (Ben Lewis) by name, persecutes the Indians when they trade with Jean. He attempts to rob Jean, but the latter throws him from his cabin. Semcoe Charlie (Bert Apling) comes along and stabs him to the heart. Horace comes to this trading station with the idea of avenging Fagan. Eleanor accompanies him, posing as his daughter, as Santel (Hugh Sutherland), the real boss of the station, has Horace in his power. Jean falls in love with Eleanor and she with him. Jean organizes the other free traders in the district and attacks the corporation men. The latter are defeated. Jean and Horace are about to fight when they recognize each other. Horace is struck with the error of his ways and decides to lead a better life. And Jean sadly watches Eleanor depart with him.

MACK SENNETT has discarded his usual furious comedy stunts in "Her Blighted Love" and relied almost entirely on the ability of his cast, a few complications and a few mild chases to put it over. Charles Murray's presence guarantees considerable humor and Wayland Trask, Vera Stedman, Alice Davenport, Erle C. Kenton and Harry Booker render valuable assistance. Walter Wright directed it.

"The Beloved Blackmailer"
(World Film—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

WORLD Film offers a splendid comedy-drama in "The Beloved Blackmailer," produced by Dell Henderson from a story by Harry O. Hoyt. Mr. Hoyt selected a fertile field in which to raise his crop of comedy when he turned to the modern "health farm" for his chief scene of action. Here broken down male members of society are put through the paces until their health is restored. The situations and business included in the picture when it shifts to this location are great from the comedy viewpoint. Mr. Henderson is a good comedy director and time and again in "The Beloved Blackmailer" can one hit upon pieces of inspired business that must have been introduced by the director. There is a naturalness and a touch of originality about such pictures that are seldom present when an unimaginative director gets on the job.

Carlyle Blackwell is featured with Evelyn Greeley in the opposite role. Mr. Blackwell does comedy well and plays the role of the mollycoddle who is made over into a man with a fine sense of its value. Great comedy honors also go to Kid Broad, that cauliflower eared gentleman who has done bits in many pictures. but who gets a real part as a trainer on the health farm in "The Beloved Blackmailer." Besides closeups of those ears of which the Kid is so proud, he gets many a laugh when he uses his prize ring tactics on the patients of the farm. He may be a star some day, who knows? At any rate people will remember him from this picture.

A number of pretty locations serve as backgrounds to the exterior action while the interiors are photographed in new and artistic settings. The supporting cast includes Jack Drumier, W. T. Carleton, Charles Dungan, Rex MacDougal and Isabelle Berwin.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bobby Briggs (Carlyle Blackwell) has never had the chance to become a man. His mother (Isabelle Berwin) always petted him and fed him on pills. Finally Bobby becomes disgusted and bribes his old trainer at college, Spike Brogan (Jack Drumier), who now conducts a health farm, to kidnap him and mold him over into a man. Unknown to Bobby his sweetheart, Corinne Norris (Evelyn Greeley), has the same idea. Brogan plays middle man, informing neither of the other's actions and incidentally collecting money at both ends. Now Mr. Briggs (W. T. Carleton) and Mr. Norris (Charles Dungan) are financial enemies. So when Bobby disappears Corinne writes him an anonymous note, demanding that he stop pounding her father in the market if he wants his son to return to him safe and sound. And Mr. Briggs stops. Corinne has taken a room at a hotel not far from the camp. Martin (Rex MacDougal), posing as her friend, invites her to dine with him at the hotel. In a private room he attacks her. Bobby, a made-over man, comes to the rescue. And when the youngsters return to the Norris home they discover Mr. Norris and Mr. Briggs fighting, verbally. But, of course, they relent and become friends when their children inform them of their marriage.

"A Nine O'Clock Town"
(Paramount-Ince—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE very title, "A Nine O'Clock Town," suggests a fine comedy, and when it is revealed that Charles Ray is the star of the picture bearing it, one rightfully expects something extraordinary in the way of light entertainment. Something akin to "The Clodhopper" and other of his successful earlier pictures. But "A Nine O'Clock Town" misses fire. It would seem that Victor Shertzinger, who has in this instance added the duties of author to his customary task of directing, picked the wrong ingredients to produce a subject that will meet with popular favor. Ray has the part of David Clary, a young man who is all bluff, and who makes a success of himself despite this. He bluffs his way through the whole picture, eventually making good on a bluff bigger than any of the others. But the trouble with the character of David Clary lies in the fact that it contains no redeeming feature. It is all bluff. And any audience wants a few sincere traits in the hero.

Aside from this Mr. Shertzinger's story is entirely too thin to run five reels. Despite some typical Ray poses, in which he appears uneasy to the great enjoyment of his audience, the story of David Clary, who sells his father's department store for an enormous figure, lacks substance to sustain the interest from beginning to end. Here again we return to the original fault. If Clary had only done something worth making a picture about ———. The comedy introduced when Clary comes back from the city, hires a band and a model clad only in underthings and corsets to parade the aisles of the store is good. He succeeds in making the interior of his father's establishment resemble the lobby of a theatre after an exhibitor has followed certain advertising hints.

Ray is supported by a good cast which includes Jane Novak, Otto Hoffman, Gertrude Claire, Catherine Young and Dorcas Mathews. The staging is exceptional as to the atmosphere of the nine o'clock town and the photographic and art work highly commendable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

David Clary (Charles Ray) finds his home town too slow and his father's general store operated on a too conservative basis to suit him, so he hies to New York. Here he writes letters, saying that he is advertising manager of Gimbel's. Closer inspection reveals him as a tie clerk. But his father (Otto Hoffman) falls for the boy's bluff and brings him back to run the store which is not paying. And David institutes an advertising campaign which is a success—and a sale, which is also a success (for the patrons). The store continues to lose money. A burlesque show hits town, and included in the chorus is a certain lady (Catherine Young) who took David's bank roll and watch in the city. She promises him it back if he will come to her hotel that night. With the assistance of the manager of the show they work the old game of "outraged-husband-unfaithful-wife-come-through-with-so-much-money" on him and David is forced to start even a bigger sale. In the midst of it, however, the corset model (Dorcas Matthews) discovers that the burlesque manager is her husband, so the game is up. The president of a chain of stores likes David's business methods (for some unknown reason) and wants to locate in the town. He makes David an offer and by sheer bluff the young man makes him come through with an immense figure, after which he takes the girl (Jane Novak) who has always admired him, in his arms and proudly swells his chest in the general direction of his father.

"A Woman's Fool"
(Universal—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

OWEN WISTER, that writer whose Western characters are known the world over, is author of the story upon which "A Woman's Fool" was based. His original opus was known as "Lin McLean," named after its principal character. It is this character that Harry Carey portrays in the picture and it is a thoroughly congenial, ingratiating and human figure that Carey makes of it. "Lin McLean," however, was hardly the ideal book for the screen. Its comedy moments are the only ones which show to advantage in pictured form. The story itself, as presented here, is rather an incoherent affair that wanders hither and yon and which is devoid of any sustaining force to carry it through from start to finish. One is obliged to be on the alert all the while lest some skip in the action leaves him at sea regarding subsequent happenings.

The adaptation was made by George Hively and the production was in charge of Jack Ford. Mr. Ford has maintained a fine Western atmosphere. Molly Malone and Betty Schade share the feminine honors, while Roy Clark, a clever boy, is seen in a part of prominence. Millard K. Wilson, Sam De Grasse, Vester Pegg, Ed. Jones and William Carroll are others in the cast.

"A Woman's Fool" will be accepted for its comedy. Of this element there is not any too much but sufficient to help the story over its indirectness of plot.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lin McLean (Harry Carey), a restless cowboy, goes to town and becomes enamored of a waitress, Katy (Betty Schade). He brings her back to the ranch and puts her in charge of the mistress of the ranch-house. And just as everything is going nicely, along comes a traveling man, who, it appears, is her husband, and she departs with him. Lin's heart is broken, but not for long. In the city he discovers Billy (Roy Clark), Katy's deserted child. He adopts him and brings him back to the ranch. He meets Jessie (Molly Malone), the new station agent, and after the proper time has elapsed, marries her. And then appears Katy again, who attempts to thrust herself on Lin and who, by so doing, breaks up the domestic bliss that was his. Lin will have none of her and so she seeks employment in the dance hall. The sight of Lin makes her yearn to reform, but seeing that he does not love her she takes poison and dies. And Billy brings about a reconciliation between Jessie and Lin.

HAROLD LLOYD has done some good comedies, some very good comedies, during his career on the screen, but it is our belief that in "Bride and Gloom" he sets himself a new mark. The scene of action is the Pullman car, often used in various kinds of comedy, but certainly never to such good advantage as in "Bride and Gloom." The gags evolved by the producers follow one another in rapid succession and every one of them brings a laugh. The supporting company, including Snubs Pollard and Bebe Daniels, does superior work throughout.

"The Fallen Angel"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

WILLIAM FOX has adapted Gouverneur Morris's "You Can't Get Away With It," for screen presentation, under the title, "The Fallen Angel." Why the author's perfectly good title was changed to "The Fallen Angel" is not quite clear. Of the two, we think the author's selection the best. Jewel Carmen is the featured member of the cast. Gouverneur Morris himself would not have looked further for a living image of his mental creation. She looks, acts and lives the part on the screen.

The story is there, and it has been reproduced by Director Robert Thornby with all faithfulness. There are no forced situations. The plot action is carried along by plausible incidents, and the author has first laid the foundation and then builded thereon to the climax. The story is typical of the sex problem dramas, but in no instance has the director attempted to take liberties with the public. He has clothed all suggestiveness in the garments of the drama that permit of such exposition.

The story has been told time and again in actual life, on the stage and on the screen. It is the old story of the easiest way. But Gouverneur Morris is too clever an artist to follow the beaten path as to detailed construction of his plot. For every move that Jill Cummings makes and for every decision that she reaches, the author has, first of all, laid a foundation. He has not resorted to the hack writer's trick of relying on any old convenience to keep his plot together. There's a reason for every advance made in the plot of his story. It may not be considered by some to be the proper subject to discuss, but the fact remains that it has been discussed in as unoffensive a manner as could be recorded either between the covers of a book or on the screen.

"The Fallen Angel" is one of Miss Carmen's best works. She is an ideal type, never over-acts, and appreciates that the eyes can often be more eloquent than dramatic gestures. Charles Clary gives one of his best characterizations of the semi-roue. L. C. Shumway is seen to advantage, and Herbert Heyes as leading man could have done better. Daisy Robinson and Lavine Monsch give promise of better parts in the future. Some nice exterior shots are shown, and the photography, heightened by good lighting, is clear.

"The Fallen Angel" is one of the few screen dramas that has an unhappy ending.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jill Cummings (Jewel Carmen) and her sisters, Marguerite (Daisy Robinson) and Jane (Lavine Monsch), live in modest circumstances. Jill is the provider for the family. The sisters had been accustomed to every luxury until their father died, leaving them penniless. Jill has a short career as clerk in a department store when she is taken sick. The manager of the store, George Hemmingway, Sr. (Charles Clary), takes an interest in her, and tells her that he will provide for her if she will take the place of his wife from whom he has separated. Jill consents, and she is established in a beautiful home with every luxury.

Her sister, Jane, is to be married, and Jill sends her, as a wedding present, a costly necklace, which is returned by Jane's fiance, with a request that Jill refrain from speaking to his fiancee. It is then that Jill realizes that "you can't get away with it." Hemmingway dies. His son comes to Jill's home to inform her that his father had made provisions for her. She leaves for Europe, and there meets Harry Adams (Herbert Heyes), and they are engaged. When the best man arrives, she discovers that he is young Hemmingway. The engagement is broken, and Jill decides to face it all alone.

"Hands Up"

(Pathe Serial—First Two Episodes)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

PLENTY of pep, strong action and fascinating romance and adventure, characterize Pathe's new serial, "Hands Up," featuring Ruth Roland. Gilson Willetts wrote the story and Jack Cunningham did the continuity. James Horne directed.

The scene of the action in the first two episodes, shown for review, this week, is laid in Mexico, in and around an Incas village, and at the ranch house. And Director Horne has spared neither detail or types to bring his audiences face to face with the Sun Worshipers, their methods of living and their religious rites. The first episode is titled "Bride of the Sun" and is in three reels. The second episode is "The Missing Princess." It is in two reels as are all the others that are to follow.

We remember some of the work that Director Horne did for the Kalem Company in the serial line, and we are not surprised to find that he hasn't disappointed us in reeling off actionable drama in his work for the Pathe program. He places action above all else in his diagnosis of a true specimen of serial drama and the work that he has turned out under the title, "Hands Up," has certainly been given its share of action. There is action from the first click of the camera, and it is never retarded unless necessarily so by the nature of the plot. When action is called for Director Horne is right on the job.

"Hands Up" is a drama of the great out-doors. Little of the action transpires in the so-called interior sets. Long shots registered in a beautiful mountainous country predominate.

Ruth Roland, the star, gives her audience some real thrillers in her exhibitions of horsewomanship. Miss Roland can handle a horse with all the assurance of a cowpuncher and will take just as many chances on being thrown. The director has rounded up some real judges of horse-flesh, as types for his picture, but none of them can ride circles round the star. She doesn't take the dust of any of them. Miss Roland's work in this production merits the confidence Pathe has placed in her.

George Chesebro, who has the leading role opposite, is a fine type, can do all the stunts that any horseman could do astride his mount and interprets the action of a scene without exaggeration or over-acting. The one who takes the part of the Incas chief's henchman is deserving especial mention for the characterization he gives of the Incas bad-man. Credit is not given him on the screen or in the cast of players.

"Hands Up" is a story of the Southwest. It relates the adventures of Echo Delano (Ruth Roland), a magazine writer, who is taken for the missing princess by a band of Incas occupying an ancient mission house. The Incas hail her as their queen and believe that her wedding to the Prince of the band will restore the ancient power of the Incas.

The first episode, "Bride of the Sun," tells of Echo's discovery of the band of Incas and her experiences at one of the band's religious rites. Hands Up (George Chesebro), manager of a near-by ranch, rescues her after thrilling escapades. She is again taken by the Incas after Hands Up has been overpowered. A mysterious black-robed rider rescues Hands Up.

Judith (Echo's cousin) plots to gain possession of the ranch which rightfully belongs to Echo. The second episode deals with the plans of Judith to have Echo retained by the Incas. The mysterious rider again appears and takes her away as she is plotting to betray Echo to the Incas.

"A Soldier's Oath"

(Fox Big Six Reissue—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

JUST at this time a better and more timely offering could not be presented for entertainment via screen than William Fox's late Big Six re-issue, "A Soldier's Oath," with William Farnum in the featured role. It is a war drama of the first water and the scene of the action is laid in France, on the same ground that is now the scene of battle in the great war.

The 1918 version of "A Soldier's Oath" will please with the same fascinating qualities as it did when first issued. Its appeal is even more strong than it was at its initial appearance, because of its appropriateness and its story of France at war. Incidents are introduced during the narration of the story, which are obviously strained to meet the demands of the writer, but there are so many and varied real dramatic punches coming one after the other during its exposition that the technique of the drama will receive little or no consideration from an audience. The dramatic punch is there, the story is timely, the acting is finished, the war scenes are realistic—what more can one expect? And then we have William Farnum in a role that fits him like a glove and one in which he shines.

In the supporting cast are seen Kittens Reichart, a clever little child who has many of her elder screen artists backed off the boards when it comes to dramatic expression. We haven't seen Kittens in some time. By this time she should be a finished actress.

Leading grand marches and attending motion picture functions in Brooklyn, Mahattan and the Bronx, as well as in St Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis, Albany and other centres, has brought her in close contact with the exhibitors.

It is claimed she will be called upon to represent a portion of the industry heretofore quiet in political circles. No doubt her personality will serve in changing the opinions of some of our law-makers regarding the atmosphere of the studios.

The subject is "Among the Maoris of New Zealand."

Pathe announces "That's Him" as the next Lloyd release after "Kicking the Germ out of Germany," which has had an immense advance booking. Other Harold Lloyd comedies to be released this summer are "Bride and Gloom," on August 18, and "Two Scrambled," on September 1.

The release date for "The Great Love," the first of the D. W. Griffith productions to be released through Artcraft Pictures and planned for August presentation, has been set for August 12.

Reports from Pathe's thirty branches through the United States indicate a country-wide cleanup on "More Trouble," the teature play in which Frank Keenan is said to have made the hit of his screen career. "More Trouble" is booked for every one of the big houses in Pacific Coast cities.

"The Handy Man," the second of the Cinema Doll Comedies produced by the Emerald Film Company of Chicago, is released next week by General Film Company. A fast-stepping farce comedy story has been provided for the doll players.

Elsie Ferguson will be seen in a picturization of one of the most widely discussed novels of recent years when her latest production for Artcraft, "The Danger Mark," is released July 29.

The first genuine Oriental to make a bid for popularity in the comedy field, appears in the L-KO comedy, "A Clean Sweep." His name is Chai Hong, and according to Julius Stern, head ot the L-KO aggregation, he is due to make a decided impression upon photoplay fans.

When "We Can't Have Everything," the special Artcraft production, based upon Rupert Hughes' clever satire of that name, was released July 15, the public saw for the first time on the screen, the product of the combined art of two brothers. For while Cecil B. De Mille has produced many of the Artcraft special productions, "We Can't Have Everything" marks his initial effort in directing from a scenario written by his brother, William C. De Mille.

Florence Malone has been engaged to appear in support of Louise Huff in World pictures. It isn't often that one beautiful star picks another beautiful woman to play with her.

Hale Hamilton, one of the best-known Broadway players, who has been recently appearing in Broadhurst productions, is the latest accession to the screen. He has signed a contract to star for Metro for three years and it is announced that he is to receive a salary of $300,000.

One day a little girl 15 or 16 years old came to the Mack Sennett studios looking for work as an extra girl. She was pretty and they gave her the job she asked for. She worked for a year or so, and then went back to school and finished her education. Last week she came back to the Sennett studio, with her beauty not at all marred by the fact that she can parse a Latin sentence, and got her old job back. Her name is Ethel Lind.

"DOLL COMEDY" A CHAPLIN BURLESQUE

It is a question whether grown-ups derive much pleasure from pictures made by animated puppets. The trick work involved has lost its novelty, and the comedy naturally cannot equal that of life. Such pictures doubtless entertain little children, but it made for them the stories and characters should be juvenile and in good taste.

This by way of review of the first of a series of "doll comedies" put out by the General Film. The picture runs for a full reel, and is evidently the fruit of much skill and labor. The story has to do with an unfortunate and incompetent porter such as Charley Chaplin played with irresistible humor in "The Bank," and works out through several mildly funny incidents to a real Mack Sennett riot at the end. The picture was made by the Emerald Manufacturing Company.

KEEPING UP WITH RUDOLPH

A picture which will be greatly enjoyed by those who appreciate artistic feeling, humor and technically excellent photography is one just released by the Educational Films Corporation under the captivating title of "The Quest of the Big 'Un." Charles Maigne, so well-known in another field of screen production, is responsible for the little story of Rudolph, the veteran trout of the Catskills, who figures as hero, victim and finally victor in this idyl ot spring fishing. Aside from Rudolph, who is, indeed, a monster trout, the actors are a capable and patient fisherman and a charming young lady who tries to qualify as an angler and ends by being the unintentional means of Rudolph's escape. Anglers will be interested in the methods and flies shown in close-ups; others will enjoy the picture as a beautiful scenic whose titles denote a writer of literary skill.

PERSHING'S POPULARITY IN MISSOURI

Pershing Day in his home town will long be remembered by the townfolk, and particularly so will be the tribute paid to Missouri's hero by Governor Fred D. Lardner. Mutual's Screen Telegram, No. 39 opens with this subject and does it full justice. Other subjects recorded are the launching of a fleet of boats by Mr. and Mrs. Schwab on the Pacific Coast; a skiing contest in Illinois; a baseball game at Camp McPherson, Ga., for convalescent soldiers and sailors; military funeral rites for the late Major John Purroy Mitchel, and others of equal import. Released July 14.

STUDY OF THE FOOT FEATURE OF LATEST PICTOGRAPH

Physical examination of men scheduled to enter the ranks of the army has brought to light the fact that an alarming proportion of our male citizens have crippled feet. The evils of the pointed shoe, and the high heel are interestingly and quite startlingly set forth in a section of the thirtieth number of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, under the separate title of "Shoe Sins." Diagrams and actual photographs of feet contorted into ugly, misshapen things, together with X-ray photographs of perfect and imperfect feet, comprise this most entertaining bit of propaganda for better treatment of the pedal extremeties. A shot that is quite funny, as well as interesting, shows a native of some southern clime going up a smooth tree as if he were an ape. The native's feet, though black, are perfect to a degree. This entire series of scenes is smattered with a number of humorous scenes and subtitles.

The feminine life guards at Venice, California, make a generally robust and attractive sight. These ladies have taken the place of men who have traded their old jobs of saving drowning people for the sterner business of war, and no man who dabbles in the surf at Venice is going to object when a feminine elbow is tucked under his chin, while the owner of the elbow drags him through the water to safety. The editor has hinted that probably every man who enjoys the water at Venice will suffer from cramps or loss of strength some time during the season.

The cartoon in this number is funny and cleverly executed. Wallace Carlson penned it and it relates the fine tale a tramp tells to a pair of eager youngsters, how in "ye days of olde" he saves a beautiful lady in distress. She is imprisoned in a castle, which has a moat, battlements and all the trimmings. The tramp rides to her rescue in his flivver, succeeds in vanquishing all the guards with the assistance of his dog and wins the fair lady for himself. The boys are of the opinion that he is afraid of nothing, but, his tale concluded, a bull comes around the corner of the barn and the tramp takes to his heels.

CAMERA WISE

Any young leading man in need of pointers on how to keep the centre of the screen should go up to Mr. Ditmars' Zoo, and observe the Lady Amherst pheasant, who isn't a lady, but a handsomely plumaged male. When the gorgeous creature desires to attract the attention of a favored member of the other six he just simply won't get out of her way till, we suppose, she marries him just to get rid of him!

It is incidents such as this that give liveliness and interest to the Educational's "Living Book of Nature." The present release is devoted to types of pheasants, whose luxuriant features make them fine subjects for the camera, and to the strutting peacock in all the magnificence of his spreading tail. His vanity is such that he displays it not only before his mate, but for the benefit of human observers, and even for the turtles whose cage he invades. Of exquisite, ghostlike beauty is an albino peacock, white as snow.

"DER CAPTAIN" OBLIGES

Once again the versatile Captain Katzenjammer turns his talents toward benefiting and entertaining his fellows, only to be thwarted at the height ot his success by the still more versatile "Twins."

Funds being needed for the poor heathen, the captain arranges a little exhibition of his skill as a prestidigator, and gets off a neat little trick of transforming sausages into little dogs—poetic retribution, indeed. But the Twins, whose assistance has been arranged for by the captain, add a few tricks not nominated in the bond. The poor professior is put to the blush in the eyes of Katrinka, who has partaken of the punch to which the Twins have "added a little kick," and the captain does a trick not down on the program.

The cartoon is in Mr. La Cava's best manner.

Nate Erber, brother of Joseph Erber, of Erber's theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., who recently disposed of his stock in the Princess theatre in Danville, has accepted the management of the Washington theatre and Airdome in Belleville, owned by Joe Erber and Phil Cohn.

INDIANA

The motion picture show in Berne, Ind., is moving out of the building on Jefferson street to give way for another line of business.

The new Princess theatre, Kendalville, Ind., opened its doors recently, after being closed several weeks, during which time extensive improvements were made.

William Francis, proprietor of the Lyric and South Side theatres in Greensburg, Ind., is said to be making arrangements for the consolidation of the two picture theatres, to be called the South Side. Mr. Francis has a lease on the building occupied by the Citizens National Bank.

NEW YORK

The Proctor Building, at the corner of South Broadway and Prospect street, Yonkers, N. Y., was sold at auction to Edward Murphy, of Troy, N. Y., for $300,000, incumbrances on the property amounting to $294,000.

Dubuque Exhibitors Lose Through Quarantine

THE QUARANTINE of Dubuque motion picture theatres, on account of the infantile paralysis epidemic, is said to be occasioning serious losses among the exhibitors, especially the managers of the Princess, Dreamland and Grand theatres, who do the most business during the summer months.

Manager Boyle, of the Dreamland, was most unfortunate, as he had contracted for thirteen big Pathe releases, one to be shown each week. All of these, of course, had to be canceled as the quarantine is indefinite and may extend through the entire month of August. Mr. Boyle also lost considerably on the Fox film, "The Kid Is Clever," with George Walsh, which was scheduled to appear the first day of the quarantine, Sunday, July 7, as he was unable to get in touch with the exchange before the film arrived in Dubuque. He was compelled to hold it over until 4 o'clock, thus subjecting himself to payment.

Manager William Billos, of the Princess, had extensively advertised "The Seven Swans," with Marguerite Clark, which was to have been shown Monday and Tuesday, July 8 and 9, and as a result was out more than he could afford these times. He was also compelled to cancel the finest month's program Dubuque had seen in many a day, for it included such pictures as "The Thing We Love," with Wallace Reid; "The Danger Game," with Madge Kennedy; "His Mother's Boy," with Charles Ray; "The House of Glass," with Clara Kimball Young, and "When a Man Sees Red," with William Farnum. The genial manager, however, was not dismayed, and announced that as soon as the quarantine is lifted, he will show his patrons some of the best pictures he can get, and that the first one will be "Within the Law," with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, produced by Vitagraph.

Manager Jake Rosenthal, of the Majestic, is not saying anything these days. His only comment was, "When the public has been deprived of moving pictures for a month or so, business will boom enormously and then I will show 'some' pictures."

"Movie" Owners Aid Suffrage Campaign

THEATRES opened to circulators of petitions calling on Senate to enact amendment.

Operators of more than thirty-five of the largest motion picture theatres in the city are co-operating with the Senate suffrage campaign. As soon as the nature of the campaign was explained to them they immediately allowed the suffrage campaigners the freedom of their houses.

Among the theater owners who gave their consent to having suffrage workers in the lobbies were Ascher Bros., who control fourteen theatres; Lubliner & Trinz, who control seven; Henry Schoenstadt, Sr., who controls six, and Balaban & Katz, who control four.

The "beauty squad" of workers are meeting with phenomenal success and have obtained thousands of signatures to their petitions from the "movie" fans.

Springfield Theatres on Roll of Honor

THERE is a new role of honor in Springfield, Ill., the privilege of representation in which was secured by some definite war service. It is The Motion Picture Theater Roll of Honor, and it has been placed upon Springfield theatres.

Their specific service consisted in the time and prominence given to four-minute speeches and the screen advertisements of the different war drives. On July 22, Sidney Breese, lawyer, and chairman of the Four-Minute Men, delivered to each theatre in the city mentioned later in this notice, a beautifully engraved certificate, signed by Samuel Insull, chairman State Council of Defense; George R. Jones, state chairman, and Sidney Breese, local chairman of the Four-Minute Men.

The certificate reads as follows: "This is to certify that the ——— theatre has this day been placed on the Roll of Honor in recognition of the service rendered by it to the government of the United States in the prosecution of the war."

The theatres so honored are: Gaiety, Princess, Vaudette, Lyric, Royal, Savoy, Amuse-U, Empress and Capitol. Each theatre has signified its intention of framing the certificate and displaying it in the lobby of the playhouse.

Koppel Boosts Community Singing Alone

PRESIDENT WILSON is emphatic in his desire to promulgate community singing in every locality throughout the country, and has so expressed himself with the hope that every community would enthusiastically enter into this excellent means of keeping patriotism aroused.

J. B. Koppel, the ever alert and patriotic manager of Ascher's Adelphi theatre, North Clark Street and Estes Avenue, is the first Chicago theatre manager to enter into this idea in a wholehearted and enthusiastic manner. This, however, is in keeping with the patriotic spirit that Mr. Koppel has evinced since the first day the Adelphi theatre opened. The Adelphi has been the pioneer in many worthy moves for the benefit of its patrons, and now announces that beginning Monday, July 29, it will institute community singing during performances, sparing no expense to make it a success, and earnestly hope that every patron of the house will take a personal interest in making the Adelphi theatre a leader in this glorious work.

The Rogers Park Defense League, with whom Mr. Koppel has aggressively co-operated, contemplates a monstrous celebration on the Lake Front Labor Day, with a one-hundred-piece Jackie Band and ten thousand voices in honor of the men and women who have gone to the colors from Rogers Park. Mr. Koppel hopes that the community singers of the Adelphi theatre will be the nucleus for this monstrous chorus.

Just a Glance at Harry Weiss' Career

HARRY WEISS, the manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and Central Film Company Chicago office, graduated at St. Viator's College, situated at Bourbonnais, Ill., in 1903, and went to work for the Chicago Edison Co. as master calibrater of the So. Div. Meter Dept. of this concern. In 1905, being in the electrical field, he taught electricity at several colleges throughout Illinois and Iowa, taking up the electrical and moving picture work early in 1906, when Mr. Carl Laemmle employed him to run his moving picture machine at his five-cent theatre on 12th and Halsted Streets, and being employed in the daytime with the old Chicago Film Exchange from 1907 to 1912, he owned a string of theatres in Iowa, Minnesota and Northern Michigan, controlling also the state rights on such pictures as "Twenty Years in Sing Sing," but during 1913 he became assistant manager of the Central Film Company of Minneapolis, and later manager of the Minneapolis Feature Film Exchange, being transferred to Chicago as manager of the Feature Film Sale Co. in June of that year. He was manager of the World Film Co. for the following year and a half and left the World Film Co. as a district manager to take charge of the Chicago office of the Metro Picture Service. After being with the Metro Picture Service for some time, on July 2, 1916, he took charge of the Louis J. Selznick Productions in the city of Chicago. Shortly afterward this firm was absorbed by the Central Film Co., and he is now in his third year as manager of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit, and Central Film Co. Chicago office.

His favorite pastime is motoring and signing up customers for film service. In the last three years he has done all his travelling by automobile, with the result that he is personally acquainted with practically exery exhibitor in Illinois and Indiana and Southern Wisconsin, and that he is known to more exhibitors by his first name than by his last name.

Dubuque News and Views

THE manager of the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., is making every effort to give his patrons the best picture possible. in a recent announcement he stated : " I have booked all of the ' Big Four ' features on the market, namely, ' My Four Years in Germany ' (ten reels); ' The Kaiser ' (seven reels); ' Pershing's Crusaders ' (seven reels), and ' Over the Top ' (nine reels). It took $1,000 cash and a bit of nerve to bring these films to Decorah. However, I am glad the contracts were able to be made, for it would be a shame to let the people of our city miss these marvelous productions." With a manager like that, it is little wonder that the Star theatre is one of the best paying businesses in Decorah.

A BLUEBIRD photoplay, " The Girl by the Roadside," with Violet Mersereau, and a Harold Lloyd comedy was the Saturday night entertainment (July 20) at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia.

THE Sunday special at Dyersville last week was " Shirley Kaye," with Clara Kimball Young. The picture was exhibited both afternoon and evening.

MAE MARSH and Tom Moore rendered a good account of themselves in " The Cinderella Man," shown at the Cozy theatre at Bellevue Sunday and Monday, July 21 and 22. Miss Marsh, especially, has a very pleasing personality, and her pictures are always top drawing cards.

THE Palace theatre at Waverly had a record night both Friday and Saturday, July 19 and 20, when " Joan of Plattsburg," with Mabel Normand was shown. "Headin' South " with Douglas Fairbanks, was the second best drawing card, while " Hashimura Togo " with Sessue Hayakawa, and " Innocent " with Fannie Ward, did average business.

" DODGING A MILLION," with Mabel Normand, was presented at the Princess theatre at Monticello Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. " The Law of the Land," with Mme. Olga Petrova, was the program on Friday and Saturday.

ETHEL CLAYTON's work in " The Woman Beneath " proved to be one of the best she has done, according to the fans who witnessed her performance at the Cozy theatre at Bellevue, Ia., last Tuesday. The manager of the theatre declares that Miss Clayton is developing into one of his greatest drawing powers.

" THE QUITTER," a five-reel Metro feature, was presented at the Belknap theatre at Hopkinton, Ia., Saturday evening.

" SKINNER'S BABY," with Bryant Washburn, and " His Father's Son," with Irene Howley, shared the honors of the week at the Blende theatre at Benton, Wis. " Revelation," with Alla Nazimova, was the feature of the week of July 21.

What Racine Is Doing

COMMUNITY singing, introduced at the Palace theatre by Manager Blumberg, has proved a huge success, the idea taking like fire among the patrons of the theatre. One of the most prominent singing instructors in Racine was secured to lead the singing, and the words of popular songs, thrown on the screen, were easily fitted to well known tunes by the audience. Led by the Palace orchestra, patriotic and popular songs, different each day, are sung afternoon and evening. Occasionally Arthur Friedman, the owner, a singer of some note, leads in the singing.

TOM KENYON and his pleasing tenor voice has been secured by Manager Norman of the Rex to sing popular and semi-operatic airs; this part of the program is well received. " Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight," sung by Mr. Kenyon while it was thrown on the screen in moving pictures proved a novel feature.

" HOW COULD YOU, JEAN," with Mary Pickford, shown at the Palace theatre on two of the hottest days Racine has yet experienced, yet drew to such enormous crowds that the film was held over for an additional day to the same overflow.

PACKED houses, despite hot weather, viewed " The Unbeliever " at the Rex theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, beginning July 22. The reputation of the picture had preceded it, and the verdict of those who saw it here, if heard elsewhere, would assure well attended performances.

BARBARA CASTLETON and Irving Cummings in " The Heart of a Girl," were shown at the Rex on Thursday, July 25, immediately following " The Unbeliever."

MARY MILES MINTER drew well at the Bijou theatre in " The Ghost of Rosy Taylor."

THE Bijou did a fine business with " The Redemption," which starred Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and her son, Russell Thaw. This picture was shown two days, beginning July 23.

Film Fashes from Flint

FLINT motion picture theatres are beginning to feel the effects of a protracted hot spell. Temperatures ranging from 90 to 95 degrees have been experienced for the last week. Manager Charles Garfield of the Orpheum says that business has been slack for 30 days as a result of the bad weather and general local conditions.

MANAGER LESTER MATT of the Strand who has under construction a beautiful canopy in front of the Strand, is arranging for the construction of a balcony which will seat several hundred more.

C. EDGAR MOMAND of the Garden will have an entirely new stage setting for fall, using artificial autumn leaves and other decorations to harmonize with the interior wall covering, which will give the playhouse a garden effect. The front will be redecorated and new signs installed.

MARGUERITE CLARK drew fair business to the Garden theatre July 23, 24 and 25 with " Uncle Tom's Cabin." The picture appealed especially to women and children.

" THE MANX-MAN," taken from Hall Caine's novel and featuring Elisabeth Risdon, " The Pickford of England," drew considerable business to the Orpheum, considering the hot weather, on July 23, 24 and 25.

MANAGER LESTER MATT of the Strand is going strong on music at his playhouse this summer. In addition to the vocal music that was furnished during the early part of the season by Joe Qualkers and Dave Noeker, the " Majestic Duo," and organ music by Edna Dayton, the sole musician of the house for several months, he has installed an orchestra under the direction of A. J. Abbenante.

COMING attractions announced for the Garden theatre are Bessie Barriscale in " Blindfolded," Douglas Fairbanks in " Say, Young Fellow," " An Alien Enemy " with Louise Glaum, a return engagement of Arthur Guy Empey's " Over the Top," Mabel Normand in " Joan of Plattsburg," and a return of Fairbanks in " Mr. Fixit," a feature which drew more business to the Garden than any film in a number of months.

THE CLASSIC FILM COMPANY is putting on a premier performance in the principal city of each state with "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," the proceeds of which will go to the Cardinal Mercier's Relief Fund. Reverend Father Jean B. R. C. CROPPER of the Beehive exchange reports that their business is remarkable for this time of the year, he having closed 17 contracts in the week ending July 27. It certainly is some business and speaks volumes for the Beehive service. Charles A. Dean, president of the Educational Film Corporation, has been spending the week with Mr. Cropper. The Beehive exchange handles their films exclusively in this territory.

"CHRIS" WHELAN, manager of George Kleine System, Chicago branch, says that the booking of Charles Chaplin's latest production, "Triple Trouple," is very large. The same applies to the "Unchastened Woman," featuring Grace Valentine.

S. B. GRIEVER has sold his interest in Griever-Herz and withdrawn his name. The business will be known in the future as the Silee Film Exchange. In the sixteen months that Mr. Griever has been in this organization he has met with phenomenal success, and is withdrawing with the best wishes of many friends. He will announce his future plans, which are practically settled, in the next ten days.

"Enterprise" machines—enterprising management.

Ainsworth Wins in Face of Competition

MANAGER W. E. AINSWORTH, of the Orpheum in Fond du Lac, has discovered how to overcome the hot weather handicap with a band concert thrown in as a counter attraction. Sunday, July 21, was Fond du Lac's hottest day of the year. The lure of the lake breeze was strong and a band concert at Lakeside Park was counted a mighty good attraction At that, the Orpheum had good audiences afternoon and evening. The program included a return engagement of Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," and George Walsh in "Chasing the Kaiser." A light business followed the next three days on account of the continued heat, John Barrymore, in "Raffles," only drawing moderate business. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 25 to 27, Manager Ainsworth presented Constance Talmadge, in "The Shuttle."

He has booked the series of government war pictures—The War Review—and the first showing was made on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 29 and 30. They will be shown every Monday and Tuesday for an indefinite period. Norma Talmadge, in "DeLuxe Annie," will be the attraction at the Orpheum August 7, 8 and 9.

THE Capitol has cancelled Triangle service to one day a week, and has put in Metro and Select plays. Triangle plays have been doing very well for Manager Maisel, but he figures that he will be able to do better with the Metro and Select stars. The first Metro play under the new contract will be Harold Lockwood in "The Landloper," and the first Select play will be Clara Kimball Young in "Magda."

"THE NAHLAUKA," Pathe play, will be the attraction at the Capitol on July 24.

GUS KERASOTES announces his week's bookings for July 21-27 to be as follows: Sunday, "The Song of the Soul," with Alice Joyce; Monday, "Powers That Prey," with Mary Miles Minter; Tuesday, "A Self-Made Widow," with Alice Brady; Wednesday, "Gates of Gladness," with Madge Evans; Thursday, a special feature; Friday, "Her Debt of Honor," with Peggy Hyland, a Fox production.

THE Pekin theatre is showing two serials every Tuesday, "The Fighting Trail" and "The Woman in the Web."

THE Savoy has contracted for Universal's new serial, "The Brass Bullet," to start some time in August.

VIOLA DANA in "The Only Road," comes to the Lyric on July 30 and 31. "The Woman and the Law," Fox's drama based on the De Saulles case, comes on Sunday, August 4, for three days.

A SPIRIT of optimism pervades the local Rialto. Every showman in town anticipates a good business the coming fall and winter.

BEN ROVIN says the Amuse-U is doing well, and that everything is just great.

MANAGER THORNTON of the Gaiety took off William Russell in "Up Romance Road," after Sunday's showing, July 21, despite that he had the play booked for three days. Gaiety audiences are very crtical, and they did not take to this picture. It was the first time that Russell had ever appeared at the big playhouse, or it might have gone better. The photography, sets and acting seemed to be good, but the story was not of Gaiety caliber. Gloria Swanson in "Every Woman's Husband" was put on, and seemed to be just what the women folks wanted. Few men there are here now, everybody's gone to war, and managers have to look out for the wants of the fair sex. "The Fair Pretender," Goldwyn's play with Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore will be the attraction on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 25, 26 and 27. "Choo Choo Love," a Century comedy with Alice Howell, will be on the same bill.

THE Vaudette did very nicely the opening day of Marguerite Clark's four days' run in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The youngsters turned out and laughed heartily at Topsy; also crying a great deal with Little Eva and Uncle Tom. Sessue Hayakawa in "The City of Dim Faces," will come to the Vaudette only July 25, 26 and 27. A Billie Rhodes Strand comedy and Vaudette Screen Telegram will show on the same dates.

THE Lyric struck a run of hard luck with some very poor pictures. "Her Price," with Virginia Pearson, proved a disappointment; but the biggest fiasco was "Pay Day," Metro's five-reeler with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. After the first day's showing, Manager Loper sent out an S. O. S. and secured another feature instead.

AFTER many years as conductor of the Majestic theatre orchestra, Ernest Lange, violinist, announces that he will not be in this city the coming season. He has signed a contract with a Peoria theatre.

"WE CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING" comes to the Gaiety July 28 for an indefinite stay. Manager Thornton is hoping it will prove as good as the last De Mille production, "Old Wives for New," the picture that fans are still talking about.

ENID BENNETT in "The Vamp" comes to the Vaudette for four days, starting July 28. The last half of the week is given over to Wallace Reid in "Less Than Kin."

ELZA KENNETT, doorman at the Lyric, has enlisted in the army and is now at Jefferson Barracks. This makes one more motion picture theatre employe sent from Springfield to beat the Hun.

JUNE CAPRICE in "Miss Innocence," will be the attraction offered at the Lyric on July 28 and 29.

GEORGE ECKLUND, leader of the Gaiety theatre orchestra, sprung a big surprise when he married Rowena Martin in St. Louis last week. George left presumably on a vacation, but it turned out to be a honeymoon. At the present time the Ecklunds are camping on the river. Everybody wishes the newly married couple a long and happy life.

LOUIS KERASOTES is having the Savoy treated to a new coat of paint, preparing for the biggest fall and winter's business the house has yet had. In the meantime Louis is trying to keep within the speed laws with his high-powered speed car.

WHAT'S the matter with William Farnum that he does not draw better than he does? The Lyric had the big fellow for three days in "Rough and Ready" and hardly took in enough to pay for the picture. Harry Loper says he cannot understand it, for he likes Farnum immensely and thinks his pictures are all good. But they do not get the business. The Lyric loses money every time it runs a Farnum picture.

THE Princess has been doing pretty well, despite the heat. "Men," with Charlottee Walker, Robert Cain and a good cast, had three good days, July 21, 22 and 23. Kitty Gordon followed in "Tinsel" on July 24 and 25, and Bessie Barriscale came on the 26th and 27th in "Patriotism," her newest Paralta play. The Princess has but one more chapter of "The Eagle's Eye," and that will be shown on July 24 and 25. This is the first serial to play the Princess, and Manager Kunz says that it has been satisfactory in every way.

"ONE LAW FOR BOTH," an Ivan-Pathe production with Leah Baird, Rita Jolivet and a star cast, opened a three-days' stay at the Princess on July 21. Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge come on July 24 and 25 in "The Golden Wall"; July 25 will bring Kitty Gordon in "The Purple Lily," the picture that was to have been shown some time ago, but was lost in transit.

FRANK KEENAN, in "More Trouble," is scheduled to appear at the Princess at an early date.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, in "The Lesson," will play three days at the Lyric on July 25, 26 and 27. Tom Moore is in the cast, and Tom is a big favorite here, which means more shekels in the Loper coffer.

GEORGE WALSH, in "The Kid is Clever," was not up to the athlete's picture standard, and did not make good at the Lyric July 21 and 22.

THE Chatterton is preparing to reopen. The new season will be inaugurated on Sunday, August 11, and the attraction will be D. W. Griffith's "Heart's of the World," which comes here direct from a long engagement at the Olympic and Colonial theatres, Chicago. The engagement will be for eight days, with two performances daily. The Illinois State Fair opens two days earlier, and big crowds will be in the city during the period of the Griffith play booking. "Hearts of the World" should do as well here as "The Birth of a Nation" did, and the first Griffith spectacle has the record of taking in more money than any picture that has ever been shown here.

IN the meantime the Chatterton is being overhauled and put in shape for the big picture. W. D. Cave, who was at the helm last season, will again look after the destinies of the theatre. George Hickox still continues in control of the playhouse.

GEORGE S. RIORDAN, local man, will again be manager of the Majestic, which opens the new season on Sunday, August 11.

EVERY where are evidences of the coming of a busy season. All of the photoplay houses are cleaning and painting, and making ready for the grand rush which starts August 9, opening day of the State Fair. As the big event comes more than a month earlier than usual this year and lasts twice as long, there should be proportionately more money in all the theatres' cash drawers when the show closes.

ED MAISEL cleared up at the Capitol Saturday, July 20, with Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," and a two-reel Hart reissue.

Gathered In Green Bay

THE Goldwyn feature production, "Joan of Plattsburg," was presented at the Colonial theatre July 19-20. Mabel Norman was in the leading role. The film proved a drawing card.

NELL SHIPMAN played in "Baree, Son of Kazan," at the Colonial theatre July 21.

NORMA TALMADGE pleased audiences at the Grand theatre in "Fifty Fifty" July 21-22-23-24.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA, the Japanese star, appeared for the second time in a month at the Orpheum theatre July 19-20. His offering was "The White Man's Law," a Paramount film.

Elgin Items of Interest

DESIROUS of stretching out the good things over as much time as possible, Manager Ralph Crocker of the Star theatre, Elgin, took the first of his several "few days" vacations about July 20. He motored with his family to Milwaukee, to Camp Grant, Rockford, to Lake Geneva and to other places, a day's drive or so from Elgin. He enjoyed swapping sympathy with managers of various playhouses about the state and in Wisconsin.

MRS. ROLLO MANN CHAPPELL, formerly Grace Johnson, perhaps the most popular player for the moving pictures ever found in Elgin, has returned from making her home in Chicago and has yielded to entreaties of Manager Crocker and taken the piano work at the Star theatre. She was formerly pianist at the Temple before her marriage.

"My Own United States," with Arnold Daly, struck Elgin in the hot period about July 22, a fact which interfered considerably with attendance there that was more conspicuous for its hearty appreciation of this story of "The Man Without a Country." The play made a great hit, and the excellence of music supplied by the Grand's regular orchestra was not the least inspirational part of it all.

DESPITE the fact that "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," crowded the Temple afternoon and evening for three days in late spring, Manager Crocker brought it back to the Star July 22. It played to good houses. The same week Manager Gus Cook of the Crystal theatre, Dundee, showed the film for three days to full houses.

MANAGER GUS COOK of the Crystal theatre, Dundee, has recently purchased two moving picture houses at St. Charles, Ill. He continues to operate his Dundee playhouse.

ARTHUR SEYMOUR, formerly operator at the Crystal, Dundee, has been called away to war and left with a contingent of selected men in early July. He is at Camp Grant, Rockford.

MAYME RORIG, daughter of Manager Henry P. Rorig of the Orpheum theatre, Elgin, who has been her father's assistant for several years, plans to leave for Montana, having resigned her position in the Elgin schools to teach there.

IN the week of July 22 the Grand offered in addition to "My Own United States," Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," Elsie Ferguson in "Rose of the World," Madge Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender," the Pathe Weekly and Burton Holmes travel pictures.

WELLINGTON VANSTON, son of Manager Frank Vanston of the Temple, Elgin, who has been at Camp Grant, sent hurried word the night of July 22 that he was to leave for Sparta, Wis., the following day. His mother, brother Lamont and a party of other friends, made up a motor party that drove to Rockford to bid him farewell before he left.

FOR the week of July 22 the Temple offered the following pictures in part: Roy Stewart in "The Fly God," Billie Rhodes in "By Fowl Means," Edith Roberts in "The Deciding Kiss." Charlie Chaplin in "A Woman," Bessie Barriscale in "Blindfolded," Alma Reubens in "Love Breakers," Helen Gibson in "The Branded Man," Gloria Swanson in "Every Woman's Husband," "Marjorie Wilson in "Old Love for New," Reggie Pearce in "A Good Loser," Charlie Chaplin and William Russell in "Up Romance Road," and a variety of comedies.

IN addition to several Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, the Orpheum offered in the third week in July the following: Ethel Clayton in "Journey's End," Harold Lockwood in "Lend Me Your Name," E. K. Lincoln in "The Almighty Dollar," Montagu Love in "Vengeance."

THE bill at the Star for the third July week, in addition to its leader, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," includes: Gladys Brockwell in "The Devil's Wheel," Charlie Chaplin in "The Musical Tramp," Anita Stewart in "The Glory of Yolanda," Charlie Chaplin in "The Adventurer," Gladys Leslie in "The Wooing of Princess Pat," Bryant Washburn in "Kidder and Ko," Louise Fazenda in "Saucy Madeline," Alice Howell in "Her Unmarried Life," Pearl White in "The Fatal Ring," and Alice Joyce in "The Triumph of the Weak."

Saginaw Short Notes

D. W. GRIFFITH'S film spectacle, "Hearts of the World," was presented at the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, Mich., during the week of July 21 and attracted large crowds daily. The wonderful picture played in competition with hot weather, but despite this handicap experienced a heavy patronage, an attendance that steadily grew. Patrons found the interior of the theatre much cooler than the outside atmosphere, and then forgot all about the weather in the thrills of the production. The audiences were frequently aroused to patriotic demonstrations, and occasionally could not even be kept in their seats, arising in salute to the French "Marseillaise," and again towards the close in honor of their own fighters across the sea. The enjoyment of the picture was greatly enhanced by the special score of music which was excellently rendered by a large orchestra. The Franklin Tattler, the weekly publication of the theatre, was devoted almost entirely for that week to "Hearts of the World," with the cast of characters, acts, synopsis, and interesting features in connection with the film. The folders were distributed to all attending. The prices ranged from 25 cents to $1.50.

AMONG the coming attractions scheduled for the Franklin are Virginia Pearson in "Her Price," on July 28 and 29; Madge Kennedy in "The Danger Game," on July 30 and 31 and August 1; Bryant Washburn in "Twenty-one," on August 2 and 3; June Caprice in "Miss Innocence," on August 4 and 5, and William Farnum in "True Blue," on August 6, 7 and 8.

THE feature attraction at the Bijou theatre July 23, 24 and 25, was "Parentage," which was widely advertised and which was well patronized. An increased price of 25 cents was asked, including the war tax.

OUR old friend, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which has so often trod the boards of Saginaw theatres in the past, was seen once more on July 25, 26 and 27, but this time it was not accompanied by any brass bands or the atmosphere of bloodhounds and colored troopers. It was the screen version at last of that historic story and play, and it was presented at the Mecca-Palace theatre, with Marguerite Clark in the double role of Little Eva and Topsy. Other pictures at the Mecca-Palace during the week preceding "Uncle Tom's Cabin" were Harold Lockwood in "The Landloper" and Fatty Arbuckle in "Good Night, Nurse," on July 21 and 22, and Dorothy Dalton in "The Kaiser's Shadow," on July 23 and 24.

News from Fond du Lac

THE benefit performance of "Over There," put on at the Henry Boyle theatre Monday and Tuesday, July 22 and 23, under the auspices of the Loyal Order of Moose, resulted in a considerable addition to the yarn fund maintained by that organization. More than 2,000 tickets were sold by members of the order.

MANAGER F. R. SMITH of the Bijou has booked the government picture, "Pershing's Crusaders," which is released by the First National Circuit, for a three-day run early in September.

"TARZON OF THE APES," which was shown at the Henry Boyle early in the season, is to return and this time will be presented at the Bijou at popular prices August 6 and 7. The latter part of August the Bijou will present "The Unbeliever."

Lawford Manages Franklin in Saginaw

C. W. LAWFORD, of Sharon, Pa., has assumed the management of the palatial $150,000 Franklin theatre of Saginaw, Mich., one of the Butterfield circuit houses. He became manager Sunday, July 21, and for his opening week presented D. W. Griffith's great picture, "Hearts of the World," which met with splendid success.

Mr. Lawford is well known in Eastern theatrical circles, and was former Reis Circuit manager, having been in charge of theatres in Elmira, N. Y., Erie, Columbia and New Castle, Pa.; Lancaster, O.; Jamestown, N. Y., and Bradford, Pa. From there he went to Sharon, Pa., where for the past three years he has been manager of the Morgan Grand theatre.

Mr. Lawford, in Saginaw, succeeds A. E. Denman, of Chicago, who has been in charge of the Franklin theatre, temporarily, since the recent resignation of A. J. Moeller. Mr. Lawford, together with Mrs. Lawford and their two children, Maybelle and Harry, made the trip to Saginaw from Sharon by automobile, passing through Akron, Norwalk, Fremont and Toledo, O., Monroe, Plymouth, New Hudson, Milford and Flint, Mich. He reports a successful trip on the 365-mile journey, experiencing only one tire blow-out and no engine or other mishap. He found the roads to be excellent practically the entire distance.

Theatres Changing Hands

ILLINOIS

C. W. Burnham has purchased the interest of F. D. Whittington in the Auditorium theatre at Benton, Ill.

Thomas Matthews of Oakland, Ill., has purchased and will operate the motion picture theatre in Newman. His son, Leland, of Detroit, will have charge of the house.

O. Z. Smith has leased the Pastime theatre from the owner, Jesse Osborne, in Kansas, Ill., and has announced his intention of putting on shows of the better class.

INDIANA

Wm. Pearlman, of Attica, Ind., has purchased the Princess theatre at Williamsport, Ind., and opened the theatre July 13 for the first time in three weeks. J. C. Rucker was the former owner. This is the only theatre in Williamsport.

The Gem theatre at Columbus, Ind., has been taken over by the Moore Amusement Company of Kokomo, it is announced by R. Schull, who will be located there as assistant manager. F. J. Fouch had operated the Gem for the past several months.

Burt Inks, of Ligonier, Ind., has bought the White Light theatre in that city from N. Tillman.

The Novelty theatre on Main street, near Seventh street, Evansville, Ind., has been taken over by the Strand theatre management. Manager Russell states a definite policy has not been decided upon, but it is probable the class of pictures showing there will be raised.

The Crystal theatre building, Anderson, Ind., has been purchased from J. W. Lovett by J. C. Welsh, owner and manager of the "Happy" Lou Whitney Stock Company. The building will be leased out for a picture theatre, it is understood.

MICHIGAN

W. A. Taylor of Jackson has assumed the management of the Strand theatre, Escanaba.

John McCarthy of Winona has bought the Star theatre, Houghton, from Andrew Bram, and has already assumed the active management of same.

MINNESOTA

Former Manager A. W. Dibble is again in charge at the Rex theatre, Hutchinson, Minn., W. F. Atkinson having transferred the property back to him.

MISSOURI

Sears and Jones have acquired the leases on the Empire and Majestic theatres in Chillicothe, Mo., giving them control of the exhibiting business in both Brookfield and Chillicothe.

NEBRASKA

Manager Robinson is again at the Home theatre in Blair, Neb., having bought out Frank Greeley's interest. He plans to move the theatre into a larger building shortly.

WASHINGTON

The Class A Theatre Company of Hillyard, Wash., has sold the Class A theatre there to Manager Newton, recently of Spirit Lake. Mr. Newton has taken a five-year lease on the building, and will remodel the theatre, installing another projection machine.

The Liberty theatre motion picture show at Creston, Wash., is now owned by Ramey and King, Mr. King having bought R. E. Appling's interest.

WISCONSIN

J. V. Hogan, who has been manager of the Beverly theatre in Janesville, Wis., for the past two years, has gone to Rockford to assume the management of the New Midway theatre there, owned by Ascher Brothers.

Ray Bauman has sold his interest in the motion picture show at Hillsboro, Wis., and the shows are now under the management of Hassler and Bingham.

Harry Huntzicker has assumed management of the Mabton theatre, Mabton, Wis., and associated with him is Dr. J. R. Symth. Marcus Mount has charge of the music.

A. O. Chudley has sold the Coliseum theatre equipment, in Sandview, Wis., to a theatre in Cle Elma, and has gone there to accept a position as manager of the house.

You Can't Believe Everything---

But it is a safe bet that when exhibitors themselves enthuse about the way screen reviewers handle a pen after sitting through a picture in weather like this YOU CAN BELIEVE THAT TRUTH IS BOUND TO OUT!

Just look at this! While the thermometer was getting ready to go over the top and slide down on the other side of 100, this letter came:

"I read most of the Exhibitor Reviews by Mr. Harrison in MOTION PICTURE NEWS and I claim his judgment is to the point. From what I hear, most exhibitors are reading the reviews, and I believe some are very well paid by reading them and using their guidance in selecting pictures. Several have told me the reviews are a great help to them in booking films."

Very truly,

FRANK TICHY,
Minneapolis, Minn.

But Wait! Don't go yet. Listen to this:

"Extend our best wishes to P. S. Harrison—the best motion picture critic on the map today."

Governor Stevens Guest of Theatre Owners

GOVERNOR WILLIAM D. STEVENS, of California, was guest of the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association at their by-weekly luncheon July 24, and was the principal speaker on this occasion. Briefly he outlined the great work the theatres of California had done for the government in connection with the four-minute men, and by the use of their screens.

William V. Cowan, commander-in-chief of the four-minute men in California, was also present, and laid before the exhibitors the plan of the California organization, which is to provide the theatres with an added attraction. Mr. Cowan stated it was the intention of his organization to raise the plane of the four-minute men to such a high standard that theatres ultimately would advertise the four-minute men similar to the stars who appear, not only in their lobbies and on the screen, but in all advertising that the theatres use. The plan was heartily approved of, and the commander-in-chief was assured of all co-operation possible on the part of the Los Angeles theatremen.

Los Angeles theatremen have found that many wives and dependents of soldiers are not acquainted with the red tape which they must necessarily go through to secure benefit payments from the government, and therefore slides have been distributed to the theatres announcing that all dependents who have not registered are requested to call at the City Hall at once, and this work will be taken care of for them by the city. This is but one of the numerous movements started by the theatremen of Los Angeles which has proven a benefit to their patrons and the government, and the same plan followed in other cities might cement a friendly feeling for the theatres and prove of general benefit to the entire industry.

Arthur Lamb with Metro at Los Angeles

THE vacancy in the Metro branch at Los Angeles, made by the resignation of Harry Ballance, who went to Paramount-Artcraft Exchange, is to be filled by Arthur B. Lamb, who has been with Metro for more than two years, serving as salesman out of the Los Angeles office, and for the past eighteen months manager of their Salt Lake branch. Mr. Lamb is particularly well known in Los Angeles, and well liked by the exhibitors in the Southern California territory. The Salt Lake office has been placed in charge of B. F. Rosenberg, who has been identified with the Metro west coast sales forces for some time.

These appointments were made by Supervising Representative Harry Lustig, who has been in Los Angeles for the past two weeks, and announcement of the appointments were made prior to his departure for New York on the 21st. Mr. Lustig was called East for a conference relative to conditions in the West, and the Metro program and Screen Classics for the coming year.

Bert Lubin, who has served as salesman for the several coast Metro exchanges, has returned to New York, accompanying Mr. Lustig.

Baum Booms Business at Portland

THAT Sol Baum, who has succeeded Gus Metzger as manager of Universal's Portland office, is anxious to carry on the policies started by his predecessor is evident from the manner in which he is endeavoring to keep in touch with exhibitors from the Northwest territory.

Throughout Mr. Metzger's regime the Portland Film & Supply Company, now known as the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., mailed snappy little editorials containing worth-while suggestions to its exhibitors every week.

Baum's first effort in this direction is in the shape of a letter calling showmen's attention to the cooperation Uncle Sam is willing to give them in putting their shows over.

Film Delivery by Auto Trucks

J. A. KOERPEL, branch manager World Film Corporation and president of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, has announced that he has arranged with a motor truck owner for him to engage six auto-trucks to have their main terminus in Seattle. One truck will run from Seattle to Portland, Ore., one from Seattle to Blaine, and one from Seattle to Pasco. The same time these three trucks start in Seattle, three others will start for Seattle from Portland, Blaine and Pasco. In this manner the exchange men of the Northwest will be getting the best of the express companies that have not been attending to business in this section. Often it has taken a week or longer to get a film to Portland by express, when a letter would traverse the same distance in a day and a half. The express companies went around with a "I should worry" expression. This will now be stopped. Mr. Koerpel started this same auto system between Boston and Washington, D. C., three years ago. It is still in operation.

Noble Leaves Butte for Portland Theatre

PAUL NOBLE, well known Butte theatre manager and publicity man, has just departed for Portland, where he will assume the management of the Columbia theatre. While his appointment to the new post is considered a substantial promotion for Mr. Noble, opening an unlimited field for future progress in the theatrical world, his many friends regret his departure.

In addition to managing the Columbia he will also take charge of the publicity of the Liberty theatre, another of Portland's leading picture houses. The first important position Mr. Noble had in Butte was to manage the old Imperial theatre, North Main street. There he originated clever lobby displays which attracted wide attention. Later he was with the Pacific Film Exchange here, when Grombacher & Bailey conducted it.

Portland will not be a new environment for Mr. Noble, as he was manager of the National theatre in the Rose City for several years, and also was branch manager at Portland for Metro. This was after he started in the film game in Butte. Two years ago he returned to this city to assist Frank Bailey, the owner, in operating the American theatre.

Mr. Noble's work in publicity in connection with the American stamped him as a man of ideas and execution. He is a consistent user of newspaper space, a firm believer in printer's ink, and also avails himself of the billboards and lobby displays. His lobby displays have won more than local recognition. He is a member of the advisory board of the Motion Picture News, and he attributes the appointment to that position of honor to his lobby creations.

Salt Lake Sees Woman Salesman

WORD comes from Universal at Salt Lake that they have introduced the first road saleswoman to exhibitors in that territory, and that Miss Donzella Cross, the saleswoman referred to, has the ordinary man backed clear off the map when it comes to producing film business. Manager Hager's first meeting with the young lady dates back to a few weeks ago, when she dropped in on him at his office to sell him a set of books. She soon convinced him that she thoroughly understood the art of salesmanship, and he in turn convinced her that she was wasting her time as a book agent. Her first week out in "tough" territory netted $600 new business with 25 per cent in checks to cover her contracts. When Joe Brandt, general sales manager for Universal heard of her record, he announced his intention of trying out a few women in Eastern territory.

It is also reported here that Melvin G. Winstock, manager for L. J. Schalifer attractions, Seattle, has also caught the saleslady fever and has started a woman on the road.

S. W. Smith Visits Vitagraph Plant

THE father of the Vitagraph Smith family, Mr. S. W. Smith, is paying a visit to the Hollywood studio of the company, and is the guest of his sons, W. S. Smith, general manager, and David Smith, director. This is the father of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph, and Victor Smith, who represents the Vitagraph Company in Europe.. The father of the Vitagraph Smith family resides in Santa Barbara, Cal., and is a most ardent motion picture fan, his advanced age not preventing him from witnessing the showing of practically every Vitagraph subject projected in Santa Barbara theatres.

William Duncan has again shattered serial production records in the filming of "The Fight for a Million," which will all be "shot" within a few days, the company now being busy on the fifteenth and final episode. This will be a multiple thrill, to use the words of some of the players who are now assisting Director-Star Duncan in putting on the climax.

"A Matter of Mean Elevation" is a five-reel O. Henry story filmed by David Smith. This features Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon.

Montgomery and Rock are now making a beach comedy under Director Howe; and Director Paul Hurst is in the second and third episodes of the new serial—title unannounced—which stars Tony Moreno, with Carol Halloway as his leading woman.

Price Cutting Not in General Favor

Los Angeles theatremen have been converted to the belief watching with interest the results of the lower priced policy that has been inaugurated at Miller's theatre and the Symphony, and it is now the consensus of opinion that the cut in prices has not in any way benefited these houses, and it is not probable that any other manager of downtown theatres will reduce the price.

Miller's Theatre lowered the price from fifteen, twenty and thirty, the uniform price charged at all business section theatres, to ten, twenty and thirty cents when the theatre went under the management of the new owner, Carl Ray. At the same time the number of front section seats was materially enlarged, so that there are now about five hundred chairs for the ten cent admission. One week later the Symphony, which came under the direction of a new manager from the East, reduced the price to ten and fifteen cents from fifteen, twenty and thirty cents, plus war tax.

LOS ANGELES theatremen have been converted to the belief that the industry, to remain healthy and profitable, must have programs of the best possible. By lowering the admission price, it is argued, the theatres will not be in position to increase or hold up to the present schedule for appropriations for the necessary improvement of their programs or the presentation.

Colorado Houses Rebook "Liberty"

EDWARD ARMSTRONG, manager of Universal's Denver office, reports that within the last week he has received requests from three theatres for repeat bookings on "Liberty," the serial featuring Maria Walcamp and Eddie Polo. The theatres which enjoyed the blessings of "Liberty" to such an extent that they brought it back a second time are the Odeon theatre, Colorado Springs; Colonial theatre, Denver, and Pikes Peak theatre, Pueblo.

"Liberty," when this serial first was released, it cleaned up for them in all these houses, and their managers have decided that a repeat ought to do the trick again this summer.

The opening at the Colonial in Denver increased Wednesday business 25 per cent, and indications are that the highest hopes of the managers will be realized.

What Seattle Exhibitors Say

MANAGER SAM W. B. COHN, of the Liberty, Spokane, has switched over to the feminine ranks for ushers in his theatre. The substitution is proving a success.

CHARLEY PACKERITZ, manager of the Empress, Spokane, recently played "The Kaiser" at advanced prices, and had the biggest attendance in its history with the exception he played "Mother-O-Mine" also at advanced prices.

J. H. McDONALD, manager of the Strand, Walla Walla, Wash., has just booked up "Special Attractions," to begin with "Smashing Through" and "Hell Bent."

W. B. HARTWIG, of Dillon, Mont., says he does good business as long as he features REAL features.

ROSCOE F. KERNAN, of the Palace, Great Falls, Mont., ran "Hell Morgan's Girl" three times, and "The Kaiser" twice, breaking all records, and he says he thinks he will run them again.

J. P. HARDY, of the Rex, Townsend, Mont., has not closed his theatre yet, for the summer, and does not think he will do so.

V. LITIZETTE, manager of the Liberty, Helper, Utah, says that if one shows good, strong pictures during the summer months, he need not close the playhouse during the warm time.

JACK MELDRUM, formerly manager of the Seattle Exchange, of the Universal Exchange, is now manager in Denver under Edward Armstrong, general manager of the Inter-Mountain territory.

A. BUTLER has installed a motion picture theatre way up near Mt. Rainier, Tacoma, almost 14,000 feet above the sea level. He will show pictures once a week. The balance of the time he will take pictures of the mountain country.

JOE LUCTS, controlling the motion pictures in Centrallia, Wash., recently took a trip to California with Mrs. Lucts.

FIRE in the Liberty, Shelby, Mont., caused a loss of $500. Part of this was covered with insurance.

THE new Pantages theatre, Spokane, Wash., was recently opened under the management of E. Clark Walker. Moving pictures will be shown from time to time. The house seats 1,375.

F. B. WALTON, former owner of the Rose, at Colfax, Wash., has bought the American, at Bellingham, Wash.

OSCAR PETERSON has bought the picture house at Zillah, Wash.

THE management of the Majestic, Boise, Idaho, has opened a house in Middleton, Wash.

J. W. HEDGES' new theatre has been opened to the public at Meridian, Idaho. It has a seating capacity of 500, and was built at a cost of about $8,500. It is modern in every capacity, and is a pride to the city.

THE PAREX FILM CORPORATION, which will furnish William L. Sherry Service for this territory, has opened offices on Film Row at 202 Third avenue, Seattle. L. A. Todd, formerly of the General Film Company, has been appointed manager for the Seattle district, and W. W. Armstrong will be road representative.

MANAGER HEARN, of the Seattle office of Triangle, was in Portland for a week, and found business splendid. He is surprised that business is so good for the summer time. It is the best summer season he has ever witnessed.

Additional Seattle News

ALBIN STUFFLEBAUM, formerly connected with the Triangle Corporation in Culver City, as property manager, was in Seattle recently. He is on his way to Alaska, where he will engage in the canning business.

A. C. SMITH, owner of the American and Liberty moving picture houses in Dayton, Wash., was a recent visitor to Film Row.

MANAGER W. A. MEAD, of the Seattle office of the Universal Film Exchange, recently remarked that the "Bluebird" office is doing more business than they have been looking for. Mr. Mead has also said that he has found that the exhibitors are beginning to realize that it pays them to exhibit high-class films. They find that where a poor film will bring a poor price and lower the name of the house the better film will bring a better price and bring more patrons. Mr. Mead has also said that he finds that the exhibitor finds it is absolutely necessary to show short reel comedies and news reels, as these often save the day.

In and Around Denver

PATRIOTIC Denver is loading up on war pictures this week, with big runs where such pictures are being shown. Hundreds were turned away at the Orpheum Sunday night, when the S. R. O. card was posted long before the lights went out. The Orpheum is showing Griffith's "The Hearts of the World" for an indefinite run.

NOTWITHSTANDING a previous showing a month ago at the Broadway, "My Four Years in Germany," is showing to full houses at the Rialto.

THE ISIS is having a good run on "To Hell With the Kaiser." All of which shows that Denver simply eats 'em alive when it comes to war pictures.

"THE EAGLE'S EYE" started Sunday night at the Empress, one of Denver's popular vaudeville houses, with a showing of one episode each week. A packed house received the initial number, which would indicate that a serial of this kind along with a good vaudeville program can easily be successfully put across.

THE EMPRESS THEATRE, at Salida, has also booked "The Eagle's Eye."

CARL RAY dropped in on Film Row early this week to rearrange service for his Amuse theatre, at Cheyenne, and incidentally to take in the Wild West annual show at that place. Ray is going over plans for a new Colorado theatre, and says he is about ready to break ground for the excavating. He declines to give the location or further particulars at this time.

H. D. CASSIDY, who recently opened headquarters here for Sherry Service, has resigned to succeed Ward E. Scott, who last week severed his connection with Mutual to assume the managership of the local Pathe office. Mr. Cassidy was in charge of Mutual's office at Salt Lake, when they closed there last winter. He has had much experience both as an exhibitor and distributor, and knows the film game from A to Z. He is well and favorably known in the West, especially in Denver territory.

H. B. HURST, owner of the Deadwood Opera House and secretary of the Black Hills Exhibitors' League, is spending a few weeks' vacation in Denver. He was the guest for several days last week of G. R. Anderson, a leading exhibitor at Rawlins, Wyo.

THE TWENTY-SECOND AVENUE THEATRE changed hands again a few days ago, and has been taken over by Paul Shallack, who will open in a few days.

H. L. CRAIG, road salesman for Fox, has returned from the Western slope, and says business is booming. F. L. Normand, also of the Fox sales department, is back from Western Nebraska and the Black Hills.

R. E. CHURCHILL, brother of Manager Churchill, of Fox, has returned from his first trip into Idaho and Western Wyoming territory, and reports that he has booked Idaho solid for Theda Bara in "Cleopatra," and William Farnum in "Les Miserables."

CHURCHILL states that F. M. Davis, now operating the Virginia theatre, at Shelley, Idaho, will open his new theatre of the same name there about August 15. It will be one of the finest theatres in Idaho, and cost about $15,000 exclusive of equipment, which includes a new pipe organ. Seating capacity about 600.

W. P. HORNE, formerly connected with the C. & A. Amusement Company, at Pocatello, has taken over the Columbia theatre, formerly the Rex, at Rexburg, Idaho. He has installed new equipment, including two new Simplex machines and a model cooling system. The Columbia seats 700.

H. W. PEERY, manager of the Ogden, at Ogden, Utah, has enlisted in the navy.

ANOTHER important local change announced this week is the resignation of H. A. Kyler, formerly of St. Louis, who arrived here three weeks ago to take charge of the Denver office of the American Standard Motion Pictures Corporation. Mr. Kyler is now connected with Supreme Photo Plays Corporation of Denver. His successor has not yet been announced.

PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT announces bookings of their service next year by the Princess and Rialto, Denver; the Princess, Colorado Springs, and the Princess and Lyric at Cheyenne.

H. I. ROSEFIELD, local manager for World, is up at Estes Park this week placing pictures that will hold the summer visitors at that national resort. E. P. Briggs, also of the World, is covering the Black Hills Circuit.

MRS. DE WOODY, of Baldwin & De Woody, Gothernburg, Neb., is in Denver arranging service.

C. S. RANKIN drove up from Clayton, New Mexico, in his Hudson Super-Six last Sunday for a visit with Denver Exchange managers. Mr. Rankin owns the Mission theatre at Clayton, one of the finest houses in that section.

ANOTHER Denver visitor recently was Percy Edwards, head of the Wyoming Feature Film Company, operating theatres at Thermopolis, Basin and Worland. He came down to arrange new service.

A. P. DEUS, who runs the Strand at Walsenburg, is visiting Manager Churchill, of the Fox Exchange.

What Butte Is Doing

THE statement published in a recent number of a moving picture journal to the effect that R. C. Hudson, local manager of the Universal branch and of Jewel productions, is booking "Hearts of the World" in this State, is erroneous. Mr. Hudson wishes to correct the report. He is kept busy looking after the demand for Jewel plays and Universal offerings, he says.

AT present Mr. Hudson is booking "For Husband's Only." He reports exhibitors in this territory as grabbing up this feature eagerly.

HOUSES in this district are still playing "Over the Top," with Sergeant Empey, now Captain Empey. Reports all indicate big receipts, the theatregoer evidently preferring strong war plays of this character.

MANAGER FRANK BAILEY, of the American, had a very successful run with "I'm the Hellbound of Alaska" the past week. Bill Hart is always a big card in Butte. Not long ago he paid a personal visit to the mining city, and he was warmly received.

ADMIRERS of Bessie Love were delighted with her in "How Could You, Caroline?" presented the past week at the Ansonia to good crowds. The little Orpheum theatre, just across the street from the Ansonia, both houses being operated under the direction of Phil Levy, is doing a nice business at popular prices.

"THE YELLOW TICKET," the great Russian white slave play, went big at the Rialto last week. This house is doing a splendid business right along.

A. C. RALEIGH, former publicity man for the Rialto, did some clever drawing for the annual number of the "Montana American," which is just off the press. Raleigh also has a couple-page story under the caption, "Famous People I have Met," in the anniversary number of Butte's well-known weekly periodical.

STARTING on a month's tour of Montana's leading houses, Mel Wilson, of the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange, left Butte this week, to visit Great Falls and other Northern Montana cities. He will explain the new contracts for his firm and sign up exhibitors who wish to take the service. The new contracts date from September 1. In his work Wilson will be assisted by Ben Collier. However, Mr. Collier will devote most of his time to Southern Montana.

C. R. BARNET, with Famous Players-Lasky New York office, was a Butte caller the past week.

J. B. BUSCH, well-known Pathe representative out of Butte, is visiting exhibitors.

Los Angeles Short Notes

J. F. HINES has sold the Elite theatre, Presidio avenue and Sacramento street, to S. F. and W. J. Clark, formerly of the Novelty theatre, Martinez.

H. GROBEMAN, one of the owners of the Jose theatre, 2363 Market street, is going into the army training camp. His partner will continue the business.

LOUIS WENER has joined the colors, leaving his partner, Charles Goodwin, to conduct the Larkin theatre.

I. OPPENHEIMER, who, with Frank Levy and A. C. Karski, owns the Royal and New Polk theatres, is recovering from a serious attack of gout. Mr. Karski has just returned from his vacation, which was spent in the Yosemite.

M. E. CORY, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, will, on July 20, start for Los Angeles, accompanied by his family, making the trip by automobile and camping on the way. Mr. Cory will spend several days among the Los Angeles studios.

J. H. GOLDBERG, formerly manager of the Bluebird exchange, has enlisted with the Marines.

H. L. BEACH, president of the Beach & Krohn Amusement Company, operating the Chimes, Strand and Lorin theatres in Berkeley, has been enjoying a brief vacation in the mountains.

Clemmer Establishes "Cool" Record

MANAGER HOWARD S. CLEMMER of the Clemmer theatre, Spokane, Wash., has proved beyond a reasonable doubt the justice of his claim that his theatre is the coolest place in town. With the thermometer outside hovering around 97, inside his theatre the indicator said 70 on one of Spokane's hot days recently, and that temperature is maintained without a flicker. The house is cooled and heated by the Sturdevant indirect system. In addition to this comfortable temperature which is a perpetual feature of the house, there is the additional assurance that the theatre is of absolutely fireproof construction throughout, built entirely of concrete and steel. Dr. Clemmer is a genius in the picture house business, even to the extent of commercializing his hair—what there is left of it.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

WITHIN the past week a number of additional Southern California territory theatres have been closed. The Torrance, at Torrance, owned by G. P. Porbort is undergoing a number of improvements. All the others reported are dark because the owners believe business during the hot months will not warrant continuation of the shows. The list includes the Elite at San Pedro and Twenty-seventh street, Los Angeles, owned by J. J. Tully; Fairyland, 722 West Twenty-fourth street, Los Angeles, owned by C. W. Webb; Liberty, Santa Paula, owned by Frier Brothers; Electric, Penoche, Nevada, owned by Charles A. Thompson; Majestic at Calexico, owned by P. E. Carr; Silver Bell at Silver Bell, Arizona, owned by William Seligher.

THE Arcade theatre at Holtville, California, owned by D. Wilkinson, suffered loss of their entire projecting room equipment early this month when film was ignited by a hot carbon. "Please Help Emily," Mutual release, and "That Doggone Dog," Strand comedy, were burned. The theatre has been equipped with new machines and re-opened on July 20.

THE popularity of Sessue Hayakawa in the California territory is showing by the bookings of the Mutual exchange. The Hayakawa films released by the Haworth Pictures Corporation beginning September 1 will be shown at Clune's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, and already thirty days' solid booking after the opening run has been booked.

MANAGER JOE MERRICK of the Los Angeles Mutual branch, has been very successful in booking Outing Chester Travelogues. They are being used first run at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, and from here they are booked at the Plaza, Grand and Bell at San Diego; Liberty, Long Beach; Rosemary, Ocean Park; Strand, San Pedro; Regent, Riverside; De Luxe and Hollywood, in Los Angeles.

A NUMBER of additional theatres have been added to the list known as Users of all Universal output. These include the Rex, owned by S. Pourus, and the Elite, by G. Chantillos at Bakersfield; C. L. Langley's Hippodrome at Taft; M. Gore's Casino in Los Angeles, and the Jen-Dike at Snowflake, Arizona.

EARL SINKS, formerly affiliated with the Pathe St. Louis exchange, is a new member of the Universal Los Angeles branch.

POPULARITY of the News Weeklies in Los Angeles was never so great as at the present time. Practically every down town first run theatre has one or more of these weeklies on every program. The most recent to fall in line was Manager T. L. Tally of the Broadway theatre, who this week added Universal Animated Weekly to his program.

A MOST enthusiastic letter, filling an entire page, has been received by Manager Dave Bershon from F. O. Adler, manager of the Victoria theatre, San Pedro, California. Adler contends in conclusion, that nothing short of a calamity will keep from packing the house when Lois Weber's "The Doctor and the Woman" is shown if the theatre manager will but advertise. "And the pleasing feature to a manager concerning this feature is," the letter concludes, "that after you get out and hustle in a crowd the people all go away well satisfied."

MISS FREDA RUBENSTEIN, assistant to General Manager Sol Lesser of the All-Star Features Distributors' San Francisco exchange, is spending two weeks in Los Angeles installing a new system, and combining this work with a vacation.

THE Cody theatre, owned by Sol Kerrigan, at Deming, New Mexico, was totally destroyed by fire on July 10, the morning following the dedication of a new number forty-five American photoplayer costing $7,150, which had just been installed. The theatre consisted of twelve hundred seats with complete stage and equipment, and plans have already been made for its rebuilding.

FRANCIS SULLIVAN of the American Photoplayer Company, is now covering Arizona installing seven new instruments recently sold in that territory by H. F. Charles.

G. P. GRUMBAUM, secretary and treasurer of the American Photoplayer Company, and B. R. Van Valkenburg, inventor of the instruments, are spending several days in Los Angeles and at the factory of the Robert Morten Company in Van Nuys. Fred A. Miller has purchased a number forty-five American Photoplayer for the Ninth street house he recently sold to Carl Ray.

WILLIAM WILHOUSE, American Photoplayer salesman of the Los Angeles branch, has enlisted in the navy.

H. F. CHARLES has just made an auto trip to San Francisco and return by way of the Yosemite Valley. The trip north was made in fourteen hours and twenty minutes, but considerably more time was taken on the return. Charles secured several orders for American instruments on this trip.

A MUSICAL program of unusual merit is being prepared by the Kinema theatre staff and will be given July 29, the date of the dedication of the new Robert Morten organ now being installed in that twenty-three hundred-seat house, and will be ready for public use on that date.

GEORGE MANN, special representative covering the West Coast Fox exchanges, is returning to San Francisco after several days spent at Los Angeles with Manager M. A. Walsh. While here he engaged Edward Holland, former manager of the Sennett theatre, Los Angeles, as salesman for Southern California, and S. S. Wesley, salesman for Arizona. While here Mr. Mann saw the greatest number of shipments for any single day since the opening of the exchange go out to exhibitors on July 20.

W. H. HILTS, owner and manager of the Alhambra theatre at San Diego, was in Los Angeles this week booking film for his house, and by the time he left he had secured programs for the next two or three months. Mr. Hilts came to Los Angeles at this time to accompany his daughter, Frances, this far on her way to an Atlantic port where she will embark with nurses for the European battlefield. Miss Hilts recently completed her training and is a graduate Red Cross nurse.

IRVING LESSER, for the past eighteen months manager of the Los Angeles All-Star exchange, following several years' experience in the film business affiliated with the San Francisco branch, has resigned his position and enlisted in the navy, and has been selected to serve as a member of the division of film of the Committee on Public Information. He will remain, for the present at least, in Los Angeles. Louis Hyman, who has been connected with the San Francisco branch, has been selected to serve as manager, and came to Los Angeles this week.

Simplex

It doesn't pay

to make counterfeit Simplex parts

Reason No. 1

Unless they are very accurately made, and of the finest materials, they hurt the quality of the projection; and that's the very thing Exhibitors use the Simplex for.

Reason No. 2

To make Simplex parts as we make them, and as they ought to be made, requires an immense outlay for special machinery; and such an investment is not warranted because (a) the Simplex seldom needs repairs, and (b) mighty few Exhibitors could be enveigled into using counterfeits.

To the Wise this reveals one of the strongest reasons for using the Simplex: the Machine that's so excellently built and that needs so little repairs that it doesn't pay to imitate even its smallest parts.

And Besides, this tells something of the character of the men who sell the Simplex, men who sell the acme of projection without the slightest hope of making a nice additional profit on repairs.

The character of Simplex Projectors, Parts and Distributors can't be imitated.

IT IS GOOD BUSINESS TO CUT OPERATING COSTS
IT IS YOUR PATRIOTIC DUTY TO HELP SAVE COAL

IT WILL PAY YOU TO READ THIS LETTER!

Mr. Exhibitor:—

Just a year ago we announced the perfection of an idea that we said would revolutionize motion picture projection. That idea was projection with Mazda Projector Lamps by means of the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter, instead of carbon-arc lamps.

The idea has been quite generally adopted and our prophecy is rapidly coming true.

But this letter concerns a phase of the business due to war conditions which we did not anticipate, that makes the adoption of the new idea doubly important to exhibitors: first, because it effects a big saving in operating costs and insures better screen illumination; and second, because projection with Mazda Projector Lamps effects a big saving in coal—and fuel conservation is one of the biggest considerations at this time.

The United States Fuel Administration is at this time especially advocating to electric lighting companies and lamp manufacturers that they recommend and encourage the use of High Efficiency Incandescent Lamps, as a means of saving coal. Recently many notices have appeared prominently in the newspapers, suggesting that consumers reduce the amount of electrical energy used, in order to make sure that the present inadequate fuel supply will carry through the winter.

This desire of the Fuel Administration proves conclusively what we have been claiming in the application of light used for motion picture projection. Just as the carbon-arc lamp has been discarded for general store lighting, so will carbon-arc lamps be discarded for motion picture projection, because of the greater efficiency of Mazda Projector Lamps.

Projecting with the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter and Mazda Projector Lamps costs only about 25% as much for electric current as when carbon-arcs are used. This difference of 75% cost represents waste of fuel, and should be eliminated. If all motion picture theatres were equipped for Mazda Lamp Projection in place of carbon-arc projection, the saving in coal during a year would reach the enormous amount of 160,000 tons, or 4,000 carloads of 40 tons each.

That amount of saving is sufficient to warrant your attention to the possibilities for conservation in your theatre.

And in addition to the saving in operating cost, the use of the Argus-Sheck Adapter and Mazda Lamp Projection insures better screen illumination; the elimination of "flicker" and eye-strain; no noise or hum; no dust; and it greatly simplifies operating so all the operator's attention may be directed to the head of the machine and to improving projection.

Furthermore, the adoption of Argus Equipment will eliminate the cost of carbons, plano lenses, arc-lamp jaws, terminal wires, etc., that are now a constant expense.

* * * * *

The great majority of picture theatres can adopt Argus Equipment. In a few cases conditions are not right. Before accepting your order we will make sure that the conditions in your theatre are correct for Mazda Projection.

Decide now to lower your operating cost, get better projection, and "do your bit" in the important matter of coal conservation. Write us for details and the application of Argus Equipment in your theatre.

Respectfully yours,

W. W. Cudmore

Vitagraph's Pledge

The big fight is on, Mr. Exhibitor.
The fight for you, your patronage, your audiences.
For over twenty years Vitagraph has been fighting
For better plots, better stories, better pictures,
Better machines, better projection, better theatres.
Vitagraph has been called the cradle of the industry.
Vitagraph was and is a pioneer.
Vitagraph blazes the trail.
Its successes are the milestones of the industry.
Producers have come and producers have gone, but Vitagraph "carries on."
The "Spiritualist" of 1898 was the father of the Big "V" comedy of 1918.
The "Raffles" of a decade ago foreshadowed the "Within the Law" of to-day.
Vitagraph was first in patriotism.
Remember our "Washington" and "Lincoln" series, and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."
Vitagraph was first in preparedness.
Remember "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."
Much that the industry has to-day is the result of Vitagraph's labor,
The result of Vitagraph's constant and untiring experimenting.
Vitagraph has now evolved the last word in this combination of art and business.
It is prepared to turn over to its distributing organization a fixed standardized product of known value
Which will be released under a plan that has never before been possible of execution.
During the coming year Vitagraph will release
Eight Earle Williams features,
Eight Alice Joyce features,
Nine Harry T. Morey features,
Nine Bessie Love features,
Nine Corinne Griffith features,
Nine Gladys Leslie features,
A total of fifty-two Blue Ribbon plays to be released, one each week, with the stars rotating in regular order.
Into these Blue Ribbon features will go all that is best in production, direction, casting, scenarios.
Stories from the best books, the best plays and the best magazines.
A treasure store of photoplay material that has never been equalled.
And it is this perfection of production that enables our distributing organization to present a service that is absolutely guaranteed.
It is our purpose, in addition, to release during the coming year FOUR SPECIAL FEATURES which will be made under MY PERSONAL SUPERVISION.
We need only cite such productions as "Over the Top," "Within the Law" and "The Girl Philippa" to gauge the box-office value of Vitagraph special productions.
Vitagraph's additional services in the serial field and the shorter program productions will assure exhibitors of one source from which they will at all times be able to draw for their patrons
A standardized, constant week-in and week-out service of superior films.
With this combination, therefore, of quality, product and modern method of rental, the exhibitors of the country are assured a new era of commercial freedom.
The plan of this releasing system and the tremendous benefits it offers to exhibitors are fully set forth in the following pages of this announcement.

A Democratic, Not an Autocratic, Booking Plan and Policy

Vitagraph's Distributing Organization presents a booking plan for its Blue Ribbon Features never before offered in the industry, and which is unequalled for definiteness, reliability, dependability and elasticity;

A plan which furnishes the release date of each picture of each star throughout an entire year;

A plan which complies with the booking needs of every exhibitor;

A plan which permits of the booking of 52 features for 52 weeks, with each star rotating at six weeks intervals;

A plan which also permits of the booking of a star series with the same definite knowledge of each release;

A plan which likewise allows, in the case of an exhibitor's emergency, for the booking of one feature of a star series.

Back of this plan is a policy of "Live and Let Live," and which, therefore, does not make one exhibitor bid against the other;

A policy wherein each exhibitor handles his own business, involving his own investment, according to his own dictates, not according to the dictates of others;

A policy of profits to the exhibitor—not a policy in which actual operating losses occur, notwithstanding the fact that the exhibitor does a capacity business;

A policy which does not exact either in theory or in practice the greatest tariff that the product will bear, and still just allow the exhibitor to remain in business;

A policy NOT based on greed, which in the case of the railroads, was stamped out by the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission;

A policy which not only secures the exhibitor's investment through definiteness and commercial justice, but assures adequate returns;

A policy which recognizes the exhibitor as a business man, the owner of his own business, wherein genuine service, devoid of a tinge of sham, can and will be furnished; wherein DEMOCRATIC instead of AUTOCRATIC practices will be exercised, and wherein the door of both the Home Office and of all of its branches will be constantly open, so that actual aid can be given in whatever problems may arise;

A continuation of the jealously guarded reputation which this distributing organization has enjoyed since its inception almost four years ago, a reputation for economic fairness, for business equity in our dealings;

A policy which has gained and maintained for us the confidence and the business of so large a percentage of the exhibitors of the United States and Canada.

General Manager and Treasurer,

Alice Joyce

Star Series

Eight Productions

THE very soul of Alice Joyce shines through her eyes and its appeal is one of filmdom's most potent attractions. She has been called the modern Mona Lisa, the screen's Madonna—tributes inspired and born of the marvelous appeal which she makes to the hearts of all who see her. Her work is a reflection of herself, and that self makes its way deep into the affections of the picture-goers. Never will her dramatic portrayals in "Within the Law" and "Womanhood, The Glory of the Nation" be forgotten; never will they be surpassed. During the coming year Miss Joyce will be presented in eight vehicles which are strong in dramatic values and rich in opportunity for this girl of wondrous beauty.

These productions have been set for release at intervals of six weeks, as follows:

October	21, 1918	April	7, 1919
December	2, 1918	May	19, 1919

Bessie Love Star Series

Nine Productions

BESSIE LOVE is the Peter Pan of the screen, the winsome child who is ever young, a breath of the hills and waving trees. There is a bit of the tomboy in her make-up, accounted for by the fact that she is possessed of nature's rarest gift—sense of humor, which is common sense plus ability to see the bright side of life. In this she is truly richly endowed, and she is the perfect debutante comedienne, shedding laughter and joy as a bright light sheds its rays. In her are combined girlish beauty and splendid histrionic talent. She is the ideal girl for happy pictures, and yet possesses extraordinary dramatic power to register the pathos so necessary for contrast.

Nine productions have been selected for her, to be released at intervals of six weeks, on the following dates:

November 4, 1918	March 10, 1919	July 14, 1919
December 16, 1918	April 21, 1919	August 11, 1919

Harry T. Morey

Star Series

Nine Productions

THE vigor, the manliness, the two-fisted fighting strength, the honesty and determination that are the outstanding characteristics of Harry T. Morey have brought him to-day to the point where he is the favorite of audiences, who see in him the typical American. His portrayals are always clean-cut, and he works with an earnestness that makes his roles LIVE and vibrate, as did his "Joe Garson" in "Within the Law" and "Paul Strong" in "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." For him in the next year there have been selected nine plays, which give this MAN plenty of elbow room to register the virility that is his.

These will be released at intervals of six weeks, on the following dates:

October 14, 1918	February 17, 1919	June 23, 1919
November 25, 1918	March 31, 1919	July 28, 1919

Corinne Griffith

Star Series

Nine Productions

CORINNE GRIFFITH is to an exhibitor's program what the rose is to June—a beautiful flower symbolic of sweetness, steadfastness and happiness. She is a daughter of the South who has won her place quickly and firmly with audiences which appreciate artistic talent and fair young womanhood perfectly blended. She is not a promise, but a realization already here, and her successes of the past are the basis of a pledge for the future. She is the ideal society girl type, and for her there have been chosen nine stories, colorful and strong in theme, and each one fitting her personality with the exactness and nicety of Milady's glove.

The Corinne Griffith series will be released at intervals of six weeks, arranged as follows:

October 28, 1918	March 3, 1919	July 7, 1919
December 9, 1918	April 14, 1919	August 4, 1919

Nina had been a sensation in the little South American capital. And on the biggest night of all, when the curtain was ready to go up, it was discovered that Nina had disappeared. And in due time the sleepy capital forgot its idol.

But John Armstrong, prospecting and trading with the South American Indians in the mountains, could not forget the face that he had seen on the posters And then one day he found her—miles and miles from civilization, the captive of a band of music-loving natives who had spirited her away that she might entertain them with her wondrous voice.

The mountains had transformed the artful Nina into a veritable goddess. All her frivolity was gone. Her soul and that of the man who had rescued her were attuned to the lofty heights. But would this princess of the Andean peaks be lost to him forever when she came down to the man-dominated levels? Can a woman change with the altitude? Would the descent bring her down to the commonplace, even as the heights had glorified her? Would she—but see how it is treated by O. Henry, the only man who could have conceived such a theme. You will be thrilled—and surprised.

WILLIAM FOX NEW POLICY

SERVICE and profit to the exhibitor will be the William Fox slogan during the season of 1918-1919. The greatest selection and the best productions in the history of the William Fox organization are assured.

FOUR BIG TIMELY PICTURES

These productions are of such tremendous importance—bear so strongly on the events of the hour—that merely to mention them is to prove their power to produce profits for exhibitors.

1. WHY AMERICA WILL WIN! Based on the life of General Pershing—an intimate, romantic, carefully prepared, authentic story reaching back to the American general's barefoot days and showing him on the farm, as schoolmaster, in West Point, in Japan, and as a fighter in the Philippines, Mexico and France. Staged by Richard Stanton in seven reels.

2. QUEEN OF THE SEA, with Annette Kellerman. A six-reel, sub-sea phantasy, featuring Miss Kellerman in daring aquatic stunts amid settings of surpassing beauty. A sure-fire box office winner. To be released on a rental basis.

3. The PRUSSIAN CUR. Captain Horst von der Goltz, for ten years a secret agent of the Kaiser, is one of the principal characters and makes amazing disclosures of the conspiracies of Ambassador Count von Bernstorff and of the dastardly plots for the destruction of American factories, for subsidizing newspapers, for interfering with the draft and for crippling ships, wrecking trains and throttling governmental war activities. Staged by R. A. Walsh and enacted by a large and remarkable cast, including Miriam Cooper.

4. WHY I DID NOT MARRY. A morality picture that is both striking and timely and produced along unique lines, giving it a powerful box office appeal. It is the life story of the world's most beautiful woman—a pet in the lap of luxury. Her reasons for refusing to marry make a most graphic and absorbing story with stupendous profit possibilities.

In a short time William Fox also will announce the release date of the Theodore Roosevelt film, "Put the Flag on the Firing Line."

STANDARD PICTURES

Twenty-six Standard Pictures are to be released during the coming season. These will be the greatest productions in this classic series. There will be eight releases each by Theda Bara and William Farnum and ten all-star productions.

VICTORY PICTURES

Twenty-six Victory Pictures will be released. This group includes Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh and other foremost stars of the screen.

EXCEL PICTURES

Twenty-six Excel Pictures will include releases by Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland, Jewel Carmen, Jane and Katherine Lee and others.

SUNSHINE COMEDIES

Henry Lehrman, the master director of this type of production, will produce twenty-six Sunshine Comedies.

MUTT AND JEFF ANIMATED CARTOONS

Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, the cleverest pictures of the sort on the market today, will be released at the rate of one a week.

A Big Hit at the RIVOLI Theatre, New York

"Nothing on the bill, however, surpassed the enthusiasm of yesterday's spectators when the American veterans of Chateau Thierry were pictured with battle torn flags at the foot of the Washington statue in Paris. Detachments of American soldiers on parade also elicited prolonged applause."—N. Y. Herald.

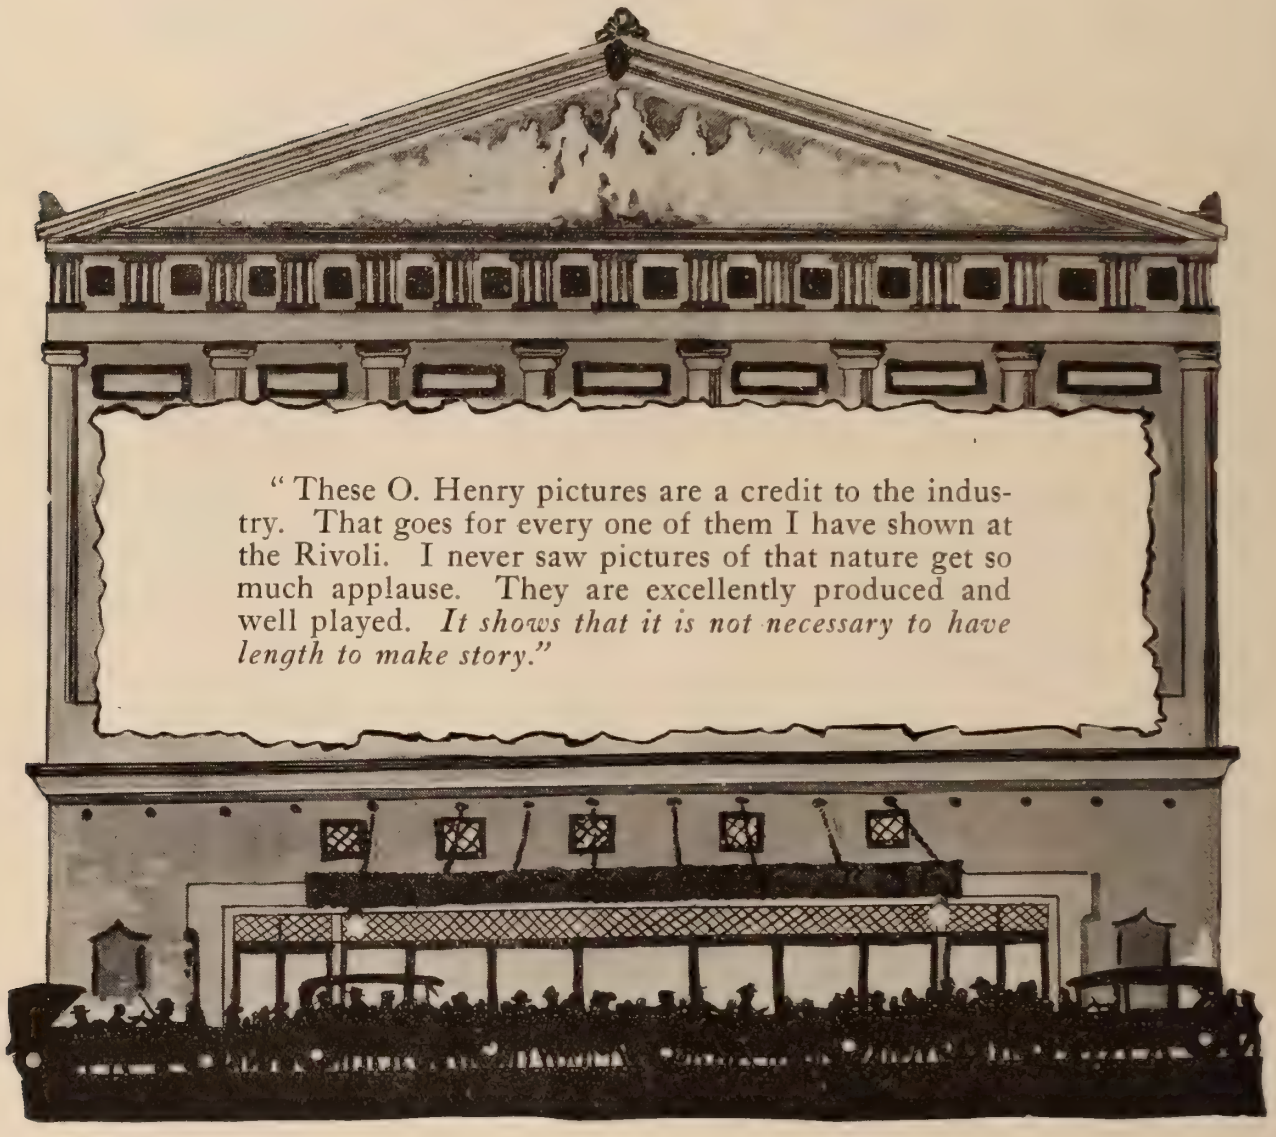
You Said a Pageful, Mr. Rothapfel

And We Appreciate It

Concerning the O. Henry Films at

THE RIVOLI:



" These O. Henry pictures are a credit to the industry. That goes for every one of them I have shown at the Rivoli. I never saw pictures of that nature get so much applause. They are excellently produced and well played. It shows that it is not necessary to have length to make story."

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the RIVOLI and of the Rialto theatres in New York, needs no introduction to the trade. The most conspicuously successful motion picture exhibitor in America, his frank independence and his genius for estimating the true appeal of any photoplay are proverbial. He spoke as above after the latest premiere of an O. Henry picture at the Rivoli, "Springtime a la Carte." Other O. Henry pictures shown there recently are numerous, and more are expected to follow.

WARNING Don't Be Misled!

General Film Company finds it necessary to inform all motion picture exhibitors that it is the sole distributor of the tremendously rousing release

"THE HISTORIC FOURTH OF JULY IN PARIS"

shown at the RIVOLI Theatre, New York, the week of August 4

This film, the official American Red Cross picturization of the first joint celebration of America's national holiday in France, is distributed for the American Red Cross by General Film Company exclusively.

Another distributing company has hastily circularized the trade for a film of somewhat similar title "booked at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, week of August 4, 1918."

However, the American Red Cross picture distributed by General Film Company, and no other, is the picture shown at the Rivoli Theatre the week of August 4. It was not only shown, but it was advertised in advance by Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel and correctly described by him as his Rivoli offering relating to this Fourth of July event.

See your nearest GENERAL FILM COMPANY exchange at once for bookings on this superb film,—the official picture of the American Red Cross—the demonstrated most stirring, exclusive and authoritative release which set thousands cheering at each performance at

Hodkinson Service offers the only channel of distribution for the producer that assures him an equitable, fair and just presentation to the exhibitor and which satisfies the demand of the industry for a closer relationship between exhibitor and producer.

Mr. Lester Park, President of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, says: "When we made our initial announcement in the trade press we had not decided on our distribution arrangements, but, after careful investigation, I was entirely satisfied that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation offered the only distribution that would bring our product to the exhibitors on the fair and equitable basis we desire, and still allow us to be in the quality company our product deserves.

"I have been one of the few producers who has worked with the exhibitor toward solving his problems, and I believe that by placing the Lillian Walker Productions as I have I am helping to build a structure that will be mutually beneficial for all."

The above is one reason why Lillian Walker Productions will be released as part of Hodkinson Service.

In the role of Kirk Marden, J. Warren Kerrigan will be seen as the son of an American railroad magnate; the embodiment of the American spirit to fight for right—and fight fair. In the Orient he meets William Real and befriends him. Upon their return to America he learns that his father is about to be ruined by a business rival. How he steals not only the papers that had been obtained through intrigue, but also the heart of a beautiful girl, presents Mr. Kerrigan in one of the most virile roles that he has ever interpreted.

The Question

WHY are Screen Classics INC productions the really big, sure fire money makers of the picture field today?

Why have "Revelation, The Slacker, Toys of Fate, Draft 258, My Own United States, Lest We Forget, Blue Jeans, The Million Dollar Dollies" and the latest and greatest "To Hell with the Kaiser" proved the biggest success of the year?

The Answer

BECAUSE - after the star, the play and the director were selected, the productions were supervised and personally carried forward in the making by the 2 greatest picture makers in America today - Maxwell Karger and George D. Baker.

When we say greatest we mean the men who could combine art, drama and human appeal in the making of pictures that would attract and hold audiences and make the box office the happiest department of the theatre.

supervises Metro and Screen Classics INC. productions. He has been "the man behind the production" with many of our greatest successes and the entire motion picture industry is greatly in his debt for the sane upward progress of the screen.

GEORGE D. BAKER

supervises the west coast productions and his record is one of success following success. We present him as well as Mr. Karger as a guarantee of a continuance of supreme quality in the coming productions.

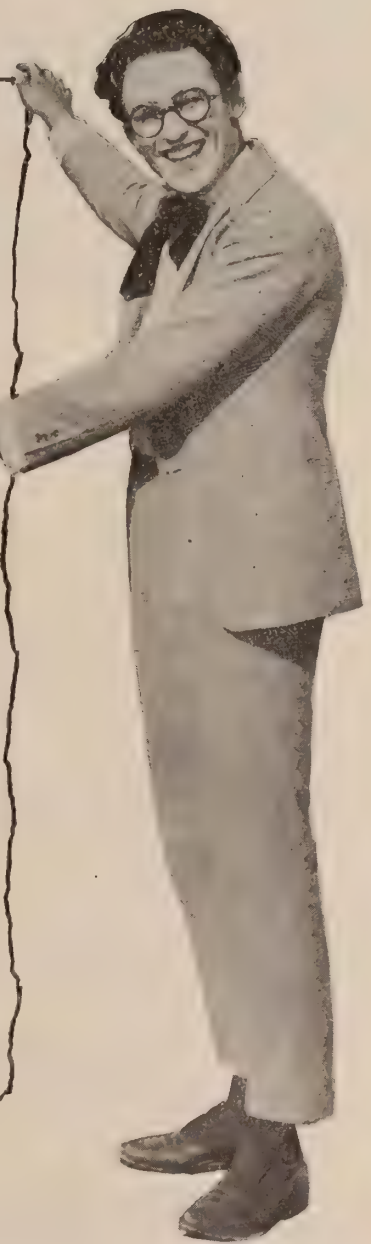
That's What They All Say—
"one of the screen's finest comedians"
HAROLD LLOYD

the star of the one reel Rolin comedies bearing his name. Mr Lane, the photoplay critic of the Boston Evening Record; is to be complimented upon the soundness of his judgment.

By TAMAR LANE

Everyone is quite ready and willing to pin new words of praise on those who have already won success and distinction, but there is not the same promptness and effort to praise those who have not yet won a certain degree of fame. With this thought in view we take our Oliver in hand to smear a few honeyed words on the career and personality of Harold Lloyd, one of the screen's finest comedians, and one whom we think some day take his place along side Chaplin and Arbuckle as a wholesale producer of laughs.

Even today Harold Lloyd is making comedies which compare favorably with those of Chaplin and Arbuckle. Lloyd is featured in one reel comedies which are made by the Rolin company and distributed through Pathe. His films are always laughable and consistently good. We have yet to see a poor one. Lloyd is a young man, apparently about 25 and if managed properly will some day make a big name for himself in the screen world. He is original in his work and imitates no one either in make up or in acting. He is unique as a slapstck comedian for the reason that he wears absolutely no trick make-up or character clothes. His only comedy accessory being a pair of horn-rimmed glasses.



You are wasting your opportunities if YOU ignore advertising.

Volume 18. No. 7 August 17, 1918

Service That Serveth Not

A SHORT time ago an exhibitor wrote to a prominent producer and asked for help.

He had run this producer's pictures, the letter stated, for two years. He did well with them; had no general complaints. But two of the stars did not draw the public. Probably, he admitted, he did not know how to advertise them. Would they tell him how? He noted they spoke highly of their exhibitors' aid department.

The executive who got the letter referred it to the director of advertising, who in turn referred it, without comment, to the head of the sales exploitation department.

The latter, a nice young man, ruffled his hair and his files for some time and passed the letter along to a man who had been engaged to follow up the bookings of a special picture within a limited territory and who by working shoulder to shoulder with the exhibitor had scored everywhere a signal success.

This man smiled over the letter and sent it back to the sales exploitation department marked "not in my territory."

And the exhibitor is still waiting and probably wondering.

TO be very frank—and the subject is too big to be treated otherwise—exhibitor service today is a downright travesty.

There are some fair exceptions to the statement—principally the instances where a few field men of genuine sincerity and ability are, singlehanded, and without much connection with the home office, giving the exhibitor the kind of assistance he needs.

The situation is peculiar.

If you were to put it up to every manufacturer today he would agree heartily with you that service is the thing—that good advertising will double a picture's earnings, that the exhibitor needs the advertising help, etc., etc.

Some will point with pride to their liberal appropriations and large staffs devoted to exhibitor service.

If you were to put the plain facts before these manufacturers—that a very large share of white paper, ink, postage, and salaries was utterly wasted in this well meaning but misdirected effort—you might start an upheaval, but it's a thousand to one shot you wouldn't accomplish anything.

The reason is simply this: That service is not understood, nor its importance at all appreciated by the head of the firm himself.

Service today is talked about, written about, tangled around by the ears like a manikin—and that's all.

It is being press agented.

And we are still, after all, in the press agent era.

The industry isn't old enough, sane enough, business-like enough to know and use service.

Of course the service era—I mean simply the era of advertising and selling a product for all it is worth—is on the way.

It's bound to come.

Right now it's a higher course in the motion picture curriculum which we haven't worked up to.

We're still in Grade A, engaged sternly in a wild scramble for the materials of picture making, and merely playing at service.

IT isn't realized that some day the concern able to help, to make its dealers sell pictures, will get all these materials without scrambling for them.

Stars, for instance, will be won not by the biggest bank roll in sight around the poker table but by that concern which can truthfully say:

"We can sell your pictures to a greater public than any other concern.

"Therefore, we can make your pictures earn more money for you (and incidently for ourselves and the exhibitor).

"We do this by giving dealer service, by helping him advertise to the greater motion picture public."

Salaries have ruled thus far; service will rule some day.

It is only fair to the manufacturer to state that right now he is severely handicapped in the giving of service.

The star who doesn't know or care what it means, sticks clauses in the contract which detract from or ruin the selling and merchandizing quality of the picture advertising.

It sells the star's name, not the picture.

Directors who believe that the making of the picture is everything and the selling of it an automatic matter will not co-operate.

Releases follow so fast upon production—by the program system—that the advertising campaigns are prepared before the picture has been seen.

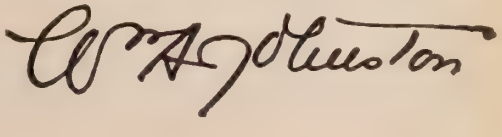
But, some day, all these factors are going to be suspended from service—not the other way around, as today.

Service—the genuine merchandising of pictures—will dominate the organization.

Pictures will be the most widely advertised commodity in the world.

This advertising will emanate from the exhibitor with the manufacturer's close co-operation and material help.

And the worthwhile trade paper will be the direct avenue of this selling co-operation, giving the exhibitor that advertising which he in turn will give to the million-fold picture public.



Serving It with Speed and Ginger

MERTON G. LEWIS may be a perfectly capable Attorney General of the State of New York.

In fact, we believe he is—for he certainly bears all the marks of an ideal candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. He possesses, in the highest degree, the prime requirement of a typical candidate—the ability to talk himself out of more votes than any campaign manager could win for him.

For example—Candidate Lewis discovered last week that the reason Hearst has said words of praise for his Republican opponent, Governor Whitman, and for the probable Democratic nominee, Al Smith, is because of Hearst's interest in killing any possibility of motion picture censorship in New York State. Hearst, according to Mr. Lewis, induced Governor Whitman to veto the censorship bill two years ago and he is now making preparations to be on the right side of two of the candidates in the event of the bill being resurrrcted.

All of which sounds interesting.

But if Mr. Lewis' memory were other than that of a candidate he would recollect that film men are opposed to Governor Whitman this year because of their allegation that his hidden influence killed the Sunday Opening Bill in the Legislature last session.

And if his tongue were less that of a candidate it would feel that this opposition to Governor Whitman would become support for Merton Lewis in the Republican primaries.

But candidates must issue their daily statements, and to Mr. Lewis' regard for the rules of being a candidate film men are indebted for a frank exposition of his mental processes.

And, incidentally, they are grateful for the reminder that "it is possible that a censorship bill will come up again in the next Legislature."

Last week an editor hated to send a sheet to press—so many kind friends whispered rumors of big news events to him that he was afraid all the news might happen just too late.

This week—with the thermometer at 102—all the rumors have melted away and about the only news our heat-muddled brain can recall is the fact that Chester Beecroft was a caller at the News office last week.

* * * *

THERE'S a line in this week's Exhibitor to Exhibitor Reviews which almost made us feel that the heat was getting in its deadly effects.

The picture covered is "A Hoosier Romance" and the line where the name of the producer and distributor are given reads "Selig-Mutual, August 18th."

Shades of J. J. Kennedy!

A Selig on the Mutual program!

One of these days we'll wake up to find Paramount releasing through Goldwyn—or vice versa.

But—aside from the strange jars given to one's recollections of the Licensed and Independent days—the reviewer says that this Selig-Mutual is a good picture. You'll find the details on page 1043.

* * * *

Johnny Grey—disciple of the live wire—is back in our midst, directing the advertising end of B. A. Rolfe's Houdini serial.

Friend Rolfe's ability as a picker for his advertising work is a pretty good omen for his independent producing venture.

* * * *

AT this season of the year, a week without a policy announcement would be a rarity indeed. This week it's Vitagraph—with a big insert in the advertising pages and considerable news in the text.

And we'll say one thing for the Vitagraph announcement—it certainly does abound in facts and figures, names and dates. Forty-two features a year—and the exhibitor who wants to can sit down now with his pencil and calendar and name the day for every star every week in the year.

Fox, after grabbing all of the limelight last week, again gets a share in this issue with further details of a producing schedule that sure is a big one.

* * * *

General Film and Frank Tichenor had to worry along this week without the aid of our old friend Jake Gerhardt—according to a vacation post card dated Sayville, Long Island.

What sort of second sight is it which tells a fellow when a 102 degree week is coming?

HARRY SCHWALBE and J. D. Williams were hosts to a select luncheon party at Mrs. Astor's domicile on Monday. We know it was select because we were there ourselves and because there were only eight others gathered at the table.

The guests—consisting of the trade paper editors—were later given an advance peep at some of the scenes of "Italy's Flaming Front."

It's too early for us to tell you anything about the picture, so that all we can do is arouse your anticipation.

And, oh, yes—we can give you the proof of that word "select"—those present included Harry Schwalbe, J. D. Williams, Lieut. Prochet, C. L. Yearsley, James Hoff, Wid Gunning, Leslie Mason and Al Cormier.

Heading the Honor Roll: Fred Beecroft, Advertising Manager of Motion Picture News, has received a "safe arrival" card announcing the fact that his son is now on the ground "over there" ready to whip the Hun. Son is a volunteer with the New York Guard Artillery after six months spent in the British artillery service.

Also heard from the veteran "Pop" Hart during the week that his son was on the way across. And a letter from Sergeant George Gould, formerly of the News staff, who has been drinking French wine for a few months now.

REMEMBER what W. A. J. said last week forecasting the state of the trade paper columns when the tax question loomed up again?

The first "Letter from an Exhibitor" arrived before the ink had really dried on the editorial page. You'll find it on page 1032; a conservative statement of the present condition of the small town exhibitor.

Right on the opposite page you'll find the latest news from Washington regarding the tax situation.

And, speaking of Washington—the probability of an eighteen to forty-five draft doesn't seem to have created any stir in picture ranks. Is it because any film man who survives beyond the age of thirty-one has usually made the stroll to the altar rail that gave him a dependent?

There is one thing about stretching the draft limit to forty-five—it will make certain the screen's retention on the essential side of the work or fight ledger. There was always the possibility that the picture business could be run successfully by men above thirty-one and still perform its function of sustaining the home morale—but we can't quite picture an industry with all the workers from eighteen to forty-five drafted to other pursuits.

Seat Tax Also to Be Doubled

Washington (Special)—Following the news last week that the present plans of the House Committee on Ways and Means call for a doubling in the admission tax of motion pictures under the new tax bill and a tax on five cent houses, comes the statement from Chairman Kitchen that the levy on theatres according to seating capacity will most likely be doubled.

This seat tax has been in effect almost since the beginning of the war in Europe, being one of the emergency measures framed to meet the loss of revenue through the decrease in imports at the outbreak of the European strife.

Now it is proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means to adopt the following doubled tax in the new legislation:

Theatres having a capacity of less than 250 persons must pay $50 instead of $25, as at present. Where the seating capacity is between 250 and 500 the levy is increased from $50 to $100. Places seating from 500 to 800 persons will pay $150, instead of $75. All places of amuesment seating more than 800 persons will be assessed from $100 to $200.

World Finds No Alarm in Tax Boost

In order to satisfy itself on the probable effect of the increased tax on admissions to theatres, World Pictures has been making inquiries through its exchange managers which have resulted in the following opinions.

The American public has become accustomed to war taxes, and in view of the fact that patriotism has never before been at such a high pitch, the great army of movie patrons will look on the increased tax as another means of not alone winning the war, but of showing their desire to contribute to the nation's fund.

The theatre has always been a safety valve where the surcharged emotions of our people can be released through the effects of entertainment. We Americans are highly emotional and when laboring under a big strain both mental and physical, we go to the theatre to find relief.

It may be for the first few days or even two or three weeks there will be a slight dropping off in attendance, but the public will come back as it always has done and the moving picture will attract as strongly as it ever did.

Every alert business man knows that when things look black is just the time to make the biggest effort to boost his business. Any sensible man will not permit himself to drop in the "dumps" just because the way is a little rough. He takes another yank at his belt and goes against the game determined to smile, and when he smiles he generally wins.

There is a limit to human endurance, and when this is reached the reaction sets in. Americans can stand just so much of a strain and when this point is reached they go to the theatre. Experience has taught theatrical managers that when we have had panics due to financial causes at first, the public kept away from their theatres; but it was only for a short while, and then they came back in order to keep their minds off their business and to obtain relaxation.

Everything points to a big year, notwithstanding the tax. Big crops, and plenty of money and America winning in the war, all of these go to indicate the theatre managers had better brush up the standing room sign only and have it ready.

National Association Active

Headquarters in Times Building Scene of Many Gatherings During Week—Red Cross Seeks Aid in Distributing

DURING the week which has closed August 4, there were more meetings at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in the Times Building than during any similar period since the Association was formed two years ago.

The best evidence of the healthy conditions of the organization is the fact that the meetings have been very largely attended and in several instances every committee member was present.

On Monday, President Brady called together the heads of the export departments of the producing and distributing as well as the exporting companies to meet Mr. Carl Byoir, Associated Chairman of the Committee on Public Information.

On Tuesday a similar meeting was arranged with the executive officials of the producing and distributing companies of the National Association.

On Monday afternoon President Brady, accompanied by Marcus Loew and F. H. Elliott, executive secretary, attended the organization meeting of the committee which has been formed to secure funds for the erection of a suitable memorial to Major John Purroy Mitchel, former mayor of the City of New York, and who was the friend of the motion picture people.

On Wednesday occurred the first luncheon of Division Five of the National Association, which was the biggest affair of its kind ever held by the organization. There were 92 persons present at the luncheon, although arrangements had only been made for 50. This in itself indicates the rapidly increasing interest in the work of the Association.

On Thursday the members of the Fuel Conservation Committee recently appointed by President Brady met for the purpose of organizing. Mr. Marcus Loew was elected chairman and Harold Edel secretary. The other members of this committee includes: Samuel Rothapfel, B. S. Moss, J. H. Hallberg, P. A. Powers (who was represented by Paul Gulick), and President Brady, who was represented by Executive Secretary Elliott.

This committee will create an advisory board with representatives in each important city. J. H. Hallburg was designated as technical advisory to the committee. President Brady has telegraphed Harry A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator at Washington, of the organization of the committee and that it is anxious to cooperate with the Fuel Administration. A conference will be arranged with Dr. Garfield in Washington at an early date.

At a meeting of the directors of the Motion Picture Exposition Company held on Thursday afternoon, routine matters were considered and arrangements made to call together for a conference representatives of all of the companies which have contracted for space at the exposition scheduled to be held at Grand Central Palace, October 5-13.

The committee which was designated earlier in the week to cooperate with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information met with Associate Chairman Carl Byoir at the National Association's offices on Friday noon. The following were present:

The big meeting of the week was held on Friday afternoon to meet Joseph Johnson, Director of Publicity of the American Red Cross. Mr. Johnson is a former Fire Commissioner and upon being introduced by President Brady, expressed his pleasure at meeting so many of his old friends whom he had known when an official of the City of New York. Mr. Johnson outlined the plans of the executives of the American Red Cross who seek the fullest cooperation of the film interests in telling the Red Cross story on the screen. From the expressions which were made by those present, it is evident that the wish will be gratified and nothing left undone by the motion picture industry, particularly the producers, distributors and exhibitors, to see to it that every aid at their command is rendered to the Red Cross.

Small Towns Against More Tax

Exhibitor Warren Declares in Letter to Ways and Means Committee "It Can't Be Done"—Asks Second Thought

THE small town exhibitor is as patriotic as his more prosperous brother in the city, but people seldom see the small exhibitor's side of any question. For that reason V. A. Warren, of Massena, Va., has written as follows in regard to the proposed additional tax on theatre admissions:

Hon. Claude Kitchin, Chairman
Ways and Means Committee,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We are a small town of about five thousand inhabitants and operating a moving picture house, we are prepared to give up anything to win this war and desire to do our bit. We feel our conditions are the same in thousands of other small towns, and respectfully beg to show you our side of the matter of the proposed increase of tax on theatre admissions, also which will bring you the most money in taxes.

Of about 20,000 picture theatres in this country a few in large cities are doing a wonderful business, can stand any increase, increase admissions and still thrive owing to the ever constant supply of patrons.

With us little fellows whose business depends upon the same small population every night since war began our business has shrunk about 25 to 40 per cent. Boys leaving, higher cost of living, etc. We raised our admissions to 15 cents from 10 cents, paying 2 cents war tax out of same with an attendant small loss of business, but a gain in receipts to pay the soaring cost of film rentals and other expenses. We must raise and keep raising the standard of pictures to keep them coming; this means more and more expense.

As we understand it, you now propose to take out of our 15-cent admission 3 or 4 cents instead of 2 cents war tax, leaving us a net of 11 or 12 cents, with our population decreasing and people having less and less money for amusements. We cannot increase our prices, and the people are paying all they can stand. Mr. and Mrs. Smith and their two children used to be down about five or six nights a week. Now, they come about three. Increase and they will only have enough to come twice, and so on. If we cut our pictures, the people are wise, business falls off. We have tried these things out to see just what we can do, and this represents average conditions in small towns.

Many will be obliged to cut back to 10 cents, add double war tax 2 cents, total admission, 12 cents. The Government in spite of doubling present tax, getting the same 2 cents in each case. With only 10 cents instead of 13 cents net to the exhibitor he will cut film service using cheaper and poorer pictures and the attendance will fall off.

You may say: "Be patriotic, pay the double tax and maintain same standard." How? An exhibitor cannot maintain the same show at 11 or 12 cents as he can with 13 cents net. If we keep our prices up to 15 cents (13 cents plus tax 2 cents) we must give exceptional pictures which are costly. If the show is cheapened the price must go down.

True many theatres are making much more money for various reasons. Cannot you levy a tax, however large, on the "net earnings" of all the theatres? This would allow the little fellow in small villages to exist. As it is, he is between the film exchanges gouging him with higher rentals and increasing expenses and now more tax. The large theatres will flourish under any tax. But is it American policy to put less fortunate out of business.

Many smaller theatres have been closed. Many more will follow under this type of increased tax. Many exhibitors have their all small as it is, and their future tied up in borrowed money, future leases, etc. If you close him up where is he to turn to make his living and meet these obligations? Several of my fellow exhibitors suggested a petition, but I am writing you in an effort to show you our conditions as a simpler plan. It takes money to fight. We all want to do our share big as it may be. If you let the admission tax stand as it is; then levy on the net earnings all will survive, and we think your results much larger.

Thanking you for your kind consideration of our position as set forth, I am

Yours for victory,

V. A. WARREN,
Massena, N. Y.

Romayne in New York with First Picture

H. F. Romayne, Romayne Superfilm Company, Los Angeles, who arrived in New York last week with a print of Superfilm's first independent production, says that his first picture, although not a world-beater, is one of merit and presents a new type of war propaganda picture. Mr. Romayne has his own studio in Los Angeles and says that he intends producing six or eight pictures during the year.

Mr. Romayne's first production is in approximately 5,500 feet and has for its leading character a German-American, Frank Brownley, who has been seen in many independent and program productions in character roles, has the leading part. Paul Wiegel, Nigel DeBrullier, Mrs. Kroll, Betty Burbank and Rae Eberle are seen in prominent roles. Mr. Romayne is desirous of selling his picture outright. He said that he would start on his second production immediately following the disposition of his first.

Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" Delayed

It was announced by wire from the Coast on August 8 that Charlie Chaplin's newest production, "Shoulder Arms," which is to be released through First National, will consist of four or five reels, and may not be ready for release for several weeks. It is said that a number of scenes remain yet to be made. Following this the editing will require several weeks.

"Jack" Root Sends Check for Tobacco

Manager "Jack" Root of the Strand theatre, Pasadena, Cal., sent a certified check on July 30 to Bert Ennis of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" headquarters in New York City. This is the amount secured by Mr. Root for that fund in a two days' collection taken up at his theatre. A side attraction was the Mutual-Strand comedy "Our Lady Nicotine" with Billie Rhodes as the star.

What was the check? Only $226.05 in all, all free-will offering by patrons going in and out of the Strand for two days. Two hundred and five dollars and ten cents was given to the Belgian fund at the same theatre and nearly a thousand dollars to a local knitting fund. Mr. Root paid for all the advertising, which is his share to these war needs, and it generally costs around about $25 so "Jack" is surely doing his share. Mr. Root spends most of his time on an orange grove he has within three miles of his theatre and is said to have bought over eight thousand dollars worth of Liberty bonds.

Mae Murray Sues Universal?

It was reported by wire from the Coast this week that Mae Murray has started a suit against Universal because the latter used the title, "Her Body In Bond," on a picture in which she starred.

Miss Murray asks for $150,000, it is said.

Advertisers See "Italy's Flaming Front"

Following the luncheon and meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers last Thursday at Rector's, the members adjourned to Miles' Projection Room, in the Candler Building, to witness the screening of "Italy's Flaming Front."

Lieut. Mario Prochet, of the Italo-North American Commercial Union, the governmental organization responsible for bringing this latest series of war pictures to America, was present and talked on the interesting phases of warfare depicted during the showing of the films. There were present over thirty members and friends of the advertisers.

Private Joseph P. Reddy, formerly acting editor of the Motion Picture Telegraph and now of the Provisional Ordnance Detachment, located at Camp Raritan, Metuchen, New Jersey, was also present at the luncheon and screening, and was so impressed with the spectacular features of "Italy's Flaming Front," that he secured the permission of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to show one of the three-reel episodes at an entertainment given by the members of his detachment, on Friday evening, August 2, at New Brunswick.

Cleveland Exchanges Elect Officers

The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of Cleveland met last week and re-elected all its officers for another year. They are president, Sam Morris, Eastern Central Division Manager for Select Pictures; vice-president, E. J. Smith, manager Universal Film exchange, and treasurer, J. R. Johnson, manager Vitagraph exchange.

The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers is a branch of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, and was formed for the purpose of dealing with the evils of the film industry in concerted action. The board has done much to overcome some of the shipping difficulties, and has secured the assistance of the transportation companies as to eliminate the unnecessary delays in getting films shipped out of town, and of getting them returned.

Mary Pickford Stays in United States

Mary Pickford this week denied that she intends to go to France, as rumored, to help in entertaining the soldiers. She believes the greatest good can be accomplished in the United States by working steadily and paying Uncle Sam a large income tax.

Miss Pickford's scenario writer, Frances Marion, has already started for foreign shores.

Justin Fair Leaves Pathe

It was announced last week by Pathe Exchange, Inc., that Justin Fair, who had been connected with Pathe in the Publicity Department, has left the employ of Pathe.

Salesmen as an Asset : : : : By Harry Weiss

(Harry Weiss, manager of the Central Film Company, of Chicago, has followed the salesman controversy with interest that might well be called unflagging. The following was prompted, he states, by the W. E. Matthews article in reply to Guy C. Leavitt, and which was published in Motion Picture News of July 27.)

PROMPTED by the interesting discussion of W. E. Matthews and his attempt to shoot full of holes Mr. Guy Leavitt's "Why the Salesman"—I stopped work long enough to give my views on this interesting proposition.

With all due respect to Mr. Leavitt, and in the spirit of friendliness, let me say that Mr. Leavitt is ALL WRONG. Mr. Matthews, on the other hand, puts forth some very logical arguments, which are absolutely true. The distributing or film exchange under the motion picture business today depends upon one of two things—Be the man at the head of a film exchange a wiser guy than King Solomon was supposed to be (and King Solomon, in my estimation, was a darn fool, because he had too many wives), he amounts to nothing at all unless he has salesmanship in him.

Mr. Matthews claims an executive film exchange manager should have 75 per cent salesmanship and 25 per cent executive ability. Mr. Matthews is wrong—he did not make this point strong enough—the head of a film exchange should have 90 per cent salesmanship ability and 10 per cent executive ability. Don't forget that any man with a fair education can hang on to the orders, but in these days of competition, it is the mighty wise boy that can hit the tanks and get the business.

The man that christened the film exchange was all wrong; he should have called it a jobbing house, for that is all that it is. Go to any jobbing house and you will find that the jobber is the middleman between the dealer and the manufacturer. The more successful the jobber, the higher the type of salesmen he has working with him, and don't let anyone tell you that there is such a thing, that there is any business, that has anything to sell—that can get along without salesmen.

Diamonds are worth money—it takes salesmen to sell them. Gold, no matter in what form, is worth $20.00 an ounce, yet the jeweler employs salesmen to buy and sell gold. Don't get it into your head that because you have something that an exhibitor must have, that you can go and commit murder. If an exhibitor does not get a certain picture, he won't go out of business, but salesmanship, being nothing more or less than an argument that puts the prospective buyer in a receptive mood, once you can convince the buyer through your arguments, then he is the man that is sold, and probably over-selling a man is worse than not selling him at all.

The greatest asset in this industry is the salesman who has friends; many a good man has lost out as a film salesman, because his methods of selling were such that he never could go back into that town again.

When Mr. Matthews says that the exhibitor is a shrewd man, he speaks correctly. With few exceptions, the days of the sub-renter, the bicycle rider and the crooked exhibitor have disappeared. It still remains (and the culling process is going rapidly) for a few would-be salesmen to hang out their shingle in some other capacity.

The film exchange managers and salesmen today are divided into two classes: Class 1. The man who numbers his customers among his friends; he is absolutely impartial, he sells a film for what it is worth to the man buying it, and he figures that in the film business a steady customer is a film exchange's greatest asset. Class 2. This comprises those not in Class 1, and who never sell a film unless the exhibitor has his mind set that he must book a certain picture. In my estimation, no one else is a film man, be he either exchange man or salesman. When politics and sentiment leave this business, then it will be as nearly commercialized as it can be. When a manager or a salesman makes up his mind that he knows how to quote a fair price, and stick to that price; when he runs this selling end of the business as he would sell any other commodity, from jobber to dealer, then, and then only, will it dawn upon us that Mr. Matthews' article is absolutely correct, although at the present writing he is as near correct as he possibly can be.

It should be borne in mind that the average exhibitor is alert for good pictures, but many a salesman has spoiled a customer's desire to book, through the salesman's lack of tact. A good salesman will size up his man; he will pick out his prospects, weaknesses, as well as strong points. Salesmanship is nothing but a series of arguments that will convince the prospect. It was not very long ago that I used to instruct our salesmen as follows:

"When talking with an exhibitor, don't tell him how fine his projection is, if you are not sure that it is fine. His regular operator may be sick and some ten-year-old boy may be running the machine tonight.

Don't knock his competitor; other salesmen have already done this. Be different.

"Don't tell him you have the greatest picture on earth to sell. Barnum told him years ago that he had the greatest show on earth—Barnum's dead now.

"Don't promise him the earth with a fence around it, promise him the fence, let him put the earth in it.

"Don't misrepresent, because we have to back our salesmen up; misrepresentation costs money to somebody, and lots of times you lose a customer.

"Don't go out of a town chuckling to yourself because you think you may have put something over on an exhibitor. Unless you are very wise maybe he's chuckling too. Chances are he's put it over you and it won't dawn on you until several days have passed.

"If in your own mind you know that a 300-seat house can't afford to pay the price for an eight- to ten-reel picture, don't try to book him. He can't make money on it."

The head of a large corporation once said to me: There is more money paid for less brains in the moving picture business than in any other business on earth. He certainly had in mind the unproductive job-holding politician, and maybe he was thinking of the salesman who, instead of selling his customer, is busy calling him by his first name on first acquaintance—with one foot on the cuspidor of a booze parlor.

For the good of the business, now that Mr. Leavitt's and Mr. Matthews have gotten me started, why not let some of the other boys give their views on the proposition? Yes, and it could even be extended to the exhibitor himself.

"Kitty Gordon Pictures," a New Company

It became known late Wednesday that a new company had been formed to produce pictures starring Kitty Gordon, with the initial release planned for October. The output of the organization will be known as the New Kitty Gordon Pictures.

Sydney L. Cohan is named as business manager of the company, while Mahlon Hamilton will be leading man opposite the star. The plan is to produce six features a year, each from the pen of Wilson Mizner, well known as a playwright and Broadway light.

Theatres Kick Against "No Lights"

Los Angeles, Cal.—By order of the Fuel Commissioner, display signs and unnecessary lights must not burn in Southern California on Monday and Tuesday evenings of each week. This became effective the fifth of August, and the ruling is made to apply to the entire state.

Theatre men claim that the order is a cause of the recent decrease in attendance, which carries with it a smaller amount of Government tax receipts. Some claim the Government suffers to the amount of more than the total of former weekly bills. The order is looked upon somewhat as an injustice, as practically all power in Southern California is created by water.

The exhibitors are appealing to the Commissioner for a change in the order applying to water-generated electricity.

Johnson Takes Reins

Tefft Johnson, the latest director engaged by World Pictures, has assumed charge of the making of "Snug Harbor" into picture form, with Madge Evans in the stellar role. The camera work is now in progress at the studio in Fort Lee.

Censors Ask for More Salary

Request of Pennsylvania Board Is Turned Down with Reply That Only Legislature Can Get Them More Coin

EFFORTS of Frank R. Shattuck, chairman of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors, to obtain increases of salaries, out of the board's revenues, for the subordinate employees who petitioned for more pay because of the higher cost of living imposed by the war, have met with failure. Mr. Shattuck asked Attorney General Francis Shunk Brown for an opinion as to the chairman's legal right to boost his subordinates' pay, and the Attorney General's office, in reply, stated on July 31 that increases can be granted only by act of the Legislature.

The opinion points out that the act under which the Board of Censors operates fixes the number of employees and their salaries, and the State Constitution provides that no money shall be paid out of the State funds except under a legislative appropriation.

The highest paid employee of the Censorship Board, outside of the three censors themselves, is the chief clerk, who gets $1,800 a year. The pay of the inspectors and assistant clerk ranges from $1,500 down to $1,200, and there are four employees of the board who get only $720 a year. The assistant operator and patcher gets $600 and an assistant patcher gets $480.

It is believed that as a result of the ruling of the Attorney General's office, a bill will be introduced at the next session of the Legislature, which will convene in Harrisburg in January, 1919, providing for raising the salaries of the subordinate employees of the Censorship Board.

The opinion just issued, while absolutely eliminating the possibility of increasing now the pay of the employees, shows that it is possible to increase the number of such workers, as shown by the following clause:

"Under the provision at the end of Section 13 of the Act of 1915, you, as chairman, may, with the approval of the Governor, appoint such additional employees as the work of the Board may necessarily require, the salaries of such additional employees not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $5,000 annually. I think that you might increase the salaries of employees so appointed within the limitation provided. It would seem to me, however, that, under the circumstances, it would be unfair to the other employees to do so."

Review Board Says Drama Falls Off

The production of motion pictures of a dramatic character continues to fall off, according to data based on the review of pictures by the National Board of Review in the course of the first six months of 1918. The number of subjects reviewed in that period was 1,010 and the number of reels 3,171½. This means that the average length of picture was 3.14 reels. In the corresponding period in 1916 the production, according to the same source of information, was 2,216 subjects and 4,850 reels, the average length of subject being 2.19 reels. In the corresponding period of 1917 the subjects numbered 1,525 and the reels 4,066½, the average length of each subject being 2.66 reels. A chart showing the production by subject and reels covering the period for the three years would indicate that the general trend of production by month this year is parallel to that of 1916, while that of 1917 was irregular, reflecting the nervous condition of production while the Government was considering the question of taxation of motion picture production and exhibition. That there may be a deficiency this year is perhaps indicated by the fact that old pictures are being re-issued in larger numbers than usual, judging from current reports.

Anderson Comes East

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—G. M. Anderson, Jesse Robbins, Ford Beebe, Percy Pembroke, Tom Kelly, Fred Church and Joseph Flynn departed for New York by auto on August 7. They plan three weeks for the trip, getting exteriors along the way for a new Anderson production. Interiors will be made at Fort Lee.

A RAW DEAL

He Took a Theatre Over But Didn't Get the Most Essential Part

YOU have to keep your eyes open nowadays when you take over the management of a new theatre—as witness the following letter:

"I have just taken over the management of this theatre and find that there is not a single copy of the NEWS in the house.

"Kindly place me on your mailing list for a year's subscription beginning with the June 22nd issue.

"And please let the back numbers come forward at once or I will be lost.

"A. F. CHAVEY,
"The Hippodrome,
"Wolfe City, Texas."

No wonder the house changed management—or did the former manager carry away his NEWS file with him?

In and Out of Town

R. D. Craver, president of the Broadway Amusement & Investment Company, Charlotte, N. C., dropped in on New Yorkers this week to ascertain the latest in the picture line. Mr. Craver owns a string of theatres in the South and is one of the most prominent exhibitors in this section.

Blanche Sweet, who is appearing in independent productions, under the management of Harry I. Garson, is in New York for a short stay. Miss Sweet has completed recently her first production, under Mr. Garson's management, "The Hushed Hour."

Harry I. Garson, managing Clara Kimball Young, is on from the Coast for a business conference with William Rudolph, his representative in the East.

Samuel Katz, of Balaban and Katz, Chicago, has returned to his home.

J. Suefort, manager of the Ideal theatre, Dayton, O., is here this week.

Priest Organizes "The Film Market"

Robert W. Priest, who has become well known in the motion picture industry during the past five years through his activity in the exploitation and in the purchase and sale of special feature productions, has organized a unique enterprise called "The Film Market, Inc.," under the laws of the State of New York.

This corporation is designed to furnish a reliable and financially responsible channel through which independent producers may market their productions to the best advantage with every assurance that they will be efficiently exploited; and, on the other hand, a medium for the purchase of pictures by buyers for all territories throughout the world, putting them in touch with all available features that are to be had, thereby bringing independent producers and American and foreign buyers in contact under conditions of the fullest advantage to both.

For four years Mr. Priest has made a special study of the production and sale of features and their exploitation, and possesses experience and information of very great practical value in this connection. This information includes every statistic that can possibly have any bearing on the probable earning power of a picture in any specific territory throughout the world, and facts and figures in relation to the production, sale and exploitation of big specials in the past, which have never before been collated.

Honor Roll

George Orth, well known as the "comedy boy director," is now at Camp Upton, surrounded by many faces from the motion picture world.

Fred Rath, well known in the industry, has been heard from in France, and, as might be expected, it was in connection with a show for the soldiers, with music and everything, that Fred was brought to light this time.

Two stepbrothers of Peter Magaro, manager of the Regent Motion Picture theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., who have in the past assisted him in conducting the business of the theatre, have responded to the nation's call. Both are at Camp Lee, Va. Lieutenant Frank Turano is doing office and stenographic work in camp headquarters and Private Jasper Turano is a stenographer in the camp's base hospital.

One of the latest of the workers at the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studio to enter the service of the United States, is De Witt Hagar, company clerk, and one of the most popular of those employed in the organization. Mr. Hagar has entered the Naval Reserve and left last week for San Francisco, probably to be stationed at Yerba Buena (Goat) Island, as a Yeoman of the third class.

F. H. Cassil, of the Kansas City office of the Fox Film Corporation, has just left for the Aerial School of Photography, Syracuse, N. Y., adding another star to the Fox service flag.

Bee Hive Exchange, New York, is contributing its share. Among the most recent are Milton Shonenberger, assistant manager, who has joined the army at Camp Upton; Leon Weisberg, bookkeeper, with the navy at Pelham Bay, and Sol Rovenger, shipping clerk, with the marines.

The National Army has called another of General Film Company's exchange managers. E. J. Drucker, of the St. Louis branch, last Saturday notified the home office in New York of his call, and he was released to Uncle Sam. Mr. Drucker had been making a record as manager of the branch.

Louis Willoughby, Australian actor who played in two Famious Players-Lasky subjects since his recent arrival, has enlisted with the English army, and assigned to the "London Rifles."

Al Santell, recently directing William Parsons in Goldwyn Comedies for National, following engagements with the American, Kalem, Universal and other companies, left August 5 for Camp Kearney.

W. A. S. Douglas, president Diando Film Corporation, formerly private secretary of Charles Pathe, who enlisted in the marines recently, has secured his release from that service, and entered a tank corps being organized in Los Angeles.

George Chesebro, formerly leading man at several West Coast studios, and now a member of the Liberty Army, has been appointed Sergeant after a few weeks' training.

Richard R. Neill and Rollo Lloyd, two players appearing in support of Harold Lockwood in Metro's screen production of "Pals First," will be lost to the films shortly after the conclusion of their work in the picture. Mr. Neill announces that he is going to an officers' training camp on September 15, while all arrangements have been made for Mr. Lloyd to go to Camp Zachary Taylor, at Louisville, Ky., as soon as his engagement is over, to take charge of the arrangements for the entertainment of the men at the post. The rank of first lieutenant goes with Mr. Lloyd's position.

Charles V. Burton, a well known free lance cameraman of Cleveland, is now experiencing his novitiate with Uncle Sam. While waiting for a commission in the observation department of the aviation division, Burton was sent down to Salt Lake City to get some official pictures, it is said. He expects to be getting some good bird's eye views of Berlin before long.

Leon D. Netter, known from one end of Ohio to the other as the energetic young manager of the Masterpiece Film Exchange, will waive a last farewell to his Cleveland friends from the end of a railroad train. He is going to San Francisco, his home, to say hello and goodbye, before joining the navy.

Willard Cooley, a member of Marion Davies' company in her forthcoming Select production, "The Burden of Proof," has received his call from Local Board 121 and goes to Camp Upton.

Henry Ginsberg, who has acted for Joseph M. Schenck and the Norma Talmadge Film Company with Select Pictures, has responded to the call of his country and taken up Uncle Sam's burden against the Kaiser.

Hearty Support for New Loan

Zukor Gets Telegram from Peter J. Schaefer Pledging Support of League — Brunet Bends Every Pathe Effort

EVIDENCE that the motion picture industry is martialing its forces with rapidity and enthusiasm with the single and united purpose of doing its full share in putting the Fourth Liberty Loan over the top continues to multiply in the daily correspondence received by Chairman Adolph Zukor, chairman of the National Association's committee appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department in furthering the publicity campaign of the loan.

Quite the most satisfying and significant feature of last week's developments was a telegram received by Mr. Zukor from Peter J. Schaefer, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Schaefer wired from Chicago, pledging the complete co-operation of the League and stating that the members could be depended upon to forget all minor differences and work as one great machine at the command of Chairman Zukor should he call upon them.

Supplementing Mr. Zukor's telegram came a letter from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, placing his services and those of his organization at the disposal of the committee. Mr. Cohen's letter follows:

August 2, 1918.

Mr. Adolph Zukor,
Famous Players-Lasky Co.,
485 Fifth Avenue.

Dear Sir:

As president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, I am writing to offer my services to you for the next Liberty Loan Campaign, of which you have been delegated National Chairman for the Motion Picture Industry.

In the last Red Cross Drive we developed a splendid organization, and this can be duplicated for the Liberty Loan Drive and made State wide. I am at your command and await your response.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) SYDNEY S. COHEN.

Frank R. Wilson, Director of Publicity for the Fourth Liberty Loan, has advised Chairman Zukor that he has received letters from numerous stars accepting the privilege of giving their services in the making of pictures. Among them Mr. Wilson mentioned Charles Ray, Mme. Alla Nazimova, Elsie Ferguson and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Moreover, the list of stars who will assist is growing hourly, the most recent communication having been received from Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who states that Mae Murray has already completed a film and that it will be immediately shipped from Washington, and further offering the services of Dorothy Phillips, Mary MacLaren, Harry Carey and Monroe Salisbury.

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is enthusiastic upon the subject of the motion picture industry co-operating with the government in the next Liberty Loan drive. In issuing instructions to the various departments of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., Mr. Brunet says:

"We propose to bend every effort in assisting the government in making the next Liberty Loan drive the success it deserves to be. All the Pathe stars, including Pearl White, Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward, Ruth Roland, Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, Baby Marie Osborne and others, are going to bend their shoulders to the wheel in the work for Uncle Sam. The services of these stars are at the disposal of the government and the Pathe company is ready and willing to co-operate along any other lines that the government may suggest."

Lichtman Brings New Contracts

Famous Players-Lasky Distribution Manager Finds Fertile Field in Chicago—Also Visited Other Cities of Middle West

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation returned last week from a business trip to Minneapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee and Buffalo, and although he was gone considerably less than a week he came back with booking contracts in his pocket aggregating approximately $1,000,000, which he made in the cities named.

"My brief trip," said Mr. Lichtman upon his return, "measuring its results not merely by dollars and cents but by the manifestations of good-will, satisfaction and an eagerness to book Paramount and Artcraft pictures which I met with everywhere, has convinced me, beyond all question, of the optimism with which exhibitors are viewing the new year's photoplay productions to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

While in Chicago, Mr. Lichtman and District Manager Max Goldstine closed with the firm of Ascher Bros., one of the biggest booking contracts ever negotiated in the Middle West. This contract covers service embracing the entire output of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures for the year 1918-1919, for the following Chicago theatres: Adelphi, Calo, Lakeside, Terminal, Milford, Albany Park, Chateau, Lane Court, Metropolitan, Oakland Square, Peerless, Columbus, Frolic and Cosmopolitan.

Almost as large as the Ascher Bros. contract is one closed with Lubliner & Trinz for their circuit of twelve houses in Chicago and vicinity, while Ballaban & Katz contracted for virtually every one of the year's productions to be divided between their two big Chicago houses, the Central Park and the Riviera.

On the same trip Mr. Lichtman and Mr. Goldstine closed with the firm of Reuben & Finkelstein, of Minneapolis, for the entire output for their Minneapolis and St. Paul theatres, the New Garrick and Lyric in the former city and the New Princess and Strand in the latter. The contracts will afford approximately forty-five weeks' service in each city.

In Milwaukee, Saxe Bros. contracted for approximately forty weeks' service for their Alhambra theatre, while practically the same amount was taken by Newman & Landan, proprietors of the Butterfly.

The last city visited by Mr. Lichtman was Buffalo, where the management of Shea's Hippodrome, one of the largest theatres in the country, contracted for seventy productions which will occupy about forty-weeks in one-week and four-day runs.

"While this looks like a lot of business for a trip of a few days," continued Mr. Lichtman, "it is merely an incident. The some thing is going on all over the country. Out in Denver District Manager Louis Marcus has just set a new record for a single booking contract in the Rocky Mountain territory in a contract with Greaves & Ellison, who operate the Princess and Rialto theatres. They have taken the entire year's releases of Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Seven Producers in Liberty Honor Roll

The War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, operating the Liberty theatres, has secured from the following concerns the privilege of using any of their pictures at such a minimum cost as will barely cover rewinding and shipping of films:

Paramount,
Artcraft,
Fox,
Goldwyn,
Metro,
Mutual,
Triangle.

"Fit to Fight" Benefits the Soldiers

The War Department film, "Fit to Fight," was shown three times, Sunday, August 4, at the Union Square theatre, Pittsfield, Mass.

The theatre was contributed for the good of the cause by the proprietor, J. F. Cooney, and in the course of the evening, the General Electric Band of twenty pieces gave two concerts in the theatre and one outside.

The 2,000 men spectators were deeply impressed by the lesson of the film and by the address of Major Alec N. Thomson, of the United States Army Medical Reserve Corps, who will spend a week in and near Berkshire county exhibiting the film and lecturing upon the scarlet plague which "Fit to Fight" is helping to stamp out.

The film is distributed by the Army Medical Museum, Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the War Department Committee on Training Camp activities.

Fox Liberty Theatre Opens with "Salome"

The first production to be shown in the new William Fox Liberty theatre, St. Louis, will be "Salome," Theda Bara's drama of the siren who cost the life of John the Baptist. The theatre will open for the public Sunday, September 29, according to an announcement by John Zanft, managing director of the William Fox Circuit of theatres, who has been in charge of arrangements preliminary to the opening.

Beginning September 29, "Salome" will be shown for an indefinite run, it is said, and this production will inaugurate a policy of high-class pictures which will put the William Fox Liberty theatre among the leading playhouses of the country.

Since Mr. Fox added this theatre to his long list of playhouses throughout the country, workmen have been busy renovating it for the opening. A $12,000 pipe organ is being installed, several changes have been made in the interior and the lobby has been made more attractive.

War Service Stages Pageant

Los Angeles Sees Celebration in Parade That Called Out All Picture Companies to Help Make It Success

MEMBERS of the Motion Picture War Service Association staged a wonderful patriotic pageant in Los Angeles on the evening of Wednesday, July 31, in celebration of the opening on the following day of the Federal Government's war exhibition which was brought to this city.

A parade was given through the principal streets of Los Angeles, starting at nine o'clock, and consisted of forty-seven bands, two regiments of soldiers, one of marines, one of sailors, three companies of Lasky Home Guards, two companies from the Hollywood Officers' Training School, made up largely of men from studios, members of Motion Picture Directors' Association on horseback, officers of the Motion Picture War Service Association headed by D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford and William S. Hart; women of the War Service Association in uniforms consisting of white dresses, long white capes and white George Washington hats, led by Lois Weber of the Woman's Division, and about twenty floats representing the Allies. Douglas Fairbanks was grand marshal of the parade, and in it Helen Keller appeared, this being the first time she has taken part in any pageant of any nature. The different studios furnished floats as follows:

W. S. HART.

The float from the W. S. Hart studios represented Serbia. Josephine Howard was Serbia, and with her on the float were two Serbian veteran soldiers in uniform, and Thomas Brierly, Wanda Hawley, Joseph August and Lambert Hillyer. E. H. Allen, his general manager, was in the parade, representing the Hart studios.

TRIANGLE.

Triangle studios' float represented "The Spirit of Italy." Italy was Alma Rubens, Triangle's star, and with her on the float, and the characters they represented were: Columbus, Barney Sherry; Art, Rae Godfrey; Music, Tris Ashton; Italian peasant, Marie Pavis; Italian child, Miss Pavis; soldier, Eugene Burr; guards, Peter Morrison and T. E. Reynolds; and leaders, Nate Solomon, Thornton Edwards, R. A. Beal and M. F. Seva.

VITAGRAPH.

Vitagraph's float—"The Spirit of Canada"—was most unusual. It was designed by Ray H. McCray, Vitagraph art director, and showed the triumphant lions of the Dominion.

LASKY.

Lasky Studios' float depicted the spirit of the United States. The float was designed by Wilfred Buckland, of the Lasky Studios. Edna May Cooper was Columbia, and there were soldiers, sailors, and workers in all branches of war work and activity. Julia Faye and Marcia Manon represented Red Cross nurses.

FOX.

Fox Studios' float was "Belgium," which was portrayed by Miss Gladys Brockwell. It represented the coming of America to the aid of the martyred nation.

THOMAS H. INCE.

The Thomas H. Ince float, representing Japan, was twenty-four feet long and was drawn by eight horses. Marching at the sides of the float were twenty-four Japanese men in costumes of ancient warriors and modern soldiers.

GRIFFITH.

Miss Helen Wiener portrayed Victory on the float from David Wark Griffith Studios. With her on the float were children attendants, Isabelle and Marjorie Yeagher.

BRUNTON.

The Brunton division was led by Dixie Nelson in Scotch costume on a white horse. Miss Bessie Barriscale, Paralta star, rode on the front seat of the warlike float from the Brunton Studios, portraying Scotland.

UNIVERSAL.

Universal City's float—France—was enthusiastically received. Upon it Universal actors gave lifelike impressions of Gen. Joffre and other French heroes of the great war.

ASTRA.

The first float in the line was that of the Astra Studios, representing Portugal. Chained to this float were the Kaiser, Von Hindenburg and other German generals. This feature brought forth howls of approval from the crowd.

METRO.

The Metro float in the patriotic parade represented Cuba. It bore two symbolical figures, Liberty (impersonated by Anna Q. Nilsson), and Cuba (impersonated by Miss Eileen Hume), with Liberty enthroned and Cuba at her foot.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the entire parade was that of the Woman's Division, this consisting as it did of approximately 500 women, all of whom are identified with the motion picture producing industry of Los Angeles.

Picture Concern Investigated

The State of Illinois, according to advices from Chicago on August 7, is investigating through its officials the Lincoln Picture Classic, Inc., a motion picture concern with offices in the Continental and Commercial National Bank Building, Chicago. It is charged an agreement with the secretary of the state when the company was licensed to sell stock in Illinois under the "blue sky" law has been violated and that $9,000, which was to have remained in the bank, has been withdrawn.

Henry Belmar is president of the company, which is incorporated under the state laws of Delaware, with $1,000,000 capital stock. Frank Bennison is "sole fiscal agent." Revocation of the company's license is threatened, it is said.

The Lincoln Picture Classics, Inc., is in no way connected with the Classic Films Distributing Company, located in the same building.

Exhibitors' Association Joyful

Sends Forth Optimistic Reports of Convention to Be Held in Chicago in September — Rembusch Invites National Association

CONTINUED assurances by letter and wire from exhibitors and producers of their intention to attend and take part in the activities of the second annual convention of the American Exhibitors' Association at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, September 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, have, it is declared by the committee on arrangements, assured the success of the meet.

By telegraph, Secretary Frank J. Rembusch has invited the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to hold a special meeting during the time the convention is in session. The space reserved for the visiting exhibitors is such as to be readily adaptable for such a meeting without interfering with the general sessions.

Among the first to send in a request for reservation at the hotel for the entire week of the meet is Ernest A. Horstmann, secretary-treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, defeated by Peter J. Schaefer for presidency of the body at the recent Boston convention.

Mr. Horstmann's decision to be present at the meeting was the source of much happiness to the A. E. A. committee. They were unanimous in declaring that it was an evidence that the convention would be a "co-operative meeting of the entire industry," which is the aim of the committee. It is believed that Mr. Horstmann's intention will be the means of influencing many others.

Finding that the American Red Cross is in excellent shape financially, the arrangement committee this week determined to turn over the proceeds of the grand ball, which will practically conclude the convention, to the Illinois Auxiliary of the Navy Relief Society.

Preliminary details have already been gone into with Chief Yeoman R. J. Mason, recording secretary of the Navy Relief Society, stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. This body will have complete charge of the affair.

The Navy Marine Band will furnish music for the dancing and many of the boys from the Great Lakes will put on "stunts" during the intermissions. Full details have not as yet been made. It is expected that a number of motion picture stars will be present and because of the huge crowd which is expected to attend, choice of a hall has not been made.

Adolph Zukor, William Fox, Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, S. L. Rothapfel and Robert Leiber are among those who have been invited to be present and address the exhibitors.

A determined attempt will be made to have Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels address the convention on September 4. It was learned by the committee that Mr. Daniels will be in Indianapolis on September 3 and a wire was at once sent to him to learn if he could not come to Chicago the next day or any time during the week.

The Chicago Association of Commerce is showing considerable interest in the affair and Mr. Rembusch, together with Louis H. Frank, chairman of the convention committee, have held a number of conferences with the local civic body.

Pomeroy Remains as Holman Manager

Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal, has written MOTION PICTURE NEWS as follows:

"I notice in recent issues of your valuable trade paper that Mr. Al Nathan has been represented as the new manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal. This is quite incorrect. Mr. Nathan has been on a visit to this theatre in an advisory capacity, as he is so doing to other theatres belonging to the owners of the Holman theatre.

I trust you will make this announcement clear in the near future, and that I still retain full charge of the active management of the Holman theatre.

Thanking you very kindly in advance, I am

Very truly yours,
(Signed) HARRY POMEROY,
Manager of Holman theatre.

J., chairman of the reception committee to the Honorable Thomas Watt Gregory, Attorney General of the United States, who is to make one of the principal addresses at the unveiling of the monument to our martyred President, James A. Garfield, at Long Branch on September 2. The committee which includes some of the best known members of the motion picture world will meet at Mr. Sachs's office at 261 Broadway on Thursday next, to complete arrangements.

E. C. Fielder has been appointed Cleveland representative for Paralta pictures, as well as promoter of the Hodkinson plan in that territory. Fielder has been assistant manager at the World Film's Cleveland office for the past year. He now is located in the Standard theatre building in connection with the General Film Company.

Liberty Theatres Announce Booking System

In order to systematize the handling of pictures for the Liberty theatres, the following system has been established by E. L. Hyman, representing Malcolm L. McBride, Chairman, Military Entertainment Committee:

Matt Whitham is located in Atlanta, selecting pictures and advertising for the following camps supplied out of Atlanta: Wheeler, Gordon, Jackson, McClellan, Greene, Hancock, Sevier, Sheridan, Beauregard.

Henry Shoenstadt, located in Dallas, Tex., does similar work for the camps supplied out of Dallas, which include: Bowie, Doniphan, Travis, Kelly Field, Cody, Logan.

The representative for the Chicago district is as yet unnamed. He will handle the following camps from there: Dodge, Grant, Curtis, Sherman, Taylor, Funston.

Mr. Hyman will be located in New York City to select the pictures for the Eastern camps, which include: Devens, Merritt, Upton, Meade, Dix, Lee, Humphreys.

He will make arrangements for the showing of every big special picture, including "To Hell with the Kaiser," "Pershing's Crusaders," "America's Answer," etc., to be shown at all of the theatres.

New Picture on How to Conserve Food

A new wrinkle in the food conservation field came to light last week when it became known that a unique motion picture is to be made as the result of a bet between Bob Carson, assistant to Metro's technical director, and Major O. J. Allenbaugh, the stake being $1,000.

Carson left for Bloomsburg, N. Y., where he will take to the woods minus all clothing, the antique fig leaf being taboo also. Neither will he take any food, or, as Broadway would say, "eats," with him. He is to remain in the woods for thirty days, after which he will take a train to New York in whatever costume he can provide himself with while away, and will appear in a prominent public place. A cameraman will be with Carson during his sojourn with nature.

Allenbaugh controls the picture rights to the enterprise and the bet forms the basis of a moving picture, the purpose of which will be to show how food can be conserved. In the event that Carson cannot stand the strain he will have to pay the expenses of the venture.

Liberty Theatres Want Equipment

R. R. Smith, Director of Liberty theatres, will be pleased to receive for the Motion Picture Division bids on motion picture equipment to be installed in new Liberty theatres now building.

These bids should be submitted to R. R. Smith, War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, Washington, D. C.

Vitagraph Heralds New Service Era

Walter W. Irwin and Albert E. Smith Announce Complete Schedule for a Year in Advance—New Booking Plan Will Be Inaugurated September 30

FOR the first time in the history of the motion picture industry, a producing company has come forward with a complete schedule for a year and its distributing organization is able to guarantee to exhibitors a definite booking plan and releasing schedule for the period.

Vitagraph is the company. The new booking plan will be inaugurated September 30. In a joint special announcement from Albert E. Smith, President and Treasurer of the Vitagraph distributing organization, a complete outline of the company's production plans for the year beginning September 30, 1918, and ending September 22, 1919, with the release dates and stars is given by the former, and Mr. Irwin states definitely the new and momentous plan under which the Blue Ribbon Features of the company will be released.

Bessie Love Features

According to the statements, Earle Williams and Alice Joyce will each be presented in eight productions during the coming year, while Bessie Love, the company's newest star, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith and Gladys Leslie will be featured in nine productions each. Under the new booking plan each of the stars will appear at intervals of six weeks.

This fixing of Blue Ribbon feature releases is another step forward on the part of Vitagraph. Only a few weeks ago the company introduced an innovation to the motion picture business by setting a serial policy under which it will make and release four serials a year, giving the exhibitor a serial episode for each week in the year. At that time, as in the present instance, the company not only laid out the number of productions, but for the first time in the picture business gave the dates on which each serial would be released and the names of the stars who would appear in each. Thus it was stated that on July 15, 1918, William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, would be presented in "A Fight for Millions"; that on October 21, 1918, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway would be presented in a serial, the title of which, "The Iron Test," has since been published; that on January 27, 1919, William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, would be presented in another serial, the title being "The Man of Might"; that on May 5, 1919, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway would again be presented in a fourth serial, the title of which has not yet been announced.

Two-Reel Comedies

Shortly after its announcement of the four-serials-a-year policy, Vitagraph came out with another important statement fixing on a weekly release of a two-reel Big V feature comedy. Thereby Vitagraph became the only company in the field releasing a two-reel feature comedy each week in the year.

With its latest announcement, regarding its Blue Ribbon feature, Vitagraph provides an exhibitor with a guarantee of three definitely fixed units for his program for each week in the year and by booking on a yearly basis an exhibitor is in a position to make up his program as far ahead as he desires.

In the announcement from Walter W. Irwin, he pledges the Vitagraph Distributing Organization to a continuation of the policies which have governed it since its inception more than three years ago, and he declares that the company's new booking plan is based on the theory of "Live and Let Live." He describes it as "A Democratic, NOT an Autocratic, Booking Plan and Policy," and states that it was devised to give the exhibitor a good return upon his investment and his labor. Vitagraph, he asserts, does not wish to wring from the exhibitor "The greatest tariff the product will bear."

The new Vitagraph plan, when analyzed, is said to be the most liberal ever offered in the business, because it virtually permits an exhibitor to book on any basis which best suits his business. It provides not only for a rotating star system on a fifty-two week basis, but makes it possible to book a single star's productions or combination of stars.

Under the fifty-two week yearly contract plan, the stars, with the dates of their releases, are to be presented to exhibitors as follows:

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Garson?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

WE are not quite sure that we are allowed more or less feature page.

But we are going to let news creep into this take the chance—or at least, go half way towards it—and give you a hint of a piece of news right at the very outset of our attempt to show you what kind of a fellow Harry I. Garson is. And when we think of it our bit of news is probably a better indication than any words we could use of what kind of a fellow Garson is—and will be—in this picture game.

Well, here's the news:

Harry I. Garson a year ago was managing the Clara Kimball Young Company. Harry I. Garson to-day is handling the destinies of the Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet productions.

And—

Harry L. Garson within a few months—and maybe weeks—will be managing another big star. In fact, there's a strong chance that the next few moons may bring two additional stars to the Garson camp.

That's news—and it's a tip-off on this Garson man in that it shows that he is becoming more and more a factor to be reckoned with in this screen scramble.

He's ambitious—this Garson fellow—and successful. And the latter is the important part. As a close friend put it to us: "He makes money for all concerned out of anything he handles — and that's the answer."

When you couple this knack of success and his ambition with the fact that Harry Garson is just at the thirty-five year mark you are safe in concluding that it is going to be well worth while keeping an eye on him.

Perhaps it is natural that Harry I. Garson should have become a moving picture personality for he was born in the city where all the moving pictures have their start—Rochester. And we might say right here that Garson hasn't skipped a rung in the ladder—starting where the film itself is made and stepping from exhibitor to exchange man and finally to producer.

His first active connection with the picture business was as an exhibitor—managing the Broadway Strand in Detroit.

When Garson took it over the Broadway Strand was one of those houses "that never will pay." The knockers didn't see a chance for young Garson.

But to-day the Broadway Strand of Detroit is one of the best known picture theatres in the country—and Harry I. Garson did it.

Not satisfied with putting the Broadway Strand in the winning class, Garson then looked around for other worlds to conquer. His eyes rested on the exchange field and soon the Harry I. Garson Exchange and the Broadway exchange were listed in the independent field.

"Going up!" seemed to be the word for we next read of Harry I. Garson the producer, exchange man and exhibitor.

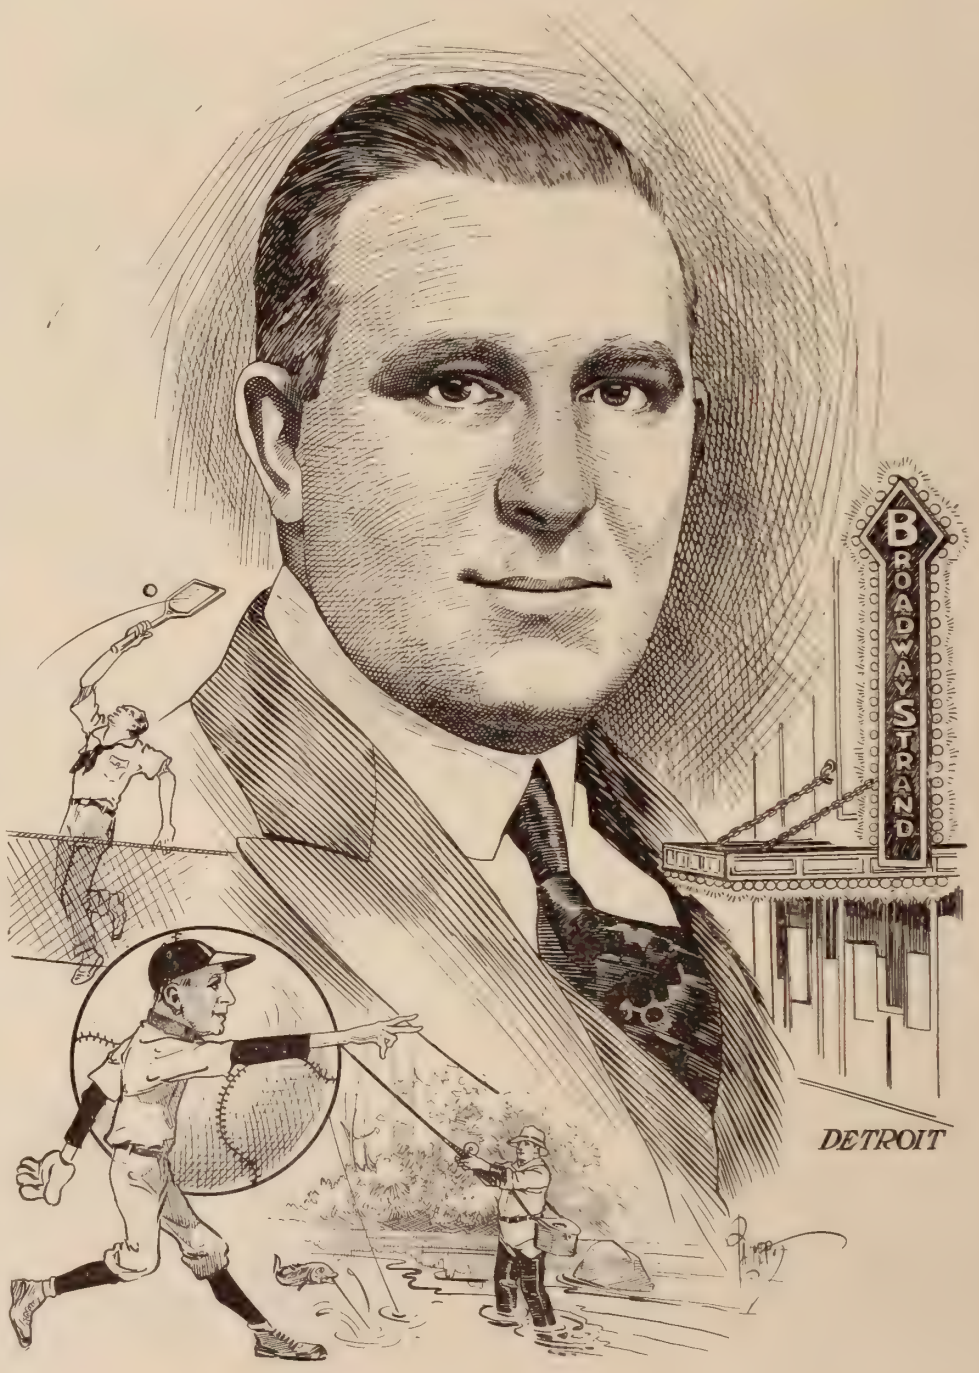
That was a year ago—and as the twelfth month is rounded out Clara Kimball Young has completed the eighth production under the management of Harry I. Garson.

Blanche Sweet, after an absence from the screen of a year and a half, is about to return in "The Hushed Hour" under the Garson management.

The work of the artist will give you a better idea of the man Garson than we can. He was a ball player once—and you can see it in the square, clean-cut jaw of the athlete.

Picture producing doesn't give much chance for ball playing, but Friend Garson still retains his interest in sport—tennis, fishing and yachting now getting the attention of his few spare moments.

And, taking it from the friend who told us, those spare moments are few, for he is an "on-the-job" producer—out at the studio with the first touch of sunlight and plugging straight through the day.



The World Market

Inter-Ocean Helps to Chase Hun Carbons

Eugene H. Kaufman, head of the carbon and accessory department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and the man who introduced the Speer Carbon to the foreign markets formerly controlled by German carbon manufacturers, is firm in the belief that the American-made carbons are permanent factors in the foreign field.

"They are no longer mere subjects for experiment and they distinctly are not war-time fill-ins. Our information is the direct testimony of the foreign cinema men who have bought them. Their own letters to us tell the tale. The American-made Speer product has stood all tests. These foreign purchasers have settled down to permanent use of it. Many of them have made long-time contracts that they know must outlast the war. These contracts alone establish that the German-made carbon is out, to stay out.

"The figures on Speer foreign sale are little short of phenomenal. Recent items, for instance, are 100,000 sent to Australia, India 16,000, China 10,000 and Brazil 27,000. Of course, the original chance to place them came through the elimination of enemy-made carbons by war conditions. But the market had to be held through sheer superiority of product. Certainly a year is long enough to tell you whether you have that. It was our Speer experience that impelled us to negotiate the recent contract for the foreign rights of the Fulco accessories. The world-market is waiting for good American goods, and it wants them permanently. Just show that America can make the goods, and the market for the same is absolutely assured."

Mabel Normand In Her Widely Known Character of "Mickey," Which Is to Be Released Shortly by Western Import

Propaganda Films in France

The first official American propaganda films to be distributed in France are now being handled by both Pathe Freres and Gaumont, each in different territory. The initial release is titled "The Response of the Americans to the Boche," a title closely similar to that which has been adopted in the United States for the second official release, "America's Answer."

Aside from the Pathe releases the French market is at present pretty bare of American subjects.

Note from Australasian

Millard Johnson, American representative for Australasian Films, Ltd., has requested publicity for the following cable received last week from the Sydney headquarters: "The litigation between Australasian Films, Ltd., and Signor and Madame Spencer has been settled. The Australasian Films, Ltd., now take over again the Lyceum theatre, in Sydney, Newcastle, Brisbane. Both of the Spencers retire from business for a long term of years."

"For Adult Presentation"

The World Film subject, "Maternity," with Alice Brady in the featured role, is being advertised in England with the line "For Adult Presentation" prominent in the advertising. "Maternity" was released in this country as a regular program production.

An Exhibitor Visitor and His Message to us- And To You

H. A. WILES, manager of the Princess Theater, Honea, South Carolina, walked into Motion Picture News office last week.

"I just had to call on you while I was in New York," he said, "to tell you frankly that if it wasnt' for Motion Picture News I could never have made a success of my theater. The help of the News and the Exhibitors Service Bureau should be invaluable to any exhibitor.

If you want to know how successful Manager Wiles is listen to the fact that he uses page advertisements in a town of two thousand—that he books the first run top-notch programs and such big specials as "Over the Top" in such a territory.

Another Big Robertson-Cole Week

One of the biggest foreign rights deals of the year was consummated this week when the Robertson-Cole Company took over the rights for "Tarzan of the Apes," together with the sequel "The Romance of Tarzan" from the National Film Corporation of America for the United Kingdom of Great Britain, exclusive of Canada and Australia. The consideration involved is said to be $75,000.

The Robertson-Cole company also announces that they have closed with the North American Motion Picture Corporation of Buenos Ayres and New York whereby the latter company will distribute Robertson-Cole productions in Argentine, Paraguay and Uraguay.

Another deal just closed by this company is the sale to the Co-operative Film Company of "The Cast-Off," "The Finger of Justice," "Raffles," "Men," and "The Eagle's Eye" for Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Due to the increase in their business in the last few months the Robertson-Cole have again been forced to expand their offices and have leased several office rooms adjoining their headquarters at 1600 Broadway.

Export Rules Modified By War Trade Board

Announcement has been made by the War Trade Board of a revision of rules recently promulgated for the export of motion picture film. The modifications, which take effect this week, make it possible to export to the United Kingdom and colonies, France and Italy without requiring the consignment to be made to a representative of the War Trade Board and without executing the strict agreement recently published which calls for all manner of guarantees from the foreign buyer.

The principal requirement of the Trade Board now in regard to film exported to the allied nations is a guarantee against re-exporting.

Hiller and Wilk Advertise Abroad

A recent copy of The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly discloses a page advertisement of Hiller and Wilk, as exclusive selling agents for Maurice Tourneur's coming production, "Sporting Life."

This production is expected to prove unusually valuable in the United Kingdom market, as it is from the Drury Lane success of the same name and a teammate in popularity in England with Mr. Tourneur's earlier production for William A. Brady, "The Whip."

[These reviews, by P. S. Harrison, are based solely on the entertaining qualities of the picture. All other factors are considered of secondary importance.]

"Crashing Through to Berlin"

An Interesting History of the War to Date

(Special Feature in Seven Reels. Released by the Universal Manufacturing Company)

THIS attraction is practically speaking the history of the present war. The different incidents have been borrowed from the news weeklies, and compiled in their chronological order. Due to intellligent subtitling, this feature, I am sure, will interest picture goers.

All pictures of this nature are more or less dry. In other words, it is rather hard for a spectator to sit through an evening's entertainment witnessing reel after reel of, what is practically speaking, educational matter. But this one in particular offers splendid opportunities for exploitation, and with the proper patriotic and other appropriate music to back it up, I see no reason why it should not please as well as any other contribution of this kind. Besides, the title is catchy and ought to prove a good drawing card if properly handled.

The picture opens by showing the funeral of the assassinated Archduke Ferdinand of Austria. Then the different events that led to this world catastrophe, such as the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia, and its attempted invasion, the declaration of war by Germany against Russia and France, of England against Germany, the demand of the passage of the Hun troops through Belgium, and its consequent invasion on account of the refusal and all other incidents including those that lead to the declaration of war by the United States against Germany, follow.

It also shows the landing of the first American troops in France, at which occasion the French people went almost wild from joy. This particular incident is very touching.

The picture closes by showing some of the American preparations to carry on the war especially in the aeroplane line.

This offering ought to take well with any audience.

"Doing Their Bit"

Jane and Katherine Lee in an Average Picture

(Fox—August 4. Directed by Kenean Buel)

THIS picture is almost a jumbled-up affair. It is a mixture of comedy, serious, patriotic and German spy situations, placed together in poor fashion.

To begin with, the little stars are miscast. They are entrusted with roles beyond their age. The most striking example is where they throw on the electric switch that starts the machine in motion catching the hands of the two spies and gripping them as in a vise. Then again, most of the situations seem forced. They are too mechanical and appear as cut to order.

You may be able to get by with this picture chiefly because it is clean.

"Her Husband's Honor"

Edna Goodrich's Charm the Principal Asset

(Mutual—August 5. Directed by Burton King)

THIS is just a fair picture, depending on physical action, some suspense, a little supposed mystery, and to a certain measure on the pretty looks of the star and the fine clothes she wears, to hold the interest and entertain. It lacks heart appealing situations.

The story is improbable. It presents the heroine as a loving wife who steals some engineering plans to obtain enough money to clear her husband from an impendig arrest for an offence he did not commit. When the guilty party finds out that the evidence he is to use against the heroine's husband disappears, he commits suicide.

There is a little sex stuff inserted in the plot, but not enough to hurt its chances of being shown to family patronage.

"Merely Players"

Kitty Gordon Gets Chance to Act

(World—August 19. Directed by Oscar Apfel)

THIS is a passable program offering. It contains a great deal of action but hardly any human appeal. The worst fault with it, however, is the fact that the author attempts to weave two almost independent stories into one. This is more evident towards the end where the heroine attempts to show that her protégée can act in spite of the dramatic critic's adverse opinion. The play ends by displaying her own acting abilities instead. This makes the ending somewhat inconsistent. There is no doubt in my mind that, had the story been amplified and some of the situations slightly altered to make them consistent, it could be made into a splendid production.

The story, by L. Case Russell, shows the protégée of the heroine attempting to commit suicide by turning on the gas because the dramatic critic stated she could not act. With the proper medical assistance she is revived. The heroine (Kitty Gordon) angered, determines to show that this reviewer is wrong. Accordingly she invites him to the house. He enters the room just in time to see the heroine trying to make love to the husband of a friend of hers. She is scorned, therefore she pulls a revolver as if to commit suicide. The reviewer, horrified, rushes in to prevent her from doing so. The curtain rises, exposing the guests who were watching the performance. He now makes reparation by admitting publicly he was wrong.

The play ends with the marriage of the heroine to the critic and her protégée to a grocery clerk.

The picture is clean.

"Wild Primrose"

A Pleasing Offering—With Gladys Leslie Featured

(Vitagraph—Aug. 12. Directed by Fred Thompson)

THIS is a pleasing little offering. The entertainment is derived from physical action as well as from situations with heart interest.

The heroine is introduced in the story, by Joseph Poland, as an orphan girl whose father had divorced her mother and married another. When her mother died she was raised by an old faithful friend.

Years afterwards the father longs for the daughter. He begs her protector to send her to him so that he can educate her. The daughter first refuses to go because she hates him on account of the wrong he inflicted on her mother. After a second thought, however, and wishing to cause him suffering, she goes to him She is despised by her step-mother but loved by her father. In time love grows in her heart for her father who is also suffering from the austere manner of his wife.

In the end the heroine falls in love and marries the ward of her father, a young man who had married a sporty woman while intoxicated, but later found that she was a bigamist.

The picture is well produced and ought to have an appeal to all kinds of audiences.

"Winning Grandma"

Baby Marie in a Pleasing Picture

(Pathe—August 18. Directed by William Bertram)

THIS is a fine little picture with plenty of human element. It is far better than anything little Marie has been seen in lately. as the story is good and has been produced well. It gives baby Marie a fine opportunity to display her little winning charms.

The scenario, by Clara Beranger and Jack Cunningham, shows how the little heroine softened the heart of her grandma who could not stand the pranks of little children. In the end it brings happiness to all.

This picture ought to have an appeal to all classes.

"Shifting Sands"

A Sympathetic Role for Gloria Swanson in This

(Triangle—Aug. 11. Directed by Albert Parker)

THE predominating element in this picture is that of heart appeal, therefore it will afford your patrons entertainment worth their money.

The story, by Charles T. Dazey, introduces the heroine as living in a flat with her invalid sister. She is unable to obtain work and her rent is overdue. The rent collector threatens to evict her unless she consents to make love to him. She indignantly rejects him but he attacks her. She manages to throw him out of the room.

During the attack the villain loses his pocketbook. Thinking the heroine has stolen it he has her arrested, convicted and sent to jail for three months. Her sister dies.

At the expiration of her sentence she meets a wealthy young man of fine character who was spending his fortune in alleviating the sufferings of the poor in the tenements. He takes an interest in her and asks her to become his wife so as to help him in his work. They marry—much to the disappointment of the hero's mother who objects to the union.

Shortly afterwards the hero is appointed in an important government position. He is entrusted with certain important papers. The heroine catches a supposed friend of the family but really a German spy, trying to open the safe and obtain the papers. Threatening to expose her past to her husband, she lets him escape. Shortly afterwards, however, she helps the United States secret service to discover a nest of German spies.

Miss Swanson gets lots of sympathy because she is given the human part.

Outside of one or two minor slips that don't really affect the entertaining values the picture is produced intelligently. The action is good and holds the interest to the end.

It should appeal to any audience.

"Cactus Crandall"

A Roy Stewart Triangle Up to the Mark

(Triangle—Aug. 11. Directed by Cliff Smith)

THIS latest Roy Stewart contribution does not in the least fall below the standard of his previous ones. It is full of action, suspense and also heart interest. In many respects it is a regular thriller. He is again given, or rather gives himself, the human part.

The story is Mr. Stewart's own creation and shows no mean ability in this direction. He introduces himself as a wealthy ranch owner near the Mexican border.

While hunting for some stray cattle, he comes across a beautiful American girl, captive of a Mexican, chief of a band of outlaws, who intended to marry her forcibly. With the help of another American he rescues her and her father, safely crossing the border into the United States. In the end he marries the girl.

There is some dare-devil horse riding shown in this picture that will make your hair stand on end.

The photography is remarkable. There are several scenes in it showing herds of cattle in the distance. It should prove of interest to city folks who rarely, if ever, witness such scenes.

This picture should prove a winner with any kind of an audience even with the over-particular high brows, for a change

"A Law Unto Herself"

Louise Glaum Scores in This Subject

(Paralta-Hodkinson-General Film—Aug. 19. Directed by Wallace Worsley)

THIS is about the best picture in which Louise Glaum has ever appeared. First, because it is clean, and second, because Miss Glaum is given the human part, that of a woman with genuine love for her boy and her country. It is a sweetly pathetic offering with a direct appeal to the heart.

Another reason why it will please, particularly an American audience, is because the story, by Francis Paget, deals with France. It shows how, before the war, France was overrun by German spies who were trying, like Judas, to win the friendship of the French people by intermarrying and other acts, meanwhile working for their ends. It shows how they laid the concrete foundations for their big guns treacherously to be turned against the French when the time came, concealed telephones and other acts. These incidents are based more or less on facts, as they have been exposed at different times since war was declared.

The locale is given as Champagne, in France, where the heroine, a young French maid, is shown as being coerced by her father to marry a German whom she did not love. To avoid such detestable marriage, she weds secretly her sweetheart, a young Frenchman. The German murders her husband, and although she suspects him, she is compelled by her father to marry him. She gives birth to a boy.

When war was declared in 1914, the German is ordered to Germany to assist the General Staff with his knowledge of French territory. Champagne is invaded and the inhabitants maltreated. Shortly afterwards the Germans are again driven out. Several of them are made captives, among whom is the villain. His son gives him away to the French as a traitor. While being led away he complains that even his son has turned against him, but the heroine stands up and tells him proudly that thank God he is not his son, but her own from the husband he had murdered.

"A Hoosier Romance"

(Selig-Mutual—Aug. 18. Directed by Colin Campbell)

WE have heard directors and producers shout so often of having made rare star "finds" that one is more or less inclined to be sceptical. A woman may possess beauty, but that is no indication that she is going to make a "tremendous" hit with the public. This particular case, however, is an exception. I fully agree with the producers as to the superlatives used to praise the qualities of Miss Moore in introducing her to the trade. She possesses beauty, is graceful, and can express emotion with perfect ease. She will no doubt create a good following if properly exploited.

"A Hoosier Romance" is a pathetic but pleasing little picture. It is based on the famous author-poet James Whitcomb Riley's poem of the same name.

The heroine is introduced as a young girl in an Indiana farm, whose mother is dead and whose father arranges to marry her to an old wealthy widower. She discloses to him the fact that she loves a young man who is working on their farm. The father at once discharges him and bids him never to show his face in the house again.

The old widower begins his courtship but the heroine scorns him. The father is angered and tells her his word is law and that she must marry him.

The preparations for their marriage begin. On the night of the wedding her sweetheart returns. He is despondent upon learning of the intended marriage, but the kindly old judge, who favored their love affair, tricked the father of the girl and the widower into believing that the heroine had run away. While hunting for the bride in the fields the kindly old judge unites the two lovers in the presence of the gathering. The old man now returns and is greatly angered to learn of the event, but eventually bows to the inevitable.

The picture has been produced in very realistic atmosphere and very true to detail as regards direction.

The supporting cast is excellent. As to the outdoor scenery, it is very beautiful. Most of the scenes have been taken among almond trees in full bloom.

There are several comedy bits in it that help to add the necessary humor. Billy Jacobs does his best with the wedding cake.

This offering should appeal to every kind of an audience especially to the high class type.

"The Isle of Cuba"

(Travelogue by Harold H. Horton. Release plans will be announced later)

THIS is the first of a series of three travel pictures giving some facts about Cuba. It is very interesting because its shows scenes and incidents never before presented by any of the travelogues exhibited in the past. The most interesting among them is the curing of the tobacco leaves. Also how the tall palm trees are climbed by the natives.

It should make a splendid filler for any program.

Business Editorials For a Business Paper

Following is an extract from a recent letter enclosing subscription renewal:

"I want you to understand that I do not want to miss even one copy of the NEWS, as one copy has on many occasions given me an idea worth quite a sum in good hard cash.

"I read all of your editorials and thanks to your advice on specials recently, I have cleared more money this summer than ever before. I have not noticed any slump in business, in fact, it is better than ever.

"One feature of your paper that I wish to commend is the six months' index to features. I have all the copies of the NEWS for the last three years, and the index certainly makes them a valuable reference."

C. E. WENTSEL, Proprietor,
The New Orpheum Theatre, Ada, Minn.

Wm. A. Johnston's editorials serve the business needs of a business field. The campaign on specials made money for this exhibitor and many others.

Stirring Up the Fans to Success

Los Angeles Papers Devote Space to Real News and Theatres See Benefit and Refrain from Petty Squabbles

SINCE these articles on newspaper and exhibitor co-operation have been appearing here we have received several letters from photoplay editors and other newspaper officials in some of the larger city sizes undertaking to tell of the troubles that they have in according the proper sort of co-operation.

Two newspapers write that the exhibitors in those cities are so jealous of one another that they actually measure the space that is given in the course of a week and if a competitor is granted a few inches more reading matter when he has done the same or slightly less advertising there is a terrible "holler." In one case this resulted in the photoplay editor deciding to do his editing with the ruler, to figure the amount of advertising daily and to govern the other matter accordingly. The result was that there was a falling off of 100 per cent in the interest in the department.

In the other case the photoplay editor adopted a unique scheme by dividing the theatres into a certain class, according to the amount of space that they used. On the back of the contract was cited exactly what each class of theatres would get free. It was limited to space in the layout on Sunday, criticisms twice a week on the changes of bill, a reading notice on Sunday and one other notice, on up to daily notices. Even the amount of space in the layout was arranged according to the advertising class in which the theatre fell.

Now here were two extremes. In one case the theatre practically gave in to the advertiser and let the advertising theatres control the matter that went into the paper at the expense of the news. But the other theatre told what the various classes could get and if there was a kick, so long as the newspaper was following its rules, the exhibitor was without an argument, because he had the option of getting more matter. After doing this the photoplay editor proceeded to devote the greater part of his space to the real news and the result was that the fan interest was retained. Names of no theatres were used with this general photoplay news matter.

But it is a bad thing to have to measure in inches, no matter to what extreme that you go and the exhibitor who does not appreciate the effect of the amount of quality photoplay matter in the papers will have. Unless it is an apparent case where the newspaper or its photoplay editor is discriminating a theatre simply discourages co-operation with such trivial complaints.

We know of one newspaper that dropped its photoplay matter from an interesting section to reading notices only because of exhibitor complaints about what the others were getting. In these series of articles which we are inviting the exhibitors to take to the newspapers some one may say that we should not say such things. But in the first place we want to say very strongly that these are exceptions; and in the second place that co-operation on both sides must be in a liberal spirit if it is going to continue.

Of course the exhibitor expects the worth of his money. But the first thing that the exhibitor must consider is his medium. Take the case of the motion picture trade papers: How many do you take and how many do you read? If you yourself were advertising would you use the paper that you know the people in your business are reading?

Then you expect to pay a higher advertising rate in the paper that has the largest circulation in the community in which your theatre is located. But further than that, would you not consider your advertising far more valuable to you in a paper that you knew was being read by the pictureplay-going people of the city. That is equally obvious.

Therefore, if we had to choose between two newspapers of about the same circulation, one of which gave us long reading notices and let the co-operation go at that, and the other newspaper shortened up this free matter, or rewrite it to get human interest into it and then devoted several columns more to general photoplay NEWS without mentioning the name of the theatre in every paragraph, there would be likewise no question which paper to support the more liberally.

Then, further, we wouldn't be offended if for a couple of weeks in succession there was a little more printed about the stars that happen to appear at another house. News in photoplay matter as in anything else, is NEWS and the photoplay editor cannot create this. He has to take this largely as it comes, though if he keeps his files up he will often be able to build up brief paragraphs into real stories, by recalling past history of the player, or the like.

The exhibitor who does not realize that this general matter is creating more possible business for his theatre is not awake to the facts. And if he is unable to get his share of it, he is not awake to showmanship possibilities.

This is the sort of matter that we want to encourage the newspapers to print more of, and it is largely up to the exhibitors themselves to obtain this result. The moment that you go to your newspaper and ask simply more inches of reading matter for your theatre, you awaken the suspicion that you are governed only by your selfish interests. When you ask the newspaper to print more photoplay matter because of the general interest, and ask him to print the news matter that does not apply directly to your theatre you are likely to get him to investigate your plan and find that the reader interest does exist.

In the two preceding articles we have covered the Los Angeles situation with the exception of the Tuesday issue of the Evening Herald. We called your attention to the fact that this paper printed a page of photoplay matter on Saturday, but that the main department was used on Tuesday to get the benefit of the "break" with the other papers. Besides the pages that have been reproduced here there are three columns of matter about the new shows of the week on another page.

Two things strike your eye in looking at these pages, first, the large amount of theatre advertising and, next, that all of the other matter at least looks like news. As in the case of the papers to which we called your attention last week all of the reading notices that are accorded the theatres have been given the news twist. And we don't believe that any kick went to the newspaper because the Alhambra theatre, using a total of twenty inches in this issue, got a double column cut, while Tally's Broadway, with twice as much advertising space, was given only a single.

Going further than this, Grauman's theatre uses forty-eight inches in this space. Yet the reading notice is built on Hart's fondness for horses and it is NOT EVEN MENTIONED that he is appearing at Grauman's this week. Yet the story, picture and advertisement are placed together and the total space occupied with the "free" matter is far more valuable than had there been repeated mentions of the theatres and a series of adjectives declaring this to be "Hart's best picture."

While a cut and one of this style of reading notices is given to all of the principal advertising theatres, more than half of the matter appearing on those two pages is real news about the plays and the players. We think that it could have been improved and we have seen many more interesting editions of the Tuesday Herald than the one that we have reproduced here, but it shows that the paper is going along the right lines and that the theatres are realizing that this is sort of matter to arouse the fan interest and bring their houses INCREASED BUSINESS.

Practically every one of the short items has news value and there is an interesting gossip under the heading, "In California," giving the news of the local studios, with a personal touch added. We would like to have seen a little more space given this matter, illustrated with thumb nail cuts. It makes an attractive feature of

What Towns Want In Exploitations

HERE is a view of one of the small city managers on what is the matter with motion picture exploitation. A. C. H. Chamberlain is manager of the Madera Opera House in Madera, Cal., a town of 2,500. We have asked him to become a member of the Advisory Board as one of the live wire exhibitors who represent the smaller communities. Mr. Chamberlain has had a great success in motion pictures and his views of what is the matter will be read with the greatest interest:

I feel very highly complimented in being asked to become a member of the Advisory Board of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS. It is indeed very gratifying to know that you, at least, give the small town exhibitor this amount of attention—the kind of attention that should be and is appreciated by all who subscribe to your valuable paper. That's SERVICE!

Now I am certainly pleased to accept the said membership if I can be of any service to the good of the motion picture industry.

Inasmuch as the big exhibitors have written nearly all that has run through my brains, and then some, doubt whether I am able to bring out any points of interest that has not already been talked about. Have read, with great interest, all of the different views on each subject from the men on the Advisory Board, men who "know how" and have put their picture over big.

Yes, the third of these important questions, "The Explotiation of Pictures," seems to be the most important.

To begin with, viewing it from my standpoint, with seven changes each week, it is a very difficult problem to properly "exploit" each of the seven pictures the way it should be done. If you confine your advertising to any one or two pictures each week you will kill the other nights before and after the "big" picture and if you advertise every picture, remember there are seven of them each week, each one will appear, to your patrons, to be of the same quality—which may be very true—but you cannot expect everybody to attend the theatre every night, and then you cannot advertise each picture as you would the big one, you couldn't stand the expense and your advertising would be all bunched up, that is if you tried to use the same amount with each picture.

Using the word "big" I mean such pictures as "Hearts of the World," "My Four Years in Germany," "Over the Top," etc. These are the "big" pictures you have got to advertise "big" and at advance prices, whether the picture is worth it or not, the producer says it is and you must pay for his "big" advertising, the advance in rental and since you are unable to review the picture you must take the producer's word for it.

The exhibitor in the small city, many miles from the exchange, cannot see every picture, especially the "big" ones, which should be seen, is guided only by the advertising of the producers, by the comments in THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS and by the first run and the way it goes over. By watching the criticisms and the newspapers all along the line. These are the only means the small town exhibitor has of ascertaining the true value of any picture.

The roadman or salesman sent out by an exchange will tell you this picture is a "knock-out," "a peach," etc., and as a matter of fact many of these salesmen (?) know nothing of what they speak. Talk about promises, well, "nuff ced"!

If the producers would only give a little more thought in constructing their advertising matter, such as posters, press dope, stills and display copy to fit the small town theatre the increased business derived from this source would be coniderable. But they do not, with, of course, a few exceptions. As said before, in the columns of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, there is too much display made of the producer's name on the posters and ad copy, also of the director, the writer, etc. People do not care a wop for anything else but the picture and who the star is, the producer's name to be mentioned in the small type at the bottom of the poster and not at the top sticking out above all else.

Posters are too much the same. We have received as many as four three-sheets, all in the same week, from as many producers, with identically the same effect used on each, they all looked alike, were it not for the titles one would think they all represented the same picture. Nothing attractive about the paper either, nothing there to put the picture over. Again we have had posters that would stop the passer-by, the kind that really meant something.

Recently we received posters on the Metro Special, "Lest We Forget," which were very striking and all that was printed thereon was the name of the star, the title and the producer with one good catch line about the picture, the idea was carried out with each size poster. The producer's name was at the bottom in very small type and not at the top in large type. Many times we have over-heard in our lobby, "William Fox is on tonight, shall we go in?" "Get it"?

There are just a few producers who strive to give and do give the exhibitor an unlimited amount of advertising matter to help put the picture over.

If there is an exhibitor who has his troubles in the exploitation of pictures he is the small town manager; he has to "put over" or try to put over seven pictures every week, to say nothing of the many short subjects, which should have a good amount of publicity, against the big city exhibitor who only has to put over one, two or three pictures each week.

I hope to read, in the very near future, in THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, something about how to exploit, successfully, seven (7) feature pictures every week.

In conclusion I want to state that the next important question should be something about the rental of pictures to the small town exhibitor who puts the "velvet" in the pockets of the producers.

Strategy Plays Big Part in Advertising

By S. Barret McCormick

Managing Director Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.

This is the fourth of a series of articles by Mr. McCormick on advertising motion pictures. The appearance of this article was delayed a week on account of the fact that the author was out of the city. You will find these invaluable to you no matter the size of your house. Advertising is the greatest tonic in times that you seem beset with difficulties, and intelligent exploitation has saved many a theatre that seemed about to go out of business.

PERHAPS one's first idea of Strategy in Advertising would be to consider it purely from the physical standpoint, the moving of space mass or advertising bombardment again against a certain objective, just as a general would make a troop movement against a pivotal point.

It is there, however, where a misconception of advertising strategy might be gained and its real potency underestimated. It is vastly more important to estimate a public's mental attitude and advertise accordingly than to anticipate a rain storm and shift the copy more advantageously.

Just as strategy in war means the combination and employment of means for gaining an advantage, so does Strategy in Advertising mean the use of such methods as serve to give the advertiser the right on initiative or the ability to make use of the first move.

Every advertising campaign is a campaign against certain resisting forces—Competition, Prejudice, Ignorance, Lack of Interest, Economy, Weather and numerous other elements that serve to oppose a sale.

The advertising strategist carefully considers the Opposing Force, estimates its strength, seeks the pregnable point and drives his selling force through until he has gained a position that allows him to dominate the situation.

Now that we have come to merchandising pictures instead of merely announcing them, strategy becomes the very foundation of the sales pyramid. In planning an advertising campaign, whether it be for but a single piece of copy, written and placed to give publicity to a one-day engagement or whether it is a comprehensive plan to exploit a lengthy run, the value of having the strategic advantage cannot be overestimated.

In motion picture advertising we have what might be termed two kinds of strategy, one dealing entirely with the preparation of copy and which seeks to gain advantage by undermining objections and opposition, and the other the actual scheduling of space to secure the greatest results.

The first is the more important, for upon it the success or failure of the campaign depends. A study of heart appeal and atmosphere will eliminate a large percentage of the risk involved in the preparation.

However, there are times when the fundamental idea of a picture may not be its selling point, but the advertising strategist will discover that and plan accordingly.

Occasionally a star may be unpopular, but the story itself or some other player whose work is outstanding may possess the selling power and carry the production to success, provided that feature is exploited.

A notable example of this is "The Unbeliever." The star and story meant little to the public, but the appearance of the United States marines meant everything.

The producers apparently overlooked the strategic importance of that element, but fortunately the majority of exhibitors did not and as a result the play met with instant success.

There are numerous instances where worthy plays become dismal failures, not alone because of insufficient exploitation, but because the advertiser failed to plan his campaign to the best strategic advantage.

Another instance of a play that can be made tremendously successful by the artfulness of the advertiser is "The Service Star," almost hidden beneath the whimsical and entertaining story and charming work of the leading player is the real selling point.

"What is it?"

The desire of every woman to have the same sorrows as her sister.

So with "The Service Star" the thing that touches the responsive chord is not the laughter of the play, but its tears.

Few copy writers would term themselves strategists, when in advertising "For Husbands Only" they appealed to the curiosity of wives, for it is the obvious thing to do; but nevertheless it is advertising strategy and they will find by close study of the subject that many plays with more subtle meanings have equally as great strategic advantages.

In the scheduling of space, particularly

Appealing to the desire of every woman to suffer the sufferings of her sisters is an instance of Strategy in Advertising for an extensive campaign, the advertiser faces mob psychology.

In the majority of cases it is the closing in with a final blast following a constant bombardment that accomplishes his purpose.

But the mere hurling of advertising broadsides will accomplish little unless the campaign is strategically planned.

Ordinarily, there must be a building up of interest, the playing on of emotions, until finally just as the tinder of a mob is moved to fire by the spark of the soapbox orator's final word so will your reading public respond enmasse to your master blow in print.

But herewith the gaining of the first objective advertising strategy must not cease.

There are hundreds of causes that may influence failure after the successful opening of a production and the advertising strategist must be on the alert to anticipate and overcome them. Perhaps it may be necessary to convince the public that they really liked the play, even though they condemned it. Insinuation may accomplish the purpose, or it may be gained by creating the atmosphere of success by the use of larger space and bold statements of large attendance.

Just as some managers consider it strategy to slow up the box office line and create the impression of tremendous business, so is it sometimes strategy to accomplish the same purpose through cold type.

While most advertising campaigns can successfully follow the building up formula, it is frequently more strategic to depend on a single blow, as in the case of a particularly timely attraction.

right here that it is just about as good advertising as we have seen from any theatre anywhere, when we come to consider the facilities that Mr. Heath had. He is thinking about his pictures, and he is putting this thought into his advertising. And in the cases of all the specimens that he sent us, little variety of exploitation matter was furnished by the producers.

The display on "The Man Without a Country" is four columns ten inches, and is unusually large space for the theatre to use. The sense of values has been properly observed. There is plenty of white space, the illustration is as good as was obtainable, though it means little, heavy black typing has been avoided, and there is a positive inspiration in the manner in which the quotation from Scott's poem is broken into the border at the upper left-hand corner.

Again in "Fools for Luck" he has entered right into the spirit of the production. He has used a cut that is applicable and which was furnished by Essanay. Read the matter and you will agree with us.

The only change we would have suggested is that the name of Taylor Holmes be used in larger type, the same as the title. We note that in another advertisement on another Taylor Holmes picture, Mr. Heath has realized the value of the name. "Fools for Luck" ad is seven inches, three columns.

Even more than the physical appearance of the advertising, we want to repeat that Mr. Heath has done what most advertisers fail to do, and that is to enter into the spirit of each production. For instance, on Jack Gardner, in "Gift of Gab," he used the line: "It shows how words, properly used, won a job, wife and happiness." And on Taylor Holmes, in "A Small Town Guy," he has five words that will interest and make every one wonder why: "It may save you money."

Yes, this is the advertising that is done by a 200 seat house in a town of 1400, where there is only a weekly and the facilities are most limited. That part of Mr. Heath's letter to us is true, but not the statement that his advertising is poor. We wish that every exhibitor in the country did as "poor" advertising as he shows.

Anyone can sit in the sunshine in fair weather; it takes the umbrella of advertising to shed the weather in the rain.

RECENTLY we published an advertisement of a Seattle theatre in which all but two columns of a double page was used and said that we believed that this established a record in the size of a motion picture display.

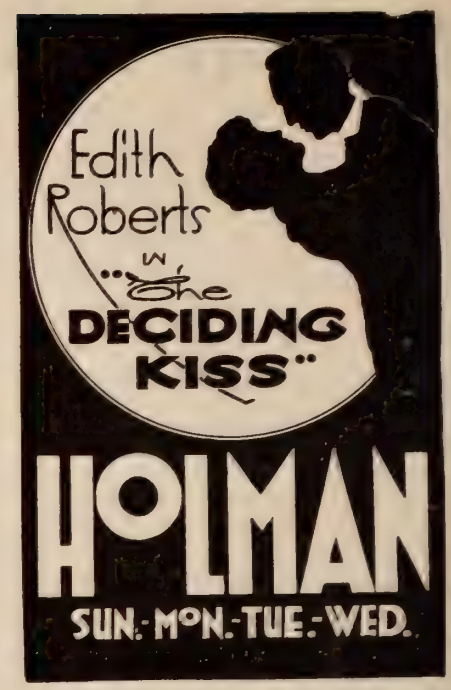
But the record has been broken and in a city of less than 10,000, Faribault, Minn., Grand theatre used a full double page on "Pershing's Crusaders" in the Saturday edition of the local paper. It was able to do this through the patriotic generosity of local business men who contributed to cost of the advertisement on behalf of the Committee on Public Information.

Heavy wooden type is used for the main display, then the character of the production is outlined. It is well written and it will carry a big appeal.

Don't worry about the public, for the public soon knows those that are worrying about IT.



WE are getting an amazing amount of good advertising specimens from Canada. Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal, writes us that he is adapting the trade paper advertising to his use wherever possible. He uses mainly black and white effects with the limit in the amount of reading matter.

In his display in Edith Roberts' "The Deciding Kiss," he has employed a silhouette effect of the man with the girl in his arms and has contented himself with the illustration, the name of the star, the title, the date and the name of the theatre. This is good advertising on this particular picture. It is curiosity arousing and will bring people to the theatre, but there are not a great many pictures on which we favor omitting all the selling talk. The display is double column, 6½ inches.

The difference between the fellow who waits for them to come and the man who advertised is the difference between Prosperity and Bankruptcy.

GREEN THEATRE, Anoka, Wis., gets a good display in an advertisement four inches deep across the bottom of the first page of the weekly paper. We believe that even more attention would have been attracted by using the same space two columns wide, which would have given a depth of twelve inches, and then employing one of the large cartoon heads of the Kaiser supplied by Universal. We consider the cut at the right of the display practically meaningless for advertising.

One other thing. Leave out such expressions as "See" and "Don't miss" in your advertising. They mean nothing; your space alone shows that you are advising the public to attend the performances, and exhortations like this do not strengthen the display, but rather use up white space that in itself would make the exploitation stronger.

Much improvement could be made in the content of the ad. We fail to see what duty any one owes to his friends to see any picture, as the display states. Green theatre deserves credit for taking unusually big space on this, but it should have striven all the harder to put the greatest pulling power into it.

Don't advertise your theatre as a place to kill time, but as a place where the patron's time spent is made valuable to him.

YES, this is a nice, fancy little advertisement. Then we are done. It absolutely tells you nothing about the picture and leaves you wondering where the little jimcracks that were used on the left hand side were dug up. They would have been splendid on a benefit program for the Ladies' Aid Society, but they have no place around a newspaper display.

We have never been able to understand why any advertiser believes that he is getting an artistic display by using a lot of fancy rules or block effects. And then, after he is satisfied he has done this, he uses the smaller lines for the circus type of advertising. And such lines as "Seven Thousand Feet of Thrills," "Ninety Minutes of Real Excitement," etc., are circus lines, and not good ones at that.

Why not tell something about the picture? Doesn't the advertiser know the appeal of "The Argyle Case"? If he didn't know the appeal of this picture he should never have booked it in the first place. This advertisement, we are absolutely confident, did not sell one ticket. Those who were coming, any way, came. And that's all. White paper to the extent of six inches, double column, was wasted.

HERE is one of the very best up-to-the-minute advertisements that we have seen. It comes from the Liberty and Gordon Square theatres, Cleveland, O., and though its size is only three columns by 6¾ inches it certainly carries an awful wallop with it.

Prominently brought out is the sentence, "The Kaiser said it could not be done." and arrow from this points to a map of the Marne front showing the territory that the allies, as the result of the American aid, have regained from the Germans and at the point of the arrow are the words, "This is America's Answer." This display will get every eye and it will certainly have the result of making every person who is interested in the wonderful work that the American boys are doing over there want to see "My Four Years in Germany."

And the best part of it is that there is nothing of the fake about it. It is a splendid example of taking advantage of an opportunity.

If you have to pinch yourself to find out whether you are awake, it won't remain a habit long. You won't be able to pinch soon.

WE have told you several times in criticism of the advertising of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., that this is a new house and that one of the policies in advertising is to popularize the theatre. Ten inches, three columns, has been used in this display and the drawn work is excellent. It puts over the selling argument of the picture to a certain extent, but not far enough.

The designer of the advertising knew what the selling arguments were, but he used them in the smallest type that he employed. If we had been writing this display we would have had the lines "Perfectly proper youth—Home from college—Gambling debts—Taxi bills—Angry father—What's the answer?" played strong, and for this we would have reduced the display on the short reels and the announcement on the middle of the week change to the limit. Then there would have been an argument to see the picture put over with a wallop. Don't get an attractive drawing and then fill the rest of the space with mere type.

Know thyself first, and your patron next.

THERE are occasions when an advertisement stands out all the stronger by failure to use a cut. That is in case of some unusual production where the title and the name of the star created the desire to see the picture. And further provided that you are willing to use plenty of space.

Strand theatre, Syracuse, is generally a good advertiser, and certainly it got good results on "Les Miserables." It occupied 9¾ inches across four columns and every inch of the space worth using. You will note that there is not a line of exaggeration in this display. The superlatives have been passed up and the announcement is dignified. We know that this attracted the attention of hundreds who rarely go to motion picture theatres, and it made new patrons for the theatre. And as this happened to be a picture that backed up the announcement, you can be sure that the Strand made new friends.

IN his presentation at the Rivoli this week Mr. Rothapfel has gone himself one better and the result is probably the most unique program in the history of motion pictures. There is not a feature on the bill, there being a two-reel O. Henry, a two-reel Wolfville, and all of the remainder being war pictures, including "Britain's Far Flung Battle Line," and musical effects.

We have told you of a couple of times before that Mr. Rothapfel has used O. Henry pictures as the only dramatic offering. Once this was done with the pictures of the Marines that he made for the Government and the second time with the Martin Johnson South Sea Island reels. But this time there is not even a picture as long as the two other productions that were used with the O. Henry offerings.

In all the years that we have been attending places of amusement we have never seen an audience that was so enthusiastic throughout a presentation, nor have we ever heard such unanimous words of praise as the people left the theatre. Certainly it shows that a house is not dependent on any one type of productions to please, and certainly the fact that a bill without a feature has now been shown for three times in a couple of months proves that the people like varied offerings in films.

There is distinctly "something doing" from the very start. The overture is "Danse Macabre," by Saint-Saens, and based on the dance of death. It is played with the whole theatre dark, something new in overtures at the Rothapfel houses. With the noise of the wind, thunder and flashes of lightning the weird setting by John Wenger is shown. There is the suggestion of midnight and terror. As the curtains part the only lighting is a candle on a table and the lightning flashes can be seen through the window at the back of the stage, with one ray of red light at the top of the stage at the left. Soon the candle is snuffed out by a gray-clad figure operated from above the stage, and in this dim light the dance is executed, the figure lengthening and shortening itself and finally disappearing through the top of the stage as the suggestion of morning comes.

Then come American Red Cross pictures of the Fourth of July celebration in Paris and there is scarcely a moment of the time when the audience is not cheering and on occasions hundreds of people rise to their feet and cheer. "Yankee Doodle" is played twice through the opening scenes, and this follows into "America" in B flat, and then we have "Liberty Bell," with the pictures of the marching Americans, this in turn following into "Le Père de la Victoire." Then we have a wonderful shot of the marching American nurses as the orchestra and organ peal forth "Onward Christian Soldiers," and then follows the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." The audiences renew their cheering when we have the first shot of the "Avenue du Président Wilson," the chorus of "Over There" being played once through, and when we have the marching men and the statue of Washington decorated with the flags of the Allies and the music becomes the first part of "America" we thought that the limit of enthusiasm has been reached, but it is surpassed when we have the flag which was pierced by twenty-eight Prussian bullets and the orchestra turns into "Dixie" for a record-breaking finish.

Then Greek Evans sings "Because." There is no special setting for this, the curtains at the left being only half drawn. During the rendition of this the orchestra is bathed in blue and the center dome in red. There are no other lights and there is no spot on the singer, and so the rendition is given an unusually romantic turn.

Now "Springtime à la Carte" is a delightful little picture and the music that is used with it makes it all the more enjoyable. The score for this picture was just as carefully prepared as for the biggest feature. It opens with "Maytime," and then when the men run after the girl it becomes "Go on Your Way," played without introduction, and "Spring Song" is the theme for the meeting of the lovers by the gate. With the title "I'll Be Right Back" the music becomes "Matinee Idol," followed by the theme. As the girl is seen sitting all alone "Tired Hands" is played, and this is followed by "My Dreamy China Lady." Then with the scenes next door comes "The Creepy, Weepy Feeling," while with the title of "Sarah's Brilliant Idea" we have "Romeo and Juliet," played without the introduction. With the title "Spring Comes When It Comes" we have the chorus of "Kiss Me Again," followed by "Spring Song" with violin solo, and then the arrival of Walter brings "When the Lights Are Low," followed by "Spring Song" and "Kiss Me Again" as the final number. Now the audiences enjoy every moment of this. There is constant laughter, not of the boisterous sort, but the general feeling of delight with everything. And at the end there is a burst of applause that proves how much the picture is appreciated.

With the lights all red in honor of Britain the orchestra then plays "Rule Britannia" as the prelude to "Britain's Far Flug Battle Line." These are official government pictures and they are offered at the Rivoli in commemoration of the fourth anniversary of England entering the war. Mr. Rothapfel's program bears these words this week: "This program is respectfully dedicated to the British Mission in the United States." These pictures are certainly a wonderful exposition of what England is doing and has done, and certainly no picture ever got greater approval from audiences. The very title of the picture gets a big hand, and then when there are shown a succession of huge ships and the orchestra plays "Pomp and Circumstance," a magnificent composition, there are cheers after cheers. "Go to Sea" is the second selection, and then with the pictures of the floating hangars "Admirals All" is the music. There are effects only used with the pictures of the flying machines, and then with the views of the Royal Flying Corps we have "Air Queen," with other effects with the pictures of the machines in flight.

When the scenes turn to Italy and show the British troops that are fighting there "Bersaglieri" is played twice through, followed by "Garibaldi's March." Then we have a series of pictures showing the training of the British army and during these scenes we have first "Nell Gwynne," Suite 3, and then the "Torch Dance" from "Henry VIII," after which the "Nell Gwynne" number is repeated. We have a title telling us that every part of the Empire has contributed troops to fight in France, and with the first views of Moors and the soldiers from the East we have.

Next the picture turns to the naval air power of Britain and we have "Sons of Britain" played through once, and then a series of effects for the flying machines. When we are taken to the Western front "Tommy Atkins" is used, followed by "Loyal Hearts," in which "God Save the King" is counterpointed, and then with the first German prisoners we have "Maple Leaf" played twice, and at the very end the last four bars of "Rule Britannia." Now the audiences have been cheering all through this picture and with the last scene fading away the appreciation continues.

Garbed in hoop-skirt costume, Miss Gladys Rice then sings "Listen to the Mocking Bird." The Wenger setting showing the rocks and arrow-like trees is used here. There are no lights used here, for as the singer is finishing the final bars the screen curtain gradually and almost unseen comes down, and then we have the title of the Wolfville story, released by General, "The Winning of the Mocking Bird." Now it is obvious to everyone that this song was put just in the right place and in a moment the audience has settled down from the stirring war pictures to enjoy this delightful little love story with its plenty of laughs. Now the notes of "Listen to the Mocking Bird" continue into the picture and after the first title, "Stampede," is played, and then with the scenes from the sheriff's sharpshooting we get the first eight bars of "Zephir" and eight bars of "Old Hundred."

Because they have not had a moment to rest during the whole presentation, two-thirds of the big orchestra is gone as this picture is well started, but so careful have been the selections of the music, especially fitted for the string instruments, that no one seems to know this. "Turkey in the Straw" and "Wyoming Days" are then played, and with the vision of the girl "Listen to the Mocking Bird" is played once as a violin solo and then with the orchestra. "Wild and Woolly" follows, after which we return to the theme again, and then we have a numbered selection, followed by "Gems of Foster" at the "First Performance." When the fiddler is shown we have "Mocking Bird" again and "Who Is Who?" as the drunk is returning to the concert, and then "Mocking Bird" in 'cello solo, with "Stampede No.

75" for the near-lynching scene, and finally the theme at the end when the girl saves the man that she has come to love.

Again, for a short feature there is great applause and everyone goes away from the theatre absolutely delighted. While there is comedy in both of these two-reel pictures, there is no regulation comedy on the bill. But these two splendid little pictures have been set between the heavier war pictures until the result is little short of marvelous. Short subjects such as these help to balance your program and they give the "finished" effect to the whole presentation. You have everyone satisfied that they have seen a perfect presentation—and this one at the Rivoli certainly is.

With the exception of the feature, which seems too heavy either for hot weather or war time, there is a splendid bill also at the Rialto this week. It includes probably the longest and certainly one of the most effective Animated that has ever been shown at one of the Rothapfel houses. It has been the Rothapfel methods that have created the wonderful interest in the arrangements of news pictures and this week every inch of the film is being thoroughly enjoyed.

Dr. Reisenfeld is at his very best this week in conducting the overture at the Rialto and the second and fourth movements of Tschaikowsky's "Fourth Symphony" have never been more brilliantly played. The audience burst into applause several times during the rendition that is a triumph at the end. Then follows "Doing Dips in a Dory," one of the Ford educationals, presenting pictures of Ausable Chasm. There are many times of peril shown, together with some beautiful scenery. The waltz from Tschaikowsky's "E Minor Symphony" starts in off and there follow "To a Wild Rose," "Oh, That We Two Were Maying," and then "To a Wild Rose," repeated at the end.

With the orchestra bathed in blue and the side curtains in red, Lorrie Grimaldi, basso, and Arturo Fornari, baritone, sing "Sound the Trumpets' Warning" from "I Puritani," and then comes the smashing Animated.

"The Right of Way" is the music for the opening scenes of Screen Telegram pictures of the review of the troops at Camp Dix. Then Gaumont shows the sailor boys at Pelham Bay in carnival and here the music swings to "If He Can Fight Like He Can Love." Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of a fire in a paper factory on a lightless night and here selections from "The Tempest" are used. There are none of the usual flashes of red with this picture; it's too hot for that these days. Screen Telegram shows some interesting views of daredevil firemen performing and here "Champagne Gallop" is used. Now note how the pictures have been coupled up. Then come pictures from Hearst-Pathe of decorating New York fire heroes and "The Observer March" is used here.

Now we get in a little touch of the sidelights of war. Screen Telegram supplies pictures of Vassar girls who have left school to work in the fields and here "College Overture" is employed. There are some clever titles, including "Modern Maud Mullers" and "So Hiram Can Be a Soldier Now." Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of British women pledging their loyalty on the anniversary of the wedding of their king and queen. "Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the music. "Furore Galop" is used with Gaumont pictures of the autopolo game at Independence, Mo., and then "On Horseback" with the Hearst-Pathe pictures of "Star Wigler" breaking a harness record.

Here starts the fourth issue of the Allies' Official War Review and things begin to happen. First of these pictures is headed "They Are Going Over," and we have some fine shots of the British ships and of the fast destroyers rushing about. These pictures were taken from the deck of one of the transports and the effects are unusually good. We have some close-up of the warship, and then a clever little touch is added with the bulldog and the cat in a scrap. The chorus of "Over There" is played at the start and then "Admiral's All."

The start of the great Allied drive is shown in the next pictures and here we have views of the American soldiers in their trenches, with the music "Yankee Doodle Boy," played with a counterpoint of the "Marseillaise, as the French and Americans go forward together. Then the boys start "Over the Top" and the orchestra swings into "Dixie." One of the greatest demonstrations that we have ever seen takes place and continues as the capture of a German tank is shown and then hordes of German prisoners. For these latter scenes "Hail Columbia" is used. There the Official War Review ends, but not the whole Animated.

Gaumont shows pictures of France honoring our boys on the Fourth with first a shot of the American flag and then a French general decorating some of the heroes and the regimental flag. There follow titles saying that the Americans and the old church bell are the only things left in the town untouched, and then come pictures of the spoils of war, groups of German helmets and Screen Telegram pictures of a wrecked ambulance. "Columbia March" is the music all during these pictures. Then Screen Telegram gives a humorous incident showing a negro soldier having a hard time in doping out a letter home, and here the accompaniment is "When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parlez-Vous." From Gaumont come pictures of Dr. Carrel at the front and here the last part of the chorus of "My Own United States" is played. From the same source come pictures of James Montgomery Flagg making his recruiting poster "Tell It to the Marines," the living model fading into the picture in an effective manner to "Semper Fidelis." Then from the same source come pictures of the Marines at Mare Island, Cal., forming the living words "To Hell with the Kaiser," and with this smashing finish comes "Marine Hymn."

There is a little breathing space then with Miss Annie Rosner singing "Magic Song." For this the center dome is in red with a blue outer rim, the proscenium in red and the orchestra in the same color. Then follows the feature, and for this the larger part of the music is of a Russian character.

Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Fourth of July in France different from those at the Rivoli are then shown. There are a few bars of the "Marseillaise" played at the start, and then the music becomes "Yankee Doodle" with pictures of the Yankee soldiers. Pictures of girls of Alsace call for "March Lorraine," and this is counterpointed with the "Marseillaise" when President Poincaré appears on the screen. Music changes to "Stars and Stripes" as we are shown a view of the Avenue President Wilson, and then follows the Fourth parade down that street with the audience going wild. This is followed by "Le Père de la Victoire" as the French girls rush out to give the marching Americans flowers. Then we have a subtitle declaring that every monument in France was decorated with flags, and as the audience gets a view of the French and American flags everywhere the orchestra turns into "America." And although the audience is not supposed to stand for this selection, which is, of course, not the national anthem, everyone in the audience jumps to their feet. It is simply a case of the patriotic spirit moving everyone. And the flash of General Joffre adds to the enthusiasm.

But the reason for all of this patriotic matter? In the first place the pictures are all right up to the minute. In the second place with the success of the Allied counter-drive the patriotic spirit was never as high in New York as it is today, and it is mighty good stuff to give the people the sort of matter that they want and to let them give vent to the enthusiasm and the appreciation of our boys that is in them.

OFF FOR TWO WEEKS

This Department Will Be Dropped During the Writer's Vacation

EVEN the writer of "Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel" has to have a short vacation to get through the hot weather, and for that reason this department will not appear in the next two issues.

This department has attracted widespread attention during the almost a year that it has been printed and scores of exhibitors have told or written us that it has helped them a great deal in the presentation of specific shows and in the general conduct of their business.

After two weeks we will be back again seeking the Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel and we hope the department will be "bigger and better."

Kidding-the-Picture-Campaign Planned for Exploiting "The Geezer of Berlin"

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS is presenting a unique campaign of advertising for the exhibitors on "The Geezer of Berlin." It is frankly "kidding" copy and this is unquestionably the way to advertise this travesty on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." This character of advertising will have everyone in your community smiling before you present the picture which promises the big laughs.

In the first place Jewel Productions advise all of the exhibitors who showed "The Kaiser," to take this picture and to exploit it in advance, taking advantage of all the advertising that the more serious picture had. For that reason the fact that this is a travesty is brought out strongly in all of the exploitation suggested. You will find that those who saw "The Kaiser" and who were aroused by the things pictured there will welcome the chance to laugh at somewhat the same incidents burlesqued.

A complete series of single and double-column advertisements, both in mat and cut form, have been prepared and it would be a good idea to start advertising this picture a week in advance. Here is a case where the picture is so different from anything that you have ever shown that a different policy should be followed in putting it over. If you can get your patrons to looking for these advertisements for several days before your opening, you are going to have a big line in front of your theatre.

There are four double and four single-column advertisements prepared. These are arranged for the headings for the displays and additional matter may be added below by simply having the stereotyper saw through the cut. All of these are written in the German dialect and are exceedingly slangy. There are sketches at the tops of these nearly all of which bring in the drawing of the kaiser and then follow the quotation, the title and a few words of sales talk.

Don't make your exploitation of this picture serious, for you will lose half of the pulling power. Go out and tell the people that if they want to come and laugh at the expense of the Hun ruler and the members of his gang, this is the chance.

Paper on this picture shows the harem scenes very largely and brings out the comedy element. There is a 6-sheet, a 3-sheet and two one-sheets.

When you start on the exploitation of "The Geezer of Berlin" say to yourself that you are going to have a vacation—and have a good time in the work. It will do you good and bring you business.

Baltimore Theatre Observes American Victory

Baltimore people had one of their few motion picture exhibitions as the result of a special program arranged by Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the company owning the Garden theatre. This program was especially arranged in the way of a victory celebration to show the work that the American soldiers are accomplishing in France and no admission was charged. Two pictures were shown, "American Battle Front" and "Fighting on the Italian Front."

Just as it is necessary to know when to stop talking when writing copy, so is it necessary to know when to start printing.

McCormick Tells Reason for Strategy in Advertising

One of the most successful of the Circle theatres campaigns was accomplished by a simple bit of strategy in the allotment of space. The attraction was a war picture and it was thoroughly advertised in advance with liberal newspaper space and extensive billing. The campaign was planned for a gradual increase of space toward the opening, twenty, thirty, forty inch copy used with quarter and half pages on the day before opening them. On the Sunday of opening a full page. It was the first full page ever used in the city to advertise an attraction.

It fairly overwhelmed by its massiveness and the spirit of confidence and importance it radiated, and because it was planned to have this strategic effect it accomplished its purpose.

Analyzed, strategy in advertising is simply the application of practical selling methods in print, it is business generalship, the employment of means for gaining advantage.

Songs with Pictures on Cincinnati Bill

For the first time since the old days when motion pictures were interspersed with vaudeville, Cincinnati has had a novel program. The Lyric theatre has decided to have several vocal numbers during each showing and they have proved a great success in the short time that they have been tried.

Making Your Theatre the "One" Theatre

By Harold B. Franklin

Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

IT is easy to make your theatre the one main attraction in your locality. All it requires is intelligent effort and hard work—mostly hard work. You must have vision and patience and the ability to picture things as they ought to be. It is not enough to plan. Make your plans real.

Come and we will visualize your theatre as it ought to be—a theatre that will satisfy your most critical patrons.

Is your front attractive from a distance as well as close up? This is your show window for the public and reflects the personality of your theatre—it tells at a glance what you are doing. Character and dignity should be subtly apparent. A cheerful front from the street to the entrance is pleasing to the eye. Cleanliness meets you. Your brass is highly polished and the glass in your frames, doors and windows sparkle with brilliancy. Your signs are always bright. The photos or posters in your frames are neatly arranged and have been selected with good judgment and they indicate what you are playing. Your entrance is a constant invitation to come in.

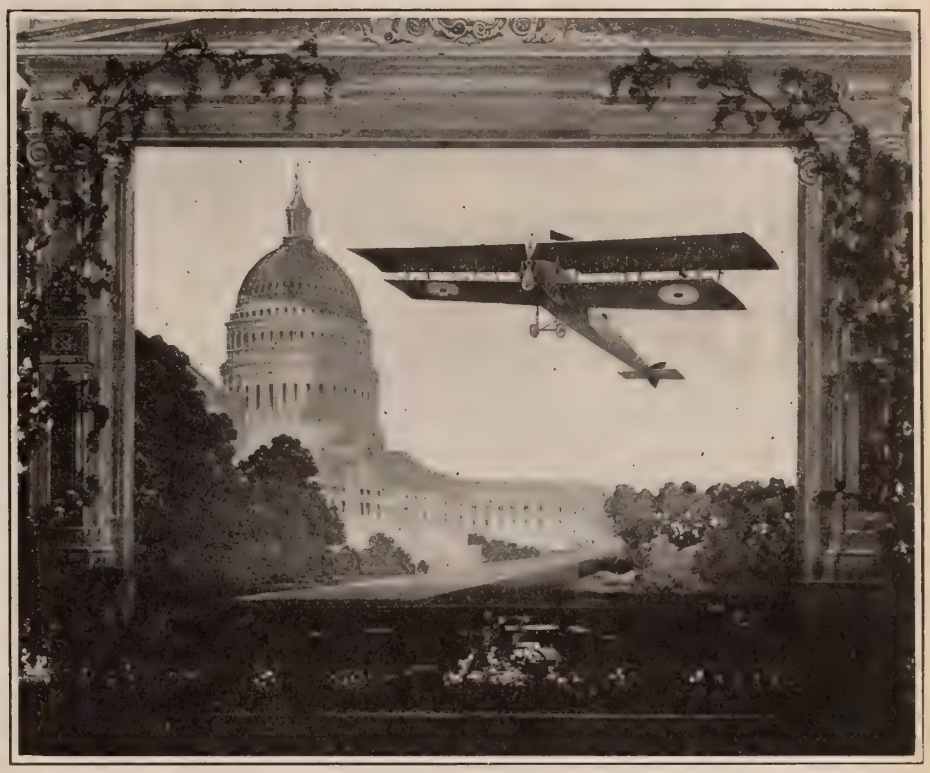
An attractive girl sells tickets, she smiles and says "thank you," making the patron feel welcome. A neatly uniformed door attendant shows the evident courtesy of your theatre.

Seemingness, cheerfulness and a general sense of comfort greet your patron as he is ushered to a seat and handed a program by the usher. Your aisles are noiseless. The ventilation is good and the air fresh. Soft mellow lights illuminate the theatre, but do not affect the screen, yet light enough for one to observe his neighbors. A clean, sharp picture is projected without a flicker.

The music is of good quality, clear in tone and pleasant to the ear. It is readily observed that the score intelligently follows the action of the picture. Your orchestra plays softly, in perfect tune, with the strings predominating. You start your performance with a well-played overture or solo. Possibly if you have a stage your setting is gradually illuminated with expressive colors. If not the screen frame is surrounded by restful decorations. The pleasant environment and atmosphere is evident everywhere.

The comfort of your patrons is carefully looked after by courteous, well-mannered employes and the service in the balcony is just as good as in the orchestra.

You have analyzed thoughtfully the kind of pictures your patrons want. Good judgment has been exercised in the selection of your program, nothing is shown that is likely to cause unpleasant criticism. You always make the performance bright and entertaining—and whenever you can, add a touch of novelty. A theatre's reputation is built on good pictures that are clean. You do not interrupt the sequence of the show by a glaring display of coming attractions or local advertising slides.



"America's Way to Victory," the latest patriotic stage setting of H. B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome

Register patriotism in your show. Your patrons are all Americans who are wholly interested in our country's welfare and are only too glad to have an opportunity to express approval.

Take as much care in the finish of your program as you did earlier in the evening. The house should be well lighted and the music should not stop playing until the last patron is gone. Every patron will leave your theatre well pleased, with an evident desire to return.

And do not let your wonderful theatre be a "secret." Advertise well and freely. Use liberal space in the newspapers, develop a representative mailing list. Use billboards whenever possible. Keep your theatre constantly before the public. Remember that your patrons easily forget and do not know what is going on in your house as well as you do. Good advertising will bring you a generous patronage—when backed by sincerity, truth and facts. Truth in advertising must always be maintained.

PATRIOTIC EFFECTS

Rothapfel's Articles to Be Resumed in Next Week's Issue.

IN the next issue there will be resumed the series of articles by S. L. Rothapfel on the presentation of patriotic pictures. The first general outline of these appeared three weeks ago.

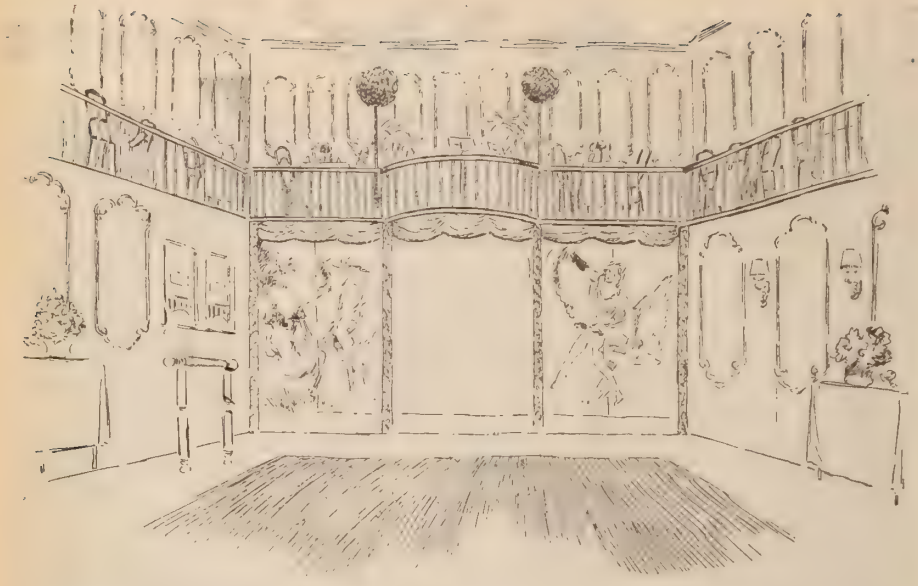
The next article will tell of the manner in which he selects his news weekly effects and in the following articles he will take one of the weeklies and analyze it and tell why he did certain things for the purpose of patriotic propaganda.

"Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel" will be missing for the next two weeks.

Universal Gives Plans for Boy Scout Serial

Universal has just compiled a series of suggestions to exhibitors who are playing the "Boy Scouts to the Rescue" serial. It is suggested that the theatre secure the cooperation of the scoutmaster in his town and have him make a talk on the first night the picture is run. It is further suggested that it will be a good idea to admit free to the first episode every boy who comes to the theatre in uniform and that this alone will stimulate interest in the Boy Scout organization and in the picture. Parades, setting up recruiting booths in the lobby of the theatre and inducing sporting goods stores to arrange special displays, are some of the other features.

Universal further suggests that the cooperation of the ministers can be secured as nearly all of them have endorsed the organization and will probably be glad to call attention to the picture. Universal has established a Boy Scout Bureau to give special service to the exhibitors on this picture.



Drawing of Kashin's lobby display at Broadway reproducing interior of cabaret

Cabaret Settings Follow "Bread" All Way from Lobby to Stage at Broadway

FROM street to screen the cabaret figures strongly in the manner in which Mr. Kashin is putting on "Bread" for its present run at the Broadway theatre. "Bright lights" form the setting for this production in which Mary MacLaren is starring and that atmosphere dominates the setting from the lobby display until the very end of the show.

Outside of the theatre and the lobby of the theatre represent a cabaret entrance. A huge butterfly sign dominates the front and the interior of the lobby is the cabaret with tables on a balcony running around, just high enough to be out of the way of the patrons, but sufficiently prominent to attract the greatest attention. It being impossible to photograph this, the accompanying drawing represents the arrangement.

There are a series of tables around the balcony, each of these fully set and with lights on them. There is also a balcony for four Hawaiian musicians and during certain hours of the day they render typical cabaret music. Naturally this music and the balcony scenes draw the crowds in from the street and the rest of the display is devoted to the selling arguments on the picture.

On either side of the entrance there are a series of reading notices, each one headed "Maxims," which will be immediately recognized as the name of a famous cabaret, though, of course, that is not the meaning of it here. Around the lobby such lines are used as: "The dark side of the 'bright lights'"; "Almost pathetic—washing your own handkerchief after a night at a swell cabaret," and "This girl had but one barrier between fame and failure—a loaf of bread."

Inside the theatre the same spirit is carried out in connection with the presentation of the picture. The bill opens with an orchestral overture, Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Underworld" and this is followed by the Broadway Topical Digest and the Universal Screen Magazine and then the Hawaiian quartette renders some typical native music. Next is a Lyons and Moran comedy.

Now the feature presentation is opened with the stage dark and the orchestra playing "Buttercup," a one step and a moment later a blue spot light picks out a dancing team in the center of the stage and then follows a jazz exhibition. As the team bows to the applause the spot is dimmed and the picture starts. When the cabaret scene was first flashed the lights comes up enough to see a full cabaret set on the stage, the orchestra stopping and the Hawaiian quartet beginning to play as they do at all repetitions of the cabaret scene.

The end of the picture shows the heroine rescued from starvation, and this scene ironically occurs in a restaurant. At a moment just before the girl is to come out of a faint and looks into her lover's eyes the organ orchestra, Hawaiians and vocalists rendered the theme of the picture, from "Fancy Free," and then the picture fades out and on the stage we get a glimpse of a couple holding hands over the table. It was very effective and the audience liked it thoroughly.

Community Singing Scores Big Hit in Buffalo Neighborhood House

BUFFALO is one city that has taken a strong hold on the community singing idea. One of the largest community choruses in the East is organized here. So popular has been the "sings" in different halls and parks that Manager E. O. Weinberg has brought the idea right into the Elmwood theatre, one of the most beautiful neighborhood houses in America. Here on certain evenings each week songs are thrown upon the screen, and under the direction of a local chorus director the audience joins in singing such songs as "There's a Long, Long Trail," "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "Over There," "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag," "The Star Spangled Banner," and many other popular and timely tunes.

"The stunt has proven a great hit," says Manager Weinberg," and audiences encore continually with the result that some evenings we find it necessary to run our entire stock of song slides. The singing awakens the audience between pictures, puts new life into them and consequently the entertaining qualities of the feature are greatly enhanced."

Mr. Weinberg has found it well worth while to employ a capable director who is well known in Buffalo to direct the singing. This fall and winter he plans to enlarge on the idea.

Mr. Weinberg, by the way, will soon celebrate his first anniversary as manager of the Elmwood. And it means more than an anniversary, for the theatre is now a paying investment for the first time in the four years that it has been in operation, thanks to the showmanship that Mr. Weinberg has put behind the house, which appeals to the very highest class of trade. Music by an orchestra and a large organ is one of the features of the theatre.

Stirring Up Interest of Fans Plays Big Part in Success at Los Angeles

So much for the one-day situation, Sunday, Saturday or Tuesday, as the case may be. Next let's have a glance at what the newspapers are doing during the week.

The Monday Evening Herald carries two columns of reviews of the principal local attractions, intelligently displayed and interestingly written. It is an ideal of what should be done in a Monday afternoon paper. In the same issue appear three inches double column advertisements for Clune's Auditorium, two inches double for Kinema, Grauman and Tally's, an inch double each for Symphony and Clune's Broadway, combination displays 1½ single for Garrick and Riviera and Alhambra and Miller, while half-inch double is used by Superba, Burbank, Palace and Quinn's Rialto. The Tuesday issue has already been covered. Wednesday contains a two-column head for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and practically the same advertising. On Thursday and Friday there are practically three columns each day for the theatre and the photoplay, together.

On Monday the Evening Express carries three columns of review matter, including the legitimate, and about the same advertising as the Herald, except that nine inches double from Grauman's and thirteen inches across three from Tally's Broadway and forty inches from Clune's Auditorium. This is apparently an evening up for the same advertising that appears in the Tuesday edition of the Herald. On Tuesday the Express has the Monday advertising schedule of the Herald and about two columns of review matter. Wednesday and Thursday there are from two to three columns of reading notices and matter and on Friday the Express jumps up to four columns of matter, including news matter, reading notices and a column of interesting gossipy stuff under the heading "In the Merry World of Make Believe," which is devoted largely to the stage.

The Evening Record has the same advertising as the Express and about three columns, without heading, for the reviews. Tuesday there is three and a half columns, with Wednesday about the same, an increasing another column on Thursday, while Friday we find nothing. However, the Record seems very liberal in space to pictures, though the matter is not so attractively presented as in others.

The Examiner, morning, in the issue of Monday devotes a full page to the motion picture and legitimate advertising and reviews and carries a two-column picture of Clara Kimball Young. The usual advertising space is employed by the various houses in this paper, "New Offerings of Stage and Screen" are featured across an eight-page head daily in this paper and there is usually a picture of a legitimate vaudeville or screen player. There is some news matter included in this, but it largely refers to attractions at the various theatres, but the typing is good and the arrangement is artistic and the Examiner shows the interest that is centered in amusements by devoting that amount of space.

The Times on Monday devotes a full page to the news and advertising of the motion picture and the stage, all of it to the films except one page. There is a three-column picture of Mary Pickford and then a column of "Flashes" with texts of the players and then a review of the new pictures of the week. Practically all of the theatres advertise here, but they are compelled to use the same open-face style of displays that are followed in the Sunday issue. Tuesday we find another three-column picture of the first refill, another column of "Flashes" and then a column and a half about the local pictures. Wednesday we have the same and Thursday the motion picture reading notices are combined with the regular theatres, but Friday there are a column and a half of "Flashes" again and these also appear on Saturday.

Unquestionably the treatment that the Times gives the motion picture is liberal, and without the slightest doubt this material is read by thousands of fans and appreciated.

All in all we want to commend the Los Angeles situation as splendid in so far as nearly all of the newspapers and the leading theatres are concerned. We repeat that we think that the smaller houses are making a mistake by not taking advantage of the interest of their patrons in the newspaper columns, and we believe that those who will try to advertise on a smaller scale will prove that it pays. We suggest that they seek to get the commercial rate—to which we referred in the first of these articles—and not to expect reading notices with them.

They will find that by the very presence of their announcements in these papers they will draw business from other sections of the city which will more than pay for the increased expense—if the plan is consistently followed.

What we like most of all about the situation there is that the exhibitors have realized the sort of matter that is of most value to them. Most of them see that it is necessary to have liberal advertising and that this advertising must be good. They seem to know that one day a week advertising is good, but they are lacking a great deal in making the most of their possible patronage unless they use the newspapers every day.

They are not asking for long-winded reading notices with bunches of adjectives. They are content to let regular motion picture editors supervise their matter, and they know that a column of real motion picture news in the newspapers is ultimately worth more to them than pages of the obvious "free stuff."

It is well that the light may have been so clearly seen in the producing center of the industry. And does it occur to you that if in a city where people are accustomed to seeing scores of the famous stars daily that if this sort of matter is to be encouraged in Los Angeles, you ought to put even more effort forward to get the same sort of material in your newspapers?

There is certainly a string lesson for exhibitors and newspapers everywhere. And there is plenty of ground in which for the seed to bear fruit, but it won't hurry the crop along unless you call the attention of this sort of co-operation to YOUR newspaper and unless YOU do your own part in co-operation.

The fellow who merely "runs his business" generally does run it—down. But the man who conducts his theatre is always leading it up and forward.

How to Exploit Along New Vitagraph Plan

VITAGRAPH is announcing a change in plans of offering its star pictures and it is one that will aid the exhibitor in preparing his exploitation if he will use every angle for publicity. According to this plan, which is explained in detail elsewhere, there will be fifty-two of these pictures, divided among six stars and the exact dates for the release of every one of the fifty-two pictures is given.

Now a step beyond that has been taken by Vitagraph in individualizing or "typing" the various stars and indicating the sort of pictures in which they will be seen. In other words, you will be able to see the special appeal of each player and you will be able to arrange the rough outline for your year's exploitation of these pictures and to begin providing the material in advance. The scale on which you do this depends on the type of your theatre.

If you book these pictures, make up your mind that you are going to gather and preserve every piece of material that you are able to gather about each of the stars. The fact that you know that you are going to play eight Earl Williams or nine Bessie Love pictures during the year and that you know the exact dates that they are going to be released gives you assurance that the material that you are gathering together will not be wasted. It means, too, that you are given an opportunity to center your plans on the character of the exploitation that you want to do on each player.

Where you know that you are going to have nine Bessie Love pictures, you can afford to obtain attractive cuts of her for use both in your advertising and in your newspapers and programs. You can afford to collect photos of her, both straight pictures and cut-outs made from various roles and have regular lobby displays well in advance of each Bessie Love picture. You can plan to use frequent references to her in the matter that you send to the newspapers and the gossip column in your house organ.

Here is one point to bear in mind. If you have booked these series of stars it is up to you to get every line of matter about them printed in your newspaper, no matter whether you are in one of the leading cities or that a country weekly is your only organ. See that these items are kept short and interesting and that where possible they have news appeal. We have been urging you in the newspaper articles printed here to try to get the newspapers to print little news stories about your players, but not to expect them to mention the name of your theatre. In no case is that essential and certainly not where you have contracted for all of the pictures of these players.

You can afford now to get attractive cuts of the players. You will know that you are not putting out the money for a single picture, but that you can use each set of exploitation matter that you buy eight or nine times. The newspapers in the larger cities generally make their own cuts and often prefer scene pictures. These you will be supplied with. But there are many of these papers that will print from time to time for you news stories about players with single or double column cuts provided they are attractive and provided that they are not straight advertising for your theatre. A few of these illustrated stories in alternating with your regular reading notices will help you a great deal and the smaller the city the more they help and the more that you will be able to put the matter over, if you honestly try.

We believe that this arrangement gives you a great advantage in getting newspaper publicity and we urge you to give that your earnest attention.

Use the lobby displays that we have suggested.

If you book these pictures we suggest that it would be a very valuable thing to use an eight-page booklet, devoting the front cover to the announcement, and the back one to anything you see fit (possibly advertising will pay for it). Then devote a page to each of the stars. Use a cut and dig up the biographical matter. You will be able to get much of this in the STUDIO DIRECTORY and Vitagraph will doubtless be glad to furnish you the data. Make your matter snappy and then at the bottom of each page give the dates on which the various pictures will be played. You will find it astonishing how many people will preserve these booklets.

Of course, it immediately appeals to you that you have a strong point in finding out the names of the followers of the particular stars and making a special drive on them with your original announcements and your circularization on each picture. That is too apparent for extended comment.

You can have a Harry Morey night, or a week as the case may be, or you may be able to start clubs in the names of the various actors, promising each member an autographed photo.

Now, let us repeat, just as soon as you book these pictures, begin to lay in your supplies and keep every bit of material that you get on file for use with the later pictures. Vitagraph is supplying free to all exhibitors who will post them 24-sheets which will contain large pictures of the particular star, together with a panel at the side for inserting a six sheet on each production and sniping in the name of the theatre. This means that you are going to have your posting systematized and that you will always have the material at hand. In addition to this there will be a 6-sheet, a 3-sheet and a 1-sheet on each production.

There are three styles of star cuts, single, double column and thumbnail for use in newspaper matter of advertising. There are also drawings of each of the stars which can be preserved and used with any of the productions during the year. There will be single and double column scene cuts for each offering and for the lobby displays there will be eight scenes 11 x 14 and two 22 x 28. In addition there will be an announcement slide on each picture and a complete press sheet containing advertising suggestions and promotion ideas for putting over each picture. This Vitagraph press sheet contains much matter which your newspaper is likely to use and you should watch this carefully and see that attention is called to the various items.

You should take advantage of the fact that you know in advance the character of pictures in which these stars will be seen. There is unquestionably a special appeal to nearly every star and peculiar selling

Schade Uses Circus Billing to Boost "Greatest Show on Earth"

GEORGE J. SCHADE, manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, believes that anything that is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Not only that, but he believes in doing it just a little bit better than anybody else ever did it, and that is why his methods of putting over pictures in a town of 20,000 inhabitants are getting so much attention.

Schade's efforts in putting a picture over are not in proportion to the drawing power of the picture, but in proportion to the advertising possibilities of the pictures, and by his methods he can raise any average picture to the level of the masterpieces.

Look what he did with "The Biggest Show on Earth" featuring Enid Bennett.

First he created an atmosphere of mystery by filling Sandusky with posters announcing the arrival of the greatest show on earth, but he carefully refrained from saying what the show would be. In fact, he even fooled the city officials, who began to worry because they had not been approached for water licenses and all the things necessary before a big show can enter a town.

His second output of posters announced that the show would take place on July 25 and 26, between the drug store and the jewelry store on the main street.

The third announcement stated the whole story, as did the circus posters that Schade distributed liberally all over the town.

Aside from carrying large newspaper advertisements, he secured the services of a real juggler, and placed him on a box in front of the theatre, juggling and ballyhooing for the crowds to go in and see the greatest show on earth.

The result of this campaign was that he showed to 3,000 people the first day of the engagement, and played to capacity houses on the second day. Schade seldom runs a picture more than two days. He has demonstrated time and again that in two days he can get all the business there is to get if he goes after it, which he can be counted on to do.

Carpenter Puts Conversational Sales Talks Into Slides Announcing Coming Pictures

INFORMAL George H. Carpenter, who is directing the destinies of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, has broken out in a new spot. This time it is with a series of slides that dissolve one into the other.

"The idea is so old," he writes, "that the new generation of exhibitors may think it new. The slides are in the form of a personal chat with our customers and they seem to be making quite a hit."

As a matter of fact Mr. Carpenter is trying to enter into the spirit of the war and camouflage himself. The idea is new so far as we have seen, and while we haven't had a chance to sit down in his theatre and see how it goes over, we agree with him that it seems to be making quite a hit.

Why should it not be a good idea to put the sales argument in the slides, if your patrons will stand for slides? They won't unless they are bright and interesting in themselves. It wasn't so long ago that we sat and looked at the way shirts were made clean in the Tearum Laundry and the latest in bride's furniture from the Sideboard Brothers.

Then, sandwiched in with these, were announcements of what would be at the theatre tomorrow and the day after, and the Tuesday following, and the fortnight hence and all that sort of thing. It was rather to be expected that some one would tell the manager where he got off, and the multitudinous use of slides became to be mighty unpopular. But Carpenter is using as many as eleven on a single picture and is getting away with it.

"You Can't Have Everything" gave him an unusual opportunity for such a campaign. He talked the picture into the public. Here was a picture without any particular star, but with a strong appeal. The problem of selling the picture itself was up to the manager. It was a plain case of a salesmanship talk with a picture that Mr. Carpenter thought it necessary to arouse the interest in. Watch the way that the motion picture studio appeal was put into the various slides. This is the way that they went, remembering that each one faded into another.

Theatre Erects Canteen Through Citizen's Donations

Manager Joe Koehler, of the Auditorium, Sheridan, Wyo., is a theatre manager who does things, which was proven by a recent incident: The Red Cross called upon the Orpheum to arrange for the erection of a canteen building for the benefit of the soldiers and so quickly did Mr. Koehler get to work that in twenty-four hours he had everything donated from the flag on the top of the building to buttermilk which filled one of the coolers. Union labor donated its services in the erection of the building and all of the material was given to the cause.

Comedy Plans Bring Approval

Vitagraph Hears from Exhibitors About Policy of Releasing Big V Comedies in Two Reels—More Details This Week

EXPRESSIONS of satisfaction already have begun to reach the Vitagraph home office on its decision to release Big V Comedies as two-reel features, beginning the week of September 16. This policy was first announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, and fuller details are carried this week on another page. The new plan is said to be in response to the demand of more than 5,000 exhibitors that pictures with laughs be given more important recognition on the theatre program, especially in these most serious times.

Work already has been begun at Vitagraph's Hollywood studio on the two-reel Big V's, which will be of feature standard in every respect and will give to exhibitors pictures of such high quality that they will be justified in advertising them heavily, and even featuring them in electric signs. And, incidentally, this change in policy will make Vitagraph the only company in the field releasing a two-reel feature comedy weekly, it is said.

Vitagraph is fortunate in doubling the length of its comedies, in having two such comedy companies as those headed by Larry Semon and Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock. As in the past, these two companies will alternate on the two-reel program.

The two companies, while attaining to a high degree the same object, that of creating clean comedy and mirth provoking situations, may be said to be of different type. Both play strong on lightning action, but Montgomery and Rock have won fame more through athletic stunts and acrobatic antics, holding many thrills. One of their popular diversions is skipping along rooftops and cornices twelve stories in the air, and scaling the sides of buildings and leaping from one to another. Their comedies are the joint work of the two comedians and their director, J. A. Howe, the three writing all the stories.

Mr. Semon, who was for several years cartoonist on the New York Evening Sun, writes all his own comedies and directs them, in addition to playing the leading role in each. He also is a stunt artist of no mean ability and has come to the front rapidly in the last year as a screen funmaker. Both companies have their bevies of pretty girls and supporting players of high athletic ability.

New Ray Picture from Popular Novel

Charles Ray, as a result of the success of his former Western picture produced by Thomas H. Ince for Paramount, "Playing the Game," has been slated for another of that type, to be filmed from a novel and wherein he will have the role of a young chap on a ranch somewhere in the open lands.

Pathe Presents Mrs. Castle in Drama

Mrs. Irene Castle appears in "The Girl from Bohemia," released by Pathe the week of August 25. This is a five-reel comedy drama from the pen of Lois Zellner, directed by L. B. McGill and produced by Astra. In brief, it is a story of a girl who emigrates from New York's Bohemia to the narrow-minded village of Mayport. There she occupies an old-fashioned home with a maidenly aunt. Her ide is of futurist art which music and the drama, to put it mildly, shock the men and women of Mayport. However, in the end they learn to know that the girl from Bohemia has a heart of gold when she checks the proposed strike at the shipyard's building and she does her bit for Uncle Sam and wins the love of those at the shipyards.

Mme. Petrova

The severe strain of hand-shaking, occasioned by her personal tour in the interest of War Savings Stamps and appearances at theatres showing pictures in which she appeared, has proven too much for Mme. Petrova, it was announced this week. As a result the star will delay work on a new picture indefinitely, it is said.

The announcement from Mme. Petrova's press department said that the numerous hand-shakes had strained the tendons of the star's fingers, making them swell to abnormal proportions.

Select Claims True Type for Talmadge

One of the truest types of the real American girl ever shown on the screen is said to be portrayed by Norma Talmadge in her latest Select production, "Her Only Way," in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck. For the first time during her long career in motion pictures Miss Talmadge has a role which calls for a faithful delineation of the true American girl from the average American town. There are no furs or frills in the picture; nothing but the honest unaffected portrayal of an American girl of sterling worth and irreproachable character.

In many of Miss Talmadge's other roles on the screen she has depicted parts familiar to metropolitan life. In "The Safety Curtain" she was a music hall dancer, in "Ghosts of Yesterday" she was a cabaret singer and performer, while in "De Luxe Annie" she plays the part of a refined crook. Again, in "By Right of Purchase," Miss Talmadge was a fashionable society girl, but in "Her Only Way" she is just a simple, sweet ward of a fairly well-to-do family in an average-sized American city.

Pathe Claims Much of Keenan Feature

"More Trouble," the Pathe comedy drama, has been pronounced by exhibitors as perhaps the greatest of the Frank Keenan features released this year, but Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that there has been completed a still greater Frank Keenan feature which has been entitled "The Midnight Stage." This drama of California in the halycon days of the sixties will be announced for release at a later date. It will be remembered that Frank Keenan won artistic fame in the role of the sheriff in David Belasco's Western drama, "The Girl from the Golden West."

In "The Midnight Stage" he enacts a dual role; that of a gambler and then of a road agent. It is said that his character delineations of these two screen personalities are simply marvelous. Jack Cunningham wrote this drama which was directed by Ernest C. Warde.

Louise Huff Begins Third World Picture

Louise Huff began her third picture for World Pictures on Monday when "Heart of Gold" was put in work at the company's studio at Fort Lee. The basic theme of this picture is dress conservation, and the author, Lucy Sarver, has created what is said to be a rather unusual photo drama.

It Must Be Good!

In "Riddle Gawne," William S. Hart's next Artcraft picture, the popular portrayer of Western types, is said to strike twelve in his characterization of a strong man of the West. The story, once the characterization is established, gathers speed and thrills right up to the big climax near the end. It is announced as the swiftest and most thrilling "Western" Hart has done.

Five Million See "Cleopatra"

William Fox-Theda Bara Picture Packing Them in with No Limit in Sight—Interesting Figures Are Compiled

THE phenomenal business being done all over the country by the William Fox production, "Cleopatra," which went on a rental basis August 1, has developed the interesting fact, a statement from the Fox Film Corporation says, that 5,200,000 persons have already paid to see this drama of the siren of the Nile. Research shows that this figure beats, by 200,000, the population of Egypt and its possession at the time Cleopatra held sway as Egypt's queen.

That this figure of 5,200,000 is only temporary and is rapidly being surpassed is shown by the bookings which are coming in from all over the country for "Cleopatra." A striking fact in connection with these bookings is that many of them are repeat dates, and this despite the fact that the production, at its original showing, played at special prices.

Kunsky's Washington theatre in Detroit, for instance, has rebooked "Cleopatra" for a week, and early reports stated that despite the terrific heat the house is being packed at both daily performances. "Cleopatra" played the Washington theatre on a percentage basis for five weeks in the spring at $1 top prices.

"Cleopatra" opened in Pittsburgh for its run in the Olympic theatre at popular prices, and although the thermometer registered 100 degrees in the shade, the crowds that sought admission are said to have been almost unmanageable.

The extended run of the play at the Victoria in Philadelphia set a new high mark for attendance in that city, and the run of the play at the Colonial theatre, Chicago, will long remain as a standard.

An interesting situation developed in regard to the showing of "Cleopatra" in Chicago. After the Colonial had given the play a record breaking run at $1 top prices, Miller's Rose theatre in Madison street booked it for two weeks. At the end of that time it became increasingly evident that if the management wanted to satisfy the crowds that sought to see the picture it would have to book another week.

Vitagraph Names Its Next Two Serials

Vitagraph comes right through with facts and figures following its announcement of a fixed serial policy and schedule.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, has announced the release on October 21, 1918, of "The Iron Test," a serial featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway. This will be the successor to "A Fight for Millions," the Vitagraph serial in which William Duncan is starred, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, which is now running all over the country.

Following the Moreno-Holloway serial, Vitagraph will release "The Man of Might," in which Duncan will again be starred, supported by Miss Johnson and Joe Ryan.

Both of these serials like the previous record-breaking Vitagraph chapter plays, are written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The Duncan serials are directed by "Fighting Bill" Duncan, and the Moreno-Holloway serial is being directed by Paul Hurst.

What Vitagraph has accomplished in the serial field can be best understood by the representation given its latest offering, "A Fight for Millions," by the metropolitan newspapers throughout the country.

Vitagraph Heads Tell of New Plans

After years of ceaseless efforts, Vitagraph has attained the goal of perfection toward which it has been always working. Now that this important thing has been accomplished, the Vitagraph heads believe their organization will be even more beneficial to the showman in the year to come. The following statements by Walter W. Irwin and Albert E. Smith lead to the opinion that Vitagraph is leaving no stone unturned that will bring better things for exhibitor and producer alike.

Albert E. Smith, president and founder of the Vitagraph Company of America, and the directive genius of the pioneer American producing organization, is probably the first motion picture producer who has ever brought his operations to the point where he could schedule a year's output in advance. Below Mr. Smith gives a definite outline of his plans for the season 1918-19.

FOR years Vitagraph has been working toward a goal—the perfection of production plans at least a year in advance. Today we have attained that goal and are able to tell, with certainty, who will be the featured star in the Blue Ribbon feature scheduled for release on any given date.

We have already purchased for our six leading stars plays sufficient to provide all of them with many of the subjects in which they are to appear during the coming year and the continuity work is already well advanced on most of these. The scenarios will be made from popular books and plays and the writings of the better-known magazine contributors. Our "best author's" policy will be maintained as it has in the past and I can promise that Vitagraph, heretofore known for the value and strength of its stories, will give cause for increasing the confidence which the public has placed in our productions.

This will be the most active year, from a production standpoint, in the history of Vitagraph.

In addition to the fifty-two five-reel Blue Ribbon features which we have scheduled, we will issue four special productions and these, like "Over the Top," will be made under my personal supervision.

Also, we will produce four fifteen-episode serials, two featuring William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, and two featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

We will issue a two-reel feature comedy weekly and these two-reel humorous features will be made with the same amount of care as we put into our Blue Ribbon features.

In addition, we will re-issue a few selected subjects—pictures which were a sensation not so long ago and which will retain their power of entertainment for all time.

This, in brief, is what we have planned for the coming year. Our entire organization is ready for the production drive and I have guaranteed to the Vitagraph Distribution Organization the delivery of product as scheduled because our production department is equipped and qualified to meet the test.

In order to expedite production, I have caused various improvements and extensions to be made in our Hollywood studio and intend to do a large proportion of our winter work there, because we do not intend to let snow or freezing weather interfere with our plans.

Vitagraph was and is a pioneer and we are today ready, without any provisos whatsoever, to turn over to the Vitagraph Distributing Organization a fixed, standardized product of known value which will be released under a plan which has never before been possible of execution.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager and treasurer of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, is the man who devised the new booking plan and policy, which is announced this week to the trade for the coming year. In the following statement Mr. Irwin gives some interesting views of the trade situation as it exists today, and the significance of which none will fail to grasp.

IN the booking plan and policy which Vitagraph presents to the exhibitors of the United States and Canada for the coming year, our organization feels that it at last has attained the basis for ideal business relations between the distributor and the exhibitor. In the first place, we have tried to bring to the motion picture business the solid business rules which have made for the success of the steel industry, the railroads, the automobile industry and other great enterprises. And one of the first rules of all of these is knowing in advance what they are going to do for the period of one business year. Vitagraph knows what it is going to do in the matter of production during the coming year and by offering to exhibitors a fixed schedule of releases with the stars named we are endeavoring to help the showman complete his plans for the year.

Our new plan, we feel, is an equitable one, because it is based on a policy of "Live and Let Live" and does not exact from the exhibitor any more than a fair revenue, based on his earning possibilities. From the standpoint of booking, we believe that our plan has never been equaled for definiteness, reliability, dependability and flexibility. First, it carries the release date and name of every star for each week in the year. Second, it is designed to meet the booking needs of every exhibitor, permitting the booking of a full year's service of fifty-two Blue Ribbon Features. With the stars rotating at regular intervals or the booking of individual star series wherein a given star appears every six weeks, or the booking of a combination of stars. It is broad enough even to an exhibitor, in an emergency, to book a single picture.

We consider the plan the most democratic ever put forward and as far away from autocratic methods as the earth is from the sun. The present is a time, if ever there was one, when producer, distributor and exhibitor should work together, and they cannot work together when the exhibitor is asked to pay the last possible penny for a picture, or even operate at a loss because he is compelled to pay so much for his pictures that packed houses cannot overcome the heavy rental toll.

Ever since the inception of this Distributing Organization it has been our fixed and unalterable policy to meet the exhibitor face to face, figuratively and literally, on all propositions. Our doors are always open for him to bring in his troubles or problems and we are always ready to meet him on a basis of fair play.

This service, together with the open door policy of fair dealing, has won for us the friendship and support of thousands of exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada, and under our new booking plan I am sure that we will be able to serve them even better in the future than we have in the past.

Vitagraph Outlines Producing Plans

Albert E. Smith Tells What the Organization Will Do At Its Studios During the Season of 1918 and 1919—Four Serials Included in the List

THE year beginning September 30, 1918, and ending September 22, 1919, will be the most active producing year in the history of Vitagraph, according to plans which have been made by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. These plans were outlined to MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, and it is reasonably felt that exhibitors will be greatly interested in them.

Not only will Vitagraph produce the regular features and comedies, but exhibitors will be able to get four serials that are expected to be unusual box office winners. In addition there will be four special productions, to be made under the personal supervision of Mr. Smith.

Fifty-two Big V Comedies of two reels each will take care of the laughs of the many patrons of Vitagraph's exhibitors.

Blue Ribbon Features

As laid out by Mr. Smith, the company's output for the period will include:

Fifty-two Blue Ribbon features of five reels each, with Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Bessie Love, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith and Gladys Leslie rotating as the featured stars.

Four fifteen-episode serials, two reels to the episode, with William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, featured in two of them and Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway featured in the other two.

Fifty-two "Big V" feature comedies of two reels each will be released on a weekly basis, with Lawrence Semon and the team of Montgomery and Rock appearing as the featured players, alternately.

Four Special Productions, to be made under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith.

In addition, it is the plan of President Smith to re-issue a selected number of recent Vitagraph features which stand as monuments of motion picture production. These will be re-edited and re-titled.

In discussing his production plans, President Smith said:

"Vitagraph has now reached the point in producing pictures where it can, with confidence, promise to the public the most varied and the most complete program of screen entertainment in its history. Our equipment in the East is such that our studios can accommodate at least a dozen working companies at one time and our Western studio, located in Hollywood, Cal., soon will be able to accommodate the same number. In fact, we now have working at the Western plant two Blue Ribbon feature companies, two serial companies, two feature comedy companies and a company engaged in producing short reel subjects.

Many Improvements

"At the present time we are engaged in making improvements at the Western plant, the cost of which will be in excess of $50,000. These include the erection of a new light studio, enlargement of the laboratory and installation of new apparatus therein, the building of a water power plant, the erection of a new stage, new dressing-rooms and the extension of several of the buildings which we put up last year. When all of these improvements have been made, it is our intention to send a number of companies to the Coast for the winter, so that during that period of the year the production in the West will equal that in the East, and probably exceed it.

"Our plans at present contemplate no radical changes in the personnel of our producing organization. Our Blue Ribbon stars, beginning September 30, next, will be Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Bessie Love, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith, and Gladys Leslie.

"In addition to these stars, who will be the leaders in our new Blue Ribbon policy, we have among our players some of the most popular actors and actresses now before the motion picture public. These include Grace Darmond, Earle William's leading woman; Betty Blythe, Harry Morey's leading woman; Florence Deshon, Hedda Nova, Agnes Ayres, Jean Paige, Julia Swayne Gordon, Eulalie Jenson, Patricia Palmer, Edward Earle, J. Frank Glendon, Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Templer Saxe, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Charles Kent, Arthur Donaldson, Otto Lederer, Bernard Siegel, and many others of equal note and popularity.

"In the serial branch, William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, will continue to star in the serials which have made him famous, and our other serial company will be headed by Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

Comedies Plentiful

"Lawrence Semon will continue to head one of our 'Big V' companies, while the other will have for its leaders Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock. These boys will be under the direction of Jay A. Howe, while Mr. Semon will continue to direct his own comedies.

"Our feature directorial staff now includes Wilfird North, supervising director, and director of 'Over the Top'; James Young, who is directing Earle Williams on the Pacific Coast; Tom Terriss, who has been directing Alice Joyce in her pictures for the better part of a year; Paul Scardon, who has produced the last seven pictures starring Harry Morey, and who will continue to direct him; my brother, David Smith, who directed among other splendidly received pictures, one now famous, 'Baree, the Son of Kazan,' and is now directing Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon. He will soon take up the direction of Bessie Love in her first picture; Frederic Thomson, who is directing Gladys Leslie, and M. Henry-Houry, who is directing Corinne Griffith.

"William Duncan, as heretofore, will continue to direct his company in serials, while Paul Hurst, who directed the greater part of 'The Woman in the Web,' will direct Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway in their serials. We intend to devote as much attention to the serial production as we do to our features, because they have come to have quite as important a place on our production program. Beginning with 'The Fighting Trail,' which was released in Septempber, 1917, there has been no let-up in the success of Vitagraph serials and their popularity grows with each new production. 'Vengeance—and the Woman' proved a greater success than 'The Fighting Trail' and its record, in turn, was shattered by 'The Woman in the Web.' Our current serial, 'A Fight for Millions,' is in our opinion, the greatest of them all thus far and its success has been little short of astounding.

Smith Supervises

"During the coming year I shall personally supervise the production of four important specials, which will be of the same quality as 'Over the Top.' I am not prepared to state now what subjects will be treated, but I can assure the public that the plays will be just as big and important as 'Within the Law,' 'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,' 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' 'The Girl Philippa' and 'Over the Top.'

"From our library, which is probably the most extensive of any American producing company's, we shall select during the coming year a limited number of subjects for re-issue. They will be sold to the exhibitor under their original titles, for just what they are—re-issues, but they will compare favorably with the best product on the market today, for they will be re-titled and edited and presented in as attractive form as are our regular features.

"Into the making of all of our product—Blue Ribbon Features, Serials, 'Big V,' Two-Reel Comedies, and Special Features alike—will go all that is best in production, direction, casting and scenarios. Whether one product be long or short, serious or comic, the same care, thought, effort and attention will be given it that our most important productions get, for nothing shall leave Vitagraph on its way to the exhibitor, and thus to the public, that will not be a credit to our company and a business-building factor for the theatres booking it."

World Makes Big Ship Picture

"The Road to France" Stars Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley—September 9 Has Been Chosen as Release Date

"A BRIDGE of ships is the Road to France," declares E. N. Hurley, Chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board, and against the background of present war activities in American Ship Yards, World Pictures announces the picturization of a tense love story bearing the title of "The Road to France" and starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley. This super-special will be released on the regular World program on September 9.

As a fitting foreword to the picture, Mr. Hurley appears in the introductory scenes and explains the importance of ships and ship building to the glorious future of our country. The launchings of a large number of ships on July 4 are shown together with views of notables who were present—these including Judge E. H. Gary and Mrs. Gary. The latter is seen christening the ship "Liberty" as she slides from the ways.

In the introductory scenes Chairman Hurley says: "Eight months ago the entire working force in the ship building plants of the United States totaled forty-five thousand men. Today there are 350,000 men working in the yards and 250,000 cutting timber in the forests and saw mills, beside untold thousands fabricating plates and frames in the steel mills of the country. German efficiency, that was forty years developing will be answered by us in one year by the bridge of ships that will make 'The Road to France.'"

That this picture will arouse tremendous interest was confirmed by the expressions of appreciation and approbation made by the privileged few who were present at a private showing of this photoplay when screened at the private projection room in the home office of World Pictures a few days ago.

June Elvidge and Frank Mayo, in "The Power and the Glory," World Picture

The scenic environment of this master film embodies the most interesting section of the nation's activities leading to a successful termination of the world war. It shows the evolution of a steel cargo carrier from the laying of the keel plate to the christening of the ship as it takes to the water. Interwoven in the picturization of the fabrication of a ship is a romance breathing patriotic fervor which will strike a responsive chord in the heart of every true American. Here is a propaganda of a sort that is most earnestly desired by our country. It is a mental tonic that should, and no doubt will, stimulate every son and daughter of "Columbia" to do even bigger things that Democracy may survive and make this world of ours a safe place to live in.

"Over the Top" Still Crashes Onward

"OVER THE TOP" continues to break booking and box-office records in various parts of the country, according to letters received in the office of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization. Mobile, Ala., is one of the latest cities to report results from booking Vitagraph's patriotic picture, featuring Arthur Guy Empey. The Empire theatre showed the picture the first week in August to record crowds and when the cash was counted at the end of the run, Miss Luckel, manager of the theatre, had $1,000 gross more than any picture had ever brought. The showing also was made the occasion of a continuous patriotic demonstration, in which all civic and military bodies in the city were active.

Reeder, N. D., came to the front last week with an "Over the Top" record that put it squarely on the map as a picture town. There are only 198 persons in Reeder, yet the film made a highly profitable return to the exhibitor. The figures of this contract probably mark a record when the population of the town is considered. And it is safe to wager that every man, woman and child in the North Dakota town saw the picture—once at least.

Empey was in Eagle River, Wis., putting on "Over the Top" in connection with a Red Cross benefit there, which promised to be a big success. Word has been received by Vitagraph of similar benefits all over the country in which the Vitagraph picture proves a winning subject for the raising of money for war purposes.

Gladys Leslie Back in New York

Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph's young star, has returned from Milford, Pa., where scenes were made for Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Nymph of the Foothills." The picture, which is to be released some time in September, will show Miss Leslie in an attractive role.

James Young Directs Earle Williams

Old friendships will be renewed at Vitagraph's Hollywood studio when Earle Williams begins work in his next Blue Ribbon Feature, "His Country First," for he will be under the direction of James Young. Announcement to this effect has just been made by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and occasioned much interest in film circles, owing to the prominence of Mr. Williams as a star and Mr. Young as a director. Several seasons back, Mr. Young directed Mr. Williams at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Mr. Williams has been on the Pacific Coast since last Christmas working in Blue Ribbon Features. Most of his company accompanied him, including Grace Darmond, who has been his leading woman in recent releases.

Mr. Williams has completed four Blue Ribbon Features on the coast, "The Girl in His House," "The Seal of Silence," "An American Live Wire," and "The Man from Brodneys," and is preparing to get under way in "His Country First."

Sylvia Breamer Plunges Into Blackton Work

Sylvia Breamer, whom Commodore J. Stuart Blackton engaged by wire for "The Common Cause," the propaganda picture he is producing under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, arrived here from California, and after hurried conferences with the modistes and uniform tailors who are furnishing her wardrobe for the picture, Miss Breamer began work in the big exterior sets which Commodore Blackton had erected on the grounds of the Vitagraph plant. He has taken over his own studios, which he leased to William Fox during his absence on the Coast this past season, and has had his staff construct interiors there while he completes his outdoor scenes.

This is Miss Breamer's second visit to New York.

Fox New Policy Brings New Business

Flood of Bookings Follows Announcement in MOTION PICTURE NEWS—Standard Pictures Cause Great Enthusiasm—Companies Busy on New Productions

THE sensation caused in the trade by the announcement by William Fox of his policy for 1918-19 has found its echo in a flood of bookings for the four big, timely pictures to be issued by Mr. Fox for the new Victory brand of pictures, for the new Excel, and increased bookings for the Standard Pictures.

A statement by the Fox Film Corporation is to the effect that Fox Exchanges all over the country have telegraphed reports of great demand on the part of exhibitors for the big, timely pictures—"Why America Will Win," "The Prussian Cur," "Queen of the Sea" and the great picture based on the life of the most beautiful woman in the world, "Why I Would Not Marry." Exhibitors, the reports state, concur in the description given these pictures—that they are "big, timely productions"—and apparently theatre managers wish to cash in on the sensation which these pictures are expected to make.

Standard Films Score

Great enthusiasm has been expressed, the Fox statement says, over the productions announced as Standard Pictures this year. Theda Bara's super-productions, "When a Woman Sins" and "The She-Devil," and the two William Farnum-Zane Grey stories, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," have met with an instantaneous response from the exhibitors.

Victory Pictures have been hailed with delight by all exhibitors, reports to the Fox Corporation show, as playhouses everywhere are eager to show Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh in their new type of productions. Furthermore, the announcement by the Fox Corporation that only the best stories and plays would be bought for these stars has evoked expressions of enthusiasm everywhere. The bookings for "Kultur" and "The Strange Woman," the first two Gladys Brockwell Victory Pictures show a tremendous demand for the work of this player. Tom Mix's first two releases under the new system have also met with great success, the demand for "Fame and Fortune" and "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." growing every day. George Walsh's play, "I'll Say So!" directed by his brother, R. A. Walsh, gives increasing indications that the great success expected of it is already assured.

Year in Making

The Fox Film Corporation claims the record for length of time devoted to a production. It took nearly a year to put the story of "Queen of the Sea," the great $1,000,000 submarine phantasy, on celluloid. Photographing the picture began in the summer of 1917 and the final scenes were not taken until early in the summer of this year.

Scenes for "Queen of the Sea" were taken at Bar Harbor, Me.; Bermuda, Jamaica, Southern California and Mexico. More than fifty miles of film was shot for the picture, it is said.

Having completed the photographing of "The Rainbow Trail," the screen version of Zane Grey's famous novel, William Farnum is now taking a rest, putting in his brief breathing spell fishing at Catalina Island.

It is believed that the next story Mr. Farnum will film for William Fox will be "The Road to Berlin," a western tale written by Gladys Wright-Ukers. This and two other Zane Grey stories, "The Last of the Duanes" and the "Lone-Star Ranger" have been bought for production by Farnum. Frank Lloyd, Farnum's director, is now going over the manuscripts, and it is believed the Fox star will start soon on one of them.

Mix Goes to Arizona

Tom Mix and a company of other William Fox players have gone to Prescott, Ariz., to film "The Two-Gun Man," the novel written by Charles Alden Seltzer, according to a wire received by the Fox Film Corporation from the Fox studios in Hollywood. The entire production will be done at Prescott under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, who has directed Mix in all his recent plays.

There is only one woman in the cast supporting Mix. She is Jane Novak. Others in the cast are Val Paul, Charles LeMoyne and Jack Curtis. The scenario was written by Lynn Reynolds.

"The Two-Gun Man," which ran in one of the popular magazines in serial form and later was published as a book, is described as a Western tale that will give Mix splendid opportunities to show the hard riding and daring stunts for which he is famous.

George Walsh, under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh, has just completed "I'll Say So!" which will be his first release under the banner of Victory Pictures. Mr. Walsh is now resting before beginning on another picture which will be released early in the fall.

"I'll Say So!" is described as a breezy story of young Americanism, love and war, and affords George Walsh numerous opportunities to perform the difficult stunts which have made him famous. The picture begins in the general store of a small Connecticut village Ralph Spence, who is a master at writing breezy, clean comedies, wrote the scenario for the piece

Should Rank High

In a special report, the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has declared, following a private screening of "Salome," that the William Fox-Theda Bara drama "should rank with the best screen productions."

The report of the board was as follows: "We wish to advise you that the majority comment of your photoplay 'Salome' was as follows: Entertainment value, excellent; educational value, good; technical handling, good; costuming, fine; atmospheric quality, scenic setting, convincing; historical value, considerable; moral effect, good. General comment: In the opinion of those present this production was a serious and dignified portrayal of the story of Salome, imaginative and dramatic, and presented in a way that should rank with the best screen productions."

Announcement from the Fox Film Corporation is that "The Strange Woman" will be Gladys Brockwell's second release under the new Fox Victory Pictures brand. The first release will be "Kultur," a powerful drama which is said to throw new light on Germany's intrigues in Austria before the war.

Work on "The Strange Woman," which is based on the great stage success of the same name by William J. Hurlbut, is nearing completion under the direction of Director Edward J. Le Saint at Hollywood.

Stanton Begins Another for Wm. Fox

Having completed "Why America Will Win," the patriotic picture of victory which is based on the life of General Pershing, Richard Stanton will begin work soon on another big production for William Fox. This picture bears the title of "Eyes of the Soul," and it will be done by an all-star cast.

"Eyes of the Soul" is expected to be one of the biggest sensations of the season, according to a statement by the Fox Film Corporation. It will have an exceptionally large cast, and several spectacular scenes will be embodied in it.

Metro "Kaiser" Film Scores

Engagements Throughout Country Reported Successful in Every Way—Records Broken in Many Instances, Metro Declares

ATTENDANCE records of theatres throughout the country are being repeatedly shattered by Screen Classics-Ince's seven-part super-feature, "To Hell With the Kaiser," according to telegrams and letters from exhibitors and exchange managers coming into the offices of Metro, which is distributing this screen revelation of Prussia's cunningly laid plans to bring the world under its iron heel.

Newspapers, recognizing the great part the picture is playing in laying bare to the world the lustful secrets of the Hun and his mad monarch, have opened their news columns to its showings. Its opening in Atlanta, Boston, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Minneapolis, Los Angeles, Kansas City and Philadelphia was regarded by the newspapers of these cities to be of such important news value that they carried their accounts of the event on their front pages, in addition to their regular reviews of the picture.

As a result of this publicity exhibitors in many instances have found it necessary to run special trains from nearby communities to their towns to accomodate the persons eager to see the picture.

Indefinite runs of "To Hell With the Kaiser" are now going on in more than a score of the cities in the East, the North, and the South, while in the West many extended projections are already under way and others in some of the most exclusive theatres in the country will be made immediately. Without exception the exhibitors of these sections report the picture to be one of the greatest box-office attractions in the history of the industry, and not a few declare it to be the greatest.

Two of the western cities which have been taken by storm by the picture, which features Lawrence Grant, with a cast headed by Olive Tell, are Los Angeles and Kansas City, Mo.

Seven Fox Companies Grind Out Features

SEVEN productions are now in work for William Fox in the East and West studios, it is stated, in an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation.

William Farnum and his company have returned from the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where they filmed scenes for "The Rainbow Trail." While at the Grand Canyon Mr. Farnum celebrated his birthday. He and his company also found that the temperate 3,000 feet down in Hermit Creek Camp was extremely high, the mercury sometimes bumping 124 degrees.

J. Gordon Edwards is nearing the completion of the super-production, "The She-Devil," which will be an ealy Standard Pictures release.

Gladys Brockwell, under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint, is in her second week on the production of "The Strange Woman," the screen adaptation of the famous William J. Hurlbut stage play of the same name. This production will be an early Brockwell release, under the William Fox Victory Pictures banner.

Tom Mix, another Victory Pictures star, is nearing the end of work on "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," which is described as a Secret Service drama of particularly thrilling situations. In this drama, it is said, Mix appears without his famous cowboy garb for the first time in many moons.

Pictures being made for William Fox in the East include "I'll Say So!" starring George Walsh; "The Queen of Hearts," with Virginia Pearson, and "Marriages Are Made," of which Peggy Hyland is the star.

Pathe Creates Office to Help Exhibitor

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the appointment of Edgar O. Brooks as exploitation manager. a new office which promises to be of great benefit to the exhibitors of Pathe pictures.

Mr. Brooks who has had many years' experience in the motion picture and theatrical business and is connected with Pathe's Sales Department, comes to this important task qualified in every way to give the exhibitor hints on how to cash in with their motion picture programs. Any knotty problem of showmanship he will be glad to aid in unraveling, and he wishes all exhibitors to feel free to call upon him for his service.

The creation of the new position comes from the recognition by Mr. Brunet of the need of a department to co-operate directly with the exhibitor in getting the most out of a picture through publicity and advertising. Mr. Brooks will continue to work in connection with the Sales Department.

"Yellow Dog" Picture Draws Roosevelt Praise

The patriotic work of the Jewel Productions in making a reality of the campaign against yellow dogism that forms the basis of Henry Irving Dodge's interesting story of present-day life, "The Yellow Dog," has attracted the attention, and called forth the personal praise of Theodore Roosevelt and has been assured the support of the American Defense Society.

In a letter addressed to Charles J. Giegerich, who is in charge of the nation-wide campaign to form Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs and organize the "boy power" of America, Mr. Roosevelt commended the undertaking.

The American Defense Society in assuring its co-operation and support takes occasion to praise the author of "The Yellow Dog" for having written a story of interesting humorous fiction that delivers in its lines "an effective blow against the agents of German propaganda."

In most every city where Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs have been started, the Mayor and Chief of Police are co-operating in the campaign, and when the film version of "The Yellow Dog" is released the campaign against German made undercurrents of unrest will receive added stimulus.

"Heart of Sunset" Does Bood Business

Playing to capacity business at three separate three-day engagements—one of them a repeat run—in a town of 7,000 population, is the achievement of Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset," distributed by Goldwyn, which bids fair to eclipse the record set by the Rex Beach-Goldwyn production, "The Auction Block."

Unsolicited testimonials on "Heart of the Sunset" continue to pour into the Goldwyn home office from exhibitors in every section of the country. Nor is its success confined to the theatres of the large cities. Small town exhibitors tell of profitable engagements with the famous author's latest screen production.

Five Sennett Principals in One Picture

Five of Mack Sennett's most popular fun-makers appear in "She Loved Him Plenty," the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy released August 11th. They are Ben Turpin, Polly Moran, Charles Lynn, Marie Prevost and Ed Kennedy, and all of them are said to have been provided with roles provocative of more laughs than have been afforded by a screen comedy in many a day.

The story deals with the adventures of a woman pawnbroker and her two clerks, with one of whom she is in love. A beautiful rival is thrust into her Eden by a rascally gypsy and trouble follows. The action transpires largely on the seashore, and here Ben Turpin and Polly Moran are in their element. There are some incidental scenes in a pawnshop which, it is said, are unusually comical. In fact, the comedy fairly bristles with life and action and withal is clean and wholesome.

The photography is said to be notably fine, and the direction, for which Richard Jones is responsible, is faultless.

Three Principals in Jewel Carmen Film

Jewel Carmen in "Lawless Love," a tale of a New York vaudeville artiste and a masked bandit, is announced as the next William Fox Special Feature release. The picture is based on a magazine story, "Above the Law," which was written by Max Brand, and was directed by Robert Thornby, being Mr. Thornby's second picture for William Fox.

There are only three principals in the cast, the play, it is said, being notable in this respect. Besides Miss Carmen, who portrays the role of LaBelle Geraldine, fresh from the vaudeville stages of Broadway, there are Henry Woodward, who appears as Black Jim, a bandit chief, and Edward Hearn, cast as Freddie Montgomery, who has a yellow streak wider than a Staten Island ferryboat.

"Best Authors" Policy Foremost

Will Be Backbone of Vitagraph's Productions for Coming Year—Albert E. Smith Keeps Standard at High Point

IN his declaration of Vitagraph policy for the forthcoming season of 1918-19, Albert E. Smith, president of the company, promises "stories from the best books, the best plays, and the best magazines," which means that Vitagraph plots will continue to be up to the standard that the company has maintained for years past.

Mr. Smith long ago established as one of the principles of production the acquirement of good original stories. And in living up to this principle, he established what has come to be known in the industry as "Vitagraph's best authors' policy." He has gone into the highways and by-ways of modern literature in search of strong screen material, and his company probably has listed among its contributors more famous writers than any other producing company.

This is partly due to the fact that Vitagraph had been producing for a longer period than any other company in this country, but it is due primarily to the fact that Mr. Smith has been a consistent seeker after reel material.

A glance at the Vitagraph list of feature releases during the last year reveals that approximately eighty per cent. of its Blue Ribbon features were made either from the works of famous authors or from successful plays. The list reads like a literary "Who's Who," as for instance:

Robert W. Chambers, in addition to contributing "The Girl Philippa" to the Blue Ribbon program, was represented during the year by "The Fettered Woman," "The Woman Between Friends," and "The Business of Life," featuring Alice Joyce, and "Who Goes There?" featuring Harry T. Morey and Corinne Griffith.

O. Henry was represented on the Blue Ribbon program by "I Will Repay," featuring Corinne Griffith; "One Thousand Dollars," featuring Edward Earle, Florence Deshon and Agnes Ayres; "Find the Woman," featuring Alice Joyce, and "An American Live Wire," featuring Earle Williams.

Alfred Henry Lewis was represented by two Wolfville Tales, "The Tenderfoot" and "Dead Shot Baker," in both of which William Duncan was featuring, supported by Carol Holloway.

Cyrus Townsend Brady contributed "For France," featuring Edward Earle and Betty Howe, and several other plays.

Karger Chooses Story for Hale Hamilton

George Randolph Chester's story, "Five Thousand an Hour," the scenario of which has been made by June Mathis, has been decided upon by Maxwell Karger as the initial picture for Hale Hamilton as a Metro star.

"Five Thousand an Hour" is one of the cleverest of the George Randolph Chester stories and its leading character is a typical Hale Hamilton part. Mr. Hamilton will create the role of Johnnie Gamble, a conquering financier, who goes through many escapades, and whose career holds one amusing situation after another, but who eventually cleans up a crooked business deal and wins out. Many scenes of unusual beauty and interest will be incorporated in the picture, among them the racing at Saratoga, a prominent country club, and the prize kennels of dog fancier.

By a trick of the camera, as Mr. Hamilton describes a plan for a skyscraper apartment house, a new canal system, or some world startling invention, the audience will see his very thoughts visualized before them.

Ralph W. Ince will direct "Five Thousand an Hour" for Mr. Hamilton. This is his second picture for Metro, his first being "Our Mrs. McChesney."

"Sporting Life" in September

Tourneur Sets Release Date Allowing Plenty of Time—Plan Unusual Subject for Next Production

DEFINITE announcement has been made by Maurice Tourneur that his film production of "Sporting Life," the famous Drury Lane melodrama, will be released in the first week in September.

In this connection MOTION PICTURE NEWS is also able to make first announcement that work will start on Mr. Tourneur's next independent production within a few weeks, this latter picture on a subject concerning which there is considerable mystery. The producer will say nothing concerning it beyond the declaration that the subject is one which he has had in mind ever since his arrival in this country. "It is the sort of story," he says, "which demands expression, and now that I am working independently it is going to be staged with every resource I command."

In connection with the announcement of the release of "Sporting Life" Mr. Tourneur declared to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, "There may be some in the picture business who are wondering at the methodical course we are pursuing with this production. I have been at work many months on the picture and yet we are not planning to release until September.

"The reason is plain to anyone who realizes that I intend to make many more independent productions after 'Sporting Life,' and am not therefore merely rushing to get a picture on the market in any shape or form.

"The production itself is of course the important detail—and I have therefore taken the time to make 'Sporting Life' just as good a feature as I know how. But I also believe that the advertising matter, exploitation material and so on rank high in importance, and I want to give plenty of time to see that this factor is properly handled. When we declare that 'Sporting Life' is ready for the market you may be sure that it will be ready in every sense of the word—from the picture down to the last item of advertising aid."

Yellow Dog Campaign Grows with Time

THE "Win the War" campaign being conducted by the Jewel Productions, Inc., in connection with the visualization of "The Yellow Dog" has spread throughout the country so rapidly and grown to such huge proportions that the greatest expectations of the company have been surpassed and Henry Irving Dodge, author of the now famous Saturday Evening Post story and founder of the campaign against the Yellow Dog menace says that his fondest dreams have been more than realized, Jewel announces.

In addition to the Chambers of Commerce and patriotic societies that have already been reported as sponsors of the campaign in various cities, many newspapers have taken up the work of organizing the boy power of their cities in cooperation with the leading picture theatres. In several cities this plan has been reversed by the most prominent exhibitor assuming charge of the campaign and securing the co-operation of all the newspapers in his territory. This latter plan gives the widest publicity to the movement and is made possible by the fact that every phase of the campaign that is suppressing the destructive influence of Hun propaganda, is entirely free of commercialism and is in no way associated with the picture that will later be released to do its share in converting yellow dogs into thoroughbred patriots.

One of the biggest Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs in the country to date is in Dallas, Tex., where the Dallas Dispatch is "whooping" up the drive in association with the leading picture houses and legitimate theatres.

"Les Miserables" Success at High Point

"LES MISERABLES," a statement from the Fox Film Corporation says, has established a success since it was put on an open rental basis August 1 that has made it one of the biggest box-office sensations ever released by William Fox. Every week brings a grist of repeat bookings, not only from the larger cities, but even from the smaller places, and, it is pointed out, it is these repeat bookings that mark the true popularity of the picture.

When "Les Miserables" was released, after having established a phenomenal reputation through its engagements at special prices in the bigger cities, hope was expressed by exhibitors that it would prove another "Tale of Two Cities," another William Farnum play, which proved a bonanza for every exhibitor who showed it. Since August 1, however, telegraphed reports to the Fox Film Corporation give overwhelming evidence, it is said, that "Les Miserables" is proving a far greater attraction than the other Farnum picture.

A number of factors make "Les Miserables" peculiarly attractive from a box-office standpoint, in the opinion of theatre managers who have written to the Fox home office. In the first place, it is the dramatization of Victor Hugo's immortal novel; in fact, the picture enters the lists with a great start over other productions because of the universal popularity and fame of the book. Another factor is that when it was first shown in big cities by William Fox it established a prestige for great dramatic excellence that spread all over the country, so that when exhibitors booked it the play was already known!

George Loane Tucker Signs with Mayer

Considerable interest attaches to the announcement that Louis B. Mayer has completed arrangements with George Loane Tucker, whereby the latter will direct Anita Stewart in her new series of de luxe productions to be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"I prepare my own working scripts," Mr. Tucker stated, "and am happy to say that I have never yet had trouble with an author regarding the handling of his work. It is always my aim to retain the spirit of an author's conception and not 'adapt' it out of all semblance to the original.

"The crying evil of the times, from the point of view of the director ambitious to give the public only his best, is the habit of setting an arbitrary release date, to meet with productions must be rushed through like so many articles of manufacture. Real art does not thrive under such conditions. And in this connection it is gratifying to state that there will be no 'time limit' on the pictures I will make, starring Miss Stewart. Every production will be the best of which we are capable, regardless of the number of days or weeks required to make it so."

Loew Shows Clara Kimball Young Film

Clara Kimball Young and her own company will appear at all the Marcus Loew theatres in her latest Select production, "The Savage Woman," opening Monday and Tuesday at Loew's New York theatre and roof. This is the picture which it was so strongly rumored would be released by Select as a special, but the requests that Select received to release this picture on the open market came from exhibitors who are not holders of Clara Kimball Young series contracts. There is no doubt that hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country would have been more than willing to pay a large advance price to obtain this Clara Kimball Young masterpiece, as "The Savage Woman" is lacking in nothing to make it one of the greatest of Miss Young's productions. The picture has been boiled down to five reels and every foot of film is crammed full of action. "The Savage Woman" has been directed by Edmund Mortimer from the celebrated French novel "La Fille Sauvage," by Francois Curel.

Kerrigan Son of Idle Rich in New Film

F. McGraw Willis, author of J. Warren Kerrigan's latest Paralta Plays' offering, "A Burglar for a Night," which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation early in August, has provided Mr. Kerrigan with one of the most congenial roles that well known screen star has had since he deserted the speaking stage in favor of the celluloid records.

In "A Burglar for a Night," Kerrigan is called upon to portray the character of a young New Yorker, Kirk Marden, the son of the rich Daniel Marden, controller of the destinies of a railroad that his business rivals want to wrest from him.

The Two Charming Women on the Left of This Panel Are In Fact Only One. She Is Alice Joyce, of the Vitagraph Stars, Whose Popularity Is Ever on the Increase. The Girl with the Smile Is Corinne Griffith, and to the Extreme Right Are Miss Griffith and One of the Players in "Love Watches"

International Cast in Allison Feature

What might be termed an "international cast" is supporting May Allison in the star's forthcoming Metro picture, "The Testing of Mildred Vane," now under production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. Miss Allison is surrounded by an American, a Frenchman, an Englishman and a Spaniard, in the four principal male roles.

Darrell Foss, Miss Allison's leading man, is an American born and bred. Nigel de Brullier, who is cast as Matthew Vane, Mildred's father, is a Frenchman. The Englishman is Fred Goodwins, still a subject of King George V., notwithstanding his long residence in the United States. Goodwins plays Ralph Jeffries, a waster. George Field, Spanish born, has the role of a Spaniard, Miguel Hernandez, M.D., the "heavy."

A Belgian girl, an Italian and a Swiss are among those chosen by Casting Director Williams to do "bits," so as to carry out a tout ensemble with a distinctly Allied and neutral emphasis.

Fox Comedy Girl Makes a Long Dive

A sensational one hundred foot dive into only four feet of water furnishes the biggest of all the big thrills that the latest Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy, "A High Diver's Last Kiss," to be released shortly by William Fox, is full of. This death-defying feat was performed by Miss Mae Eccleston, Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy comedienne.

Swickard Directs It

Charles Swickard has been added to the directing staff at Metro's west coast studies in Hollywood. George D. Baker, manager of production, engaged Swickard to direct Bert Lytell in the young star's fifth picture for the parrot brand, his fourth, "Unexpected Places," having just been completed.

Announces Billboard Campaign

Walter W. Irwin Includes Big Drive as Part of Vitagraph's New Booking Plan—Twenty-four Sheets Are Supplied Free

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, announces that his company, in co-operation with exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada, soon will inaugurate a twenty-four sheet campaign to advertise its stars the year around. The plan contemplates having the Vitagraph stars on the boards for the entire fifty-two weeks of the year.

"Beginning with our first release under our new booking plan," said Mr. Irwin, "Vitagraph is going to supply free to exhibitors all the twenty-four sheets they will post. These twenty-four sheets will be supplied to exhibitors in plenty of time for advance posting, and will be so designed that they can be tied up with specific releases and the individual theatres showing our features.

"Thus, where an exhibitor books our rotating star system for fifty-two weeks in a year he will have a fifty-two weeks' billboard campaign changeable weekly, with a new production appearing on the boards each week and each star in the rotating plan of production, reappearing at intervals of six weeks.

"We consider this one of the most forceful forms of advertising an exhibitor can adopt, and it is a most economical one. In many cases, exhibitors own boards in the territory from which their theatres draw patronage and still others hold year-around leases on boards. Other exhibitors who would gladly post twenty-four sheets have been deterred from doing so either because they were not available or because they did not see their way clear to shoulder the cost of the paper. Now, this latter element is eliminated, because we will give to the exhibitors all the twenty-four sheets they require for a profitable showing in their territories and we will assist them in mapping their campaign.

"Our experience with twenty-four sheet stands has convinced us of their efficacy. On all of our serials during the past year we have conducted national posting campaigns and they have proved splendid business-getters for the exhibitors. We feel that the same results will be obtained by exhibitors with our new posters."

The new twenty-four sheet is another development in Vitagraph paper, which only recently was bettered by the introduction of a new style one sheet of the stars, carrying an etching-drawing by a famous artist and so designed that the portrait can be cut out of the sheet and used for lobby or gallery decoration. A complete series on all of the Vitagraph stars is contained in this one-sheet series, which has already proved a big hit with exhibitors all over the country.

Museum of Art Likes Pathe Poster

The Metropolitan Museum of Art has passed an unsolicited comment on Pathe's twenty-four-sheet exploiting its latest serial, "Hands Up," with Ruth Roland in the star role. The Metropolitan Museum of Art officials have requested Pathe for samples of this twenty-four-sheet which is desired for the purpose of exhibition. The color scheme and pictorial are highly complimented. These twenty-four sheets on "Hands Up," Pathe announces, are being posted in all principal cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific and they are certain to prove a valuable aid to exhibitors who book the serial.

Goodwins with Metro

Fred Goodwins has been engaged by Metro to play a prominent supporting role in May Allison's forthcoming picture, "The Testing of Mildred Vane," now under production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood.

"Making Good" for Bert Lytell

Metro Star's New Picture is From One of His Stories—Was Successful in Writing Other Features

"MAKING GOOD" is the title of Bert Lytell's next picture, his fifth as a Metro star. Lytell himself wrote the original story and he shares honors with George D. Baker, Metro's western manager of productions, in the authorship of the screen adaptation. "Making Good" follows "Unexpected Places," which has just been completed at the Metro studios in Hollwyood.

Shortly after becoming a star under the parrot brand, Lytell tried his hand at scenario writing, with marked success. He collaborated with A. S. LeVino on the continuity of "No Man's Land," his second production, the two of them making the screen version from the novel of the same name by Louis Joseph Vance.

"Boston Blackie's Little Pal" and "Unexpected Places," the former from the fiction story by Jack Boyle and the latter from the novelette by Frank R. Adams. came after "No Man's Land." All the while he was working before the comera, Lytell was hatching out a story of his own, and three weeks ago he turned in to Production Manager Baker a detailed synopsis of a swiftly-moving romance which Baker quickly decided was ideal for Lytell's talents.

Messrs. Baker and Lytell got together in making a screen adaptation of the star's original story, and had it completed shortly after Lytell finished in "Unexpected Places." The star, however, needed a few day's rest, and will start camera work on his new picture early in the coming week, probably on Tuesday.

"Making Good" was chosen as the title of Lytell's photoplay. It was given the preference over "Cactus and Orange Blossons" and "The Man Who Stuck It Out," which were among a number of titles suggested. The story has to do with a young American who for the sake of the girl he loves braves peril in Mexico to save her father's fortune, invested south of the Rio Grande.

General Red Cross Film Scores Solidly

INSTANT popularity has been scored by the first American Red Cross official war film, to judge from the reception it got at its premiere in New York at the Rivoli theatre. Pointing to this reception, the distributor of this picture for the American Red Cross predicts an overwhelming success all over the country. "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris," which is the title of this single-reel subject, is now being sent to every General Film exchange in the United States. Upon the heels of the Rivoli booking, the distributor reports that big bookings already have been obtained in the Washington territory. Co-operation in publicity for the picture by the American Red Cross national organization in its thirteen divisions from coast to coast, is likely to give the picture an added impetus and to give it a career remarkable for a subject of its kind.

Comments by the daily papers in New York emphasize the hit made by "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris" at the Rivoli.

"Then comes scenes of the Fourth of July parade in Paris, released by the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, that reach a stirring climax in the exhibition of a bullet-torn flag carried by Americans at Chateau-Thierry," says the Times.

"Nothing on the bill, however, surpassed the enthusiasm of yesteday's spectators than when the American veterans of Chateau-Thierry were pictured with battle-torn flags at the foot of the Washington statue in Paris. Detachments of American soldiers on parade also elicited prolonged applause," says the New York Herald.

"American troops who participated in the engagement at Chateau-Thierry brought forth the most spontaneous applause of the entertainment as they were seen at the foot of the Washington statue in Paris with their flags."—New York Sun.

American Red Cross nurses from the battle area marching in the joint celebration of America's holiday by the two republics, and the first American convalescent wounded from the fighting line, also proved high spots of interest in this film, which is considered one of the most timely and inspiring short length pictures emanating from the heart of the great war. The appreciation of the general public, it is pointed out, has been so well tested by the little film's pre-release engagement in the metropolis, that its success would be assumed even if there were not hundreds of thousands of ardent Red Cross members waiting to see it.

Irwin Discusses Plan

Discussing the star series phase of the new booking plan Mr. Irwin, its originator, said:

Under this star series plan, the exhibitor can book a full series of eight or nine pictures to be made by any one of our six stars, during the coming year, or he can, in an emergency, book any one of the individual pictures made by a given star during the year.

If the exhibitor have a peculiar territory or is now tied up with conflicting contracts, he may book any two series of pictures made by two of our stars, or any combination of the six component series comprising fifty-two pictures in all, which will be released under this new program during the fifty-two weeks, dating from Sept 30, 1918.

Metro Reproduces Home at Rye, N. Y.

One of the most attractive homes at Rye, N. Y., has been reproduced within the four walls of the Metro studio, in connection with Emily Stevens' forthcoming Metro picture, "Kildare of Storm." Scenes within and without the house had already been taken at Rye with the star and her company, under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, but the story required certain light effects impossible to obtain without all sorts of electrical devices. These could not be transplanted to the Metro studio.

Sing Sing Members See Select Picture

The members of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing enjoyed a rare treat one night last week when, through the courtesy of Select Pictures Corporation, they were permitted to view the big Select masterpiece, Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie." As "De Luxe Annie" will be remembered as one of the highest class "crook" plays ever shown on the screen, it is easy to appreciate the interest with which it was received by the boys at Sing Sing.

World Names New Dressler Comedy

World Pictures announces another Marie Dressler comedy is to be added to the list of comedies released by this organization. It bears the title of "The Scrub Lady," and is scheduled for general distribution on September 2.

Miss Dressler is making her pictures at her studio near Los Angeles, Cal., and will remain in the West all this winter with the possible exception of the time she will give the Government on the next war loan, which commences late in September.

Bessie Barriscale Child in Film Story

In "Maid o' the Storm," Bessie Barriscale's latest Paralta Play, which is now ready for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the star began her picture as a child in short dresses, flying hair and worn-out shoes, that is when she wore shoes. In this early part of the story as a little waif of a fishing village on the bleak Scottish coast, she went with her company to one of the rocky coasts of the Pacific Ocean to get the required atmosphere.

Enid Bennett as "Eva"

There is said to be just enough of "Uncle Tom" in the new Enid Bennett picture, just being started at the Ince studio at Hollywood, to be pleasantly reminiscent. These scenes are simply a prelude to the main story by C. Gardner Sullivan. Miss Bennett is cast for Little Eva in the beginning, but the troupe goes broke in a Kansas village and there she enters into the life of the small and narrow village,

"Why America Will Win" Shown in Private

A private screening was given this week of "Why America Will Win," the picture based on the life of General Pershing, at one of the projection rooms of the Fox Film Corporation. The screening was attended by officials of the Fox Corporation and the film is now being cut and finished for showings early in the Fall.

"Why America Will Win," it is said in a statement by the Fox Corporation, will prove one of the most timely productions ever released, for when it is shown this season it is expected that American and Allied troops will be continuing the victories which they have just scored on the Marne. "Why America Will Win" is described as a photodrama of victory, and it will carry into every theatre in the country the message of victory.

Based on the life of General Pershing, the production, which was directed by Richard Stanton, follows the career of the American commander from his West Point days right into Berlin.

"Playthings" on Bluebird List

Takes Place of "That Devil Bateese" on August 12—Fritzi Brunette Is Starred with All-Star Cast

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC., announced this week that the Sidney Toler stage drama, "Playthings," will be a regular Bluebird release for August 12 instead of Monroe Salisbury in "That Devil Bateese," which will be released one week later, August 19.

The star of "Playthings" is Fritzi Brunette, late Selig star, formerly with Universal. Douglas Gerard, a well-known Bluebird director, who had charge of the production, engaged an all-star cast to appear with Miss Brunette, including Myrtle Reeves, Lewis J. Cody, Mary Anderson, Charles Gerrard, Phil Dunham and F. A. Turner. When the production came in from the Coast last week it was so highly considered by the reviewing committee that an earlier place on the Bluebird program was made for it.

In speaking of the production, Bluebird said: "It is seldom in this day and generation that a cast is secured of the uniform excellence and prominence which the cast of 'Playthings' enjoys. In the first place, Miss Brunette has been the star in a number of Selig productions, notable among which is 'Beware of Strangers.' Prior to her three years with Selig she played with the Universal in a number of dramatic and comedy productions. In point of experience Miss Brunette is one of the veterans of the motion picture stage.

"Mary Anderson is a well-known Vitagrapher, and has been with that company for four years prior to her joining Bluebird ranks for this production, and the one in which Miss Brunette will be starred following 'Playthings.'

"Lewis J. Cody makes his first appearance in years without the camouflage mustache which marked him unalterably as the villain. With the mustache he made his most notable appearance in the Bluebird photoplay, 'Painted Lips,' with Mae Murray in 'The Bride's Awakening,' and with Mildred Harris in 'For Husbands Only.' Without the mustache Cody is revealed the leading man of remarkable sincerity and a capacity for sympathetic acting which is never overdone.

"Charles Gerrard wears the mustache and insignia of villain in this production, while Phil Dunham, well-known for his L-KO antics, plays also for the first time in his life a straight dramatic role."

General Has Its Day at Broadway Houses

THE week of August 4 was General Film week, in so far as Broadway first-run houses were concerned, reports Manager J. A. Hammell, of the New York Exchange. At the Rivoli three General Film short length classics composed the major portion of the program, while at Loew's New York "Her Moment," with Anna Luther, was the feature subject on the Wednesday program. This was the second week in which General Film's offerings have been represented on Broadway. "Mammon and the Archer" was at the same theatre recently.

The notable program created by Manager Rothapfel, of the Rivoli, for the first week in August contained an O. Henry story, "Springtime a la Carte," and a Wolfville tale, "Winning of the Mocking Bird," two-reel productions, as well as the exclusive American Red Cross film showing the Fourth of July celebration in Paris. This latter subject proved to be one of the most timely war features of the day, representing the first view Americans have been able to obtain of their veteran fighters abroad. This was the first time a one-reel picture was featured with much prominence at the Rivoli.

"Springtime a la Carte," featuring Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres, was the fourth of the recent O. Henry pictures shown in the two Rothapfel theatres during the last few weeks.

Lasky Leases Old Universal Ranch

It was announced by wire from the Coast on August 4 that Famous Players-Lasky has leased the old Universal ranch for a term of ten years. The ranch lies about half-way between Hollywood and Universal City, in the Santa Monica Mountains.

Billboard Drive Widens to Whole Country

THE first of August witnessed the inauguration by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of a huge billboard advertising campaign in the interest of Paramount and Artcraft pictures which, it is declared, will be the biggest of its kind ever launched by any organization in the industry. The campaign will be conducted through one of the largest and best known billposting firms in the United States, and at the outset will cover the following cities: New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Paul, Atlanta, Denver, Portland, Ore.; Buffalo, Detroit, Minneapolis, St. Louis, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Tacoma, Butte, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Dallas, San Francisco, Spokane, Cleveland, Washington, Baltimore, Kansas City, Omaha, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles. To this list of cities others are being added daily, and it will be a matter of but a few weeks when every important city in the country will be included.

The bulk of the advertising will be of twenty-four-sheet size. The posters will be in four colors, and will exploit individually every Paramount and Artcraft star, together with the productions in which they appear. As supplementary displays smaller posters will be utilized in every available place.

"These boards will be working morning, noon and night for the exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures," said Walter E. Greene, Managing Director of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "They are bound to create an irresistible demand on the part of the public for Paramount and Artcraft pictures."

Exhibitors Write Approval of Fox Policy

COMMENDATION of the William Fox policy for 1918-1919 is said to be contained in numerous letters from exhibitors which the Fox Film Corporation has received since its announcement last week. Exhibitors, says a statement by the Fox Film Corporation, are unanimous in their statements that the arrangements of releases of Fox pictures during the year beginning September 1 will be a great assistance to theatre owners.

Greater flexibility in the choice of stars is one thing noted in the exhibitors' statements. By the arrangement to show a number of big, timely pictures, twenty-six Standard Pictures, twenty-six Victory Pictures and twenty-six Excel Pictures, besides the usual number of Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies and Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, every section of the country, it is expected, will have little difficulty in exhibiting the pictures which are most popular in that particular locality.

Keen pleasure was expressed over the fact that Miss Bara will appear in "When a Woman Sins" early in the fall, and also in "The She-Devil." Published synopses of these productions have resulted in an immediate rush of bookings.

The Excel Pictures announcement also has made a hit with exhibitors. The growing popularity of Jane and Katherine Lee, Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland and Jewel Carmen has been reflected in the box-office response whenever their pictures are shown. By putting them in Excel Pictures exhibitors, it is figured, will have greater ease in booking their productions.

General Announces Charlie Fang Comedies

Charlie Fang, a well-known Chinese player in motion pictures, is being featured in a series of one-reel comedies produced by the Scrantonia Film Company. The Chinese actor figures in these productions as a comedian, but in roles that are as sympathetic as they are quaint. The pictures are being released by General Film Company through its various branches.

One Charlie Fang release is called "Fang's Fate and Fortune."

Another release which is also ready is "Parson Pepp." Paul Panzer, Jules Cowles, and Irene Boyle are co-performers with Charlie Fang in this production, and, like "Fang's Fate and Fortune," it was directed by Robert De Barge.

Arbuckle Moves Forces to Diando Studio

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has removed his company to the Diando Studio, Glendale, Cal., where his next Paramount comedy will be made. It will be a Mexican border story requiring space and an atmosphere unobtainable at Long Beach. However, the comedian retains his offices, home and beach privileges in the latter city and the move is only temporary, though the company may not return to the beach if other arrangements are made meantime.

The organization has no connection whatever with the Diando company, other than to rent studio space.

Meanwhile, "The Cook," Arbuckle's very latest Paramount laugh-getter, has been completed and is ready for release.

General to Observe O. Henry Birthday

General Film Company is planning to observe the fifty-fifth anniversary of the birth of William Sidney Porter (O. Henry) on September 2 by releasing the sixty-fourth screen version of the author's inimitable stories. While the name of the story to be filmed for this purpose has not been announced, it is expected that it will be one of the strongest and most popular of the several hundred short stories written by O. Henry.

This will be the second film observance of O. Henry's birthday anniversary. Last September General Film Company issued the several four-reel O. Henry subjects which marked the most ambitious step yet taken in the work of creating a living library of the author.

A long list of stars have helped in the filming of the O. Henry stories. Among them have been Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres, Patsey Deforrest, Mildred Manning, Adele De Garde, Alice Terry, Florence Deshon, Jeane Paige, Patricia Palmer, Nellie Spencer, Frances Parks, Alice Rodier, Betty Blythe, Aida Horton, Carlton King, J. Frank Glendon, Webster Campbell, Duncan McRae, Evart Overton, Chet Ryan, W. L. Rodgers, Wallace McDonald, Walter McGrail, Charles Kent, Carol Holloway and Robert Burns.

Louise Glaum Will Rest Between Pictures

Paralta announces the completion of the fourth Louise Glaum play with that company. The new picture, "A Law Unto Herself," is considered by Miss Glaum as the best picture in which she has ever appeared, from the standpoint of story, production and acting.

The locale of the story is the Champagne district of France, and the time 1894, 1904 and 1914. There is a background of war and preparation for war that but furnished the fabric upon which the human drama is woven.

A new story is being prepared for the star, who will take only a short rest before starting her fifth Paralta play. As with "A Law Unto Herself" and her other Paralta pictures, the next story will be a strong emotional drama.

Curtiss Becomes Hodkinson Co-Partner

Appreciation of the merits of the Co-Partnership Plan instituted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has been signified by G. W. Curtiss of Kansas City, who has become a Hodkinson Co-Partner.

Mr. Curtiss is owner of the new Doric theatre in Kansas City. He is another representative exhibitor who, like Eugene Roth of San Francisco and Kehrlein Brothers of Los Angeles, realizes his need of the protection the Hodkinson Co-Partnership Plan offers his theatre investment.

John R. Stevenson, Hodkinson Division Manager for the South, recently completed a trip throughout the southwest, at which time he tied in twenty exhibitors in Texas. They are Dye, Ford and Rogers of Amarilla; Dorbandt Brothers of Athens; J. J. Hegman of Austin and Temple; I. G. Keeler of Brownsville; W. R. Fairman of Bryan; Mays and Fitzpatrick of Cleburne; B. C. Howell of Coleman; W. L. Hamilton and Delhart; W. Campbell of Denison; Sam Schwartz of Eagle Pass; Simon Turk and T. M. Hervey of El Paso; Puers and Bolton of Jacksonville; D. F. Prall of Longview; Fred A. Alexander of Marshall; J. N. O. C. Fanning of Mineral Wells; J. H. Brauttery of Nacogdoches; B. C. Bell of Palestine; Lyth, Apostolon and Mikolen, of San Antonio; A. J. Cooper of Seymour; Jim B. Wilson of Sherman; N. Lewis of Tyler; R. C. More of Vernon; J. A. Courtiny of Weatherford and W. J. Johnson of Wichita Falls.

Alice Howell Comedy

From Julius Stern, the president of the Century Comedy Company, comes the information that Alice Howell is about to appear in another of her characteristic vehicles, which has been given the title of "Hey, Doctor!"

In this burlesque Miss Howell returns to her former type of characterization.

Duncan's Newest Serial Booms Bookings

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, is authority for the statement that "A Fight for Millions," the company's latest serial, has beaten all its predecessors in the matter of bookings for a given period of time. Reports which he received up to last week showed that this chapter play, which features William Duncan, supported by Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, had been booked, or was playing in more than 31 per cent. of all the motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada.

The week preceding July 15, the release date for "A Fight for Millions," the bookings on this serial and between those of all other Vitagraph serials, and Mr. Irwin states that these have been greatly added to since release date.

"Our serial business has become cumulative," said Mr. Irwin, "and in the last year there has not been one case where a new serial did not exceed its predecessor in the number of bookings. We are more than pleased with the results on 'A Fight for Millions,' because with its release we inaugurated our new policy of four serials a year. From now on we will have a fifteen-episode serial ready for release every fourteen weeks, with two companies of players alternating."

Reports from the Vitagraph Western studio are to the effect that Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, who are working under direction of Paul Hurst in a circus serial, are moving along rapidly. The title of the serial, which is slated for release October 21, probably will be announced next week.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons Returns to Coast

"Smiling Bill" Parsons, hero of Capitol Comedies, is on his way to his Hollywood studio to resume the work interrupted when the vacation lure called him East several weeks ago. Upon his arrival on the West Coast he will at once begin his thirteenth comedy for Goldwyn distribution. Before he came East he completed enough subjects to carry his releases to October 7.

Though the portly comedian made the cross-country trip primarily for pleasure, he found time for business. And in Cleveland, on his way back, he combined business and pleasure and found fun and profit. Two personal appearances at the Stillman theatre there served to introduce him to several thousand motion picture fans who had never seen him in the flesh and luncheons and other entertainment made his stay doubly pleasant.

Select Cites Progress in Davies' Acting

Marion Davies' second Select production, "The Burden of Proof," in which she is being directed by Julius Steger, was finished last week, as far as the photographic work is concerned and the final touches, such as cutting and titling, will be commenced immediately.

There is said to be a surprise in store for the public in Miss Davies' second Select picture. The improvement in her work, by comparison, over her acting in Cecilia of the Pink Roses," is claimed to be as great as her improvement in the latter production over her earlier appearance on the screen. In fine, Miss Davies has surpassed the widest hopes of her director, Mr. Steger, and the officials of Select Pictures.

Not more than two weeks will be required for the assembling, cutting and titling of Miss Davies' latest picture and then the successor to "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" will be ready for printing. Immediately after its completion the new Select star will start work on her third feature.

Metro Stars Mix Patriotism and Business

METRO stars are engaged in numerous patriotic activities, despite hot weather and hard work. Not only are they giving time and money to such organizations as the American Red Cross, the Stage Women's War Relief and the Y. M. C. A. entertainments, but they are finding ways of their own in which to aid the boys in blue and khaki.

Edith Storey recently appeared in person for the boys at the Bensonhurst Reserve base, on the occasion of the showing of her Metro picture, "The Claim."

Mme. Nazimova put curiosity on a paying basis the other day when she collected a substantial sum of money for the Red Cross from the bystanders who were watching her work "on location" in her forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature, "L'Occident," a screen version of the play by the Belgian dramatist, Henri Kistemaeckers.

Viola Dana has evidently become the pet of the Anzacs, judging from the mail received by the star of "Blue Jeans," "Flower of the Dusk," and numerous other Metro productions. Scarcely a day passes in which Miss Dana does not open several missives from Australian and New Zealand boys at the front, not to mention those visiting in New York, and to each and every one of them she sends an autographed photograph.

After working before the camera all day at the Metro Studio in "His Bonded Wife," under the direction of Charles J. Brabin, Emmy Wehlen recently went to the Naval Hospital in Brooklyn, and sang a group of patriotic and popular songs to the convalescent sailors. Miss Wehlen sings for the soldiers and sailors whenever opportunity affords.

Ethel Barrymore's patriotic zeal is unflagging, and Olive Tell is assiduous in pursuit of patriotic duties. Metro stars are all determined not only to do a "bit," but a lot.

William D. Taylor, who has been the director for Mary Pickford in all of her recent pictures, has enlisted in the British army and sails in a few days. He expects to first go to an officers' training school.

Ora Carewe, who was one of the beauties of the Mack Sennett comedies, is now playing a vampire part in a serial that will soon be released.

Arthur Housman, who has been seen in Mae Marsh pictures, has enlisted in the navy.

Edgar Lewis Gets Scenes at Harrisburg

HARRISBURG, PA.—Edgar Lewis and 20 members of the Edgar Lewis Production Company arrived here August 4 to begin at once the production in Harrisburg and vicinity of some of the most important scenes of the eight-reel film play, "The Troop Train," that will be based on the anti-German propaganda story of that name which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. This city has been selected for the filming of several of the scenes chiefly because of the beauty and adaptability of the State capitol, in front of which will be produced on August 8, with the aid of thousands of the Harrisburg populace, a picture of the great demonstration which, in the story, follows the pardoning of "Curley" Casselton, who kills two pro-Germans who try to blow up a train full of American troops.

With the party is Glen White, who will take the leading role of "Casselton." Miss Josephine Hill, who will take a stellar role for the first time in her life, and will assume the leading feminine part. Others taking prominent masculine parts are W. T. Clark and L. J. Osburg.

Clifford P. Saum, assistant to Mr. Lewis who personally will direct the production of the play, came here two weeks ago to make the preliminary arrangement for filming the story which, he announces, will be ready for release in November.

Arrangements also have been made with the Pennsylvania Railroad to stage the scene in which the attempt to dynamite the troop train is frustrated by "Casselton." The act will take place on a very high single-arch stone bridge on the John W. Reily farm, adjoining the golf links of the Harrisburg Country Club, seven miles north of this city.

New Angle Found for a Love Story?

Gail Kane's new production, "Love's Law," for release by Mutual, Sept. 1, is described as a love story with a new angle—the rarest kind of a love story.

Miss Kane says that Joseph Poland, the author of the piece, who has written more than a hundred produced picture dramas, hit upon a unique idea.

Those who have been favored with advance showings of "Love's Law" are of the opinion that it is one of the best plays Mr. Poland ever turned out and certainly one of the most satisfactory subjects ever afforded Miss Kane. J. Clarkson Miller, who wrote the scenario, is also enthusiastic about the completed picture.

Supporting Miss Kane in the cast, aside from her leading man, Courtenay Foote, are Reed Hamilton, who made a hit in "The Danited"; Frederick Jones, widely known for his work in "The Great Divide"; Mathilde Baring, who was the princess in "The Prince Chap"; and Emile La Croix, who was thirty-five years on the legitimate stage, playing Richelieu in "The Three Guardsmen" and the ambassador in "The Runaway Princess."

Triangle Activity Gains Speed

Acting and Technical Forces Hard at It Far Into the Night—Six New Stories Under Way with More Ready

ACTIVITY has been the distinguishing keynote at Triangle Culver City Studios during the past week, and the many glass-domed "picture-factories" have been the scene of bustle and preparation from early morning until late at night. In fact, in some cases, the acting and technical forces were kept hard at it all night long, as several important night scenes had to be shot after sundown, and with the brilliantly illuminated studios, streams of motor cars rolling in and out of the great entrance gate, crowds of extras grouped in and around the buildings, the "lot" bore all the appearance of some huge exposition grounds on a carnival night.

That Triangle intends carrying on an intensive campaign of picture-making is evidenced by the fact that at no time in the history of the corporation has it had so many directors of reputation working on productions as at present. To the well-known names of Christy Cabanne, Cliff Smith, William Dowlan, Albert Parker, Gilbert P. Hamilton, Frank Borzage, Henry Otto and Thomas Heffron, there must be added those of Jack Conway and E. Mason Hopper. And with the arrival of Taylor Holmes, who reached Culver City, bringing his own director, still another name must be added to the list, making ten in all. With such a battery of directors "shooting" at one time under the Triangle trade-mark, a great output of superior feature productions may be looked for within the next few weeks.

Six new stories were well under way at the studio the end of last week, and probably two or three more scenarios will be in the hands of directors by the middle of next week, so it is safe to say that Triangle's "big drive" in picture-making has fairly started.

Taylor Holmes will be featured in a comedy-drama by Jean Havez, entitled "His Father's Safety Razor." The plot of the story has not as yet been given out, but it is said to be a medium which will give full play to all the inimitable qualities for which this comedian is noted. Lawrence Windom will handle the megaphone for Mr. Holmes.

Eltinge Play Filmed

Upon the return of Fred J. Following this it is now planned "Charley's Aunt," "Camouflage" and "My Crinoline Girl" will be filmed. Preparations for the production work is now being made at the Gordon street studios in Hollywood.

Fox Picture Gets Big Campaign

William Fox Production Starring Gladys Brockwell to Be Exploited on Unusual Scale—Is Considered One of Best Novels

PLANS for an elaborate campaign are maturing in the Fox Film Corporation for the exploitation of "The Strange Woman," the screen adaptation of William J. Hurlbut's famous stage play, which will be one of the early Gladys Brockwell releases under the William Fox Victory Pictures.

"The purchase of the motion picture rights to this play," stated an official of the Fox Film Corporation this week is in direct line with the Fox Film Corporation's policy to buy only the best novels and stage plays for picturization by our stars.

"'The Strange Woman' in its original version was one of the most successful plays in recent years. It played a full season on Broadway, and toured the principal cities of the country. Therefore, we think that it has already demonstrated that it has a strong appeal to the public.

"It is our purpose to capitalize this appeal. We think that 'The Strange Woman' is one of the best stories that has ever been put on the screen, and we're going the limit with it. Miss Brockwell has already begun work at Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint, and the picture probably will be released early in September.

"To give the exhibitors of the country the full benefit of the prestige which this picture established in its stage form we have devised several novel publicity and advertising aids. In addition to that there will be an extensive campaign before the release of the picture, so that when it is given to the exhibitors they will have the benefit of being able to go to the public with a production that is already known all over the country."

Hickman Directs Wife in New Feature

Howard Hickman, whose long stage and screen experience has culminated in his directing motion picture productions, is filming the screen version of the Kathleen Norris novel, "The Heart of Rachael," as his second production with Bessie Barriscale as the star.

Miss Barriscale's first picture to be directed by Mr. Hickman was "The White Lie," which was filmed from an original story, written especially for the star. The latest one, which is now being filmed, is taken from Kathleen Norris' novel. The problems which arise are somewhat different from those which are encountered in a strictly "star vehicle," but Mr. Hickman has studied them from every angle and point of view and states that he expects her new subject to be one of the most popular in which she has thus far appeared. The production when completed will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Baseball Dead? Fall Back on Pictures

To the end that motion pictures may be more firmly established as a great American institution, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has advocated a great campaign looking toward the substitution of picture news for baseball in the newspapers as a medium of building and sustaining circulation. From the moment that motion pictures were classed as essential by the War Department and it seemed certain that baseball was to be placed among the non-essentials the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation began seeking the cooperation of the New York City papers in a movement to give motion pictures greater publicity in anticipation of the void to be created when the so-called National game, at least the professional part of it, should be eliminated. The result has been that during the past few weeks the metropolitan journals have been giving news of the photoplays and players more and more prominence every day.

Exhibitors Back Up "Pershing's Crusaders"

Prompted by the desire to help the United States Government to the very limit of their abilities, the theatre men of America are acting as a unit in properly exploiting "Pershing's Crusaders" not only in every large city but in the smaller hamlets.

In many cases the loyal exhibitor must perforce cancel some film which he has already paid for, to make room for this Government picture. In the many instances noted, exhibitors have benefited largely because of the additional energy they have devoted in publicizing this wonderful picture, it is said.

When "Pershing's Crusaders" showed in Seattle, Wash., it played to overflow business throughout the entire engagement. On the closing night Secretary McAdoo was present and talked.

In Los Angeles they held a big parade under auspices of the State Council of Defense, headed by the Submarine Brass Band. The mayor of Los Angeles also issued a proclamation urging all citizens to attend.

Fox Tells Nature of Pearson Story

A tremendous photoplay of a mother who fights for the honor of her unborn child is the description given of "The Liar," Virginia Pearson's latest William Fox Special Feature. The play was written by Katherine Kavanaugh and directed by Edmund Lawrence.

A large and capable cast supports Miss Pearson, these players being in the production: Alexander Franck, Edward F. Roseman, Victor Sutherland, Eugene Borden, Albert Riccardi, Myra Brooke, Mrs. Matilde Brundage, Liane Held Carrera. Miss Carrera is a daughter of Anna Held, and it was during the critical days of the famous French actress' recent illness that the play was filmed.

points that you will be able to use. Now let us look at the various stars, based on the announcements made by Vitagraph about the character of production.

EARLE WILLIAMS. Here is an actor who is known wherever pictures are and he had nearly always appeared in roles which show him as a gentleman. He will have a strong appeal to the women and to the society element and to those who are fond of the drama of the city, of romance, of chivalry. He has been called the Beau Brummel of the screen. A selling argument on Earle Williams for you is that he will be seen as a clean-cut character and in clean pictures and that there will be afforded tense dramatic situations. Here is a case of an actor who is so well known and his past work so familiar that you will make no mistake in building your exploitation along the general lines of: "Earle Williams has the role of a society man whose daring saves a woman from an adventurer in such and such a play." In other words the public knows Williams and it wants to know the exact role he will have and that is the dominant idea to bring out.

ALICE JOYCE. Her pictures will be found to be those which contain strong dramatic elements. Her acting is quiet, restrained and she has established herself as a distinct type of heroine, the beautiful self-sacrificing girl, the girl with the soulful eyes. She plays the roles from the shopgirl in the shabby frock to the society girl. Explanation of her should be strong in the use of her picture and in bringing out the sympathetic elements of the particular role she has in the picture.

BESSIE LOVE. Vitagraph promises that Miss Love will be cast in happy, girlish pictures during this season. She is a sunshine girl and laughter is a predominate element in her work, with a strong underlying strain of pathos at times. But youth and good humor are the appeals to make with her.

This suggests an idea that has been used by Miss Flossie Jones in her theatres at Waukesha, Wis. One night every week she has a "Youthful Star Night" and Miss Love is one of the players that she has been using. Both she and Gladys Leslie are players that you can use for such occasions.

GLADYS LESLIE. "Love, youth, piquancy and plot" are what are promised in the pictures that Miss Leslie will make. She has all the charm of girlhood and she will be found not only to have a strong appeal to them, but to the younger girl element of the community. We would ply the light element in exploiting her, not trying to make any of the displays sensational, but bearing on the happy, lovable element of the pictures. And remember that these days the people want happy pictures.

HARRY MOREY. Here is the vigorous type and there should be vigorous exploitation. You can be safely assured that he will have a "fighting role" whether physical strength or real brains and cleverness figure in the victory which he achieves. His role in "Womanhood" will not soon be forgotten. You can make your appeals on his pictures to the various elements of the community by making the advertising vivid and without exaggeration. His pictures are those in which to put the pep and the punch in your displays.

CORINNE GRIFFITH. Society drama, heavy or light, is the particular forte of Miss Griffith. You may find her the center of intrigue, or in a strong emotional role or in lighter plays, but her beauty is one of the things that you will play. She might be called "the girl of the changing faces" so different does she appear in almost every offering, but her beauty is one of the things to keep dominant in your exploitation.

These are at best bare suggestions. But the chief point is to lay your plans for your campaign and to keep at it consistently. Don't forget one of these players because you won't have another of their pictures for a few weeks. Keep the six names prominently in your mind and get every line of publicity for them that you can, always remembering that the best sort of advertising is not the obvious sort.

Keep all the material that you get from one picture to another and you will soon be astounded at the amount of matter that you have. Then you will have supplies for lobby displays, newspaper use and practically every other avenue of publicity.

You won't need the "stunt" if you pursue a regular policy of keeping these players before your public and working for you all the time. You will soon have the character of their productions so firmly in the minds of your patrons that you won't have to worry about going into detail about the character of the films. That will be established and you will need little more than the bare announcement. But remember that the successful advertiser never stops advertising.

Metro Buys Rights to Patriotic Drama

Metro Pictures Corporation has acquired the American motion picture rights to "The Man Who Stayed at Home," the successful patriotic drama which has been presented to theatre audiences both in this country and in England. "The Man Who Stayed at Home" will be produced with an all-star cast of screen players under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. The identity of those playing the roles of Christopher Brent and Miriam Lee, taken on the New York speaking stage by Albert Brown and Katharine Kaelred, will be announced later. "The Man Who Stayed at Home" recently completed a run at the Forty-eighth street theatre, New York.

The story deals with America's participation in the great war, and with England's tremendous responsibility in the safe transportation of American troops passing through Great Britain on their way to "the front."

The Man Who Stayed at Home" will be the eighth patriotic feature production issued by Metro, the others being "To Hell with the Kaiser," starring Lawrence Grant and Olive Tell, which has just completed a successful Broadway run; "Lest We Forget," with the heroine of the Lusitania; Rita Jolivet, "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly; "The Slacker," with Emily Stevens; "Mabel Taliaferro in "Draft 258"; "The Legion of Death," starring Edith Storey; and "Her Boy," co-starring Effie Shannon and Niles Welch; in addition to which several Metro-Drew comedies have dealt with patriotic subjects.

The American screen rights to "The Man Who Stayed at Home" were obtained from the Hepworth Film Company of London.

Outing-Chesters Gain Ground

Catch On Immediately with Exhibitors and the Public—Yonkers House Gives "Kaieteur" Full Sway on Program

THE unusual character, splendid photography and interesting subject matter of the Outing-Chester Pictures are being praised by exhibitors who have booked the series. The element of adventure is never lost sight of in these travels through little known but picturesque places.

"I drew 'Kaieteur' as the first of the series for my house,' said H. J. Cole, who owns the Broadway theatre at Yonkers. Mrs. Cole is running the advertising, and she realized the appeal in this type of picture to the patrons of the Broadway. The result was that they came in droves to see 'Kaieteur.' I don't remember what the feature was that I ran the same night, and I doubt if my audience does. To my mind and to theirs the feature of the evening's program was 'Kaieteur.'

"Mrs. Cole prepared the advertising for the Yonkers newspapers, using the material for the Mutual press folder. She played the Outing reel as the feature. It was well worth it."

Manager Harold B. Franklin, of the Shea Hipodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., is delighted with the quality of the Outing-Chester pictures.

"You may continue our contract for the Outing-Chester Pictures," writes Mr. Franklin to Mutual.

"We find them excellent entertainment, full of adventure, and the photography is impressive.

"These pictures can be run profitably on any program."

"A Coorial on the Orinoco," No. 6 in the series of Outing-Chester Pictures, is released August 4. In this picture the cameraman found splendid opportunity to visualize the beautiful exotic tropical jungles of Venezuela, and to show some intimate details in the domestic life of the Guarauno Indians. A native logboat or "Coorial," carried the exploring party into this wild region, which was the haunt of the Spanish buccaneers three centuries ago.

Miscellaneous Notes

Vivian Martin's popularity and the charm and wide appeal of "Her Country First," the latest Paramount picture in which she is starred, will combine to make this attraction a successful one from the exhibitors' point of view, according to advance notices.

The story by William Parker which forms the basis of Miss Barriscale's latest Paralta production, "A Wife's Conscience," now being filmed at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles, was adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lamonthe.

"String Beans" will probably stand as the title of Charles Ray's newest Paramount on which he is now at work, for it seems highly fitting. The story deals with the efforts of a couple of sharpers to start a string bean cannery on paper, in a village, and mulct the farmers for their coin.

A splendid tribute to motion pictures as an adjunct in the education of children, and in particular to the forthcoming production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which Marguerite Clark is starred, is embodied in a letter recently published in the Boston Teachers' News Letter.

Kennedy Gets Woodland Settings in New Film

"Friend Husband," the newest of the series of Goldwyn Pictures, in which Madge Kennedy is soon to be seen, is said to be a different sort of photo-romance in several ways. The star herself is different, the plot is decidedly out of the ordinary and the production is uniquely beautiful, says a Goldwyn statement.

For the first time since Madge Kennedy made her debut on the screen as a star in Goldwyn Pictures she is given the opportunity to act in woodland settings. In love with nature, it has been almost a trial for the star to act day after day in the studio with the great out-of-doors calling her. But in "Friend Husband" all this is changed. Not only are many of the scenes played in sylvan settings of exquisite beauty, but they necessitated the presence of Miss Kennedy and her company in the woods for many days.

Pathe Names Stan Laurel as Comedian

Stan Laurel is a comedian new to the screen whom Pathe will present to exhibitors this coming fall. Laurel was engaged to make five one-reel comedies between two vaudeville engagements and has just finished the last of his pictures at the Rolin studios.

Laurel began his stage career in the London Music Hall and soon had achieved much popularity. Recently he has had long engagements on one of the best vaudeville circuits in America. Hal Roach of Rolin saw him and saw in him an excellent possibility as a screen comedian. However, as has been said before, he was only able to secure him for a few weeks.

The first of these one-reel comedies will be released early in October. It is probable that they will alternate with the well-known Lloyd comedies until they have all been released.

Maigne Completes New Brady Picture

This week Charles Maigne is putting the finishing touches on a picture at present entitled "Golden Fleece," in which Alice Brady is to be starred on the Select program. Considerable interest is attached to this announcement in that the production marks Mr. Maigne's debut as a director. He has long been identified with the Famous Players-Lasky corporation as scenario writer, having prepared all the scenarios for the Elsie Ferguson pictures to date, as well as adapting "The Blue Bird" for screen production. He has also prepared scenarios for a number of other stars of the Paramount organization including "The Bottle Imp," one of the earlier Sessue Hayakawa pictures.

The heads of the Select organization chose Mr. Maigne as director for Miss Brady because of his excellent record in his former position which is so closely allied to that of directing.

"Golden Fleece" was adapted by Mr. Maigne from a short story by Fannie Hurst which appeared in a recent issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Its title will probably be changed before release owing to the fact that another company has just released a picture bearing a similar title.

Miss Brady is supported by David Powell, Gloria Goodwin and Hardee Kirkland in this picture. Another in the cast is Louis Sherwin, dramatic critic of the New York Globe who is playing a minor role in order to become fully acquainted with the art of picture production. Mr. Sherwin made the adaptation for one of Miss Brady's pictures shortly to be released.

Glaum Series Goes Into Loew Houses

Seven Loew houses in New York City will exhibit, first run, the Louise Glaum series of Paralta Plays, announces the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors.

"Wedlock," the first Glaum-Paralta picture to play the contract, was shown at the Broadway, 116th street, New York, Circle, Forty-second street, Eighty-sixth street and West End theatres.

Vitagraph Lengthens Comedies

Big V Laugh-Makers Expand from One to Two Reels on Weekly Release Basis—First Comes on September 16

IN response to the demand of exhibitors now using the company's one-reel "Big V" comedies, Vitagraph has decided to issue these subjects as two-reel features. The first of these feature comedies will be released the week of September 16, states Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and they will be released weekly thereafter.

Mr. Smith, in discussing the change in length of the Big V's, said:

"For many months past there has been a constant and insistent demand on the part of exhibitors that we change our Big V comedies from one reel to two-reels. With the whole nation seeking diversion, the picture with the laugh in it has come to be as important to a theatre program as any big feature, and we intend to give the exhibitors comedy features in two parts of such high quality that they will be justified in advertising them heavily and featuring them in electric lights.

"These two-part features will be of feature standard in every respect. When we first began to consider increasing the length of them I communicated with the stars of the comedies, the directors, and asked them if they could maintain the speed and humor of the comedies if we increased them from one to two reels. I insisted that we should not make the change unless we could be sure that nothing would be sacrificed in action or situation and the replies came back that two reels would enable the comedians to more than double the merit of their productions. Better stories, more stunts and better settings, such as will be permitted by the added footage, will make these Big V features the strongest kind of program unit for theatres of all classes, and will enable the exhibitors to advertise them as such. The people nowadays want to laugh out loud, and I think in these feature comedies we will give them something real to laugh at, because we are going to produce them on a big scale, with plenty of pretty girls, acrobats and funny men, and have already turned over to the companies increased facilities in the way of settings, properties and mechanical help."

This decision on the part of Vitagraph is one of the most important developments to the week in the motion picture industry, and the announcement of two-reel comedy features weekly is bound to be welcomed by exhibitors. The public is demanding more merriment in its screen menus each day and, while the one-reel comedy is an important part of the theatre program, there is hardly enough of it to be played as a feature. The two-part comedy, however, does lend itself to such a play and, with President Smith's promise that the new comedies will be made with the same care and attention to detail as that given to features, the Vitagraph innovation is certain to meet with the greatest encouragement from the theatre-owners of

Yorska Staff Considers Big Stories

Madame Yorska has arrived in Los Angeles to begin her career in the film world, after years on the stage as a dramatic star. She will produce her film dramas at the Brunton studios in Hollywood, under the auspices of the Matzene Company, with which she has a three-year contract. Madame Yorska is a protege of Madame Sarah Bernhardt.

Stories are being considered by a staff of twelve photodramatic experts, operating in New York and Los Angeles. The selection for her debut has not yet been announced, but will probably be a well-known story adapted to screen production. The method of distributing Mme. Yorska's productions will soon be announced.

Solid Schedule Under Star Series Policy Said to Be Popular Among Larger Exhibitors—First Features Ready

EXHIBITORS' approval of Goldwyn's Star Series booking policy is found in the signing, under solid bookings, for all fifty Goldwyn productions, of many of the greatest theatres in the larger cities of the United States.

Repeating its New York, Philadelphia and Chicago achievements of obtaining solid bookings from the most important exhibitors of each city, Goldwyn has now closed similar contracts for Boston, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Denver, San Francisco, Toledo, Youngstown and more than a score of the larger cities recently.

In Boston Jacob Lowrie's Modern and Beacon theatres will be the first screen home of Goldwyn productions.

Ruben and Filkelstein's entire chain of Minneapolis and St. Paul houses will present in those Northwestern cities all of the Goldwyn productions.

M. L. Markowitz's Strand theatre, on Market street, San Francisco, has signed for all Goldwyn productions for first run in the city at the Golden Gate. Leo Weinburg, the manager of this house, already has begun a tremendous advertising campaign in advance of the first Goldwyn release, Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," in September.

In Denver S. L. Baxter, the exhibitor veteran of the Rocky Mountain region, has signed for all Goldwyn productions at his Isis theatre, this being his second year as a Goldwyn exhibitor-customer.

Geraldine Farrar's first production, "The Turn of the Wheel"; Mabel Normand's first Star Series production, "Peck's Bad Girl"; Tom Moore in "Just for Tonight," Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth," and Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires" are all completed and within a few days will be shipped for advance showings under the supervision of the various Goldwyn managers to the 20 offices of North America.

Pathe Gets "Fourth of July in France"

"FOURTH of July in France," is the title of a two-reel production scheduled for immediate release by Pathe. It was photographed by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army and was obtained by Pathe from the French Pictorial Service.

The motion pictures making up this subject have been received from France and are said to be full of absorbing interest in every detail, for the reason that they are the first pictures showing Uncle Sam's boys at the Independence Day celebration in the land of the lilies.

A brief resumé of the interesting scenes in this film show the unusual character of the production. We see our boys on parade at the main square of a little Alsatian town. This town the Sammies rescued from the grasp of the Hun, and they are being showered with flowers and good wishes by the Alsatians who long were under the iron heel of the German Government.

The scenes shift to Paris, where for the first time in perhaps not only France but in the history of all the Allied countries joined together in the celebration of Uncle Sam's Fourth of July, we see President Poincare accompanied by General Joffre, hero of the Marne; the Governor-General of Paris, U. S. Ambassador Sharp, President of the French Chamber of Deputies and other dignitaries assembled together to review the parade along the Paris boulevard, held in honor of the United States and her Independence Day.

Foss with May Allison

Darrell Foss, who appeared opposite May Allison in "The Return of Mary," the first picture done by the star at Metro's West Coast Studios in Hollywood, is again her leading man in "The Testing of Mildred Vane," in which she has started work.

Director Golden Returns to New York

This week saw the return of Director J. A. Golden leading in tow the entire Leah Baird Serial Co. reluctantly leaving behind them the splashing waters of the Newfoundland banks. While the original plans were to return in the yacht that Mr. Golden had chartered for use in the sea episodes of the serial, at the last moment he decided to return by rail.

En route to New York City, the train carrying the company was held up, but fortunately, or unfortunately, for the publicity man not in such a manner as to bring down heaps of copy in the New York dailies. The premeditated hold-up will constitute a portion of an episode that was staged on board the fast New York Central train that brought back the serial company.

In order to save considerable time, Mr. Golden conceived the idea of doing a railroad episode while they were en route home.

"Ghost Flower" Secures Artistic Settings

Director Frank Borzage, who has just finished his last production, "The Ghost Flower," a romance of sunny Italy, in which Alma Rubens has the featured part, congratulates himself on having obtained one of the most artistic sets ever erected on the Triangle lot. It is a Naples street scene. Borzage is fortunate in having had the assistance of Miss Amy E. Sacker of the Sacker School of Design and Interior Decoration, of Boston. Miss Sacker has lived abroad extensively and is as familiar with Italian life as with American itself.

Several new players are included in Borzage's cast supporting Alma Rubens, among them being Charles West and Emery Johnson a new juvenile. Francis McDonald and Dick Rosson also have important roles.

Muriel Ostriche Cast

Muriel Ostriche has been cast for the part of Grace Moran in "The Bluffer," which Travers Vale is directing. June Elvidge is the star. It will be released in the fall.

General Distributes National Army Reels

Now being distributed to New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston exchanges of General Film Company are four reels of National Army cantonment pictures taken by the Connecticut Film Company. These subjects are entitled, "Our Boys at Camp Dix," and they show the camp life of soldier selectives from the vicinity of the centres named. The bookings are of the subjects as one release, or, if preferred, as four separate releases of one reel each.

A great many heart interest and humorous touches are found in "Our Boys at Camp Dix," the cameraman having been alive to just such points of interest amid the sterner routine of making soldiers of men from the offices, factories and farms. This company also produced "Our Boys at Camp Devens," which has had successful runs wherever shown.

Hart Engages Wanda Hawley

It was announced from the Coast this week that Wanda Hawley, formerly known as Wanda Petit, has been engaged for leading feminine roles in William S. Hart's company, making pictures for Artcraft distribution. Miss Hawley is well known in pictures, having appeared with Douglas Fairbanks in "Mr. Fix-It" and with Constance Talmadge in "A Pair of Silk Stockings." She has also appeared in numerous other productions.

Frank Norcross "Rests"

Frank Norcross, well-known character player, announced this week by means of a postal card that he is open for an engagement. His line of parts includes anything from "bankers to bums." One of the most recent pictures in which he appeared was "The Highest Bidder," a Vitagraph production in which Norcross was the auctioneer.

"Come On In" Presents Mason and Truex

THE first John Emerson-Anita Loos production for Paramount, starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, has been completed at the Eastern Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is described as a comedy of the training camps, and will be released under the title, "Come On In."

The slogan of "Come On In"—for it is apparent from the outset that the picture not only has a slogan, but carries a strong patriotic message as well—is "Come on in—the war is fine!" No matter who one may be, even if he is as little as Shirley Mason or Ernest Truex, there is, nevertheless, plenty of important work for him to do in helping to win the war.

At the Fifty-sixth street studio, Enrico Caruso, the tenor, who is now an Artcraft star, is progressing rapidly under the direction of Edward Jose in the filming of his first Artcraft picture, "My Cousin," which was written specially for him by Margaret Turnbull.

Marguerite Clark, who has returned from her vacation spent, for the most part, in Washington, has started work on her new picture for Paramount, for which the title, "Three Men and a Girl," has been decided upon. The picture was originally called "The Three Bears," being adapted from the play of that name by Edward Childs Carpenter.

Emile Chautard, who is directing Pauline Frederick in "Paid in Full" at the Fort Lee Studio, is leaving no stone unturned to make the picture one of the finest in which Miss Frederick has ever appeared. The interior work is nearly completed, and the company will go to the Belmont Park race track in a few days for a few exterior scenes.

General Denies Releasing Diamond Films

MOTION PICTURE NEWS was advised this week by General Film Company that the published announcement recently to the effect that General would release a series of six one-reel comedies for the Diamond Film Company, made by Frank P. Donovan, is all wrong.

General Film states that there is not a word of truth in the matter, as no arrangement has been made with Donovan or any one connected with Diamond, for the release of the comedies, which have not been made. An official of General states that no one outside the company has any authority to announce any of its releases.

It was further stated by General that a telegram had been received, stating that Donovan was no longer connected with Diamond.

Spoor Completes Work on "Young America"

Photographic work on both interior and exterior scenes in "Young America," the new George K. Spoor feature, taken from the Cohan and Harris piece, written by Fred Ballard, has practically been completed, it has been announced.

Director Arthur Berthelet starts work immediately on editing the film and it shortly will be ready for release. Inquiries already are said to be coming to Essanay in regard to the release of the picture and as to when it can be booked.

The cast was specially picked from several cities for the various parts, mostly from New York and Chicago so that each character is the best adapted to the role taken that could be found. It is believed that the play as a whole will be an unusually strong one.

Elinor Field, In "What Will Father Say?" Mutual-Strand Comedy

Strand Comedy Creates Smokeless Day

Strand Comedies, released by Mutual, are certainly "doing their bit" in making war what Sherman said it was for one certain Willie Hohenzollern, Mutual declared this week.

After Phoenix, Arizona, had seen the Strand Comedy, "My Lady Nicotine," the city fathers got together and unanimously decided to put over a "Smokeless Day." "My Lady Nicotine" shows a method and carries a suggestion for cutting down on "smokes," so that the American boys now engaged in chasing the harassed and hungry Huns back to their dugouts in Berlin may have more "makin's" and cigars while in the trenches.

This is the first city in the United States that has declared a "Smokeless Day." This unique method of propaganda for "more smokes for our boys" has been so effective that it has been officially recognized by "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." "On Her Account," released July 23, contained an appeal for the Red Cross, while other Strands showed interesting angels of food conservation.

Tense Moments Many in "Money Mad"

Mae Marsh, usually seen in charming situations in her screen plays, is disclosed in any number of tense moments in her newest Goldwyn picture, "Money Mad," to be released August 25. But of course they are relieved by smiles of her own particular kind.

One of the most novel as well as dramatic moments in the new play occurs at a seance around a table in the home of Elsie Dean (played by Mae Marsh). Her stepfather is under the spell of a Hindu and is also preyed upon by a beautiful woman of doubtful reputation. They arrange a session at the big table, prevailing upon the Hindu to go into a trance and giving Elsie and her sweetheart permission to join them.

About New Pictures

It is said that the trite expression, "Produced without consideration of cost," may be justifiably applied to "Bound in Morocco," Douglas Fairbanks' new Artcraft picture, released August 5.

The sub-titles in "Queen of the Sea," the $1,000,000 submarine phantasy, which William Fox is going to exhibit this season as one of his big, timely pictures, are declared to be of exceptional literary merit. Annette Kellermann is the star of "Queen of the Sea."

Rex Beach and Goldwyn Pictures Corporation have won him over, and Rogers is now at work in the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee in the name role of "Laughing Bill Hyde," one of Rex Beach's biggest stories, announced for release in late September.

Harry Morey and his leading woman, Betty Blythe, are working on a new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, under direction of Paul Scardon. It bears the title of "The King of Diamonds," and is from the pen of Edward Ballou.

One of the most artistic sets ever erected at Triangle's big Culver City studios is being used by Director Frank Borzage in his latest feature picture, "The Ghost Flower," in which Alma Rubens is the featured player.

Mary Jane Irving, the five-year-old child actress, though a little tot, has a big role in "The Temple of Dusk," Sessue Hayakawa's second independent production, which will be released by the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Preparations have been made for the filming of a new Gladys Brockwell story by E. J. LeSaint. This is titled "The Strange Woman," and is adapted from the William J. Hurlbut stage success in which Elsie Ferguson is said to have made her first dramatic hit. The play was novelized and proved very successful.

Maravene Thompson, the celebrated playwright, novelist and short story writer who, four months ago, made her entry in the motion picture field by selling a story to World Pictures and since has contributed three more picture plays, has sold to this company an original script entitled "When True Love Speaks."

Elinor Field, comedienne selected as the leading woman in Strand-Mutual comedies, makes her debut as a star in "What Will Father Say?" scheduled for release by Mutual August 6.

In Hearst-Pathe News No. 60, released July 24, were exclusive pictures of the barge Landford, which was wrecked by a German U-boat in the second attack on the Atlantic coast.

When the fifth Petrova feature, "The Tiger Woman," is released in the near future, it will carry the finest set of pictorial titles conceived by that company for use on the screen. "The Tiger Woman" is an adaptation of the novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," by Gertrude Atherton.

Director Albert Parker has just completed his first Triangle picture, "Shifting Sands," and is waiting for a new story. The principal in his first feature are Gloria Swanson, Joe King, and Harvey Clark.

James Young, who is directing "The Temple of Dusk," the second of the Hayakawa productions, is nearing the completion of the picture.

Larry Semon has just completed a Big V Comedy which is "different" by way of its being made entirely in exterior scenes. Mr. Semon is now in the midst of the enthusiastic production of a one-reel comedy which in addition to Mr. Semon himself has in its principal action three stripped automobiles identically alike.

"A King in Khaki," the first of Harold Lockwood's Screen Classics, Inc., productions, distributed by Metro, has just been completed and will shortly be announced for release.

One of the largest mob scenes ever employed in the East in motion pictures was handled by Director Dell Henderson in "The Road to France," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are starred.

Bessie Barriscale has completed her latest Paralta Play at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles. This production, the star's seventh under the Paralta banner, has been entitled "A Wife's Conscience."

"The Driving Power" is the title of a story which World Pictures will soon put into work for a five-reel feature.

Universal Creates New Department

The crying need of producing companies for good stories for the screen, is shown by the action of the management of Universal Film Company, in the creation of a new department, and to conduct an aggressive campaign for the purchase of suitable stories for screening. Edna Schley, whose pen name is Norris Shannon, has been placed in charge of this work in addition to supervising the reading department. Miss Schley is the author of a number of film stories and other published works.

"The Universal Company is badly in need of stories for all of its stars," Miss Schley said in speaking of her new work, "and are paying much higher prices than formerly. Price is a secondary consideration with the company now, the first being good stories, and it does not matter whether the author is known or unknown. Approximately fifty original stories are received daily, but for want of originality, proper preparation, or some other reason, a very small percentage of these are available.

Metro Changes Title of Storey Feature

"The Silent Woman" has been chosen as the title of Edith Storey's forthcoming Metro feature production, previously known as "Shadow and Substance." In making this change, Maxwell Karger, studio supervisor, has been actuated by the fact that the newer title embodies the mystery and romance contained in the picture, expressing the underlying idea in a wholly satisfactory manner.

"The Silent Woman" is a romance of the north woods. Edith Storey is a clerk in a Hudson Bay trading post. She is affectionately called "the angel of the lumberjacks."

"The Silent Woman" will be released in Metro's All-Star Series August 26.

Dressler at Brunton Plant

Space for production has been leased at the Brunton Studios by the Marie Dressler Company, and here World Film Comedies featuring Miss Dressler will be made in the future. Work is to be commenced here in the near future.

Selznick Presents Talmadge in Grace George Play

The third in her succession of screen presentations of stage plays is Constance Talmadge's August Select Picture, "Sauce for the Goose," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. This comedy was first seen in America as a starring vehicle for Grace George. "Sauce for the Goose" is the collaborated work of Geraldine Bonner and Hutcheson Boyd. The screen adaptation was done by Julia Crawford Ivers, who has succeeded in translating to the screen one hunderd per cent of the entertainment latent in the original comedy.

Besides Constance Talmadge and Harrison Ford, who plays her lead, the cast includes Harland Tucker, Vera Doria, Edna Mae Cooper, Lewis Willoughby and Jane Reckley.

New War Angle Claimed by Artcraft

"Till I Come Back to You," the Cecil B. De Mille special production for Artcraft, which will be released August 26, deals with the war, but from an angle said to be hitherto unapproached by the screen producers and scenario writers. It is an original story by Jeanie MacPherson, who wrote the scenarios of "The Whispering Chorus," "Old Wives for New" and "Joan the Woman."

Bryant Washburn plays the American officer and Florence Vidor is the Belgian girl-wife. G. Butler Clonbough is the German husband.

C. B. De Mille is enthusiastic over the picture upon which he is lavishing the greatest care and attention.

"Changing Woman" Release Date Set

"The Changing Woman," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature announced release the week of August 19, by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, brings to the screen a clever adaptation of O. Henry's widely read story, "A Matter of Mean Elevation." It also presents in a Blue Ribbon Feature Hedda Rova and J. Frank Glendon, whose splendid work in the Vitagraph serial "The Woman in the Web" added greatly to their popularity. The picture was produced at the Hollywood studio under the direction of David Smith.

Miss Nova and Mr. Glendon are said to have ideal roles in this picture.

General Releases Rearranged

A rearrangement of the releasing schedule for the Ebony Comedies is announced this week by General Film Company.

Beginning with "When You Are Scared, Run," August 19, these comedy subjects will be available every other week. It is announced from the Fond du Lac Studios of the Ebony Company that every effort will be made to insure the quality of the comedies, since they are proving so popular. Work has been begun on a number of selected stories.

Coming Program Offerings

Child Star Leads Pathe List

"Winning Grandma" Is Five-Reel Drama for August 18—First Episode of "Hands Up" Is Announced

THE program announced by Pathe for the week of August 18 is an attractive one, according to the announcement of that company. "Winning Grandma" is a five-reel drama said to be full of heart interest. This production features Baby Marie Osborne, "Litle Mary Sunshine," in the story of the regeneration of a stern and cold-hearted woman. The Biblical quotation, "And a Little Child Shall Lead Them" was never, it is stated, better exemplified than in the Pathe play, "Winning Grandma."

The first episode of the serial, "Hands Up," will be released by Pathe. "Hands Up" is in 15 two-part episodes from the pen of Gilson Willets, produced by Astra and directed by James Horne.

Ruth Roland, supported by George Chesebro, are the stars supported by a carefully selected cast of players. No expense has been spared in the building of sets, among them the most noteworthy being the elaborate throne room in the Inca Castle, the Inca Castle itself, the Strange Ranch House and other striking sets. This Western serial has a number of novel features, one being the action surrounding the activities of the lost tribe of Incas who journeyed north from Peru into our Southwest on a strange and sinister mission. The first episode of "Hands Up" is entitled, "The Bride of the Sun," and forthcoming episodes will follow one every week.

"Bride and Gloom" is another of those Lloyd comedies which have proven so popular with exhibitors. Pathe Exchanges assure all exhibitors that "Bride and Gloom" is on a par with the other Lloyd comedies which grow better and better.

Post Travel Series No. 10 take the spectator through little known nooks and corners of Venezuela and included there is a visit to Caracas. The modes of living of the natives of Venezuela and the beautiful Venezuelan mountains and lakes are depicted.

Official War Review No. 8 depicts all the latest scenes of the Allied battle front.

"Inside the Lines" Draws for World

The current release on World program of the five-reel feature, "Inside the Lines," with Lewis S. Stone as the star, is still said to be a big box-office winner in the legitimate theatres. A revival of this Broadway success was made in Boston, and though it had a long run there during its first visit to that city it is now in its twelfth week. So pronounced is the success it is now meeting with that plans are being formulated for several companies to tour in it the coming season. The timeliness of this picture is best illustrated by the recent disclosures of the activities of German authorities from Wilhelmstrasse. They spent over thirty million dollars in perfecting an organization to disseminate propaganda in this country by buying up a large number of daily papers scattered throughout the United States.

Gloria Joy, Presented In Oakdale Productions By General Film

General Releases New Gloria Joy Film

Gloria Joy makes her third appearance this week, according to an announcement from General Film, in an Oakdale production, "Miss Mischief Maker," a five-reel drama. It is said that in this subject, with its lighter domestic touch, the seven-year-old star makes her most striking claim to stardom.

Reports received from the various General Film branches are said to indicate that the first two releases in the Oakdale series, "The Locked Heart" and "No Children Wanted," are delivering the goods at the box office. Advance bookings for the entire series have now grown so rapidly as to indicate that the Oakdale Productions will be one of the most popular series ever released by General Film.

Mutual Likes Story by Miss Justice

With the release of "Her Husband's Honor," Edna Goodrich's latest production Maibelle Heikes Justice is receiving many compliments from fellow-writers over the story she wrote for Miss Goodrich.

James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual, went out after the best story he could buy for Miss Goodrich, and after a search of several weeks selected "Her Husband's Honor," which had been written under the title of "The Gadabout."

"Her Husband's Honor" was produced by Miss Goodrich, under the direction of Burton King. She has finished work on "Treason," her second picture.

Charlie "Kids" Germans

Charlie Chaplin makes a band of German spies walk the goose-step in "Triple Trouble," the new Chaplin two-part comedy released by Essanay. They try to buy the formula for a "wireless explosive" from Colonel Nutt. When he refuses to sell they threaten him. Chaplin, the janitor, enters, forces them to goose-step their way out of the office, and finally lands them in a heap on the sidewalk

Program Glances

"His Birthright," the first of eight Hayakawa specials, to be released by Mutual on September 1, has received the finishing touches under the eye of the Japanese star, who is now finishing his second picture of the series, "The Temple of Dusk."

"Wild Primrose," declared in an advance notice by Vitagraph to be one of the strongest and most appealing pictures in which Gladys Leslie has appeared, is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the Blue Ribbon Feature release for the week of August 12.

One of the funniest scenes in Billie Burke's new picture for Paramount, "In Pursuit of Polly," which is scheduled for release August 19, is that depicting a hotel fire, without showing harrowing details such as are wont to enter the imagination at the mere mention of a conflagration in a hotel.

"A Dam Catastrophe," seventh of the Outing-Chester travel pictures released by Mutual, displays a colony of beavers in active operation.

While "The Great Love," D. W. Griffith's first production for Artcraft, which is scheduled for release August 12, is unique in the number of titled people from the very flower of England's aristocracy who appear in the picture, its producer has by no means depended solely upon this novelty in presenting a photoplay calculated to merit distinction.

Essanay has completed its next George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," the Cohan and Harris production, written by Fred Ballard and shown on the stage recently.

Camera work on Bert Lytell's newest picture, "Unexpected Places," is almost finished at Metro's West Coast Studios in Hollywood. Only a few interior scenes remain to be taken, under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

A picturesque and wonderfully dramatic story of the Old South is promised in "Green Eyes," the next Paramount picture, in which Dorothy Dalton will be seen. It is said to be one of the most effective roles in a dramatic way in which this beautiful star has ever been seen. It was written by Ella Stuart Carson, and directed by R. William Neill, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Alice Howell in "Bawled Out," a two-reel comedy, is the latest offering, featuring this star, which comes from the Century Comedy Company. According to Universal officials, "Bawled Out" is the best Alice Howell comedy released to date.

When "Fedora," the new Paramount picture, in which Pauline Frederick is starred, is released August 12, students of the drama of Victorien Sardou will observe that in the photoplay the final scene in which, in the stage version, the heroine, Fedora, commits suicide, has been altered to give the story a happy ending.

Lively interest not only among exhibitors, but exchange people also has been aroused by the announcement that General Film Company is distributing "Bill's Budget," an exclusively weekly slide service of comic nature. The service is produced on a rental basis with particular attention to first new houses. The topics range from miscellaneous jokes to epigrams on love and marriage. Every alternate week is devoted to "Girls I Have Loved."

George Kleine has acquired the new Chaplin two-reel comedy called, "Triple Trouble," that will undoubtedly play to a quarter of a million or more.

One of the most novel features that has been shown so far in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph is the subject titled, "Feminine Life Guards," which appears in Pictograph No. 131, released August 5.

Fred Stone caused a sensation at the Lasky Studio recently when he went through a series of his eccentric dances in the making of his new Artcraft Picture, "Johnny, Get Your Gun."

Enid Bennett has a role in her newest Paramount picture, "Coals of Fire," released August 26, that seems to be, from all report, one of the strongest that she has yet been given by the producer, Thomas H. Ince. Victor Schertzinger directed the picture the story for which was written by R. Cecil Smith.

When William Fox releases "I'll Say So," one of the first of his new Victory Pictures, it will be a case of the Walsh family in the limelight, for R. A. Walsh directed the picture, and his young brother, George Walsh, is the star.

Madame Olga Petrova, Whose Latest Picture, "Patience Sparhawk," Is Said to Be Doing Well

"Bride of Sun" from Pathe This Month

The latest serial to be released by Pathe, the first two-part episode entitled "The Bride of the Sun," scheduled for release the week of August 18, is said by those who have been fortunate enough to see the first episodes, to be one of the greatest serials ever presented to the public.

This serial stars, Ruth Roland supported by George Chesebro, and they are surrounded by a carefully selected cast of players, each one carefully chosen as to type. There are also thousands of supernumeraries engaged during the action of this serial. Although "Hands Up" can be classed as a gripping Western serial in the common sense of that word for the reason that unusual atmosphere, a novel plot, the introduction of an entirely new series of thrills and heart throbs, make this serial something so much desired by the exhibitors, namely something different.

The above represents Al Christie's comedies until September.

Mutt and Jeff Fly

In a statement issued this week, the Fox Film Corporation announces that one of the coming releases of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons will be entitled "An Ace and a Joker," and it will show Mutt and Jeff as aviators in France. The story of this latest picture of these two characters, which, it is said, has many novel photographic effects, opens with Mutt and Jeff as members of the Lafayette Escadrille.

Nine Fox Productions Now in Work

Reports from the William Fox studios in the East and on the Pacific Coast show that nine productions are in work for release by the Fox Film Corporation.

"The She-Devil," being directed by J. Gordon Edwards at Hollywood, Cal., is nearing completion. Tom Mix and his company, under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, has just gone to Prescott, Ariz., to begin work on "The Two-Gun Man," and Gladys Brockwell is progressing with the picturization of "The Strange Woman." William Farnum has completed filming "The Rainbow Trail" and is resting before beginning his next picture.

In the East, Virginia Pearson is at work at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn on "The Queen of Hearts," a mystery play, and Peggy Hyland started this week on her latest play, "Marriages Are Made." Director Richard Stanton has begun on "Eyes of the Soul," a big all-star production, and another Fox company has started on "Why I Would Not Marry," which is described as the life story of the most beautiful woman in the world. Jane and Katherine Lee, under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom, a new Fox director, are at work at the Victor studio on "Go Get 'Em." George Walsh has also just begun work on a new and as yet unnamed play under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh.

Farnum Completes Zane Grey Production

William Farnum has completed the filming of "The Rainbow Trail," the big William Fox picture taken from Zane Grey's novel of the same name. The film has been cut and assembled and will be shipped to New York shortly for inspection by William Fox.

The Grand Canyon of Arizona will be well advertised in this picture, as will also a large part of Southern California. Mr. Farnum, his director, Frank Lloyd, and twenty-four other members of the Farnum company spent a week 3,000 feet down in the Grand Canyon making scenes. This photoplay is said to be a tremendously powerful film. It is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," another Zane Grey book also picturized by Mr. Farnum. Both productions will be among the early William Fox Standard Picture releases of the coming season.

"Eight Bells" First Shown in Norwich

The famous comedy stand-by of the theatre, "Eight Bells," will have a pre-release at Norwich, Conn., the home of the Byrne Brothers, the famous family of actors and acrobats who have all their lives been identified with this bread-winner. Out of compliment to Mr. John Byrne, the eldest of "Brothers Byrne," Norwich is to have the distinction of first seeing it on the screen prior to its general release on World program. Four generations of the family will be present.

My First Garson Production

By Blanche Sweet

THE motion picture public has not heard a great deal concerning the activities of Blanche Sweet for the past year owing to the fact that she has not been actively engaged in work before the camera. But they are going to hear from her in a very short time and in a manner that will place this little blonde beauty in a brighter light than ever before.

Only last week Harry I. Garson arrived in New York with a print of Miss Sweet's first picture under his management, "The Hushed Hour." Following the completion of this production Miss Sweet came on to New York to make preparations for her next production under Mr. Garson's management. It will be an adaptation from one of the popular novels.

Some idea of the impression Miss Sweet's work in "The Hushed Hour" made on a certain buyer who saw the picture can be obtained when it is said that after the showing Mr. Garson was offered $100,000 for the rights to the picture. It hasn't been given a public or trade showing as yet, but from reports received from the few who have seen it it is safe to assume that Miss Sweet has not lost one iota of her skill in interpreting before the camera.

During Miss Sweet's stay in New York a representative of the NEWS interviewed her at the Great Northern Hotel. The first words that she uttered after the introduction were, "I am more than glad to be once again before the public and satisfied that Mr. Garson has given me a vehicle in "The Hushed Hour" that will eclipse anything that I have ever done for the screen. During its production we had ideal conditions and I am sure that the public will enjoy every foot of my first picture under Mr. Garson's management."

"It has been several months since my last appearance on the screen," Miss Sweet continued, "and during this time I have been a regular patron of the 'movies.' I had two reasons for attending the theatre regularly. First of all I thoroughly enjoy a good picture and secondly I can think of no better way to get the correct angle on the likes and dislikes of the public than to sit in a theatre and note the manner in which the various patrons accept this or that photodramatic offering.

"As the result of my experience I have learned a good deal concerning 'what is what' in the 'movies'—that is, what the American public likes and what it dislikes. There is seldom a picture that I have seen that can be termed a picture that the public dislikes. I hardly think there is a picture exhibited that is disliked. It is better to say that there are certain ones that are not liked. In other words, there are pictures which the public enthuse over and others that merely call for attention because there is nothing else to attract the attention at the time.

"I honestly believe that I have gained information through this channel that is going to and has helped me wonderfully in the portrayal of my parts on the screen. The public like comedy—light comedy. This is one of the many things I learned during my trips to the theatre. I do not mean to leave the impression that previous to this time I had never gone to the theatre, but I do mean to imply that I had never gone to the theatre for the purpose of psychological study. The public like pathos—something that touches the finer senses. They do not like to be depressed with the offensive or the extremely pathetic, but they do like to find a contrasting note here and there. All should not be sunshine, nor should all be pathos. A mixture of the two with dramatic strength in the plot—this is the combination that calls for the attention of an American audience and this is the combination that make a picture a big picture in the eyes of the public.

"In 'The Hushed Hour' I tried to bring out all these characteristics. I tried to put my soul into my work and it was all inspired by the study I had made of the public's likes and dislikes. The best director in the world cannot bring out these points unless the actress or actor he is directing feels the emotions he or she is attempting to portray. And unless he or she has made a study of the cause and effect of these emotions and the impressions they leave on a number of people sitting in a theatre viewing a picture he or she cannot give the best that is in him or her.

"For the reason given above, I am firmly convinced that my work in 'The Hushed Hour' presents my best since acting before the camera. I was given a most interesting story to begin with and an excellent cast in support. My heart and soul was in my work. I felt the emotions that I was called upon to express. In short, I lived the part.

"I am going to start on my second production under Mr. Garson's management on my return to the Coast, and I feel that my many friends will feel as I do—that the time I was off the screen was not spent in vain, or did it work to my disadvantage. On the contrary, they have greatly profited by my absence because they will see better pictures and more sincere acting."

Fox Army Man Chooses Victory Title

An interesting sidelight to the announcement by the Fox Film Corporation of Victory Pictures as an important part of its program next year is the statement that George Dembow, formerly the manager of the Fox branch in Philadelphia, chose the name of the new series just before enlisting in the army.

Mr. Denbow, who was one of the youngest branch managers in the Fox organization—being only twenty-three years old—had wound up his affairs and prepared to go into the army just before attending the annual Fox convention in this city a little while ago. Various names for the new series had been submitted to Mr. Fox by various persons, but at the convention Mr. Fox announced that the name Victory Pictures had been finally decided upon.

Sherry's Releases Commended

Keeney Productions and First Doris Kenyon Picture, First of William L. Sherry Releases, Meet with Success

THE release date of the second of the Frank A. Keeney productions, "Out of the Night," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, has been postponed from August 4 to August 11 to enable Western exhibitors to give it initial showings at the same time as the showings in the East. All the Keeney pictures are being distributed through the William L. Sherry Service. Those who have seen "Out of the Night" say that it is high class in every particular.

Reports from "A Romance of the Underworld," the first of the Keeney pictures, show that it is doing a big business everywhere.

A. L. Harsten of the Regun theatre, New York, wrote Mr. Sherry the following letter in praise of his first Keeney release:

"I feel that I should write you relative to the success I had with 'A Romance of the Underworld,' which I played on July 25 and 26. These were two of the hottest days we have had this summer and in spite of this they proved the two best-paying days of the season. The audience was highly pleased with the production and spoke very well of the star and the story."

McMahan and Jackson, managers of the Lyric and Gift theatres of Cincinnati, wrote:

"We do not hesitate to write you this letter advising you that 'A Romance of the Underworld' played to a big business at the Lyric. We stood them up all day and it was one of the best Sundays we have had this season. The picture continues to do a big business. We can personally recommend 'A Romance of the Underworld' as being very well done, with an excellent story and cast."

Reports received by Mr. Sherry from "The Street of Seven Stars," which he is distributing for De Luxe Pictures, Inc., indicate that it is having success. The story ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and is published in book form, more than 250,000 copies having been sold. The author of the original story, Mary Roberts Rinehart, is also the author of the photoplay.

Among the cities in which "The Street of Seven Stars" has been shown is Pittsburg. There in the exclusive East Liberty district it played to capacity for a week. Among the theatres which took it for the entire week of August 4 was the Symphony, New York.

Krouse Preparing Music Score for "Mickey"

Productions announces that Mr. Krouse will prepare for the first time in the history of photoplay music synchronization, in addition to the full orchestration, a complete piano score of the music for the photoplay, so that the smaller theatres throughout the country that do not have an orchestra will be in position to give their patrons the entire musical arrangement with the piano or other instruments.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, which company will handle the distribution of the foreign territory to this serial, says that work on the production is progressing rapidly. Joseph A. Golden is president of the Western Photoplays Company, with offices in the Longacre Building.

Brady's Second, "Little Women"

Screen Version of Louise M. Olcott's Popular Novel, On Screen— "Way Down East" Next

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S second independent production is a screen version of Louisa M. Olcott's "Little Women," a novel as famous as "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The characters of Jo, Amy, Mag and Beth, their joys and woes and the gallanteries of Laurie are known to every girl in America and in England. "Little Women" was produced on the stage by Mr. Brady at the Playhouse some years ago and it ran for eighteen consecutive months and for many seasons was a successful road attraction.

Harley Knoles, who directed the production, took all of the exterior scenes about the Louise M. Olcott estate, at Concord, Mass. The house that the authoress lived in has been preserved by the State of Massachusetts as a memorial. Every room in the house has been used as scenes in Mr. Brady's production of "Little Women." The story is supposed to be a true account of the actual living conditions of the authoress and her family. The famous Plumfield Orchard is seen in this production. With the exception of a few interior scenes, all of the scenes in the picture were taken in or about the house in which the authoress lived and died. The final scenes for this production are now being taken and it is expected that the picture will be ready for a trade showing soon.

Following the completion of "Little Women" Mr. Brady will commence on his third independent production, a screen version of "Way Down East," one of the most popular stage plays of the present generation. Nineteen consecutive years on the stage is its record. These Brady productions will be distributed on the independent market.

Sherman Activities Enliven Times Square

There are signs of something doing around the Longacre Building in New York City. The noise of carpenters' hammers seems to indicate that somebody is starting the ball rolling for the fall and winter season in the feature film trade. Investigation discloses the advent in New York of a new feature producing organization to be known as the Sherman Productions, Inc. This firm is headed by Harry A. Sherman, long known as a circuit exhibitor, exchange man and state rights purchaser in wholesale lots.

Recently Mr. Sherman disposed of all his other interests, and in company with several capitalists he has gone into the feature producing business in a decidedly pretentious way. On July 21 he arrived in New York from Los Angeles with is first big production, and was accompanied by a staff of lieutenants who are surely full of the old "pep." The quiet but forceful activity around the new offices in the Longacre Building indicates that something good has hit the town.

Miss Donaldson Cast

Lyn Donaldson, a friend of Doris Kenyon since childhood, has an important part in Miss Kenyon's second De Luxe picture, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," adapted from the work of Louis Joseph Vance.

Gaumont Serial Eliciting Many Inquiries

"THE HAND OF VENGEANCE," Gaumont's twenty-reel serial, in ten episodes, is eliciting inquiries from exhibitors in all parts of the country, according to reports from the Gaumont office in Flushing. "The Hand of Vengeance" is offered on the independent market.

In the beginning of the story the hero, like Monte Cristo, is wealthy beyond the dreams of avarice. A friend defrauds him of his entire fortune, and leaves him dying on the desert. Returning, a Nemesis from the dead, the former trusting friend becomes a relentless avenger. Impatient of legal delays, he uses his own ingenious methods to recover his stolen fortune and thus steps beyond the circumscribed limits of the law. A famous crime investigator attempts to capture him—and then begins the many battles of wits between two brainy men. After recovering his property in spite of the opposition of the famous detective and his assistants, the hero becomes an avenger of wrongs for others who have been oppressed.

"The serial is different," said an official of Gaumont, "because, unlike most others, it does not rely on fights, wild beasts, unreal situations, or improbabilities, to make it interesting. The story and characters are intensely human. The situations are all real, and clean—there are no 'sex situations.' And yet, the claim is justly made that this photo-serial is startling, sensational and a real 'thriller.' There is something doing in every foot. The suspense begins in the first few feet, and piles up until the smashing climax at the end of the twentieth reel. The story is also 'different' because of the ingenious dexterity with which the hero extricates himself from the many dangers from which it seems impossible for him to escape."

More than half the domestic territory has been sold.

Otts Forms Company

William J. Otts, who has for a number of years been identified with the William Burns Detective Agency in the feretting out of the most sensational crimes of the country, has organized a producing company which is to film two or three subjects based upon mysteries solved by Otts and others of his staff. Production work will be carried on in Los Angeles, and arrangements have already been made for a studio, players, and stories are now being prepared for the director.

"Stolen Orders" Opens for Week in Boston

"Stolen Orders," William A. Brady's screen version of the Drury Lane melodrama, featuring Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and June Elvidge, has duplicated in Boston the success it achieved in New York and Washington, according to reports from that city.

The picture commenced a limited engagement at the Shubert theatre last Monday before a crowded house. Among those who attended the first performance in Boston was Admiral Spencer S. Wood, commanding the First Naval District. The engagement was extended over Sunday. Contracts held by "Maytime" to open its Boston engagement at the Shubert the following day made a further extension of the "Stolen Orders" impossible.

Perret Celebrates Completion of Picture

Prominent French and American personalities attended an informal dinner and musicale given last week at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Leonce Perret. The occasion marked the completion of the official French propaganda picture "Lafayette, We Come!" (Pershing, '17), produced under the supervision and direction of Mr. Perret.

Those present were Captain Robert Warwick, Denys Amiel, editor of the New France; Mrs. Amiel, M. De Journo, Captain Firmin Tristan, Dolores Cassinelli, who with E. K. Lincoln enacted the principal roles in "Lafayette, We Come!" Francis Nelson and Adolphe Osso, American representative of the French Society of Authors and Composers.

Corrected Statement

The following notice speaks for itself:

"I notice under your column 'Releases in the Independent Field' that two of my productions, 'Souls Redeemed' and 'Weavers of Life,' are listed under the head of the Arrow Film Corporation. Neither of these pictures are now being handled by the Arrow Film Corporation, so I would like you to have both of them removed from that list. This is probably only an oversight on the part of the Arrow Film, so if you will correct the same it would be appreciated.

Blackton Extends Contract with Rawlinson

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has extended his contract with Herbert Rawlinson, whom he first signed to play the featured male lead in "The Common Cause," and now plans to feature him in several other Blackton specials to follow this propaganda picture, which he is producing under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and in which Sylvia Breamer is the other featured player in an all-star cast.

Maigne's "Fish Story" on Educational

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION announces as releases for week of Aug. 29 to its regular houses Charles Maigne's "The Quest of the Big 'Un," and the International cartoon comedy, "Judge Rummy's Off Day," the latter being released the preceding week. Patrons of the Rivoli theatre, who saw "The Quest of the Big 'Un," pronounced it one of the most entertaining educationals of the hot weather season. Charles Maigne, its author-director, went to the Catskills and Esopus Creek for the mise-en-scene and selected as dramatis personae a big fish, a patient angler and a girl. The granddaddy of all the Esopus trout is the real hero of the fifteen-minute picture. How he evaded capture for generation after generation; how the angler determined to get him and what lures he set; how the "big 'un" resisted and fought; how he was ultimately landed, and then the unexpected climax of his getting away—all this is charmingly told and picturized by Mr. Maigne.

With this release comes a new cartoon comedy series to take turns with the Happy Hooligans and the famous kids. The title of the new release is the Silk Hat Harry Live Stock Company, the first number of which is "Judge Rummy's Off Day." Tad originated Judge Rummy, but Gregory La Cava is responsible for his perpetuation on the screen.

The genial magistrate, in the first picture of the series, gets mixed up with a hula-hula dancer and is chased by Mrs. Rummy. The sudden adjournment of the Court ends a story filled with laugh-provoking incidents and much comic by-play of the bailiff, the Court stenographer, the prisoner and others concerned.

President Charles A. Dean of the Educational Distributing Corporation, who has already added Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit to the list of Educational exchanges, and who is now developing extensive plans for the distribution of the parent company's product, promises important announcements concerning the development of this new organization, soon.

Ruppert to Serve Independent and Program

JACOB RUPPERT, president of the Film Clearing House, announces that his concern will serve the independent producers as well as the program producers.

"I have been asked," he said, "whether the Clearing House proposes to distribute for exchange systems and program producers solely, or whether independent producers may be served too. The question arises for the reason that exchanges and program producers have sales staffs that can be easily swtiched into our shipping centers, whereas it is known that the independent producer has no such men. How, then, is the Clearing House to take care of the individual with the lone negative?

"A number of such independents are arranging to take care of themselves. Their method, in brief, will be to 'club' together on a staff of special representatives, while we do the physical distributing. These representatives will be men trained in feature selling. They will have at their finger tips full information on what the film industry today is pleased to call 'merchandizing.' They will be in no way connected with the Clearing House—just with the club of independent producers.

"We are making progress with the exchanges who see in us a chance to trim over-head. Our call for distributing economy is being heard. It is patent to everyone that we can handle physical film distribution at a minimum of expense, and that concentrated sales work by the client added to this makes for larger bookings at a lessened cost."

Release Date Postponed

William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, which is distributing the pictures made by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., announces that her second production, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," will be released on Aug. 18 instead of Aug. 11, as originally announced. The postponement is due to the difficulty of getting films and accessories to the western exhibitors in time for them to show the picture simultaneously with the exhibitors in the East. Those who have seen the picture speak of it in terms of the highest praise.

King Starts Houdini Serial

Rolfe Productions, Inc., Serial Starring Harry Houdini, Started at Yonkers Studio — Burton King Directing

WORK on Rolfe Productions, Inc., new serial, starring Harry Houdini, of vaudeville fame, is progressing rapidly, according to announcement coming from the Rolfe offices. The new serial was written by Arthur B. Reeve, popular writer of mystery stories. Mr. Houdini, who worked in collaboration with Mr. Reeve in his work, states that he has originated a new type of screen villain, known as the scientific villain. "This novelty," said Mr. Houdini, "has opened up a new thought in serials, and the plot which Mr. Reeves has woven around the automaton and myself, is full of thrills and unusual situations."

Harry Gorssman, vice president and general manager, Rolfe Productions, Inc., states that he is in receipt of numerous inquiries from all parts of the country, asking for information on the releasing arrangements for this serial. "In all my experience," he said, "I have never seen anything take hold of the exhibitor as our announcement. I did not think that the trade papers had such a far-reaching influence or did I believe it possible for an announcement to travel so far as ours did in the trade papers.

"In a great many instances the exhibitors have asked for time and booking without even inquiring the price, but the majority of the letters and telegrams have been about release dates and distribution."

Burton King is now engaged in the first episodes of the Houdini serial at the studio in Yonkers. Ruth Stonehouse and Margaret Marsh have the principal feminine roles opposite Mr. Houdini.

Ten, Twenty and Thirty, Hall's Prices

Frank G. Hall, who last week announced the organization of the Producers' Distributing Corporation, is now located in the Leavitt Building, New York City, ready for business.

The feature of the Mr. Hall's plan embodied in the new organization is its fixed policy pledging to exhibitors twelve big special productions for the coming year at ten, twenty and thirty dollars per day, regardless of production. Mr. Hall bases the soundness of this policy on facts collected during his long experience as an exhibitor controlling a number of large theatres in New Jersey, as president of independent exchanges booking state right subjects, and an operator in the handling of special pictures for which the highest rental prices are demanded.

"I can see no reason why this same quality of special attractions cannot be offered at fixed prices," he said, "open to all, regardless of higher bids by opposition theatres. Franchises for the twelve pictures, granted in order of application, determine the theatres having first call and a two picture cancellation clause protects franchise holders from productions not coming up to their expectations. Thus the Producers' Distributing Corporation seeks to establish a policy which will promote business relations of an ideal character."

A sales force under the leadership of Lynn S. Card is now at work.

Exhibitors in Rumpus with Dressler

The Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles has favored us with a set of resolutions adopted after Marie Dressler failed to appear at a recent meeting after she is alleged to have accepted an invitation to do so.

It is a long-standing custom of the Theatre Owners' Association to have stars from the various studios in attendance at the bi-weekly luncheons. Miss Dressler is claimed to have accepted an invitation to attend a luncheon on July 24 as one of a gathering including Governor Stephens, William Cowan, head of the California Four-Minute Men, Judge Gavin Craig and Judge W. H. Thomas.

The grievance of the association arises from the fact that Miss Dressler is claimed not to have notified the organization of her inability to attend until half-past eleven on the date set and to have said it was a "damned imposition" for the association to have insisted on her appearance.

Mary Pickford Completes New Feature

Mary Pickford has completed "Johanna Enlists," her next Artcraft offering, and William D. Taylor, the director, has gone to England to enter an officer's training camp. This picture is military in character and the 143d Regiment of Field Artillery from Camp Kearny plays an important part in the big scenes. This is not a battle picture but has to do with certain incidents, while a body of United States troopers are on their way to a cantonment. It is asserted that "Our Mary" has a role which for delightful character is unexampled in any of her former productions.

The scenario of "Johanna Enlists" was written by Francis Marion and is an adaptation of Rupert Hughes' novel, "The Mobilization of Johanna."

Douglas MacLean is leading man and there is a fine supporting cast, according to the announcement from Hollywood.

Walsh Spent Many Weeks Filming "Prussian Cur"

An idea of the thoroughness of R. A. Walsh, the William Fox director, may be obtained from the statement from the Fox Film Corporation that Mr. Walsh spent twenty-seven weeks filming "The Prussian Cur," the tremendous production which exposes the secret workings of the Prussian spy system in this country.

When Mr. Walsh began on the production he was faced with a stupendous job. He had to duplicate the United States Senate chamber, the German Embassy at Washington, the Kaiser's palace at Potsdam, and other historical settings that require not only extensive preparations, but also the greatest fidelity to detail. How closely were facts adhered to in this production is shown by the fact that the real furniture which was used in Ambassador von Bernstorff's office in the German Embassy at Washington is used for a setting in "The Prussian Cur."

The results please the public, the operator and the management.

You can apply this lamp to your present equipment by purchasing a suitable lamp-and-lens housing and a compensator to convert alternating current to direct current.

When buying a new machine look for the machine equipped with this lamp. It costs no more. Send for Bulletin No. 43607 containing full information. Get in touch with our nearest distributor. Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Company, Harrison, N. J.

Cleveland Operators Active

FROM Cleveland we receive word of an aggressive action on the part of the operators to force further salary advances. This new scale is scheduled to go into effect on August 19.

There is no doubt that the scale of living has gone up and that a man who was just able to scrape along last year is on the rocks this year. The question is where the fault lies. We know of operators today who are getting far more money each week than the new Cleveland schedule calls for, but they earn it. They are in the big houses. They are not afraid of work. They put each show in proper shape before the curtain goes up. They take out misframes, poor patches, in fact work every minute for the house, in which they take a personal pride.

On the other hand we know of a lot of worthless operators—vandals—and not worth the money they are getting by a long shot. These are the men who hide behind a set of regulations such as those given below and get the additional money, whereas they should be eliminated entirely and sent to another industry where brains, honesty, industry and loyalty mean nothing. The size of the theatre and the admission price also enter into the consideration, for the small house with low admission price should not be expected to pay as much as the big house with the larger rate of admission.

The following is the ruling with comment as we received it from Cleveland on August 1, 1918:

Cleveland, Ohio, July 31, 1918.

"The motion picture operators of Ohio are demanding a raise in wages from 62½c an hour, to 80c an hour. The announcement to this effect came as a great surprise to the exhibitors last Saturday, as there has been no previous notification of such action on the part of the operators. Their demands as set forth are:

Section 1

"All night shows within our jurisdiction shall pay at the rate of $25.60 per week, four hours to constitute a night's work. The aforesaid amount shall include one matinee a week. Should the said matinee run continuous, the operator shall receive $1.00 for the supper hour. All extra matinees shall be paid for at the rate of $3.50 each, and not to exceed four hours.

Section 2.

"All theatres running ten hours per day shall employ two operators each working 5 hours per day, and each to receive $28.00 per week.

Section 3.

"All theatres running 12 hours per day shall employ two operators, each working 6 hours per day, and each to receive $33.60 per week.

Section 4.

"All theatres running 14 hours per day shall employ two operators each working 7 hours per day, and each to receive $39.20 per week.

Section 5.

"All theatres running 16 hours per day shall employ two operators each working 8 hours per day, and each to receive $44.80 per week.

Section 6.

"All theatres running a daily matinee and evening performance, the matinees not to exceed four, and the evening performance not to exceed four hours, shall pay $44.80 per week.

Section 7.

"Special entertainments shall be paid for at the rate of $5.00 each and shall not exceed four hours; $3.00 shall be charged for setting up machine, and $3.00 for taking down.

Section 8.

"Overtime in connection with down-town theatres shall be computed by adding the total overtime per week, and charged pro rata.

Section 9.

"Overtime in connection with all other theatres shall be charged for at rate of $1.00 per hour or fraction thereof.

Section 10.

"All operators engaged for road work shall receive the wage scale as required by the International Alliance at the time he is engaged.

Section 11.

"Operators shall not be permitted to carry films, banners, posters, etc., to or from theatre or film exchange, either with or without compensation.

Section 12.

"Eastern standard time shall be recognized in accordance with this scale.

(Signed)

"LOCAL 160, I. A. T. S. E.

"Just what grounds the operators base their demands on at this time is not known, but the exhibitors feel that they are not being squarely dealt with by the operators, in lieu of the fact that it was due to the influence and assistance of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America that the labor of operating a motion picture machine was placed among the essentials.

"Another point to which the local Exhibitors' League takes exception is the fact that in distributing its notification of a revised and higher wage scale, the operators' union completely ignored the existence of the League as a body, and is seeking to deal with the exhibitors separately and independently. This they cannot do, however. Several exhibitors testified at the League meeting this week that they had been approached by members of the operators' union, but they had replied that they had to refer all such matters to the League.

"Inasmuch as the operators have refused to recognize the League as the official exhibitor body through which to reach the individual exhibitors, it was resolved that the officers of the League call upon the officers of the operators' union, Local 160, and demand an explanation of their actions. If this grievance is satisfactorily adjusted, then the League will enter into negotiations with the operators to determine upon a just and equitable scale of wages.

"It was said at the League meeting that in the opinion of the men present, the operators are not an essential factor to the motion picture industry. The industry itself is an essential, but the exhibitors of Cleveland said that in many instances they would operate their own machines in preference to paying such an enormous increase to the operators. Others are in favor of using girl operators.

"'And if we are forced to use our trump card,' said Sam Bullock, 'the same exhibitor influence that succeeded in keeping the operators at work, instead of digging trenches, can also get that favorable decision revoked, and have the operators classed among the non-essentials, where they were, and where they would have stayed had it not been for the help they got from the exhibitors.'

"The new wage scale is to go into effect on the 19th of August, less than a year after their last raise."

This brings up the old suggestion which we have made before on this page namely the grading of all operators into three or more classes according to their ability, with a different scale of payment for each. Then the exhibitor would know just what he might expect before he applied to the Union for a man. This must be done within the Union itself as grading from the outside could never be done satisfactorily.

We want to again state that we are against women in the projection room under any circumstances. It is not their place.

E. K. GILLETT.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Budget of Questions

Mr. Wesley Trout, Quality theatre, Elk City, Okla., submits the following questions:

(1.) Given a 17-foot picture at 100-foot throw, what is the approximate percentage of light lost between the front condenser and the screen? How do you figure this?

(2.) What is the supposed advantage of the meniscus bi-convex combination over the plano-convex?

(3.) What is a 6 to 1 intermittent? How do you figure if it is that, by the gears? What is the relative advantage of a 5½ to 1 intermittent over a 4 to 1?

(4.) What is the relative advantage of an inch and a half spot over a two-inch spot? What is the light intensity of the 1½-inch spot and the 2-inch spot?

(5.) How do you match up a lens system?

(7.) What size booth for two machines?

In reply: (1.) In determining the efficiency of a projector optical system, i. e., the percentage of the flux emanating from the light-source which reaches the screen, it is by no means sufficient to start at the front condenser, as suggested by the correspondent's question; it is necessary to start at the source itself. Each differently equipped projector will show a different light intensity at the screen, but if all the data concerning the type and brightness of the source, the number and type of the components of the optical system, the type of projector shutter, etc., are known, then the approximate efficiency may be calculated, and we supply the following example of the way the calculation is carried out so that any reader may apply the same to his own conditions.

We first take the intensity of the light source (arc crater, for instance) as 100 per cent, of which only about 33 per cent is picked up by the condenser system. This assumes the favorable condition where a D. C. arc is used, so that the flux from the crater may be considered as only being distributed over a hemisphere. In the case of the A. C. arc, where the light radiates backwards practically as much as forwards it is apparent that the amount picked up by the condenser system would be much less. Accepting 33 per cent, however, as being picked up by the condenser system in our very favorably hypothetical case, this is then subject, in passing through the condenser system, to 16 per cent reflection-loss (4 per cent at each of the four glass-to-air surfaces) plus an absorption loss of 9 per cent (absorption loss being reckoned as 6 per cent per inch, and assuming the condenser combination to have the very moderate axial thickness of 1½ inch), or in other words the light falling upon the condensers is subjected to a reduction of 25 per cent in passing through them, thus only 25.75 per cent passes on to the film picture being projected. While there is a great variation in the density of film images, some being very opaque, while others are very transparent, we are justified after taking the average of many measurements, in assuming that in general the beam from the condensers will be reduced 50 per cent in intensity, in passing through the film (due to opacity of the image deposits, absorption by the celluloid and the scattering of the light by the silver particles of the emulsion), so that only 12.85 per cent, approximately, is sent on the projection objective. In its passage through the objective the light is further reduced some 25 per cent in intensity (4 per cent reflection loss at each of the six glass-to-air surfaces), therefore but 9.65 per cent emerges from the objective, and this is reduced a further 50 per cent by the revolving-shutter, leaving only 4.80 per cent of the original amount emanating from the source available for the illumination of the screen-picture. Other factors such as the distance to the screen and the effective aperture of the objective also enter, and it is thus seen that only a very rough approximation to the true screen intensity may be arrived at by the above method, although it should be pointed out that the above assumptions represent very favorable conditions, and the efficiency of the average projector, as regards screen illumination, is generally much less than the amount arrived at above. The only intelligent method of comparing screen illuminations and of measuring them with accuracy, is by photometric means, and foot-candle meters are now available at a moderate cost which permit this to be readily accomplished.

We do not know of any 5½ to 1 intermittent movement, although a movement with this ratio is a possibility. The advantage of a movement with a high ratio is that the shutter blades may be narrower and still cover the objective during the movement of the film, although this is not necessarily an improvement, for unless the shutter blades are of favorable size and arrangement the flicker may be considerable. Some types of fast intermittents are also very severe on the film.

(4.) The advantage of a 1½-inch spot over a 2-inch spot is that more of the available illumination will be able to pass through the objective to the screen, and the only justification for the use of an unduly large spot is the fact that in favorable conditions of adjustment of the condenser system the light will be more uniformly white at the center of the spot than at its edges. Assuming all other conditions to be the same in both cases the intensity of the 1½-inch spot as compared to the 2-inch spot would be represented by $\frac{\textit{area 1.5-inch spot}}{\textit{area 2.0-inch spot}}$, the respective areas being obtained by squaring the diameter of the spot and multiplying it by .7854. An exact result would not be obtained in this way, as the spot generally resembles the contour of the arc-crater, instead of being perfectly round, but the result might be a fair approximation.

(5.) The optical system of a cine projector should be so selected and adjusted (not matched up) as to produce the most intense, even and colorless screen illumination possible with the available light source and optical components. Tabulated data covering this subject is of little value, since the condenser lenses of commerce are not exactly of the focal lengths commonly specified, so it is best, with the condensers at present available, to aim for a good result on the screen combined with an efficient utilization of the light-source. The primordial requirement in adjusting the projector optical system is that all components (including the arc crater and the machine aperture) be co-axial, i. e., in perfect alignment. If the light source is to be utilized in the most efficient manner the condition set forth in our article on "The Regulation of the Rays" (NEWS of Feb. 9, 1918, pages 902-3) must also be complied with.

(6.) To determine the required capacity of a generator for lighting service it is necessary to know the number of lamps of any kind which will be used, and the number of amperes which each consumes, and the voltage at which they are operated. Then the product of the voltage times the total amperage consumed by all the lamps will give the wattage which must be furnished by the generator. It is advisable to secure a generator with a capacity somewhat in excess of the actual requirements. The capacity of generators is rated in kilo-watts (K. W.), i. e., thousands of watts.

(7.) Within reasonable limits an operating-room cannot be made too large, and such rooms are seldom large enough in the average theatre, but we would recommend that an operating-room for two projectors be not less than 8 feet high, 18 feet wide, and 10 feet from front wall to back wall. If additional projecting apparatus, such as a spot-light or a separate stereopticon, is to be installed, the width of the room should of course be increased.

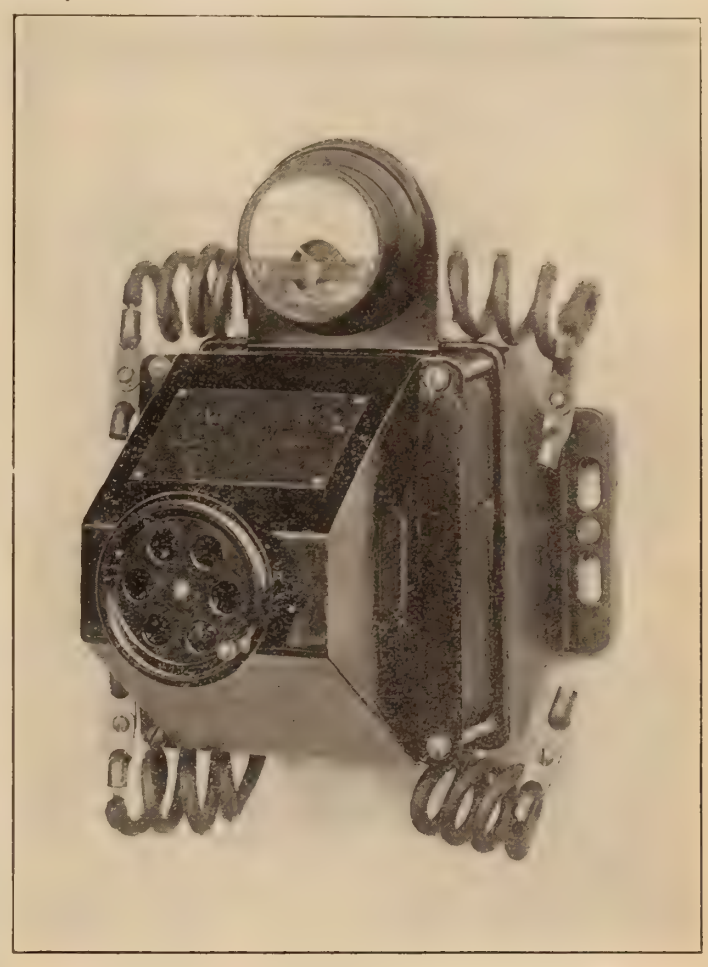
using 32 volts D. C. is used for projection, and Triangle, Universal and Pathe pictures are shown. According to Mr. Johnston, the Sammies are "just as crazy about the movies" "over there" as they were "over here" and it does not require any lithographs or heralds to develop capacity business either. Private Johnson was formerly an operator, slide and film manufacturer and electrician in St. Paul, Minn., and has been with the American aero service as cinematographer since January. He states that the moving pictures do a great deal to cheer up the men who have become homesick and who are tired from intensive training and he adds that the films provide about the only source of entertainment that wounded soldiers can get.

New Compensarc for Mazda Projection

TO give the close regulation of current essential for Mazda Motion Picture Projection Lamps, the General Electric Company has developed a new Compensarc, the Type I, Form B. With the new compensarc protection is afforded against over-current, and regulation is obtained to within 1/10 ampere.



G. E. Type I Compensarc for Mazda Projector Lamps

It operates on the reactance principle and is furnished for standard A. C. voltages and frequencies in ratings of 20 and 30 amperes, corresponding to the Mazda Lamps now on the market for projection purposes. The Compensarc may be installed conveniently for the operator who can watch the ammeter and control the current by the hand wheel shown in the illustration.

This reactance Compensarc is made up a two coil auto-transformer stacked with standard transformer punchings within a raw hide housing, the complete wiring of which forms the line side, with the lamp terminals tapped across one coil. The coils are stacked so that room is left between them for an iron leakage plug in each side of the magnetic circuit. Turning a hand wheel on the shaft of the iron plug moves it in and out between the two coils, giving a very close adjustment for the lamp and maximum reactance is obtained when the plug is all the way in. The only noise is a slight humming when the plugs are being withdrawn; this ceases when they come to rest.

The net weight of the Type I compensarc is 32 pounds and its overall dimensions are: 83/16 inches wide; 11 7/16 inches high and 10⅞ inches deep.

A New One

Mr. Clarence E. Wise, Blackwell, Okla., reports the following strange condition:

"I had a double exposure in one of my machines for about three weeks, some time ago, but it finally disappeared. Can you tell me its cause and how to remedy it?

In reply: This condition is altogether new to us, and we are at loss to know just what effect the correspondent terms a "double exposure" as applied to the projected motion picture. He must therefore write again and describe fully what was the appearance on the screen when the condition prevailed which he has reported.

Perhaps the correspondent had in mind the appearance of a photographic double exposure due to accidentally exposing twice with the camera in slightly different positions, and perhaps he means to say that his screen picture had a similar appearance. This would be a possibility if a piece of highly reflecting material (such as metal or glass) had happened to be situated by accident between the aperture and the objective of his projector, and inclined at such an angle as to pick up the illuminated film image at the aperture and reflect it upon the back element of the objective. Such a reflected image would be picked up by the objective and projected to the screen with more or less distinctness, and inasmuch as it was received by the objective at an angle it would not, of course, be exactly superimposed upon the directly projected image.

Supposing that some sort of a reflecting surface had become introduced between the aperture and the objective, causing the conjectured effect, this effect would naturally disappear when the reflctor was removed, or when its position was so altered that it no longer threw a reflected image upon the objective.

The effect noted by the correspondent may be of altogether different origin and appearance, then what we have assumed above, but not until he has fully described the same can we supply the exact answer. Our remarks will, however, emphasize the importance of applying a dead-black finish to the interior of the projector mechanism frame, between the aperture and the objective, as this will result in more brilliant screen pictures, due to the reduction of the amount of extraneous light which falls upon the rear component of the objective. With some machines in which the aperture plate presents its front surface to the objective it is also well to paint this surface dead black, as it is well known that a considerable amount of light is reflected back from the objective to the surface of the aperture plate, and is then reflected forward to the objective again as a haze of scattered light which is spread over the entire projected picture, thus robbing the screen result of some degree of contrast.

Youthful Operator Has Right Idea

Mr. O. L. Davis, Cleveland, Tenn., writes as follows:

"I am a boy 18 years of age. I am Chief Operator of the Bohemia theatre of this place. The operator whom I succeeded was affected by the "work or fight law." I have been operating about two years as assistant and relief operator. Please don't think that I am bragging when I say that I can operate, as I am not expert enough to qualify for unforeseen events. Thus far I have been getting along fine and I have had hardly any trouble.

"My object in writing you is to ask for instructions. If you have literature to sell or give away, please let me know. Also give particulars as to how to qualify as a member of the Natoinal Anti-Misframe League.

"In the July 27th number of the Motion Picture News you had a full page ad which was headed Equipment Seervice.

"If the statements there apply to any one, it is me. For I am anxious to better myself. I want advancement. I want to show more ability."

Comment: In spite of the fact that our correspondent is still under age he appears to have laid the groundwork of a good training, for a person who is willing to learn and study should be able to become quite proficient in the course of two years' experience as an assistant and relief operator, and we have no doubt but what the writer of the above letter is a much better man to be entrusted with motion picture apparatus than are the product of the operator schools, even though such alleged operators may be over age.

With regard to instructions requested by the correspondent, the manner in which we assist the operators is by publishing answers to their questions, in the Projection Department, and by the publication of articles on the subjects which they advise us would prove of interest.

The advertisement in the July 27th issue may, therefore, be taken as an invitation to the correspondent, and to all other operators, to submit their questions to the Projection Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, where they will be answered, no matter how complex, so long as they have a direct bearing upon the various phases of motion picture projection.

It is the operators who, like the present correspondent, are not averse to study, and who are not afraid to ask questions, that become the leaders in their profession, and the Projection Department takes pleasure in supplying the information which will advance the operator's knowledge or enable him to surmount the difficulties which every operator experiences occasionally.

Our correspondent is advised that in order to become a member of the National Anti-Misframe League he must write us a letter agreeing to uphold the League's pledge, as published in the Projection Department, and must provide us with his name, home address, name and address of theatre, and theatre manager's name, upon receipt of which he will be enrolled as a member.

SILVERTIP

The Columbia-Silvertip Combination For Direct Current Projection

The "punch" is the picture's vital element. From the standpoint of the exhibitor, the projection of the picture on the screen so as to please the audience forms the most important part. Good projection is entirely dependent upon an efficient and reliable light source. The Columbia-Silvertip combination is standard for direct current projection, offering many advantages in the form of high current carrying capacity, pure white light, absolutely steady screen illumination, strong penetrating light, and a rugged flexible light source.

NOTE: The Columbia-Silvertip combination is for direct current only.

A New Method of Obtaining Dye Toned Images By the Use of Copper Ferrocyanide as a Mordant

By J. I. Crabtree

Communication No. 72 from the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company

[The patent rights to this method are being secured by the E. K. Co., but it may be freely used for toning Eastman motion picture film.]

ALTHOUGH numerous methods have been worked out for toning lantern slides and motion picture film by replacing the silver image either wholly or partially by a colored inorganic compound, owing to the limited number of colored inorganic compounds available, only a very incomplete range of tones can be obtained in this way.

It has long been considered that if the silver image could be converted into a compound capable of fixing or mordanting a dye in proportion to the density of the image, that this would be the ideal method of toning. Accordingly numerous experimenters have made a deliberate search for such mordants (See B. J. 1911, p. 607) and the first worker to evolve a practical process was Traube, who took advantage of the mordanting action of silver iodide for certain basic dyes and obtained dye images by first bleaching the silver image to silver iodide in a suitable bleaching bath, and then immersing the bleached and washed image in a solution of the dye. When producing dye images in this way, it is necessary either that the dye shall not be absorbed by the gelatine readily, or that it will easily wash out again in order that clear highlights may be obtained.

Owing to the relatively high opacity of a silver iodide image when produced in an emulsion of average grain size, the dye image obtained in the above manner exhibits very little color when projected, so that it is necessary to remove some of the iodide without removing the dye by fixing in a solution of hypo containing tannic acid and other salts, which render the dye insoluble. If all the iodide is removed in this way the residual dye image is usually too thin for projection, though by only partially fixing, tolerably good tones are obtained. The action of the hypo is, however, not proportional attaching the highlights more than the shadows, so that double tones are obtained.

In view of the above objections to the Traube process, experimenters have attempted to secure transparent tones directly without subsequent fixing, the most recent process being that of Miller (U. S. Patent 100,098), which consists in bleaching the silver image in a mixture of potassium iodide and iodine containing an excess of potassium iodide, with a view to producing a transparent modification of silver iodide capable of mordanting in the usual way.

The following experiments are the result of a systematic search by the author for mordants other than silver iodide which would give a transparent image on projection.

The Mordanting Action of Copper Ferrocyanide

As a result of numerous experiments it was found that an image containing copper ferrocyanide, obtained by toning in the usual copper toning bath, exerted a powerful mordanting action and was capable of producing excellent dye images.

The usual copper toning bath consists of a solution of copper ferricyanide dissolved in a suitable solvent such as a solution of an alkaline salt of citric, tartaric, or oxalic acid together with other salts. On immersing the silver image in such a bath the silver reacts with the copper ferricyanide and is converted to silver ferrocyanide, while copper ferrocyanide is formed simultaneously in combination with the image.

$$4\,Ag + 2\,Cu_3(Fe(CN)_6)2 = Ag_4Fe(CN)_6 + 3\,Cu_2Fe(CN)_6$$

On immersing this image in a solution of a suitable basic dye a composite image is obtained consisting of a mixture of silver, silver ferrocyanide, copper ferrocyanide, and the dye. The copper ferrocyanide may be removed from the toned image by treating with a solution of caustic soda when an image consisting of silver ferrocyanide and silver is left, and in turn the silver ferrocyanide may be removed with a 10 per cent solution of hypo, leaving an image of copper ferrocyanide with more or less silver. On immersing the separate copper and silver ferrocyanide images thus prepared in the dye bath after well washing, only the copper ferrocyanide was found to exert any appreciable mordanting action.

The method of procedure was to first tone the silver image in the copper toning bath, wash, and then immerse in the dye bath until the desired color was obtained. The nature of the tone was found to depend on the following factors:

The Nature of the Copper Toning Bath

The formula for this is given under "practical instructions."

Although many of the usual formulæ for copper toning will produce a dye image, it is necessary that the toned image should be as transparent as possible so as to eliminate the necessity of subsequent fixing. The formula appended gives very transparent tones.

Nature of the Positive to Be Toned

This should be free from hypo so as to remove any possibility of the image being reduced by the ferricyanide in the toning bath. When toning in the copper bath little or no intensification takes place, though as certain dyes such as methyl violet are very heavily mordanted, it is necessary to choose a positive somewhat thinner than the average according to the degree of intensification produced during dyeing. Full details are given under "practical instructions."

Time of Toning

The time of toning determines the proportion of copper ferrocyanide in the toned image, which reaches a maximum in from 10 to 15 minutes. If only pale tones are required the image is toned for only 2 or 3 minutes in the copper bath, while if a full tone is required the copper toning is carried to completion.

Time of Washing After Copper Toning

It is necessary to wash sufficiently long for the soluble copper salts in the toning bath to be removed, otherwise the dye would be mordanted on to the highlights and stain them. Usually 10 minutes is sufficient, though prolonged washing does no harm since the copper ferrocyanide is insoluble in pure water.

Nature of the Dyes Employed

In general, only basic dyes are mordanted, and only those which do not readily dye gelatine and which are mordanted by copper salts are suitable for toning by this method. The following dyes have been found satisfactory:

Tannin Heliotrope
Thioflavine
Victoria Green
Methyl Green
Methylene Blue

and the following dyes manufactured by the National Aniline & Chemical Co., Inc., New York City:

Safranine
Chrysoidine
Methyl Violet

Dyes manufactured by different makers differ somewhat in their behavior towards gelatine and towards mordants, so that it is necessary to make a preliminary trial with each new sample of dye.

Concentration of the Dye Bath

Only a very weak dye bath is necessary and this should not be stronger than 0.1 per cent. A stronger dye bath gives badly stained highlights, necessitating long washing to clear them, while with a weaker bath the dye is adsorbed very slowly or not at all.

The Effect of Adding Acid to the Dye Bath

The addition of acid to the dye bath has the effect of increasing the rate of dyeing in some cases and of decreasing it in others; in the case of the dyes given above the addition of acid appears to diminish the rate of absorption of the dye by the gelatine, so that by using acid, a stronger solution may be employed without the highlights being stained. If the concentration of the dye is increased to any great extent beyond the amount stated, stained highlights are obtained.

Time and Temperature of Dyeing

The amount of dye adsorbed by the image and therefore the strength of the tone varies with the time of dyeing, reaching a limit in from 5 to 10 minutes. The time of dyeing is also slightly affected by changes of temperature, though slight changes are of no moment.

Time of Washing After Dyeing

This varies according to the degree of staining of the highlights and the fastness of the dye to washing. In the case of the examples below, only a mere rinse in pure water is necessary to clear the highlights, though if the highlights are stained they may be cleared by washing in a 0.2 per cent solution of acetic acid. Too high a concentration of acid in the wash water should be avoided, otherwise reticulation and frilling of the gelatine is liable to occur, especially if the temperature is above 70 degrees F.

Effect of the Size of the Image Grain on the Transparency of the Tones Produced

The transparency of the tones is determined by two factors:

(a) The nature of the copper bath. The composition of the bath recommended has been so adjusted as to give the maximum transparency.

(b) The size of the silver grains of the image to be toned.

Previous investigators appear to have ignored the effect of grain size on the transparency of the toned image. Experiments were made with emulsions of varying grain size and it was found that with lantern slide emulsions of very fine grain such as give warm tones by direct development, very transparent images were produced after toning and dyeing as above without any subsequent fixing whatsoever.

However, a toned image for purposes of projection should not be too transparent, otherwise it lacks brilliancy, so that the tones obtained on, say, the "Standard Slow" lantern slide plate and on Eastman motion picture positive film by the following methods are satisfactory.

Stability of Dye Tones

The dye tones recommended proved to be fast to light, no change in color being noticeable after exposure to a quartz mercury vapor lamp for 5 hours at a distance of eighteen inches.

Cifrè Now Manager of Boston M. P. Supply Co.

JOSEPH S. CIFRE is now in charge of the main office of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, 197-205 Pleasant street, Boston, Mass., distributors for Simplex machines in Connecticut, Massachusets and Rhode Island, taking the place of William C. Francke, who recently resigned.

Mr. Cifre, who is known to the majority of New England exhibitors as "Little Joe," has an unusually wide acquaintance among the managers of motion picture theatres down East, and there is hardly a picture theatre in New England which he has not visited in the last few years. His extensive personal knowledge of theatres in that locality is the result of numerous tours he has made as chief operator of the more important features sent out as road attractions.

His operating experience with nearly every large road show since the days of talking pictures, five yeares ago, has enabled him to study projection conditions of all kinds, and this wide experience gives him unusual qualifications for his present position.

In addition to his knowledge of operating he is a practical electrician, having at one time owned a prosperous electrical business at Revere Beach, Mass. He is president of Local No. 182, which is the largest in New England.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

P. Hans Flath, at the Organ of the Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kansas

The Modern Pipe Organ

(We received a very interesting article from P. Hans Flath of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kas., on the subject of appropriate music for the film, which we fully reproduce. Although much has been written on the subject, we find that Mr. Flath's article is somewhat different from others and should be of great interest to every musician in the business.—Music Editor.)

SO much has been already said about "Playing for Pictures," "Music for Pictures," or "Proper Synchronization," that it will be a difficult matter to touch any new points, though the field is so big, that it unquestionably has room for argument and suggestion. So I will endeavor herewith to give you my individual ideas concerning the above, coupled with my years of experience as musical conductor.

Perhaps the best suited instrument for playing pictures is the modern pipe organ, in the hands of a capable player, for not only has he the combination of a large orchestra at his command, but he can instantly change from a Furioso to a pathetic Andante without the seeming break. So, I shall confine this article to the pipe organ.

The printed cue sheets are a big help, though every leader or organist is required to use his own judgment in addition to these cue sheets. Let us analyze a picture as follows:

(a) "Subject Matter"—dealing with the plot—locale and general construction of the story.

(b) "Primary Theme"—dealing with the principal characters, as to love, romance, or adventure.

(c) "Secondary Theme"—which has to do with the minor but essential characters in carrying out the story.

(d) "Inconsequential Episodes"—having no direct bearing on the story, but which add variety and entertainment.

From the above, the skeleton plan, it is not a difficult matter to make proper selections of music. Hence:

(a) will suggest the calibre and quality of music required in general, i.e., community of action and period in which the story is laid. Here is where the skill and experience of the leader or organist will be asserted.

(b) will suggest the motif or principal theme for the leading characters: for the lighter American Society comedy dramas, I find that songs from the better known muscial comedies or light operas serve this purpose well, and the public is familiar with them, while some arias from the better known grand operas furnish excellent themes for the heavier dramatic pictures.

(c) This helps you to give variety to your program still in keeping with the breadth of the scene. For example: If you are playing a picture of slow action what can be more monotonous than a continuance of 4/4 or 3/4 andante? Where perhaps a 4/4 followed by a 6/8 andante—then a 2/4 followed by a 12/8 or 3/4 andante or vise versa will not corrupt the action, but give a change of rhythm or accent, which the audience unconsciously feels. There are many overtures which cover a succession of scenes as mentioned above.

(d) This paragraph is probably best suited for the organist alone—as it almost is an impossibility for an entire orchestra to differentiate for one moment to one extreme or the other, without a noticeable break in the music—unless an especially arranged score has been provided. To better understand this, let me offer an illustration:—

In one of Mary Pickford's late pictures Mary and her girl companion meet a third girl at the garden gate. After a short chat the three girls arm in arm hop-skip up the country road, to a fade-away. During the scene I used a light moderato—gauging the action so that I finished my strain just as they locked arms—segue into "Three Little Girls from School are We," from the opera, catching their step and a deminuendo in proportion to the fade-away, so I finished my strain at the time of the screen.

In Mary's picture, "How Could You, Jean?" in the scene of the employment office where the ungainly girl with the ill-trimmed hat comes in, and Mary goes up to her, this I likewise handled—gauging the music so that when Mary opened her mouth—the title that followed "Where Did You Get That Hat?" played that much of that old song which made you imagine you actually heard her voice. I merely mention these two as they happen in my mind, but there are numerous incidents which show an audience that you are "on the job." Of course every picture does not have opportunity for this by-play, and even when it does happen, it must be handled in a careful manner, or you may make the situation ridiculous, thus spoiling what immediately follows. But it no doubt breaks the monotony and momentarily enhances the scene.

I have observed that probably too many leaders or organists are cued by titles alone, where I have found it to be more satisfactory to cue by situation, thus giving you ample time to finish strains instead of breaking off in the middle of some beautiful phrase. Here arises the absolute necessity of being familiar with the music you are playing. Nothing will so completely upset an audience as to get comfortably reconciled to a melody or rhythm and suddenly break off and go into some other rhythm and keep that up continually. By so doing you are not giving the picture its support in continuity, but presenting each scene as a distinct episode, leaving the imagination to link it together, besides having made yourself a burdensome task, and counting only the time when the words "The End," will flash on the screen.

The greatest fault perhaps today is the over-playing or under-playing of pictures. This is easily done if care is not taken as to progression of scenes. For example: The characters in the drama are striving for a climax in some particular scene. The scene will start with a pp. Dr. Andante we'll say, and as the scene progresses the intensity of the situation should be followed closely so that at the psychological moment the double forte is reached (or dove-tails with the screen.) A great many leaders or organists, however, begin their Dr. Andantes or agitatos at a certain speed and volume and, disregarding the action of the screen players, keep it at such a pace: If your speed and volume exceed the screen action you are over playing; if it is tardy you are under playing. This pertains to all scenes as well. It would take volumes to express one's views on this phase of the work. Perhaps the easiest way to overcome this is to imagine yourself as one of the characters actually taking the part and hearing the voices of the others, and if you have any conception at all of interpretation you will see how much more satisfactory will be the result.

I have heard some musical accompaniments to pictures, and was so thankful that the actors could not speak, for what a serious rebuke would have come to the leader or organist for the manner in which they supported their screen efforts.

Selecting and interpreting music for pictures is no longer just a profession, but it has become a science, and in no other phase of the noble and beautiful art of music is there the vast opportunity for imaginative and inventive genius, nor the enlightening or broadening of one's musical talent and knowledge of all kinds of musical literature as there is in the present day—playing the pictures.

Granting that some pictures are easier to play than others, owing to the length and consistency of scenes, but a careful study of each picture, observation of a picture as outlined above I trust will be of some benefit to the leader or organist who has not had an opportunity for real stage experience, and with a little care you will most certainly please your audience, satisfy your manager and make your work a pleasure instead of a drudgery.

Schirmer Makes Announcement

In announcing that the Photoplay Series Volumes 3 and 4 will be published Sept. 1, G. Schirmer, of 3 East Forty-third street, New York, said:

The marked success of Volumes I and II of this Series, and the increasing demand from the Motion Picture fraternity for incidental motion picture music, has prompted us to publish these two additional volumes.

The Photoplay Series is a loose-leaf collection of dramatic and descriptive musical compositions especially intended for use with motion pictures.

The volumes have been so carefully prepared, that for every scene depicted on the screen there is a suitable musical composition, which played in conjunction with the picture, makes the action more realistic and vivid.

These collections are usable in all motion picture houses, large and small.

Although arranged for small or full orchestra, they are playable with any lesser combination of instruments and are surprisingly effective if played only by violin and piano.

The music has been arranged by such experts as Otto Langey, Gaston Borch, Irenee Berge, Hugo Risenfeld and Edward Falck.

Volumes III and IV are containing the following numbers: 21. Andante Pathetique Doloroso (Deep sorrow, sickness or death). 22. Allegro Misterioso Notturno (Stealthy action in the dark.) 23. Agitato Con Moto (Every form of, excepting boisterous, excitement). 24. Dramatic Allegro (Dramatic, ominous situations, struggles, fights, storms, etc.). 25. Western Allegro (Joyful scenes, racing, stampedes, crowds). 26. Indian Agitato (Dramatic excitement for Indian emotional scenes, rivalry, jealousy, expectancy, apprehension, etc.). 27. Agitated Misterioso (Fear, anxiety, suspense, ominous situations, etc.). 28. Agitato (Intense situations, arguments, leading to fight, excitement). 29. Battle Music (Battles of every description). 30. Western Allegro (Western scenes, camping, mining, cowboys, stampedes, bar-room scenes, gambling houses). 31. Indian War Dance (Indian scenes). 32. Southwestern Idyl (Country life, love scenes, also Mexican). 33. Western Scene (Animated crowd scenes, fast riding, chasing, cowboy gatherings, etc.). 34. Indian War Dance (Indian scenes). 35. Misterioso Infernale (Uncanny situations). 36 Chinese-Japanese (Suggestive of Chinese or Japanese situations). 37. Furioso No. 3 (Riots, tumultuous scenes, etc.). 38. Misterioso Irresoluto (Fear, suspicion, hesitation, etc.). 39. Pastorale (Peaceful country or country life scenes). 40. Storm Music (Storms on land or sea, earthquakes, eruptions, tornadoes, typhoons).

Klein to Do Blackton Film Score

COMMODORE J. STUART BLACKTON has engaged Manuel Klein to compose and arrange the musical setting for his big propaganda picture, "The Common Cause," now in production.

Mr. Klein, brother of Charles Klein, the playwright, who was lost on the ill-fated Lusitania, is best known perhaps as a composer and conductor for his ten consecutive years at the Hippodrome, dating from its early beginning when he was associated with Messrs. Thompson and Gundy, its first managers. Mr. Klein was also associated with David Belasco for four years and a similar term with Daniel Frohman.

With his brother, Charles Klein, he collaborated on "Mr. Pickwick," a light opera which served DeWolf Hopper for three seasons, and also on "His Imperial Highness." Film followers will remember his musical arrangements for the special releases of the All-Star Feature Film Company, many of which productions were adapted from his brother's successful plays.

Mr. Klein has already finished composing the music for "The Common Cause" and is now working on the orchestration.

Picture Men Turn to Music

FALLING for the subtle charms of Euterpe, the goddess of music, Lee M. Walker and Lieutenant William B. Davidson, N. Y. G., both well known motion picture men, have taken to the writing of musical compositions and their initial joint effort is a patriotic number entitled, "I Want to Go Back to Blighty."

Nothwithstanding it is their first contribution to the music world, they seem to have struck the popular fancy for already it is heard everywhere in public. The music is of the vigorous, treat-'em-rough, carry-on style with a lilt and a swing to it that lifts the heart, and the lyrics are particularly virile and punchy. "I Want to Go Back to Blighty" is not an "over night" creation. Its authors conceived the idea some time ago and because of their other activities attempted to sidetrack it. But it persisted in sticking in their minds and it was finally put to paper more as a means of getting mental relief than anything else. It proved so good, however, that it was published, and now it is fast becoming one of the "best sellers."

Messrs. Walker and Davidson will very likely turn out another number soon.

Capt. W. A. Moffett, commandant of the Great Lakes camps, is authority for the statement that there will shortly be erected the most beautiful natural theatre in the world. Its location will be between Camps Ross and Decatur. The hills on either side of the huge natural amphitheatre will be terraced in tiers two or three seats wide to form seats with rough stone supports. The idea of having the natural theatre was hit upon by Captain Moffett when he and Lieut. John Philip Sousa and the Great Lakes Band visited the Conklin estate, Huntington, L. I., and witnessed the celebrated Rose Marie pageants, which are held in the immense Conklin outdoor theatre. He returned with the determination to provide Great Lakes with a better one, a theatre in which famous performers would vie for the honor of appearing.

Fred Smith's new motion picture theatre on Main street, Versailles, is fast approaching completion, and when finished will be the swellest little theatre in this part of the State, and will have a seating capacity of 250.

The new Midway theatre at Rockford was opened Saturday, August 3, to capacity business. J. E. O. Pridmore of Chicago drew the plans, and on every hand it is conceded to be the finest edifice in the State devoted to motion pictures. J. V. Hogan of Janesville is the manager.

The stage at the end of the building is being torn away and this will increase the seating capacity of the house by 100.

H. E. Ascher, one of the members of the Ascher Brothers of Chicago, anr lessee of the New Midway theatre on East State street, Rockford, Ill., and his general publicity representative were in the city recently looking over the new house.

That the B. F. Keith's New York Theatre Company will have within a year a large theatre, costing with the land about $750,000, in the Third avenue and 149th street section, commonly called the Herald Square of the Bronx, New York, was learned recently. From Lachman & Goldsmith the company bought the Royal theatre at the northwest corner of Westchester and Bergen avenues, of which it is the lessee, and an adjoining Bergen avenue plot from Harold M. Silverman. The theatre will be extended to cover both parcels. The front of the building will be five and six stories high and contain stores, offices and lofts. The enlarged theatre will be a one-balcony house and seat 3,000 persons. No architect has been selected. The site of the projected structure, which is a triangle in shape, measures 120 feet in Westchester avenue, 182 feet in Bergen avenue and has a rear line of 250 feet. The Royal theatre, which occupies a plot of 120 x 200 x 100 x 132 feet, seats about 2,300 persons and cost approximately $650,000. The property bought from Mr. Silverman is 50 x 100 and was held at $50,000. The Keith interests are erecting a theatre at Fordham road and Valentine avenue, near the Concourse.

The Regent theatre, Wellsville, was reopened two weeks ago under the management of C. L. Babcock.

OREGON

Work on the construction of A. Hackbarth's new building on Main street, Enterprise, between the Enterprise State Bank and the J. C. Penney Company store, has been commenced. The basement was excavated in the early spring. The building will have a front of sixty feet and a depth of 110 feet, going through to the alley. The walls will be of reinforced concrete, with a front elevation of thirty-two feet, of ornamental concrete. The main part of the structure will be devoted to a theatre, which will take up a space forty-two feet wide by 110 long, and will seat upward of 500 persons. The floor will be sloping, running up over the stores at the front. This is a new idea in small theatre construction just brought from the East.

The Orpheum theatre, Marshfield, was opened recently under the management of E. R. Marsden, Alice Joyce in "The Song of a Soul" being the attraction.

Short Subjects in Review

THE ISLE OF CUBA
(Harold H. Horton)

The day of the old scenic, which displayed stereotyped views of other lands, is fast dwindling, if indeed, it has not dwindled to nothing even at this date. A scenic, to meet the popular demand of the present day, must be interesting as well as informative. As well throw the page of a natural history book on the screen today as to attempt the successful exhibition of a scenic of the old style. Mr. Harold H. Horton brought back a number of highly entertaining views of Cuba, the "Gem of the Caribbean Sea," and in the single reel subject, "The Isle of Cuba," presents them in a strikingly entertaining manner.

Many such subjects are spoiled by shots of a single location that are far too long. Mr. Horton has reduced the possibility of boredom to nil by using lengths of film of the correct length in this reel. Practically every scene is preceded by an instructive and entertaining subtitle. As witness the scene of a man selling lottery tickets. There is nothing particularly interesting in this process in itself alone, but it is explained that over five million dollars a year is raised by lotteries for government revenue. In such a way are a number of the subjects treated.

One of the particularly interesting sections of the reel shows a native climbing a giant palm tree to obtain its topmost branches. These are used as shades for the great tobacco fields of Cuba. By a simple contrivance the native hoists himself up the huge trunk unassisted. High grade oils are manufactured from the palm seeds.

Comparison between the old and new streets of Cuba is interesting. The former were cultivated with filth and disease and death was deplorable. Now, however, the streets are kept clean and as a consequence Cuba has the lowest proportional death rate of any country in the world. The foundling home, with its secret cupboard, where mothers may place children for proper care, is of interest.

Other points of interest are views of historic Moro Castle, harbor scenes, sugar cutting and harvesting, Nuevitas, where Columbus landed in 1515, and typical street scenes such as the natives purchasing donkey's milk from a salesman who drives his sources of supply ahead of him.

The reel is well photographed.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE

The urgent need for increased power for our manufacturing industries has turned the attention of the public to Niagara Falls, where millions of horsepower are annually allowed to go to waste. According to the pictures in the eighty-fourth issue of Universal Screen Magazine, federal engineers are now planning to turn Niagara Falls into an immense power plant for the purpose of generating power for the scores of factories engaged in war work.

Under the heading of "Education," Editor Jack Cohn has included in this issue of the Universal Screen Magazine scenes showing the printing of the "Matilda Magazine," a publication which makes it possible for the blind to read. This publication was estblished by Mrs. William Ziegler, in New York City, and is distributed throughout United States and Canada, free to 15,000 blind.

Other interesting subjects shown are "Freak Animals of the Mexican Border," in which are introduced queer specimens which the men in the aviation school and the training camps in Texas meet on their daily rounds; fine points of a $10,000 beauty, dealing with the Jersey cow which brought that price at the American Jersey Club sale held at Mt. Kisco, N. Y., which was attended by breeders from all sections of the United States and Canada; and a comedy cartoon entitled, "A School for Educated Fish," drawn by Hy Myer.

MUTT AND JEFF JOIN TANKS

One of the most recent releases of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons by William Fox is "Joining the Tanks," in which Bud Fisher's characters vanquish the Germans by treating 'em rough.

Mutt and Jeff decide to enlist, says a statement by the Fox Film Corporation. The doctor turns them down. Undaunted they set out for France. They make a successful landing in an unsuccessful place, for they find themselves in Germany. Mutt sees a Hun coming! As far as escape is concerned Mutt and Jeff have both the exit and entrance cut off. That is, until Mutt does a leap for life. The Huns resort to mass formation. They go after Jeff, but they don't put anything over on Mutt. By a clever bit of generalship Jeff adds two more names to the grand total of the Prussian casualty list. Jeff gains possession of the Hun tank. First Jeff rescues Mutt and then starts out with the tank. The old tank goes through the German trenches. After Mutt and Jeff clean up they communicate with the American headquarters. This is their message:

"Inform General Pershing that the road to Berlin is open. He can start whenever he is ready."

THE FOURTH OBSERVED IN PARIS

There have been no more thrilling pictures of our troops shown than "The Fourth of July in Paris," a two-reel subject released by Pathe. To watch the long khaki files of them swinging down the Champs Elysees and the new Avenue du President Wilson, fully equipped from trench helmet to trench shoes, the object of wild cheering from the Parisian public that line the streets, is one of the most inspiring sights seen in many a day. Girls are seen rushing out from the crowds and showering the soldiers with flowers. The Stars and Stripes is everywhere as prominent as the Tricolor.

The parade is led by the military governor of Paris, and troops of crack French cavalry and attachments of French soldiers are scattered down through the line as guards of honor for the soldiers from the United States. It is a privilege to be permitted to sit through these two reels more than once. It is the type of picture that never tires and which will live for all time.

VENEZUELA

This issue in the Travel series being released by Pathe gives a number of inteersting scenes in Venezuela, a nation of South America, whose people live, for the most part, in the primitive. The usual views of types of natives are shown together with facts concerning their ancestry. The Venezuelan is a thoroughly easy going character. The husband leaves his wife to shift for herself, the wife leaves her children to shift for themselves, which they do after a fashion.

Quite the most entertaining portion of the film shows the manufacture of pottery, of course in a primitive fashion. The native supplies the power for his machine by his feet. The clay is placed on a revolving stick and turned into whatever shape the native wishes who guides it with his hands. It is fascinating to watch the clay take various forms.

GAUMONT GRAPHIC SUB-

Gaumont Graphic No. 19, released August 2, contained the following subjects:

France—Boys of the 104th U. S. Infantry Are Honored by the French for Exceptional Bravery in the Field. Sub: General Passaga decorates members of the 104th with the Croix de Guerre. Sub: Major General Edwards congratulates the boys for god conduct and bravery under fire. Sub: American officers and an old church bell, the only thing untouched in this French village after the Huns had fled. Sub: The spoils of war: A German helmet as a souvenir for the folk at home. Sub: The mules receiving their daily toilet. Sub: Having a hard time "doping" out a letter to his best gal back home and wondering if it will pass the censors. Sub: Just pals.

Independence, Mo.—Ten Thousand Spectators See Exciting Auto-Polo Game.—British and American all-star team thrill crowds.

Paris, France—French Aviators Who Have Escaped from Germany Hold a Happy Reunion.

Chicago, Ill.—Stars and Stripes Smother Austrian Eagles.—Two-headed enemy emblems over door of Loop Restaurant anger jackies and start riot. Sub: Peace and smiles displace anger and violence when American flags cover the hated emblem.

Paris, France—Dr. Carrel, Famous War Surgeon, Honored. For having "completely revolutionized surgery in war" he is made commander of the Legion of Honor.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

About Metro Players

Joseph Engle, treasurer, who recently went east, is expected to return shortly to again personally take charge of the management of the West Coast Metro studios, and information received from the Eastern studios is to the effect he will be accompanied west by President Richard Rowland of the Metro Company.

Albert S. LeVino, who has been in the West for a number of months in charge of the scenario department, has been called to the Eastern studios of the Metro Company where he will again assume his position as assistant to Manager of Production Maxwell Karger. LeVino leaves for the East August 5.

Bert Lytell has written the story for his next production, filming of which was started this week. It has been titled "Making Good," and is a story of adventure in which a youth goes to Mexico and there restores the fortune of the father of the girl he loves. In this there will be many sensational scenes having to do with the gangs of bandits. Charles Swickard, whose most recent work was the direction of the Dustin Farnum initial Sherman Production, "The Light of Western Stars," has been engaged to direct Lytell in this picture. The cast has not been named.

Paramount-Artcraft

The first Dorothy Gish Paramount release now in production at the Sunset studios in Hollywood under the direction of Elmer Clifton, has been named "Battling Jane," but there is a possibility this may be changed before the release date. The film will introduce a new juvenile leading man in the person of Raymond Cannon, who is a compartively newcomer to the screen. Bertram Grassby, Kathrine MacDonald, George Nichols, Kate Toncray and Adolph Lestina will be seen in this production.

All Famous Players-Lasky directors are at work on productions with the exception of C. B. deMille, who has just finished "Then I'll Come Back to You." Plans are being made for Mr. deMille to make a revival of a story previously filmed. No information is given out at the studio as to what this will be.

James Cruze, who has been with the Lasky Company for the past year or more as a member of the acting staff, is to direct and is now at work on his first subject which will offer Wallace Reid. Ann Little will not play with Reid in this subject, and no leading woman has been cast.

Theodore Roberts is said to take the greatest characterization of his screen career in the part of an old salt, in support of Lila Lee in a subject now being made which is at present known as "Such a Little Pilot." Harrison Ford is the leading man, and Adele Farrington, Forest Seabury and Guy Oliver are in the cast.

Production of the next Ethel Clayton subject has been delayed that the star might visit her brother now in training at Camp Kearny, and who is shortly to leave for an eastern port. Elliot Dexter is to be her leading man, and Vera Doria will be in the cast directed by Robert Vignolia.

Universal Newsettes

Rollin S. Sturgeon, who is to take over the direction of Monroe Salisbury, leaves the first of the week with the company for Bear Valley where he will film "Hugon the Mighty" exteriors. Sturgeon has made several pictures in this vicinity, two for the Vitagraph Company, and being thoroughly familiar with locations, a remarkably pretty picture from the scenic standpoint is expected. Marjorie Bennett will make her debut in this film as a Universal leading woman. Miss Bennett is the sister of Enid, the Ince-Paramount star, and has played in several subjects there, and was the featured leading woman of "The Midnight Patrol."

The cast selected to support Fritzi Brunette in "The Vindetta," now being directed by Douglas Gerrard, includes William Conklin as leading man, Eugene Corey, Fred Turner, Wedgewood Nowell and Carmen Phillips. Nicolos Duneau, former character actor for Universal, also returns to the screen with this film. For the past eighteen months Duneau has devoted practically all of his time in the writing of three plays and a number of short stories, all of which have been sold.

Jack Dillon with the Edith Roberts Company which now includes Lou Cody, as leading man, is leaving the latter part of this week for San Francisco where needed exteriors for "A Billion in Beans" will be taken.

Alan Holubar is making the final scenes of "Until We Meet Again," the war story which stars Dorothy Phillips, supported by William Stowell and a big cast.

Balboa Beach, California, has been selected for the making of the fishing village scenes needed for "The Borrowed Duchess" which features Carmel Meyers, and is directed by Paul Powell. Principals of this cast in addition to Rudolph de Valentina are Fred Kelsey, ZaZu Pitts, Harold Golden and Alfred Allen.

Fox Studio Doings

Lynn Reynolds left Los Angeles Wednesday with a troop of fifty people where the Fox film starring Tom Mix, adapted from the Charles Alden Selzer novel, "The Two Gun Man," will be made. All interiors as well as exteriors are to be filmed at Prescott. Jane Novak was engaged as leading woman for Mix, and takes the only feminine role in the story. No other woman will be seen in this film, not even in atmosphere creating shots. Tom Mix drove through by auto after seeing that his favorite horse, "Blue," was safely aboard the cars at Los Angeles Jack Curtis, Charles LaMoyne and Val Paul are other important players for this picture.

One of the big scenes for this story requires a stampeding of cattle being turned so they will not run over the heroine who has fallen from a horse, by a man bull-dogging the animal that is leading the stampede. Mix will take care of this very dangerous act.

Frank Lloyd, director of William Farnum, and the star are now working on the script for a sea story which will be the next vehicle for Farnum. This will require seacoast atmosphere which the company will secure by spending a week or more at Catalina Islands.

Vitagraph News Bits

The capacity of the Vitagraph Studios in Los Angeles will shortly be materially increased by the addition of a third stage which is now being constructed by Studio Manager W. S. Smith. This will be slightly larger than their most recent one built, the exterior dimensions being approximately 100 x 150 feet. This will be ready for production work within a week or ten days.

The company filming "By the World Forgot," under the direction of David Smith, is off on an exploring expedition in search of an island in which much of the action for thi adaptation from the Cyrus Townsend Brady story takes place. The company will in all probability work in the vicinity of Laguna Beach. Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon are the featured players; Robert Bradbury, heavy, and Patricia Palmer, second lead.

William Duncan, director and star of "A Fight for a Million," now has his itinerary so arranged so he will complete the serial by August 15. The other Vitagraph Company, headed by Antonio Moreno and Carol Halloway, are now making the first four or five episodes of another Vitagraph serial as yet unnamed.

Live Triangle Items

The new producing schedule of the Triangle studios is now fully effective, the staff is using all available stage space almost every day, and for the past week the technical staff has had two shifts a portion of the time in order that settings, properties, etc., be kept ahead of the several companies.

Harry Mestayer, recently added to the Triangle staff who has just finished work in "High Tide," in which he was featured, has been cast for the principal male role in "The Atom," being produced by William C. Dowlan. Mestayer appears in this as the matinee idol of a stock company, who in an accident is disfigured and thereby made a down and outer, or a has-been. Pauline Starke appears as a tenement district waif who had long worshipped him, and proves to be the inspiring spirit in causing him to do things worth while. Ruth Handforth, Gene Burr, Lincoln Stedman, Thomas Buckingham and a number of others will appear in this subject.

A new Triangle leading woman will make her appearance in the subject now being filmed by Jack Conway titled "Mountain Law." She is Leota Lorraine, who has played leading woman parts in a number of coast-made subjects. This story is a melodrama laid in the West in its wooliest days, and is by Louis H. Kilpatrick. Ray Hanford, Leo Pearson, George Pearce, Albert Whitman, Bert Appling, James Farley, and Phil Gastrock are in the cast in support of Jack Richardson and Miss Lorraine.

The new subject featuring Gloria Swanson, "The Secret Code," also has a number of new players for Triangle. One is Ray Alexander. Little Irene Yager, child actress, is also in this cast. Others are Dorothy Wallace, Joe King, Lee Phelps, and Leslie Stewart.

"Tony American" is the title at present given the next subject to be filmed by T. N. Heffron, who has just completed making "The Mask," with Claire Anderson, John Gilbert, Rae Godfrey, Juan de la Cruz, Lillian West and others.

Here and There

War was waged in the center of the Los Angeles residence district this week, and the natives imagined the Huns were there. The battle was for the Ince-Dorothy Dalton subject, "Vive La France." The Ince studio is the only studio in the residence district of Los Angeles, being at Twelfth and Georgia streets, and here the interior and exterior of a big chateau set was the center of a bombardment by a troop of Huns. In addition to this, Director Roy William Neill, has spent several days at the old Inceville ranch where the trench warfare, using several hundred men, was filmed.

A notable feature of the extras for this play is that they have been engaged according to their ancestry. Casting Director Tom Walsh would employ only men of German extraction for the Hun army, and French and Italian for the Allies. The result will plainly show in the film for each man is ideal for his bit.

Bessie Barriscale, in Her Newest Pose for Paralta Plays, Inc.

This film will introduce a new leading man for pictures in the person of Edmond Lowe, who went to the Ince organization from the Oliver Morosco Stock Company in Los Angeles. Lowe is an ideal leading man for Dorothy Dalton, and unlike most actors who had had only stage experience, does not appear at all stagey before the camera.

By special permission granted by Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, all boats of a Pacific Coast Submarine station were placed at the disposal of Thomas H. Ince for this week when scenes were made by Irvin Willatt for "False Faces," which stars Henry Walthall.

The Charles Ray Company filming an adaptation from a western story which gives Ray a part similar to that in "Playing the Game," is roughing it this week in the vicinity of Chatsworth Park, an extremely mountainous and rocky section north of Los Angeles.

"The Littlest Scrub Lady" is the title under which the Vivian Martin film being directed by William C. deMille is now known. Douglas MacLean is Miss Martin's leading man, and Mayme Kelso is another principal in what is characterized as a most unique comedy.

AUGUST 17, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

Weather—not unbearable.

Jesse Lasky's come West.

Ben Hampton's deserted our village.

Joe Engle is coming back to our midst.

G. M. Anderson and Jesse Robbins are going to see Broadway.

It looks like a long summer, 'cause J. "Pep" McGowan has had his head shaved again.

Cliff Smith is directing the rod and reel at Bear Lake in the hope of snaring an elusive trout or two.

Roy Stewart has joined the leisure class and is now vacationing. He's doing Northern California in his road burner.

Bill Ritchey, by way of proving his versatility as a writer, is now beating out a series of articles on "How to Write Photoplays." Bill always was industrious.

George Baker got tired of the earth the other day, and for fifteen minutes floated about in an airplane driven by a professional who takes them up for ten dollars per.

E. Mason Hopper is learning Chinese. Here are some of the names of the members of his cast: Abbe, Liu Chung, Seki, and Yamgi. The title of the play is "The Spirit of Adventure."

Monte M. Katterjohn hails from Boonville, Ind. This dark secret of the writer's past came out this week when he was visited by an aviation cadet who is one of the hum town boys.

Fortune is with Frank Glendon, Vitagraph leading man. He is to go through a very serious illness on a desert island for "By the World Forgot," and would you believe it, he is just out of bed after a very severe attack of Cafe Ptomaine.

Bill Hart bought a nice big rattle snake for a scene in his current production, and when he took it onto the lot for the necessary few flashes, it attempted to vamp with him, and when Hart refused to vamp back, the snake-ship bit itself to death.

Two Nasturtiums have put in an appearance in the lawn in front of the Metro scenario department where Mildred Driscoll, near three months ago, planted a quart of seed, and has since been sprinkling the place three times daily. A celebration is expected.

Bill Farnum, who has a great liking for fishing at Catalina Island, has evidently framed one on the Fox administration, for he induced the company to have him play in a sea story which requires exteriors being made at his favorite place for catching the Yellow Tail.

Jack Cunningham is so busy writing scenarios for several companies that wish to improve the product, that he has reduced the number of meals daily to two, for he is a firm believer in retaining his girlish figure, even though his work does not provide that he shall appear before the camera.

Enid Bennett is doing "little Eva" for an Uncle Tom Company for "Somewhere in Kansas," in which there is a scene where little Eva, after ascending to heaven by the block and tackle route, is suddenly dropped into the center of the stage when the sheriff attaches the show, and the funny part of it is the block and tackle broke during rehearsal when it wasn't supposed to, but fortunately, fair Enid came back to earth in a heap. Casualties: 1 cradle and the head of the base drum.

"An admiring fan," learning that Kenneth Harlan was a member of the Liberty Army at Camp Kearney, sent him a wonderful ice box that he might keep desirable food in his own private little tent. Then the information of this present reached the captain following inspection of quarters, and Kenneth was forced to return the present tc the giver. The inspection also brought to light several suits of silk pajamas, all of which caused considerable comment, and something else. Such is the life of a soldier, writes Kenneth.

Alma Rubens says she's not. Franklyn Farnum says, "you'll have to get information from 'my wife.'" The Los Angeles Examiner tells the minister and gives the date. There you are; but worst of all, the nasty newspaper says that Franklyn's name is William Franklyn Smith, which may or may not be a romantic name. And who can tell whether the name Smith may or may not be the cause of objection to an announcement. Aside from that we know nothing about it, and HOOKUM served notice that denials or announcements will not be accepted for publication, even if they are properly signed and written on one side of the paper.

With all the young men gone to war, Chatsworth Park's older men were forced to step in and keep the national game alive in the hum town. The boys of thirty-five, forty-five and fifty looked spry until they crossed bats with the Charles Ray Company playing up there, and then they met their Waterloo. The first game was called because of darkness, but the score was three to four in favor of the Inceites. And then the hum boys reorganized, took in a few of a few more years, and three games straight pounded Charley Ray all over the field and had Charley French, J. P. Lockney and Otto Hoffman hunting for the ball on the other side of the foothills.

Eddie Lyons and Virginia Kirtley—yes, Mrs. Lyons—celebrated their wedding anniversary on August 1, and thought so much of the event that they had about forty friends help them do it. Lee Moran was there, and as the justice of peace, officiated at the burlesque marriage. The couple received many beautiful and useful wedding gifts, and the wedding cake was cut with due ceremony, just like at a regular wedding, for Eddie and Lee are both students of realism. There was a dance in the conservatory of the Lyons domicile on the top of Edgecliff Hill which overlooks Santa Monica Bay and the Catalina Islands, to say nothing of the entire country around. As a mixer of punch, Edward Lyons has gained some reputation. HOOKUM was promised a scoop on this story, and therefore we spread ourselves. Yes, a good time was had by all, much of the merriment being due to Eddie Cline's whistling jazz band.

Jack Livingston in Thrilling Story of Trench Life in "The Price of Applause"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Jack Livingston, Claire Anderson, Joe King and Walt Whitman, are the principal players in Triangle's late production, "The Price of Applause," written by Nina Wilcox Putman and Norman Jacobson, and produced under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron. "The Price of Applause" is an appealing story of life in the trenches and the life of our Allies when they are so unfortunate as to be made prisoners by the Hun. This screen version was adapted from the story as it appeared in the "Saturday Evening Post," and presented one of the most interesting and most fascinating stories that ever appeared in this popular weekly. It is timely, has the spirit of war, and is intensely dramatic. Karl le Barron, poet and member of the little colony of Bohemians who inhabit the Washington Square district of New York, posed as a pro-German at the beginning of the war, from sheer lust for notoriety. He was deprived of his fame as an artist and poet. After the sinking of the "Lusitania," Karl drops his disguise of a German sympathizer and leaves for the battlefields of France. He is sent to the first-line trenches, where he loses his nerve and deserts. He is captured by the Germans and kept two years in a prison camp ignorant of America's entrance into the war. He escapes and returns to America where he is shunned by his friends. He enlists under an assumed name, returns to the trenches, and there proves himself a hero.

"A Soldier's Oath" is most timely, as it tells of war waged over the same ground in France that is now the scene of the world's greatest battles. It is a war drama from start to finish and one of the best that has ever been seen on the screen of any theatre. Some of you may remember "A Soldier's Oath," but whether you do or not, you will want to see it in its new version. William Farnum has never been given a more suitable role. He is seen as Pierre Duval, a soldier of France, fighting France's battles. In the supporting cast are seen Kittens Reichart, that clever little child actress; Dorothy Bernard, Louise Thatcher, Benjamin Marburgh, Henry A. Barrows, Herman J. Herbert, Walter Connolly, Will Lois, Alma Frederic, Louise Mackin, Louise V. Hart and Anna Finley. The story deals with the adventures of a young American who upon learning of the German atrocities in Belgium, goes to Canada and joins the army. The story tells of the experiences of a young man who thinks himself an invalid and for the purpose of building up his run-down condition, takes a few weeks at a training camp. The only real trouble with our hero is that he has been overpetted, overfed and humored to the point of mollycoddleism. He is not long in the training camp when he discovers that he is, after all, a real man and starts to "clean up" the camp. And there are some pretty good scrappers in the camp, but Bobby (Carlyle Blackwell) is too much for all of them when he gets a few lessons in the manly art. "The House of Mirth," with All-Star Cast—Adapted from Edith Wharton's Novel

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

A long list of some of our brightest screen stars are seen in action in Metro's late production, "The House of Mirth," adapted from Edith Wharton's novel of the same name, by June Mathis and Albert Capellani, and produced under the direction of Mr. Capellani. D. Fichter, Sidney Bracy, Kempton Greene and Morgan Jones. A greater array of stars has not been seen in any one picture. It reveals the artificiality of the modern social set and sets forth the manner in which a girl's life can be made unhappy by the society madness. But experience is the best teacher and Lily Bart (Katherine Harris Barrymore), learns that "love in a cottage" with the man whom your heart tells you is your mate, is far better than love in a palace with the one for whom you have not love, even though it brings riches.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Will Rogers, of "Ziegfeld Follies" Fame, Who Is to Be a Goldwyn Star In Pictures

Emmy Wehlen's name is a sure sign of beautiful costumes in a picture. In "His Bonded Wife" one gown in particular will bring joy to the feminine part of an audience. It is of old-rose brocade, embroidered in silver and centres in a huge star sapphire. With it is worn an evening coat edged with silver lace and with a collar of rose ostrich feathers.

In "Her Only Way" Norma Talmadge and a Ford get together, probably for the first time. But the real story is that after the Ford had played its part in the picture Norma played the part of automobile salesman, and unloaded aforementioned Ford on an interested spectator for quite a respectable sum. Her selling methods were unique in that she told all its defects, leaky radiator, bad spark plug, loose steering gear, etc., then took perspective purchaser for a trial ride during which none of the defects became evident and the car was sold.

Two young Moroccans, visiting this country on their way around the world were presented to Corinne Griffith while she was working on "Love Watches" at the Vitagraph Studio not long ago. It was suggested that they might like to have a picture taken of themselves with Miss Griffith. But they explained that this could not be done, as it would ruin them politically in their own country, as both were princes and one was to become Sultan of Siboland, a Moroccan division in about five months.

Harry T. Morey, Vitagraph star, has just been made a member of the Lambs Club. He is now finishing work on "The King of Diamonds," with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, and Paul Scardon as his director.

Tully Marshall, as a moving picture director, in "We Can't Have Everything" is one of the hits of the production. West Coast people who know say that he has burlesqued the mannerisms of both De Mille and Griffith in his direction of a "harem scene" from the picture within the picture, the title of which is probably "Saved from the Harem," or some such thing. Any way, the result is a scream.

Jack Kerrigan is learning to play an accordion, not only because a scene from his new picture, "The Swamper," calls for it, but because he doesn't want a look of agony on the faces of all the other actors when he does it. Lois Wilson, who has already played opposite Mr. Kerrigan in seven pictures, is again his leading woman.

Roy Sommerville has been accused with perfect justice of flooding the picture market of late. Within the last few months six of his pictures have become current releases, among them are "The Danger Game," "Our Little Wife," "The Mysterious Client." At present he has in production a world feature for Carlyle Blackwell, a Pathe feature for Irene Castle, a comedy for Nat Goodwin, a series of comedies for A. M. Kennedy, of the Kennedy Theatres, Inc., the sixth episode of a Pearl White serial, a continuity for Lillian Walker. We won't mention a vaudeville sketch or two, some magazine stories, and lyrics for two musical comedies. Some one has suggested that Mr. Sommerville has learned to use the typewriter with his toes so that he can operate two machines at once.

Syn de Conde, the young Brazilian, who registered so strongly as the Apache lover of Nazimova, will support Pauline Frederick in her next picture, "Paid in Full."

Now that Mme. Petrova has returned from her successful tour of the United States in the interest of the War Savings campaign, we shall hope to hear that she will soon resume her career in pictures. The suit and gown which she wore on her trip were given to the Seattle Red Cross to be sold to raise money for the organization.

Bill Bailey, one of our best known "villains" is cast as such in Mr. Blackton's new war play, "The Common Cause." A blonde villain such as he would be particularly effective with a dark-haired heroine such as Sylvia Breamer.

"Sue," adapted from Bret Harte's story, "The Judgment of Bolinas Plain," will be Bessie Love's first picture for Vitagraph. The original play was produced in New York about twenty years ago, with Annie Russell as star. David Smith will direct the picture.

Gail Kane has started on her second production. It is called "The Dare Devil," and was written by Marion Thompson Davies, Francis Grandon is directing it.

It will be necessary to open a colemn under the heading, "Congratulations," if many more of the prominent film stars announce their engagements or marriages. Last week it was Marguerite Clark's engagement to a real millionaire, this week it is Beverly Bayne's marriage to

Marin Sais, with Sessue Hayakawa, In "His Birthright," Haworth-Mutual Production

Francis X. Bushman, Gladys Brockwell's marriage to Harry Edwards, and Alma Rubens marriage to Franklyn Farnum. Our felicitations are extended.

The little log cabin built on the Goldwyn "lot" for Madge Kennedy's picture, "Friend Husband," has proved a delightful place in which to have luncheon these hot days, as it is on the top of a slight elevation, and gets all the breezes that blow through its lack of a fourth side.

Bebe Daniels, Harold Lloyd's leading lady, has quite a stage record. She is seventeen years old, and has been in the profession seventeen years. She was born in Dallas, Texas, and started on the road in her father's company when she was ten weeks old.

A message for Alice La Monte has been left in this office. Will any one who knows where she is ask her to get in touch with us so that we can give it to her?

Bert Lytell is another player to turn scenario writer. He has just written and sold one to Metro. It is as yet unnamed, but will follow "Faith" in time of production.

A note from Director William Parke stamped Logan, West Virginia, proves that Educational are forging into the wilderness to get the right material for their big coal picture, "When the Giant Wakes." Mr. Parke is director-general for this production. He casually explains that his letter is undated because he doesn't know the date, so far is he from civilization.

Apologies are in order for two of last week's items. The first goes to Maude Turner Gordon, whose name was twisted into Mabel Turner Gordon by mistake. Realizing how irritating it is to have one's perfectly good name tampered with we extend our most sincere regrets, and repeat that Maude Turner Gordon is to be congratulated upon the delightful type of society matron which she has given to the screen in so many splendid performances. Her next we hear is to be with Billie Burke. The other apology goes to Tony Merlo, who because of a typographical error appeared at Tony Cerlo. We repeat that he is a master of make-up. For proof see him as an Arab in the World picture, "The Unveiling Hand."

The "thinnest woman on the screen," otherwise "Spike" Rankin, pulled some of the heartiest laughs in Charles Ray's last picture. "The Nine O'Clock Town." Her five feet seven height and her 92 pounds weight added greatly to the joy of many Rialto audiences.

Jack Sherrill, of all people at Saranac Lake! But cheer up, girls, he is merely up there for exteriors in the Frohman Amusement Corporation picture, "Once to Every Man."

That Louise Huff can boast of a baby of her own, age three years, will be a surprise to film fans who think of her only as Jack Pickford's co-star in juvenile romances. Moreover, Miss Huff is proud of the fact and quite willing to admit it, since she knows that her real friends will be glad to know it.

Joseph Lertora, not content with a season's success in "Going Up," will continue his aerial career in a new propaganda picture, "En L'Air." Almost at the same time he will begin rehearsing for a new musical comedy, "Glorianna," as Elearnor Painter's leading man.

Arvid Gilstrom, whose career as a director of comedies has been most successful, will handle the Lee children for William Fox in their next picture. With his keen knowledge of comedy values and their quick response to suggestion the result should be interesting.

As Geraldine Farrar sped westward toward Cody, Wyoming, she was entertained by seeing her first Goldwyn picture, "The Turn of the Wheel," projected on the wall of her drawing room. A little later she received a wire of congratulation from her fellow stars at the Goldwyn studio, who had just viewed it in the projection room at Fort Lee.

Peggy Adams, who recently starred in "The Spirit of the Red Cross," is featured in the second Paramount-Flagg comedy, "Romance and Brass Tacks." These comedies may develop into a Peggy series as the first featured Peggy Hopkins remembered in "Woman and the Law."

"Friend Husband"
(Goldwyn—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

MADGE KENNEDY goes back to the farce she does so well in "Friend Husband," an original photoplay written for her by Lois Zellner and produced under the direction of Clarence Badger. Miss Zellner's farce contains an array of capital situations which, under the skill of Miss Kennedy and her director, become veritable fountains of comedy. The principal protagonist of the merry little story in one Dorothy Dean, who has "ideas" and so is naturally dangerous. She doesn't like the thought of marriage but when she is obliged to secure a husband or lose a fortune she decides to make the best of the game and as a consequence grabs the first person in trousers, which happens to be Don Morton. And Don, very naturally and for the purposes of the farce, falls in love with Dorothy and insists on it being a marriage of love and not of convenience.

It is a simple story and one which requires no great amount of mental arithmetic to determine just how it is going to wind up. However, Miss Kennedy's ability to make the most of a farcical situation, and some exceptionally bright subtitles, make the whole thing enjoyable. No opportunities have been passed up and the least one can say is that the expected happens in an unexpected fashion. As a result "Friend Husband" may take rank with the best of Miss Kennedy's pictures to date and this includes all the adaptations she has appeared in. In fact "Friend Husband" is so expertly handled and finished that it might very well have been taken from one of Miss Mayo's works for the stage—from one of her best ones, that is.

Rockliffe Fellowes was a happy selection for the part of Don Morton. He, too, has a reliable knowledge of farce values and with his contagious smile makes a huge success of his role. George Bunny does a good piece of comedy work as Judge Roan, while William Davidson and Jean Armour complete the cast.

The picture reveals a number of pretty exteriors while all the scenes are excellently photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dorothy Dean (Madge Kennedy) doesn't like the idea of marrying and settling down to domestic life. Her aunt's will, however, stipulates that she take a husband before she receives her share of the fortune. So she hits upon Don Morton (Rockliffe Fellowes), the law clerk in the office of Judge Roan (George Bunny), the family adviser. And so they are married. And Don falls in love with Dorothy and insists upon accompanying her on her "honeymoon." She ejects him from her room, but undaunted, he kidnaps her and carries her to a distant island the next day. Even this proximity appears to have no effect on Dorothy, so Don leaves the island. In his absence four burglars appear. Dorothy thinks they have been sent by Don and makes it known that she is quite familiar with the whole frame-up. Don, however, has seen the men set out for the island and following, he arrives just in time to save Dorothy from them. He battles with all four and emerges victorious but wounded. The posse arrives to take the remains of the gunmen away and Dorothy is last seen in Don's arms.

"The Price of Applause"
(Triangle—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

ONCE again we have an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story, "The Price of Applause," springing from the combined talents of Nina Wilcox Putnam and Norman Jacobsen. It is a war story of a different type than the usual heroic, hurrah plot that is so plentiful in its various disguises these days that it is becoming commonplace. Its central figure is a poet of New York's Bohemia, in whose ears the plaudits of his friends ring and resound. That is previous to the war. The war, however, dims this poet. Like other individuals he is buried in the war news. And so to get back some of that applause that was so dear to him he enlists—and proves a coward. He is reported dead. His poems are published and draw the attention of the world. And then he endeavors to come back and claim this applause. Of course he fails to do so and death shows him the way out.

This story has many interesting turns and has been handled well in its development. Folks who insist on the saccharine even in these days of sugar shortage will dislike the ending, we suppose. Death should not be the hero's end. But then Karl is not a hero and the story is, after all, very human in its analysis of his character. It should provide most acceptable entertainment for those who are at all discriminating in their views.

It is a well produced offering, the direction having been handled by Thomas N. Heffron from a scenario by Doris Schroeder. Jack Livingston gives a realistic portrayal of the poet and the support includes Claire Anderson, Joe King and Walt Whitman.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

In New York's Bohemia, before the war, Karl (Jack Livingston) lives on the applause he nightly receives from patrons of a cafe. He is the idol of the place. He is engaged to Amy (Claire Anderson), who adores him more than anyone else. When the war breaks his popularity begins to fade. The night after the sinking of the Lusitania, he is relegated to the background entirely until, fired by a desire to again receive the plaudits of his friends, he announces his intention of enlisting in the British Army. His friend Marcarson (Joe King) immediately declares his intention of joining him. And Karl is again the idol. But he dreads the prospect of service and only keeps his word because of Marcarson. Before leaving, Amy marries him. Then comes an hour of terrible suspense waiting for the signal to go over the top. And over Karl goes, running madly. At last, unable to stand it longer, he drops to the earth. Later he crawls about and looks around. His company is far ahead. On the impulse of the moment he changes places with a dead man, a man whose face is mutilated beyond recognition. He even changes identification tags. Then he is made a prisoner and sent to a German camp. And here he learns, after months of toil, that his poems have been collected and published and that they are stirring the world. Again hearing the applause ringing in his ears, he determines to go back and claim it. He escapes and eventually lands in America. Scarred and wasted, no one recognizes him, not even Amy, now married again. A lie he once told, which meant much to her and which he does not confirm after the passing years, convinces her that he is not Karl. Professor Arnold (Walt Whitman), his old tutor, is the only one who takes him for himself. He tells him that to reappear a coward would be to kill the applause he desires. Realizing the truth of this, Karl, who by chance is led to the meeting place of German spies, kills himself and the spies by dashing a bomb to the floor.

"All Man"
(Vitagraph—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE melodramatic has been brought to the front with a bang by the author of Vitagraph's latest photodrama, starring Harry Morey. And Director Paul Scardon has followed the author's ideas in generalities but not always in detail. The manner in which Director Scardon had Mr. Morey, as John Olsen, a safe breaker, openly and aboveboard, carry out his work of "a second-story man" is at times so obviously without the cunning that such a person is supposed to and does possess, that the action in these scenes loses a certain convincing punch that would have been felt had Director Scardon taken a little more pains and figured out a more subtle way to put over these scenes.

Donn Byrne wrote the story and he has penned the brand that the public in general welcomes with open arms. For about three and a half reels Mr. Byrne worked with the finished touch of one who understands the finer points of picture-play writing, but his work starts to tumble along about this time, and from this point until the end anything might be expected and everything comes. Why he should have introduced a million and one episodes after he had moved John Olsen to Long Island isn't at all clear, unless it were for the purpose of making five reels of pictures. But he certainly has introduced us to a lot of unnecessary detail in the final reels. Olsen is a crook one minute and a most contented farmer the next. At the convenient time his wife leaves him, because Olsen's friend, the detective, suddenly loses all power of cunningness and "spills the beans," as the sub-title very aptly puts it.

But even with these failings, "All Man" is the kind they like. It has the old melodramatic swing to it and grips. Harry Morey puts over the part of the safe-breaker with a punch in either hand. It is the kind of role that our friend Morey can handle to perfection. He makes it a living part.

Betty Blythe is again seen as Mr. Morey's leading lady, and she does the most finished bit of work we have yet seen her do in Vitagraph pictures. As the semi-tough girl and pal of the secondstory gang she gives a finished bit of work. Bob Gaillard seems destined to follow in the footsteps of the plain-clothes man. George Majeroni, a new member of the Vitagraph stock, is good in a semi-heavy role. Carleton King makes an ideal tough guy and his work is commendable. Bernard Siegel has a character part. A little girl seen in the last reel, in the role of Olsen's wife, gives promise of better things.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Olsen (Harry Morey) is foreman of an iron foundry. Marco Paroni (George Majeroni) a new "hand" at the foundry, suggests to Olsen that there are easier ways of getting money than working for it. Olsen falls in with his plans, and together they loot the safe of their employer. Olsen meets with an accident when he blows the safe, and his pals take him to the home of Belle Foliot (Betty Blythe), wife of a crook. Olsen is nursed back to health by Belle, and they fall in love. From this out they work together.

After his recovery, Olsen and Belle stage a robbery, and are caught in the act. To save Belle, Olsen gives himself up, and is sent "up the river" for five years. At the expiration of his time he returns, looks up Belle, and tells her that he is "going straight." He goes to Long Island, and settles down as a farmer. Later the detective, Lieut. O'Rielly (Bob Gaillard), visits him, and unconsciously lets drop the news that Olsen is a former jail-bird. Olsen's wife leaves him. Olsen decides to return to the old life. He is at work on a job when he is surprised by the detective and Belle. The detective consents to "forget the matter" if he and Belle will leave the country and go straight.

"A Fight for Millions"

(Vitagraph Serial—Fourth and Fifth Episodes)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"THE PRECIPICE OF HORROR," the fourth episode of Vitagraph's new serial, "A Fight for Millions," directed by and starring William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan in chief support, continues the same actionable drama that has characterized the initial episodes. There is no distinct thrill in this episode, the reelage presenting long chases over mountainous country and ending with a promised thrill for the next chapter, "The Path of Thrills," the fifth installment.

The punch of "The Path of Thrills" is when the heroine, Jean Benton (Edith Johnson) jumps from a high cliff, using an umbrella as a parachute. Iron Star, the Indian character, is prominent in this episode and he gives some fine exhibitions of horsemanship. Iron Star can ride anything "with hair on it," as they say in the West, and can do most anything with a horse. Action every minute—this is a brief summary of these two episodes. You have no time to pick defects in the plot or construction of the story.

"Alias Mary Brown"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"ALIAS MARY BROWN," written by E. Magnus Ingleton, and directed by H. D'Elba, with Pauline Starke and Casson Furgesson, is an underworld melodrama that should prove successful. Fine performances are given by the two leading players, and Mrs. Ingleton's work, as author and scenarioist, reveals her at her best. The melodrama is well built and contains a fine amount of suspense. The case of the hero and heroine is never certain until the last. One constantly fears for their safety and as a result the interest is thoroughly maintained throughout the picture. The author has also introduced considerable comedy. Mr. Furgesson is called upon to dress as a girl a number of times and the situations resulting from this transformation serve both to amuse and to sustain the force of the particular situation.

Miss Starke, a player of unusual promise, who has already demonstrated that she has an option on a prominent place in stardom, appears to excellent advantage as Betty. While her role is by no means as prominent as that carried by her co-worker, she plays so naturally and to such good effect that her influence is at all times felt. Mr. Furgesson as Dick Browning, alias Mary Brown, does some sincere and skilful work. Eugene Burr and Dick Rosson also have prominent parts which they handle advantageously.

D'Elba's direction is most satisfactory. He seems to be more at home in the underworld than he is in high society, that is pictorially speaking. The atmosphere of the picture is at all times realistic, while he has succeeded in communicating all the tenseness, the prettiness and the humor of Mrs. Ingleton's story.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dick Browning (Casson Furgesson) loses his parents because of a dishonest group of financiers. His father dies from the strain of battling them in the market and his mother goes soon afterwards. Embittered, Dick joins a gang of crooks. Betty (Pauline Starke), ward of one of the men who causes the trouble in the Browning family, leaves home because of the cruelty of her guardian. She meets Dick, who realizes that she is helpless, and cares for her. The three financiers are made to pay for their cruelty. In one way or another Dick gets his vengeance on them. His last job is to avenge himself on Betty's guardian. Watson (Eugene Burr), a jealous member of the gang, plans to betray him into the hands of the police, but through the services of the Weasel (Dick Rosson), Dick's admirer, Watson is himself captured by the police while Dick and Betty depart for the West, there to begin life anew.

"Wild Primrose"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

GLADYS LESLIE'S work appears to be improving with each picture. Her portrayal of the title part in "Wild Primrose" is quite the most meritorious thing about the production—and we doubt not that it would have been equally as noticeable had the rest of the picture reached a little higher level. For "Wild Primrose" is quite an artificial picture from its plot to its various characterizations. There is an impossible grande dame, an impossible lady of the cabarets, an utter weakling of a hero and a stiff and studied father. These artificialities can be traced in various directions but the fault seems to lie chiefly with the director. None of the cast, with the exception of Miss Leslie, makes a natural move, or so it seems. "Wild Primrose" is in fact an old-fashioned melodrama handled in an equally old-fashioned way.

But to get back to the enjoyable Miss Leslie. Some New York daily newspaper critic was once quoted extensively because he said she was possessed of a "million dollar smile," which is true as far as it goes. But, one may rise to ask, why limit this flattering term to her smile? Smile, in the accepted sense of the word, covers only the mouth. Miss Leslie smiles with her eyes and with a toss of her pretty blonde head just as much as she does by the mere commonplace process of parting her lips. She is one of the most attractive ingenues on the screen and possesses that most valued attribute of all ingenues—an air of freshness, of youth and of sincerity that is quite irresistible.

Her support in "Wild Primrose" includes Richard Barthelmess as leading man, with Eulalie Jensen, Claude Gillingwater, Ann Warrington, Charles Kent, Arthur Lewis and Bigelow Cooper filling the other principal roles.

Joseph Franklin Poland wrote the story for this picture while the direction was in charge of Fred Thomson.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Primrose (Gladys Leslie) has been brought up by her uncle (Charles Kent) in the South. Her mother and father had separated in her early life, the latter, Standish (Claude Gillingwater), having married again. This had broken her mother's heart and she had died. Standish desires his daughter to come and live with him and Primrose, first loathing the thought of it, finally accepts when she learns that her father and his new wife (Ann Warrington) expect an uncouth girl. She plays the part and arrives in the city accompanied by a flow of bad English and a generally awkward makeup. Her stepmother's son, Jack (Richard Barthelmess), by her first husband, is a wild youngster, having succeeded in marrying Marie (Eulalie Jensen), a lady of the cabarets, one night when he was drunk. Constant demands for money drive him almost mad. Primrose works her way into the household, gradually reforming Jack and softening the heart of her father. He is in sore financial straits and even his wife's suggestions that Primrose marry Newton (Bigelow Cooper) meets with violent disapproval from Primrose. The climax arrives when Primrose reveals herself in her true colors, and when Marie presents herself at the Standish house, demanding funds. The combination secretary and butler recognizes her as his runaway wife so her claim on Jack is nil. Standish is able to meet his debts by borrowing a mere half million from Primrose's five-million-dollar estate, and so everyone is happy.

"The Border Legion"

(T. Hayes Hunter Production—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE BORDER LEGION," produced by T. Hayes Hunter from one of Zane Grey's novels, is significant in that it marks Blanche Bates' bow to picture audiences. Miss Bates, for a long time one of the prominent figures on the speaking stage appears as Joan Randall, a girl of the West. Joan is the center of a raging storm throughout the six reels. Men battle, shoot and kill for her sake and finally the cause of virtue triumphs. Miss Bates was hardly the actress to assume such a role, and in towns where the public is not familiar with her name and looks for an appealing player in such a part, her debut will not be considered anything thrilling. The closeups are not kind to her and the fresh appeal of youth is not hers.

This particular work of Mr. Grey's is roaring melodrama dealing with primeval emotions. As a story it contained good possibilities for a picture and yet Mr. Hunter's production often misses. It can be improved considerably if the present selection of subtitles are removed and others substituted. The audience at the Strand one afternoon last week gave many of them the laugh. For instance, when Jack Kells, after making a violent, personal attack on Joan, which the latter resists with a bullet, tells her a few moments later when his gang of cut-throats arrives to kill herself if anything happens to him, a rather comical paradox is created. A number of the others are out of tune with the action. Mr. Hunter has followed old style methods with respect to his handling of the details of production.

Miss Bates receives good support from Hobart Bosworth, who plays the role of the brute, Kells. Eugene Strong makes a fair hero while others are Horace Morgan, Russell Simpson, Arthur Morrison, Bull Montana, Richard Souzade and Kate Elmore.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Joan Randall (Blanche Bates) breaks her engagement with Jim Cleeve (Eugene Strong), because of his cowardice and laziness. Stung by this, Jim hits out and joins a gang of hold-up men known as the Border Legion. Jack Kells (Hobart Bosworth), their leader, is the worst brute of them all. Joan relents when she discovers to what lengths Jim has gone in his remorse and follows after. She is captured by Kells, who takes her to his cabin and attacks her. She shoots him, but stays to nurse him when she sees how helpless he is. This changes him, and he becomes more of a man. When the rest of the gang arrives he sends her to the attic. They discover, however, that he has a woman in his cabin, and demand that she be turned over to them. They give him time in which to decide. Jim, as the only loyal adherent of Kells, is commissioned to shoot the leader of the insurgent members of the gang. Joan escapes from the attic, and, coming upon Jim, pleads with him to help her escape. Together they ride away from the members of the Legion. The rebels discover the escape, and tell Kells of it. Furious, he leads his men after the fugitives. He overtakes them first. But once more Joan's pleadings change him, and he turns to defend the lovers from the pursuers. He is killed in so doing. Joan and Jim are saved by the arrival of a rescue party from the village.

TWEDE-DAN is making strides forward as a Jester comedian with as much speed and thoroughness as the Allies are chasing the Huns back to a good hiding place. Just to sit through his latest laugh-maker, "Oh, What a Day," is sufficient proof of that fact.

There is little doubt that "O, What a Day" will be looked upon by exhibitors and public as the best of the Jester series of comedies yet turned out. It has action which does not allow the interest to lag, and it has an added interest in the possession of a good comedy plot which needs only a few more sub-titles to make the story more emphasized. These titles will no doubt be inserted.

The story concerns a young man employed in an office whose boss is the common garden variety of tight-wad and kill-joy. But, before speaking further of the hero, it would be well to say that his best girl works in an office across the way. It is Saturday night (closing time) and Twede-Dan has asked Nilde Babette to take a jaunt to the beach with him on Sunday in his car. Does she refuse? Hardly. But the hard-nut boss adds drama to the situation by telling his hard-working slave that he labors Sunday to catch up with his work, which, by the looks of his desk, needed a little attention. Discouraged, the hero sinks his head in despair upon his arm, and is soon fast asleep at the desk. What follows is supposed to be a dream, and leads from the start of the proposed outing to the finish of said day. There is auto stuff, seaside stuff and other things necessary to comedy The reel ends with the hero being awakened to find himself knee-deep in water in his office, having turned on the faucet before he went to sleep to wash his hands.

"A Fight for Millions"

(Vitagraph—Sixth Episode)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THIS number of Vitagraph's serial entitled "The Spell of Evil" depends on the melodramatic tone of the action for thrills rather than on sensational feats of daring which have been features of the preceding chapters. The first scenes of the two reels are characterized by some striking scenes of falling snow—real treats in these torrid days. The action centres on the chase of Hardy and Hyde after Jacob Lawless who has Jean in his power. Lawless bribes an Indian medicine man to concoct certain fumes that will cast Jean in a trance. While under their influence she agrees to everything suggested by Lawless and of course he suggests that they get married. While they are in the minister's house they are overtaken by Hardy. The best man, Iron Star, loses the ring and while a search is being made for it Lawless is snatched from Jean's side, dragged through the door and made captive. The preparations for the wedding and the marriage ceremony in so far as it is carried through are episodes handled with consummate skill from the standpoint of the serial director.

"Merely Players"

OSCAR APFEL has brought about a big change for the better in the quality of the program pictures he has turned out for the World program. Recently, he has been directing Kitty Gordon. The one who is unable to note a decided improvement in her acting, in the quality of production, and in the finer details that always stand for careful direction—that one is either prejudiced or pretty dense.

The latest work to come from Director Apfel, is a screen version of L. Case Russell's "Merely Players" and it represents a corking good program offering from every angle. The authoress has done quite some work for the screen but none of her work, seen previously, presents a more striking example of careful plot construction and worthwhile photodramatic material from which to build, than "Merely Players." She has taken a phase of the theatrical profession that has been hitherto untouched with the same degree of originality as is noticeable in Mrs. Russell's work. She takes the dramatic critic of the city daily and around him and his work and its effect on a prominent society matron interested in amateur theatricals, she has builded a story that is of more than passing interest. Here and there throughout the story, she has sprung a mild surprise in the turing of her plot and in the climax, she has registered a punch that has all the effects of a prize-ring knockout.

First of all, a good story was presented Director Apfel. He not alone rested content with the good script that was handed him but he greatly heightened its dramatic worth by an effective detail here and one there with the result that a program feature that can enter the lists with any of them has been delivered to the World exchanges. Director Apfel is strong on detail, on atmosphere and on careful production. His work with this production represents quality. When he yelleed "lights" at the beginning of a scene during the building of this picture, he had every detail registering and the sets that he has used are "fit for a king."

A great improvement is noticed in Kitty Gordon's work since she came under the direction of Mr. Apfel. He has made her lay more emphasis on her acting than her poses, which she was inclined to favor. In "Merely Players" Miss Gordon's work stands out with all prominence. She has in support a most capable cast of players. Irving Cummings in the leading man's part, is not called upon to register any strenuous dramatics but has a free-and-easy role that falls for natural poise and grace. George McQuarrie in one of his character roles gives to his part all the prominence that is due. Muriel Ostriche in the ingenue role is given prominence and never fails to make the most of a right good part. Johnnie Hines' smile and light comedy work would have been greatly missed. Johnnie can take rank with some of our best light comedians. Pinna Nesbit is given a semi-vampire role and registers in a not-too-prominent role. Florence Coventry and Dore Davidson have minor roles. Lucien Tainguy got some effective work in with his camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nadine Trent (Kitty Gordon) is a wealthy widow, interested in amateur theatricals. Her protege, Vera Seynave (Muriel Ostriche), is the daughter of a seamstress. Nadine succeeds in interesting a producer in giving Vera an opportunity to show her worth as an actress.

Nadine is preparing to give a performance of "Cleopatra," and invites Rodney Gale (Irving Cummings), dramatic critic on a daily, to review the performance. He criticises her work adversely, and tells Nadine that she will never make an actress because "she has not lived, and therefore cannot feel."

Vera is given her opportunity to appear behind the footlights. Rodney reviews the show and ridicules her performance in his criticism. Vera is discouraged, and attempts to take her life by gas. She is discovered and saved. Nadine flays Rodney for his cruel treatment of Vera.

Hollis Foster (George MacQuarrie) loves Nadine. His wife, Maude Foster (Pinna Nesbit), is in love with Rodney. He is seen at Nadine's home frequently, but Nadine gives him little encouragement. Sammy Meyers (Johnnie Hines), a grocer's clerk, is in love with Vera. He decides he should do his bit for his country and enlists. He returns to Vera in his uniform, and they are married. Mrs. Hollis becomes jealous of Rodney's attentions to Nadine, and arranges a meeting at Nadine's home. Nadine tells her that if she will be present at a certain time she will prove to her that her husband loves only her (Nadine's) money. Hollis keeps the engagement, and later Rodney appears. Maude shows him Nadine and her husband together. They are making violent love. After Rodney has rushed into the scene, the curtains close and the "actors" are surprised to find that they have been giving a performance in amateur theatricals.

"Doing Their Bit"

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE LEE KIDS have been given a little bit more than they can conveniently handle in their latest starring vehicle, "Doing Their Bit." The story given them is a combination of everything from the war drama to the romantic. There are some good bits in this offering but it is too "heavy" for the Baby Grands. They try hard to do the "man's" work that has been given them and in places they spring some real surprises. The main fault with this offering lies in the fact that the majority of their admirers will find it hard to convince themselves that the Lee Kids could "by hook or crook" fully appreciate what they are doing. In short, Keenan Buel who wrote and directed this offering, has overestimated the ability of his little charges. He has placed before them a task that many a grown-up would shun, not from fright, but from the realization that the task is beyond their power.

The Patriotic element, which is played up strong in "Doing Their Bit" will go a good ways toward putting this offering over. The intentions of the author are commendable but his execution of same cannot be said to be the most efficacious. Throughout the run, situations are forced, one after the other, until at the end most every brand of plotting and counterplotting, has been introduced. From one episode to the other, the author has skipped paying little attention, if any, to logical sequence and never taking into consideration the fact that he has children to deal with and not grown-ups.

But the Lee Kids have a large following and their admirers are not going to let technicalities come between them. The Kids are admired for their cleverness and ability. If an author presumes to step in and give them a story that is improbable and far-fetched, why should they suffer. They won't. They do their bit in this picture and they are going to get full credit for same.

Franklyn Hanna, Gertrude LeBrandt, Alex Hall, Kate Lesser, William Pollard, Aimee Abbott, R. R. Neill and Edwin Sturgis are seen in support. The photography and lighting are done well. Director Buel has given "Doing Their Bit" a good production.

"Winning Grandma"

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, Sambo, the little negro boy whose smile and unconscious humor have added a good bit to the little star's successes, and a typical Baby Marie story, all do their bit toward making "Winning Grandma," a Baby Marie success. Bertram George wrote the story and Clara S. Beranger made the adaptation. William Bertram directed.

"Winning Grandma" is light in construction and presents none of the heavy drama that has been given the little star on a number of occasions. It is a typical kid picture and offers only those situations which a child of Baby Marie's age is supposed to appreciate. She goes through the scenes with ease and unconsciously puts over some good bits of acting. As per usual, Director Bertram has selected some beautiful exteriors for his production and the authoress has provided numerous opportunities for him to take his little charge in the open and surround her with Nature's beauty.

A little mystery trails along with the more obvious thereby sustaining just the right amount of suspense to the climax. The story has been constructed, obviously, to play up the strong qualities of Baby Marie. The authoress has succeeded in doing this with the result that the public is given a Baby Marie Osborne picture that is above the general average maintained by the little star's productions.

Morris Foster is seen in the role of the father, and Ruth King in the role of the mother, presents a pretty picture and gets over some good work. William Quinn in the role of the villain is good. The photography and lighting have been well done.

Hodkinson Releases Lillian Walker Films

With the addition to its service of Lillian Walker Productions, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation makes good its recent statement that they would release one picture a week comencing September 1. This announcement, following on the heels of the addition of Jesse D. Hampton productions, makes five sections of Hodkinson Service.

In additioi to the new series of eight Lillian Walker productions, Hodkinson Service consists of J. Warren Kerrigan in Hampton pictures, Anita King and Kathleen Clifford in Plaza pictures; Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum and Henry B. Walthall in Paralta Plays, and the Douglas Natural Color films, the first production of which is "Cupid Angling" with Ruth Roland.

"The Embarrassment of Riches" will be the first release, scheduled for September 23. Louis K. Anspacher is responsible for the story, which is nearing completion at the Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle.

Universalites Seek Recreation in Autos

Jumping into your automobile not knowing where you are going, and leaving no address except the license number on your car, seems to be the popular form of vacationing effected by Universal officials this season. R. H. Cochrane started the ball a-rolling by buying a new car, and setting sail over a month ago with no particular destination in view, and all means of communication cut off. Joe Brandt, also in a machine, and with movements equally camouflaged, started out two weeks ago. Hal Hodes, who handles publicity for the Big U, after an extended course of lessons at a correspondence school in the best method to drive a flivver, invested in one of the latest models in tin Lizzies, and followed Mr. Cochrane's example.

Joe Brandt, however, is the first of the tourists to return to the office. He reports a delightful tour of ten days.

THE SAME SCENE BEING PHOTOGRAPHED TODAY BY THE BUNKCRAFT FEATURE FILM CO.

Ralph Ince Proves Versatility

Just take a glance at the two cartoons on this page, squinting at the one at the top of the page before looking at the other, and you will probably come to the conclusion that Ralph Ince missed his calling by becoming a director instead of a cartoonist.

Anyway, it seems he can do one almost as well as the other, and the fact remains that he does both exceptionally well.

There is not a producer in the field, or any of his employees, who will fail to grasp the humor of these cartoons, which might well be labeled "Before and After."

New Griffith Film Nears Finish

D. W. Griffith will require at least two more weeks for the filming of his second Artcraft subject which has been named "A Romance of Happy Valley." Besides Lillian Gish and Robert Harron, an important character part is taken by George Fawcett. Every scene for this subject, as with "The Great Love," is being directed personally by Mr. Griffith.

Industrial Production

The Woman's Land Army of Trenton, N. J., has had a motion picture made under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of Universal Film Mfg. Company, showing their activities while the man-power of the country is being mobilized to fight, build ships and make munitions. The picture will be used by the Land Army as propaganda.

World Players Return

After an absence of several months from World Pictures, Rosina Henley and Kate Lester are again at work at the studio at Fort Lee. They are cast for important roles in "The Millionth Chance," which Dell Henderson is directing with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley starred.

Racine Theatres Are Not Affected by the Draft

THE DRAFT, felt as heavy in Racine, or heavier, than in any city of its size in the middle west, has affected the attendance at motion picture theatres but slightly.

The greater portion of the motion picture patrons have always been men, at least in this city, and most likely the same applies elsewhere, especially in the afternoon, and therefore, daytime performances have been, of course, affected the least of all.

It has been remarked by theatre managers in Racine that the early evening shows, to which formerly came the young men with their best girls, that the male element is peculiarly lacking, that is, in quantity. Middle-aged men are not steady patrons of motion pictures, although rapidly becoming such, and so mere boys, girls in couples, and older women constitute the attendance in the evening.

Perhaps the performances which feel the loss of Racine's younger manhood through the draft are the late evening shows, the ones which drew their audiences to some extent from young men who had something else to do earlier and were wont to top off the evening by viewing a good picture. These late performances are really the only ones appreciably affected by the draft, and what applies for Racine should certainly apply for every other city of its size, for this city has sent three thousand volunteers to war, in addition to extremely heavy draft quotas.

Summary of the Funkhouser Findings

THE DECISION which ousted Major Funkhouser as Second Deputy of Police and film censor in Chicago, news of which was published last week in Motion Picture News, is as follows:

"The commission heard the evidence offered, and having considered all the evidence adduced herein, we find therefrom that the said M. L. C. Funkhouser is guilty as charged in the within and foregoing charges:

"We, therefore, order that the said M. L. C. Funkhouser be discharged from the office or position of Second Deputy Superintendent of Police, Department of Police and from the service of the City of Chicago."

At the offices of the civil service commission, it was said that the three commissioners who sat in the case, Charles E. Frazier, president, Joseph P. Geary and Alexander J. Johnson, concurred in the findings without argument or dispute over a single point.

"We heard the case, and this is the result of our best judgment," was all Mr. Frazier had to say.

The principal charges against Maj. Funkhouser were: Neglect of duty, inefficiency, failure to carry out orders, misconduct, mishandling of the motion picture censorship, "shadowing" of Chief Schuettler and several prominent citizens and failure to "Clean Up" vice.

The hearing started exactly a month after the Major's suspension and lasted five weeks. The commission refused to hear closing arguments.

Manager Fay, of the Temple Theatre, Elgin, Illinois

Fay Manages Temple Theatre in Elgin

CHANGE in the management of the Temple theatre, Elgin, rumored so many times and denied previously, was officially announced with retirement on Saturday, July 27, of Manager Frank Vanston.

It is understood that the deal went through two weeks before hand, but, while the old management gradually let down responsibilities and the new manager, William M. Fay took them up, no authoritative information was given out of the change.

Manager Vanston's retirement was augmented by the departure of one son, Wellington Vanston, for Camp Grant, and by the liability of the other, Lamont Vanston, to the late summer draft call. The two have helped him with music and exchange, and Mrs. Vanston has aided in the ticket office. Poor health of Mr. and Mrs. Vanston is in part also responsible for their retirement. Mr. Vanston made a statement that he would take a rest from active business for a while, but had new work in view for the future.

Mr. Vanston purchased the Temple ten years ago from the Thielen circuit, and has had a most prosperous and successful ownership thereof. He has been a courteous and obliging manager, and his business associations of every sort have placed him prominent in Elgin commercial activity.

Manager Fay takes his first turn at the wheel of the Good Ship theatre with his assuming the Temple management. He is a former Elgin resident who has been for a number of years in the West. His health made necessary the giving up of the ownership of a saw mill there, and Elgin relatives persuaded him to come back home.

What's New in Peoria?

FOR THE first time in its history the Apollo theatre of Peoria, suspended the sale of tickets owing to such an enormous crowd that the management was unable to handle all who sought admittance. This crowd thronged to see "The Unbeliever" which had a showing at the theatre the forepart of the week, beginning Sunday, July 28. While attendances at all shows were unusually large the evening attendances were almost unmanageable.

Dee Robinson, manager of the theatre, took special care to see that this picture went off well. An Edison phonograph, in the lobby, kept up patriotic airs, and there was an abundance of patriotic emblems within the theatre. Marine recruiting banners, also were displayed on either side of the screen.

The Judge Brown comedies which are being shown at the Hippodrome theatre, continue to be popular not only with the younger picture fans but the fathers and mothers as well. The last one shown was "I'm a Man."

Jane and Katherine Lee were at the Princess theatre, Friday, in "American Buds," and because of their many friends in Peoria the Princess had a record attendance.

"The Yellow Ticket" is having quite a run in Peoria. It was shown both at the Lyceum and Columbia theatres during the same week.

Charles Bryant in "Twenty-One," featured the bill at the Columbia theatre, the first of the month. Although his face is not very familiar in Peoria he is gaining much favor with motion picture patrons.

Ivan Abramson's great propaganda play, "One Law for Both," was shown at the Empress theatre the first of the week, beginning July 28. This was followed by "The Golden Wall."

The Duchess program for three days, beginning with August 2, was featured by Gloria Swanson in "Everybody's Husband."

Greiver Sells Stock to Lee Herz

THE REORGANIZATION of Greiver and Herz Film Exchange, Consumers Building, was effected last week when S. B. Greiver, president of the concern, withdrew and disposed of his stock to Lee Herz, junior member of the firm.

Mr. Herz has succeeded the retiring president, and has announced that there will be no change in the policy which has governed the activities of the company.

Governed by the arrangements which resulted in the withdrawal of Mr. Greiver, the film exchange will hereafter be known under its corporate name of Silee Film Exchange.

Mr. Herz states that he will in the near future have a number of important announcements to make concerning new features, soon to be produced by the company, and also concerning the policy of expansion begun under the old firm name of Greiver and Herz.

Brief Bits from Chicago

HARRY WEISS is leaving for a three-weeks' trip by machine. He doesn't know where he is going, but it is safe to say that he will land in a lot of picture theatres.

FRANK J. FLAHERTY, manager of the Chicago office Four Square pictures, is leaving for New York for a conference with the home office.

W. L. HILL, the genial publicity manager Famous Players, Chicago, has just returned to his desk after a much needed rest.

ROSE MARKS, of the Central Film Company, is on a vacation. Wallace Mayer, booker, and S. Keely, shipping clerk, have just returned.

H. M. ROUDA, until recently branch manager Famous Players, Toronto, Canada, has been placed in charge of Ascher Bros.' Lane Court theatre.

L. E. SHAEFFER, manager of George Kleine System, Denver, Colo., is in Chicago in conference with their Chicago office.

WM. JENNER, of the Kleine System, reports that he has just closed contracts for the "Unchastened Woman" in fourteen Ascher Bros. houses, three days at the Central Park, two days at the Woodlawn theater, two days at the Jackson Park theatre, and with Lubliner & Trintz string of eight houses. George Hienes, of the South Bend, Ind., Auditorium, has also booked the picture for two days.

NATE REBER, of the Danville Palace theatre, is in Chicago on a booking trip.

OTTO MEISTER, of the Whitehouse, Milwaukee, Wis., has booked the Chaplin "Triple Trouble" for one week, starting August 4.

"THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN" will soon play at Ascher Bros.' new Rockford house.

FRANK REMBUSCH, secretary of the A. E. A., is presiding over the convention headquarters of the association at 207, 208 Hotel Sherman. Mr. Rembusch says that Ernest H. Horstman has just shown the right spirit by sending in for reservation without invitation for the convention of September 3, 4. 5, 6 and 7. Mr. Rembusch would like to have it understood that any one who starts anything along political lines during the first three days of the convention is very apt to find himself with a troublesome argument on his hands.

RUMOR has it that Ascher Bros. will have a new house at Seventh and Vine streets, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CLAUDE SAUNDERS, manager of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," says that the Chicago run which closed Saturday, August 3, was a most successful fifteen weeks. The picture was shown to approximately 210,000 people, and the receipts averaged $10,000 a week, $150,000 on their fifteen weeks' run.

N. LUBOVETZKI, of the Columbia theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., has been in town the last few days on business in the interest of his theatre.

HAROLD BLOSTER, of the Goldwyn Company, accompanied by Madge Kennedy, stopped off in Chicago on his way to Detroit.

CRESS SMITH, of Metro, is back at his desk after having attended the branch managers' convention at New York.

A. G. SPENCER, of Metro, reports that he has just made a deal with Henry Newall to take an interest in the Howard theatre, one of Chicago's leading picture houses. Newall has been elected secretary and treasurer of the company, and is in active charge of the theatre, which is doing a big business. Both Mr. Seaver and Mr. Newall were represented in the transaction by Mr. Spencer. The gentleman also reports that "To Hell With the Kaiser" bookings are going big. Same applies to Metro program contracts in which the exhibitors are taking a great interest.

SAM GREENBAUM, manager of the Garden and Family theatres, Davenport, Iowa, has been in Chicago arranging his bookings.

RALPH BRADFORD, manager of Triangle Chicago branch, has left for a trip through Wisconsin. He will strike Burlington and a few of the high spots.

MR. BRADFORD says since the new directors have taken Chicago the improvement in their bookings of Triangle program is quite noticeable.

RUDOLPH VON METEREN, former owner of the Rainbow, has been in Chicago saying good-by to his friends as he leaves for France Friday. Von Meteren is at present mess sergeant at Camp Grant.

F. E. WILLIAMS, booker, Chicago branch Triangle, has been kept so busy he has been unable to get an expected vacation.

R. C. SEERY, of the Central Film Company, has just returned from a business and pleasure trip through Indiana and Kentucky, and reports a successful trip, and says that the Monmouth Cave is still doing business in the same place.

(BLATT) SMITH says that exhibitors throughout his south side territory are jumping after Triangle pictures.

I. M. SCHWARTZ, of the Central Film Company, is on his vacation.

E. C. ECKHARDT, district manager of Fox, Kansas City, has been in Chicago for a short business trip.

PAUL BUSCH, formerly a Chicago boy and now manager of the Goldwyn St. Louis office, has started on a trip by machine to get personally acquainted with all the exhibitors in his territory.

CHAS. LAMB, of the Palm theatre, Rockford, Ill., is in town looking up some new features.

In Springfield Theatres

ONCE more the Lyric has had bad luck with its films. June Caprice was booked in "Miss Innocence" for Sunday and Monday, July 28 and 29. The picture did not arrive until 6 p. m. on Sunday, which cut the theatre out of its entire matinee business.

BEN ROVIN, who runs the Amuse-U, has booked Metro pictures, and the first one will be shown Thursday, August 1. It is "Under Handicap," featuring Harold Lockwood. On Friday Ben will have "The Flame of the Yukon," the great Triangle play, with Dorothy Dalton. Other pictures just contracted for by the Amuse-U are "The Brass Bullet" and "A Fight for Millions," two new Universal serials, and several features from the Doll-Van Company of Chicago.

"HANDS UP," the new Pathe serial, will come to the Capitol.

THE ROYAL has booked "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

"THE WOMAN AND THE LAW," Fox's great drama based on the De Saulles' case, with Miriam Cooper, comes to the Lyric for three days, starting August 1.

THE GAIETY will show Frank Keenan in "More Trouble," for three days, starting August 1. The Princess had been using the Keenan plays, but for some reason did not care to show this one. According to the leading critics it is a "bear" and the Gaiety people expect to do great with it. On the same bill will be Mack Sennett's new comedy, "Ladies First."

ENID BENNETT scored an awful hit at the Vaudette with "The Vamp," which had four profitable days.

"WE CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING" made as big a hit here as the other De Mille Artcraft play, "Old Wives for New." The Gaiety had four whopping days and everyone was more than pleased with the play.

THE ROYAL announces for the week of July 28-August 3, the following attractions: Sunday, "The Woman Between Friends," with Alice Joyce; Monday, "Ann's Finish," with Margarita Fisher; Tuesday, "The Lady of the Photograph," with Shirley Mason; Wednesday, "Divine Sacrifice"; Thursday, "The Marriage Speculation"; Friday, "The Devil's Wheel," with Gladys Brockwell; Saturday, "God's Country and the Woman." Business continues good at the Royal, and Manager Kerasotes says everything else is satisfactory.

LOUIS KERASOTES, the speed-king manager of the city, has a great list of attractions for the week of July 28-August 3. On Sunday, Helen Gibson in "The Branded Man," a Universal Weekly and an L-KO comedy, "Liberty Belles," with Jane Novak; Monday, "A Rich Man's Darling," with Louise Lovely, and a comedy, "Eddie Get the Mop"; Tuesday, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "Shall We Forgive Her?" and "Broncho Billy's Secret," with G. M. Anderson; Wednesday, "The Woman in the Web," number 13, and other good pictures; Thursday, Carmel Myers in "A Broadway Scandal"; Friday, Marie Walcamp in "The Lion's Claws," and Saturday, "Smashing Through," with Herbert Rawlinson.

HARRY LOPER, manager of the Lyric, accompanied by Mrs. Loper, motored to Chicago, July 30, to visit Major and Mrs. Loper, who operate the Kimbark in the big city. From there the entire party will drive to Chillicothe, Ohio, where Lieutenant Russell Loper, another son, is stationed in camp. The Lopers will return to this city in about ten days.

THE WEATHER has turned cool again, which means many more fifteen-centses in the box-offices of those who run picture shows.

THE CAPITOL, with its Triangle, Metro and Select plays, is offering some very good shows to Washington street crowds.

THE GAIETY has contracted for Goldwyn pictures. It is announced that there will be fifty features produced and released by this company for 1918-1919. This will make one picture a week. The Gaiety has been using Goldwyn's for some time; ever since the Lyric canceled.

THE VAUDETTE has booked Dorothy Phillips in "A Soul for Sale," for Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, August 4, 5 and 6.

W. W. WATTS, owner of the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres, has purchased five new Simplex machines, through Elmer Ott of the Co-operative Amusement and Supply Company, of this city.

GIRLS are being employed as ushers at the Gaiety, since the "work or fight" order went into effect. Manager Thornton says the girls are proving more satisfactory than the young men.

TOM MOORE was co-starred in two pictures shown here on July 25, 26 and 27. He appeared at the Lyric with Constance Talmadge, in "The Lesson," Select play, and with Madge Kennedy, in "The Fair Pretender," Goldwyn play, shown at the Gaiety.

THE LYRIC had two good days with Viola Dana in "The Only Road," on July 30 and 31. "The Vamp Cure," one of the Lyons-Moran comedies and a Universal News Weekly was on the same bill.

FRED YOUNT of the Family, managed to hold his contracts for "The House of Hate," with Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, and "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp, in spite of the quarantine, and started up "Serial Day," Monday, July 29, by showing the fourth and sixth episodes of the former and latter serial, respectively. "NAUGHTY, NAUGHTY" was the Sunday (July 28) program at the Princess theatre. Enid Bennett, the star, is gaining quite a number of Dubuque supporters.

SUNDAY, JULY 28, was certainly a scorcher, but the heat didn't affect Majestic patrons, for Manager Jake Rosenthal, living up to his preparedness campaign, had followed the advice of the weather man and made preparations that turned his theatre into one of the coolest places in the city. In fact, it was so comfortably cool that he felt justified in letting the public know about it, so he surrounded the place with large posters bearing the following notice: "Twenty degrees cooler inside." Needless to say, the Majestic was a most popular theatre that day.

THE DREAMLAND offered a good Triangle feature, "The Red Haired Cupid," with Roy Stewart, for the Tuesday, July 30, bill.

The other pictures presented there during the week of July 28 were "Every Girl's Dream," with June Caprice, and "The Love Doctor," with Earle Williams.

"MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY" completed a successful three days' run at the Star theatre at Decorah, Iowa, July 25 to 27.

Bushman, was shown Friday and Saturday of the previous week.

"THE WAITING SOUL," with Mme. Petrova, was the Sunday, July 28 feature at the Blende theatre at Benton, Wis. "Moonshine," with Fatty Arbuckle, was presented Wednesday, July 31.

Gathered in Green Bay

EDWARD THIRION, known among his friends as "Tod," the manager of the Royal theatre in Green Bay, Wis., has joined the colors. He is in Camp Taylor, Louisville, Ky., undergoing the training necessary to make him a soldier. The young man has been manager of the motion picture house for several years. His father, S. Thirion, is owner of the house.

AS a special the owner of the Royal theatre, S. Thirion, presented "Faith-Enduring'" July 30. Fatty Arbuckle appeared in the same program in the piece, "Fatty's Plucky Luck."

What Racine Is Doing

"UP THE ROAD WITH SALLIE," starring Constance Talmadge, was shown at the Rex theatre, Monday and Tuesday, July 29 and 30, and was pronounced by an overwhelming majority of Rex patrons to be easily the best picture shown there for many a day. The amusing situation developed when Constance climbed into the wrong bed, forced a spontaneous laugh from every one in the house, including some who had not laughed for ages.

Mae Marsh was shown at the Palace, July 30 and 31, in "The Glorious Adventure," and the whimsical picture, a decided variation from the commonplace, was pleasing to good attendances at all performances. Fatty Arbuckle in "Good Night, Nurse," topped off a program of excellence.

"One Law for Both," by Ivan Abramson, was shown at the Bijou two days, July 30 and 31, with Rita Jovilet in the leading role. Margaret Wilson followed with a one day stand in "The Marked Card."

Dorothy Phillips pleased good sized audiences at the Rex for two days, July 30 and 31, in "A Soul for Sale," shown in conjunction with Billie Burke in a comedy.

"The Firefly of France," starring Wallace Reid, was shown at the Palace Sunday and Monday, July 28 and 29, to packed houses.

"Other Men's Daughters," drew well at the Rex on Sunday, July 28.

Dubuque Theatres Open Following Infantile Paralysis Scare

DUBUQUE was a "grand and glorious" place Sunday, July 28, when City Attorney Matt Czizek decided that the infantile paralysis epidemic had sufficiently abated so as to allow moving picture playhouses to be opened, on the condition that all children under sixteen years were to be barred. Dubuque exhibitors came up to the occasion in a fine manner by showing some of the best pictures Dubuque had seen for a long time. J. E. Boyle of the Dreamland made a great hit by offering "Kidder and Company," with that pleasing comedian Bryant Washburn; the Grand presented "Lend Me Your Name," with Harold Lockwood; Alice Joyce was starred at the Majestic in "Womanhood"; Frederick Young secured "The Varmint," with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff to be shown at his theatre, the Family and the Liberty's program consisted of "The Voice of Destiny," with Marie Osborn.

The Princess was the first playhouse to take advantage of the lifting of the infantile paralysis quarentine and it doors were opened Saturday night, July 27 at 7 P. M. "Love Letters," with Dorothy Dalton was presented. Dubuque fans, it seemed, were starved for the sight of a picture. Managers Billos and Yeannias had a wonderfully successful night.

More Springfield News

"DOING THEIR BIT," a Fox play with Lee kiddies, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, in "Social Quicksands," and Alice Brady in "The Whirlpool," will form the bill at the Lyric for August 4-10.

PICTURES which are to be shown in the educational campaign in behalf of the $60,000,000 good roads proposition, which is to be voted upon in the November election, will include pictures of the interior and exterior of the Illinois state capitol. The film will include a picture of the interior of the office of the automobile department. Photographers made the pictures yesterday, and the state-wide campaign will start in a short time. Good roads mean more country people coming into town to see good shows.

THE GAIETY announces the booking of D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love," as a special state fair attraction, beginning Sunday, August 11. The engagement will be for five days. Manager Thornton will endeavor to put the piece on "in style" and expects the big film will do well here.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," Griffith's great spectacle, comes to the Chatterton for eight days, starting August 11. This will make two new Griffith plays here at the same time.

Will you send a package of home cheer to a lonely American boy in France?

HE doesn't want to come back home till his job is done—he doesn't mind the hardships and the danger—all he asks is that once in a while a "bit of cheer" be sent to him to ease his lonely vigils on the rim of "No Man's Land."

Tens of thousands of American Lads are today fighting our battles in France. Soon there will be millions. They will want letters from home—they will want "smokes" from home. Tobacco eases the shell strain. It comforts the wounded. It is a "first aid" to the surgeons and Red Cross nurses.

If you knew what comfort and pleasure and satisfaction the tobacco bought with your dollar or your five dollars (go as high as you like) gives to American boys in the trenches, you'd forget the money, or the little sacrifice, or anything else.

25c buys 45c worth of "smokes."

$1.00 buys a month's supply of tobacco

$5.00 buys enough to keep 5 men in tobacco for a month.

And remember: Every package of tobacco sent to our boys in France contains a return postcard, addressed to you, which he'll mail to you if he can possibly do so. That's a war souvenir worth having. Dig down—deep and quick!

"I wish you all possible success in your admirable effort to get our boys in France tobacco."

if you keep your name in type in a paper that is read by everyone week after week and year after year.

It Dominates the Field

You Can't Believe Everything---

But it is a safe bet that when exhibitors themselves enthuse about the way screen reviewers handle a pen after sitting through a picture in weather like this YOU CAN BELIEVE THAT TRUTH IS BOUND TO OUT!

Just look at this! While the thermometer was getting ready to go over the top and slide down on the other side of 100, this letter came:

"I read most of the Exhibitor Reviews by Mr. Harrison in MOTION PICTURE NEWS and I claim his judgment is to the point. From what I hear, most exhibitors are reading the reviews, and I believe some are very well paid by reading them and using their guidance in selecting pictures. Several have told me the reviews are a great help to them in booking films."

Very truly,

But Wait! Don't go yet. Listen to this:

Diamos Uses Method to Reduce Expense

A NEW method of reducing expense has just been put in operation by Nick Diamos, who conducts a circuit of theatres in Arizona, and provides for the employment of a representative to remain in Los Angeles, book all films needed for the Diamos circuit, and look after shipments of all film and advertising matter.

Mr. Diamos is opening offices for his circuit at Tucson, and from there all business of the several theatres, save that taken charge of by the Los Angeles representative, will be transacted. Films from all the different exchanges as well as paper and other advertising material will be collected by the representative and a bulk shipment made to the Tucson office. From there the shipments will be disbursed to the other theatres.

Bookings to be made in the future for this circuit will be on the basis of every film booked will play all of the several theatres of the circuit. At the present time, Diamos has the Lyric and Piama at Tucson; houses at Nogales, Bisbee, Douglas, and shortly will open a new theatre at Jerome.

In addition to this circuit the same firm has a circuit of houses in northern Mexico, but booking for these must be made separately inasmuch as present regulations for export provide censorship by representatives from the U. S. District Attorney's office, and the film being held for two weeks in sealed containers by the Custom officers, or until license for shipment can be secured from Washington, after requisition from Los Angeles Custom officers is mailed to the capital. In addition to this red tape, the Mexican government has placed an import duty of one dollar gold per pound on all film.

Exhibitors Face Operator Difficulty

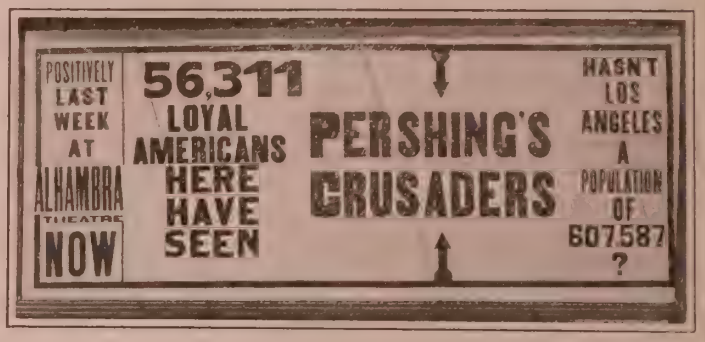
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA exhibitors are now facing a serious problem in the matter of securing competent operators due to so many having answered the Liberty Army call, and as the result of the shortage, theatres in several localities have been forced to close from one to three days, and in other instances, the operators who were working, were forced to remain on duty from nine and ten o'clock in the morning until near midnight to insure the show being kept open.

Theatre owners believing ultimately they will have to employ women for this work, have pledged their support to a school for projection machine operation, teaching which has been opened at the Fairyland theatre on West Twenty-fourth street, Los Angeles. An attempt has been made to secure women to attend these classes and already more than twenty have enrolled. The number is greater than the equipment at the theatre is suitable for, and consequently day and night classes are now being held.

Fires have been reported from no less than a score of theatres in and about Los Angeles, due to inefficient operators, or long "grinds." In some instances considerable film was destroyed, but at no particular place was there any material damage except at the Shamrock theatre, 608 S. Hill street, Los Angeles. At this one the heat of the burning film caused the sprinkler system, which did not work properly, to flood the entire theatre, and water ran in all parts continuously for thirty minutes before it could be shut off, thus damaging practically all furniture and draperies.

Ray Country Boy Again

IT LOOKS very natural indeed to see Charlie Ray going about the Ince studios these days in his country boy character, which he has made justly famous. It has been four months since he played a role of this kind, and in his present story by Julien Josephson, who wrote his "Hired Man" and "Playing the Game," Charlie has a role that is ideally suited to his characterization of a country youth. He starts off in this picture as a country boy correspondence school poet, and a bunch of laughs as well as lots of fine dramatic situations are combined in this most entertaining story.



"Pershing's Crusaders" Continues Its Run

IN THE middle of the third week of the showing of "Pershing's Crusaders," at the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, there were indications that this film would run at least four continuous weeks. The advertising on this has been very extensive, and included a number of unusual features which have materially aided in securing the greatest possible attendance at the theatre. Officers of the city of Los Angeles did everything in the way of co-operation, and Mayor Woodman issued a proclamation to the people urging that all would witness the showing of this picture. The Naval Reserve Band gave several parades, as did also the Marine Band from Fort McArthur. The cadet aviators of March Field at Riverside, attended the showing in a body after a parade through the principal streets on Thursday of the third week of the showing.

Inasmuch as this is a government film, the printing firms of Los Angeles were induced to prepare the heralds at cost, and several of the principal downtown department stores worked in co-operation with the theatre by including a herald in every package that was wrapped and sent out from the store. Robert M. Poole has been in charge of the publicity work for the Alhambra theatre during the showing of this film.

The subject has been booked for at least two months solid. It will run one week at the Plaza theatre, San Diego, and Manager W. W. Whitson made a personal trip to Los Angeles to see if he could not extend the showing to nine days. Other bookings include one week at the Liberty theatre, Long Beach; four days at Florence theatre, Pasadena; four at the Strand, San Bernardino; four at the Majestic at Redlands, and a number of others for the same periods of time.

Golden West Finishes First Subject

THE GOLDEN WEST PRODUCING COMPANY has completed the first two subjects, and G. M. Anderson, the star, and his Manager of Production Jesse J. Robbins, are leaving for New York during the coming week to complete arrangements for the release of this company's productions. The first film to be released is titled "The Son-of-a-Gun," and gives Anderson the role of a badman in the early western days. The title of the play is the name of the character taken by Anderson, he being the Son-of-a-Gun from Placer County. One of the novel features of this film, and which required a western interior setting covering almost a quarter of a city block, shows his introduction into Placer County when driven there by the Sheriff of Pinto County. An idea of the size of this interior honkey tonk maybe gained from the fact that the bar used was more than forty feet in length.

Many of the players in this film were formerly associated with Anderson when he was in pictures before. Joy Lewis, a speaking stage actress, makes her debut in the films in the leading feminine role. Fred Church is the heavy and Paul Willis the juvenile. Many well known cowboys of the films played with Anderson, and in a number of scenes there are more than three hundred extra people.

What Butte Is Doing

MRS. D. W. GRIFFITH, driving her own car, spent a short while in Butte last week, en route eastward after visiting Seattle and Los Angeles. She was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Martin, of Terre Haute, Ind.

WILLIAM HYNEKE, who has been managing the Judith theatre at Lewistown for the past two months, has proved himself a live wire showman. Despite the off-season, high war tax and the further fact that many hundreds of thearegoers in his field have been taken into the American Army and Navy, while countless others have gone to the shipyards, the Judith has been doing good business. Mr. Hyneke cleaned up with Gerard's "Four Years in Germany" and "Over the Top."

"THE YELLOW TICKET" with Fannie Ward was a good drawing card at the Rialto the past week.

"THE KAISER" was shown at the Liberty the past week on a return engagement in Butte. It packed them.

DOROTHY DALTON in "The Kaiser's Shadow" was a magnet at the Rialto a few days ago, drawing well.

R. C. HUDSON is having good success in booking the burlesque on, "The Beast of Berlin." It's a scream and goes by the title "The Geezer of Berlin."

R. E. McINTYRE, who has been in Butte at the Famous-Players Lasky exchange for a month past, has just departed for New York.

BEN ROSENBERG, with the Metro corporation, was in Butte this week, visiting the theatremen.

E. R. BARNET, after spending a week at the Paramount exchange, went to Salt Lake, for duties elsewhere within the Famous-Players Lasky domain.

MANAGER FRANK BAILEY, of the American, did good business with the Jewel feature, "For Husbands Only." Butte husbands took the whole family and every member liked it.

H. K. BRIN, Universal and Jewel territory man, is back in Butte after a trip over the "high line." He reports good success in the booking of the feature, "A Soul For Sale."

"SEPTEMBER will see an awekning of business in Montana theatres," said R. C. Hudson to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. "Our business is very good at this time and we have no complaint to make. However, some of the houses in smaller communities have had to close down for a few weeks, while some have curtailed the programs, running only a few days a week."

EDWARD ARMSTRONG, a well known Denver film man, was in Butte the past week.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS," with the government back of it, is being shown in Montana houses and is being enthusiastically greeted.

In Spokane Theatres

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" had a six days' run at the Auditorium, Spokane's leading playhouse, and drew big audiences every afternoon and evening. The Shrine band advertised the show every night, with a street parade.

"THE LAST RAID OF ZEPPELIN L-21" began its first Spokane engagement and continued four days, drawing capacity houses.

ELSIE FERGUSON in "The Song of Songs" was shown at the Liberty. The picture ran four days and played to big business.

THE CLEMMER THEATRE featured three productions during the week, opening Sunday with Sessue Hayakawa in "The White Man's Law," changing Tuesday with J. Stuart Blackton's "Wild Youth," and Thursday with Wallace Reid in "The Firefly of France."

WILLIAM DESMOND and Mary Warren were stellar attractions in "An Honest Man," which played three days at the Class A.

J. W. ALLENDER is now operating two Spokane houses, the Lyric and the Majestic. William Farnum in "The Heart of a Lion" and another chapter in "The Son of Democracy" were offered at the Majestic and Pauline Frederick in "Mrs. Dane's Defense" and Ben Turpin in "Saucy Madeline," were offered at the Lyric.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "Hearts of the World" ended its long engagement Saturday night, July 27. The picture played to capacity houses and enjoyed a run of two weeks.

MRS. D. W. GRIFFITH of Los Angeles, Cal., wife of the director and producer, motored through Spokane on her way to New York City in a coast-to-coast circle tour. She is driving, and in addition to "chauffing" does duty as a chef and maid as well as she goes along, camping being one of the delights of the trip. Mrs. Griffith is best known as a free lance critic.

What Seattle Exhibitors Say

A NEW THEATRE, seating about 1,000 people, will be opened in Raymond, Wash., about September 1. It will be in the Stenzel Building and will be under Mr. Stenzel's management.

OSCAR LENTZ, an Alaskan man, is contemplating opening a new theatre at Dime, Alaska, a new Seward peninsula, up near the Arctic Circle. Lentz said that if it is opened the price of admission will be one dollar and nothing less.

ONE OF THE FINEST inland theatres is being erected by Jerry Miller, at Sweet Grass Mountain. Miller is spending at least $5,000 on it.

THE NEW LIBERTY THEATRE at Chehalis, Wash., has been opened under the management of T. K. Metz, who was formerly in charge of the Empress in that same town.

GEORGE McKAY has bought the Graybull, Graybull, Wyoming, from Perry Edwards, who still retains his chain of theatres in Basin, Worland and Thermopolis.

A. S. FRANK of the Star, Cripple Creek, Col., has been called to the colors and will be succeeded as manager by S. N. Ward.

HERE IS THE WAY to do business: C. P. Scates has a good business proposition with his Paramount theatre in Okanogan, Wash. Next to his theatre is an empty lot. A big Chautauqua came to town for a week, did a lot of advertising and pitched its tent next to Scates. Scates didn't sit down and cry. He ordered the best pictures he could think of and did a whopping big business, as all those who attended the Chautauqua also came to his show. They also carried away a good impression of his house.

THE NEW ORIENTAL THEATRE in Seattle, will open about August 1. The proprietors have been putting the best of everything in it. The managers are Yamada and Kaiti.

T. S. HUME has leased the American at Arlington, Wash., from F. C. Hausafus.

J. W. ALLENDER, proprietor of the Lyric, Spokane, Wash., has added the Majestic to his theatre holdings.

E. D. STULLER has opened a new house in Glendale, Wash.

E. C. SMITH, of Dayton, Wash., was a recent visitor on Seattle's Film Row. He owns both the Liberty and American in that city and has acquired the Empire at Waitsburg, Wash.

W. A. MEAD, manager of the Seattle office of the Universal Film exchange, was a host to a trio of men who are putting the move in moving pictures in Montana. Manager West of the Babcock, Billings; Mr. Hyde of the Liberty, Miles City, and Sid Hirschberg of Aber, were the guests.

E. R. SAUNDERS has recently opened a new theatre at Ilwaco, Wash. He recently booked "The Kaiser."

MANAGER LEVY of Levy's Orpheum, is more than pleased with "Hearts of the World." He has started on his fourth week with it and may keep the play longer.

J. E. MADSEN, one of the best-known film men in the business is a member of the 166th Depot Brigade, Camp Lewis, Wash. Mr. Madsen's advent on Film Row was almost an innovation, as he has many friends among the exhibitors and film men of Seattle. He was the first Mutual manager in Seattle. Later he moved to Spokane and from there he went to Indianapolis, El Paso, Texas and Atlanta, Ga. While in Seattle Madsen spent two days with "Smiling Billy Drummond" of the George Kleine system.

MAJOR E. A. SHERMAN of the First Battalion, Camp Lewis, who was formerly a well-known moving picture publicity man was also a visitor of "Smiling Bill." Both of these visitors were happy as birds when they got hold of a few copies of The Moving Picture World. Madsen took some back to camp.

G. F. CHURCHILL has arrived in Seattle from Los Angeles, to take up his duties as head of the shipping department of the George Kleine system.

THE "UNBELIEVER" has been booked in the northwest territory, by Manager Drummond, in 80 per cent of the territory, and all the returns have been enormous. Twenty-two of the houses have asked for re-bookings of it.

AMONG the recent visitors to Film Row, have been Fred Walton, owner of the American theatre, Bellingham and F. C. Quinby, proprietor of the Liberty and Bell.

F. V. FISHER, manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange and Northwest holders for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announces that the great demands for "My Four Years in Germany" and "Tarzan of the Apes" are still in great demand and that return engagements for "My Four Years in Germany" have already been booked. S. P. Peck, formerly connected with Mr. Fisher, has been called into service. His place has been taken by H. C. Arthur, Jr., who was formerly connected with the De Luxe Feature Film Company. Arthur has started for his territory, Montana and surrounding country. He is well known there, having traveled there for some time.

FROM NOW ON G. G. Maxey will have charge of the booking department of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

FRANK HUDSON, salesman for the All Star Features Distributors, is making a trip over the Arizona and Southern California territories.

H. O. MARTIN has been sent to Chicago by Sol Lesser, where he will supervise the preparation of sending road companies out for "Hearts of the World" in Wisconsin-Minneapolis territory, and through the Central West States. Mr. Martin was accompanied by George Davis, manager of the Alcazar theatre at San Francisco, who is associated with Mr. Lesser in the purchase of the eleven Central West States. It has not been decided how many companies will be started out of Chicago, but it is the plan of the owners of rights on this film to get companies started in all of the Central West cities at once.

MESSRS. H. P. CAULFIELD AND CHRIS BLIMM of the Garrick, plan to show the coming Roscoe Arbuckle release, "The Cook," for two weeks continuously. This film will be the principal attraction at the Garrick during the week of August 11 and 18, and special advertising, including larger than usual space in the newspapers, and an additional number of twenty-four sheet stands will be used. Following this, the management of the Garrick have contracted for the World Release, "Eight Bells," which begins showing on August 25.

THE SUPERBA THEATRE, Los Angeles, was last week featuring the Universal comedy, "The Geezer of Berlin," which was shown in connection with the Carmel Meyer release, "The Dream Lady." For the week beginning August 4, the Dorothy Phillips picture, "The Mortaged Wife," was on at this house, and plans provided that this film should be shown for two weeks.

BERNARD FISH, Goldwyn salesman in the Southern California territory, is on a trip to Arizona and the southern end of this state.

NEW CONTRACTS are now being made for the Goldwyn service for next year, which will include fifty or more releases.

ADVICE from Manager G. C. Parsons of the San Francisco branch of Goldwyn, is to the effect that the Goldwyn program has been booked for showing at the Rialto theatre, beginning September 2.

PHIL PICKERICH, who has theatres at Haskins, Verdi, Clarkdale and one or two other points in Arizona, is now building a new house at Jerome which will be opened within the next few days. Mr. Pickerich spent a portion of the past week in Los Angeles arranging service for his several houses.

DURING the past week Manager Jack Root of the Strand theatre, Pasadena, featured the Strand comedy, "My Lady Nicotine," and during the showing, took in a fairly good amount each evening for the Smoke Fund for the boys in France. This comedy is of the nature of a propaganda film boosting the Smoke Fund idea, and on one evening the Smoke Fund receipts at the theatre totalled $200.30.

THE SELIG PRODUCTION, adapted from the melodrama, "The Still Alarm," handled in the California territory by the All Star Feature Distributors, is this week the attraction at the Garrick theatre, and the management there is featuring the original fire truck and three white horses which were used in the film. These horses are used on the street as a ballyhoo, being driven through the business section at frequent intervals. When not going about the city, the horses and fire truck are kept in front of the theatre.

MEL COREY, assistant manager of the Universal Exchange at San Francisco, is on a two weeks' vacation, which he is spending in Southern California. While in Los Angeles, he is guest of his brother, W. A. Corey, who conducts the Southern Poster Rental Company in Los Angeles.

NICK DIAMOS, who conducts theatres at Bisbee, Douglas, Tucson and Nogales, Arizona, has been in Los Angeles making purchases for his new house, which will open at Tucson about September 15. This theatre will have a seating capacity of about one thousand, and will be the finest theatre in that section of Arizona. Mr. Diamos will also have another new theatre at Douglas, which will open about November 15. This will have a seating capacity of fifteen hundred and was built at a cost of about one hundred thousand dollars.

TWO CHANGES have been made in connection with the Los Angeles Mutual exchange, this week, when Manager Joe Merrick received the appointment of Coast Supervisor for the company, and A. R. Patton was named as his successor in the Los Angeles branch. Merrick took up his new work Sunday, when he departed for San Francisco. Merrick has been identified with the film industry for almost ten years, beginning first as manager and later purchasing two theatres at Missoula, Montana. He was first in the film exchange end, connected with the General at Portland, and following this he served as salesman out of the Los Angeles branch. For a time he was with the Universal Film and Supply Company at Seattle, then became branch manager for the Mutual, and about eight months ago was transferred to the Los Angeles branch. Mr. Merrick's successor came to Los Angeles after serving as salesman for the Mutual one year at Spokane. In Los Angeles he served two years as salesman and for several months has held the position of assistant branch manager.

"OVER THE TOP," the Vitagraph War Spectacle, is now starting on a number of return engagements at prominent Southern California theatres. The first of these engagements will be that at the Laughlin at Long Branch, managed by Anna Dwight. The picture originally played four days at this theatre, to capacity business, and is being taken back for appearance at the same prices. It will run four days more at this theatre.

THE GEORGE KLEINE SUBJECT, "The Unchastened Woman," starring Grace Valentine, has been booked for a week's run at the Alhambra theatre, following the four weeks' engagement of "Pershing's Crusaders."

LOS ANGELES VITAGRAPH EXCHANGE last week had several downtown Los Angeles showings. "Baree, Son of Kazan," starring Nell Shipman, was on at Quinn's Rialto, where it did a very good business. The Big V comedy, "Bathing Beauties and Big Boobs," featuring Larry Semon, was given prominence at the Kinema theatre, where it formed a part of the program with Cecil B. De Mille's production, "We Can't Have Everything." In addition to these bookings, the Vitagraph had two other comedies showing in the business district at first-run houses.

GEORGE FARIS, former manager of Los Angeles Vitagraph exchange, who entered the Liberty Army at Camp Lewis in May, was a few weeks later promoted to a corporalship, and recently was one of three members of Company 26, 166th Depot Brigade, 7th Battalion, to successfully pass officers' training camp examinations. Faris has now been transferred to the training camp located in Arkansas.

D. S. MITCHELL, recently appointed Arizona salesman for Vitagraph, has established in three weeks, a very desirable record. He visited every territory in Arizona open for the Vitagraph, and sold a theatre in every one.

D. H. BERG, personal representative of George Kleine, who is making a tour of inspection which will take him to all Kleine exchanges, is now in Los Angeles and will probably remain here for a week or more.

RETURN ENGAGEMENT booking for the Clune production, "The Eyes of the World," are now being made by the M. & R. Feature Film Corporation, with branches in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and already more than fifteen theatres have booked this for their third showing. The theatres in all instances have fifteen cents as the lowest price for admission, while most of the theatres are charging fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents. Two copies of the film are now being used by Manager H. W. Stubbins of the Los Angeles exchange, who has just returned from a trip in the Bakersfield territory, where the film was booked at Taft, Maricopa, Bakersfield and other towns.

BOOKINGS for the William L. Sherry productions, which open in Los Angeles August 4, at the Alhambra theatre, are all made for the first release, "The Street of Seven Stars," for the entire month of August. Nick Steele, manager of the Los Angeles branch, has received inquiries from practically every section of the Southern California territory, and by the opening of the picture at the Los Angeles house, anticipates he will have the subject booked for the first two months.

JOHN SIMPSON, until recently manager of the Salt Lake office of the Wstern Triangle Distributing corporation, has signed up for work before the camera and the guns, with Uncle Sam's "moving" boys "over there." With Mr. Simpson's departure under contract to help "Uncle" chastise the Kaiser, M. H. Kuhn took over the duties of branch manager here. For several years past, Mr. Kuhn has been selling for the company in southern California territory.

"NEVER BETTER," answers F. A. Wagner, branch manager of the Vitagraph Company, when asked "How's everything?" Then he soberly points out that the local office has won a bonus every week for five months past, just as if that would be enough to give him beatificly happy arrangement of features into which he keeps his face screwed of late. Fact is, there is a young Wagner, Calvert Soren, he has been christened. The first name is in memory of Maryland, the home State of his daddie, settled by Lord Calvert, and the second half belongs to the mother's side of the household.

BEN F. ROSENBERG, until recently of Seattle, has been transferred to Salt Lake as branch manager for the Metro Company, succeeding A. B. Lamb, who has gone to Los Angeles. For a week past, Mr. Rosenberg has been getting acquainted with the extent of his distributing territory. He was last heard from in Butte.

WILLIAM BROWN, manager of the Isis theatre, Salina, Utah; Frank Bailey, of the American, Butte, Mont.; C. B. Hale, of the Harris, Bancroft, Idaho; George Done, of the Gaiety, Payson, Utah; and Silas Brown, of the Elysium, Midvale, Utah, were all visitors at Salt Lake's film exchange offices during the week. None of them appear to be Hooverizing on their film orders.

THE WAR SAVINGS BASKET for film waste has made its appearance in the workrooms of Salt Lake's branch exchange houses. Into it goes every scrap of discarded film, to go back to the factory for remanufacture. Impetus to the saving of the scrap film has been added because of spread of the information that the ingredients of film are, some of them, used in the manufacture of explosives. "Every employee who chucks a piece of saved scrap film into the war savings basket feels like he has thrown a bomb at the boch," says Gordon H. Place, of the local office of Notable Feature Film Company.

TWO of Salt Lake's moving picture houses are in process of being equipped with orchestral organs, one of them, that of the American theatre, said to be the largest organ installed in any theatre in the world.
The other organ is being built into the Paramount Empress theatre and will be ready for use by October 1, according to the management. It is to be equipped with every orchestral device to afford not only the full music of a stringed orchestra, but to produce every sound that might ever be needed in the interpretation of a picture. The total cost will be $25,000. The contract for installation has been placed with the Consolidated Music Company, of this city, and the installation is under the direction of Royal W. Daynes. Edward P. Kimball will be the organist. The American theatre pipe organ is being converted into an orchestral organ by addition of every possible known equipment. The total cost of the immense assemblage of musical mechanism will be $65,000 when completed. It will include not only every possible orchestral device and needed sound making contrivance, but will have echo organs in various parts of the theatre.

W. H. SWANSON, president of the Swanson theatre circuit, and Mrs. Swanson celebrated their silver wedding anniversary, Thursday, August 1, with a banquet for their friends in the evening, given at the Hotel Utah.

LEO BERTOLERO and W. C. Ricord, of the Ford theatre, Lead, South Dakota, were recent visitors on Film Row.

MANAGER CHURCHILL of Fox, has returned from a business trip to Omaha. F. W. Normand, also of the Denver Fox office, is back from an extended trip through Nebraskan territory.

WARD E. SCOTT, has returned from a northern Colorado trip, meeting exhibitors of Longmont, Loveland, Fort Collins and others of that section, as the new manager for Pathe.

"TOM" WICKHAM, salesman for Pathe, is covering western Nebraska and the Black Hills circuit.

MANAGER SCOTT says the Denver office has entered the contest for the loving cup to be awarded the western Pathe office making the largest increase for the quarter beginning August 1, and is out to win.

HUGH RENNIE of Colorado Foursquare, has returned from a Big Circle trip, including Montrose, placing "Carmen of the Klondike" on percentage. He reports a very successful trip. At Salida he and Mrs. Rennie were the guests for several days of Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Kelley on numerous trout fishing excursions and beefsteak frys in the mountains. Mr. Kelley controls the motion picture business in Salida.

CHARLES H. MUEHLMAN, special representative for William Fox, arrived from Chicago, Monday, and will spend the week at Denver headquarters.

"LET THE Simplex TWINS BUILD UP YOUR PROFITS"

Far be it from us to claim that projection is the only thing that counts, BUT——when a mother says "I think my eyes of that child" she says a big mouthful about the preciousness of the eyes.

There is no profit in pleasing the mind with good subjects, the ears with sweet music, the nose with delicate perfume, or the body with comfortable seats, if you undo it all by offending the eyes.

Not only that, but besides keeping people away, you don't save a cent in operating expenses; for it has been abundantly proven that the eye-soothing projection of the Simplex costs less.

All this gives us plenty of reason for urging you to let the Simplex Twins build up your profits.

A show worth more profits more. Simplex Projectors are Profit Protectors.

"The Long Chance"

Pronounced by Critics, Trade Press, Newspapers and Exhibitors the finest portrayal of any early western character ever seen on the screen.

Never in all his long and brilliant Stage career has Frank Keenan ever done a finer bit of character acting than that of the easy going, carefree, dangerous western gambler in the new revised version of "THE LONG CHANCE." The Master Producer Has Done It Again!

THE STRAND in New York is "Besieged by crowds that stand for hours and stretch down the street and around the corner," the New York World says.

The New York Tribune says, "When we left the Strand the line which forms to the left had stretched down as far as 45th Street (The Strand is between 47th and 48th Streets), but we intend to get up bright and early some morning soon and go to see 'The Great Love' again. Everyone should see it once for the story and once for the acting and the accompanying music."

"The Great Love" means capacity business for a longer run than you ever gave any other picture.

What Does Lawrence,

N the year beginning September 1st, next, New York's three great moving picture theatres—The Rivoli, The Strand and The alto—will show 121 Paramount or Artcraft tures. That leaves 35 features to be chosen m the productions of all the rest of the in-stry put together.

What do I care?" asks Lawrence, Kansas.

y the features in those three theatres, New York ges the moving picture industry—decides whether ving pictures are worth while, whether they are ntial, whether they are wholesome entertainment, ther they should be supported or ignored.

New York's opinion means nothing in my young " declares Lawrence, Kansas.

. L. Rothapfel and Harold Edel, in choosing programs for their theatres, have a tremendous responsibility on their shoulders. In those three theatres, a few blocks apart, is decided the destiny of the entire motion picture industry. What they show may not affect your theatre immediately, but, Lawrence, Kansas, these two men have the power to tear down or to build up the industry of which you are a part.

"Oh, say, that's going too strong," protests Lawrence, Kansas.

It is, is it? Read on, Lawrence, Kansas.

Suppose The Rivoli, The Strand and The Rialto showed questionable pictures or merely stupid pictures. It is these theatres that the greatest writers in the country attend. In these seats you find United States Senators and Representatives, club women, public officials from all parts of America—men and women who write and speak and make laws and whose influence is nation wide.

Within a very few weeks the influence of bad pictures would be felt in Washington, in Kansas City, in San Francisco. These people would be asking pertinent questions. The motion picture would be on the carpet everywhere.

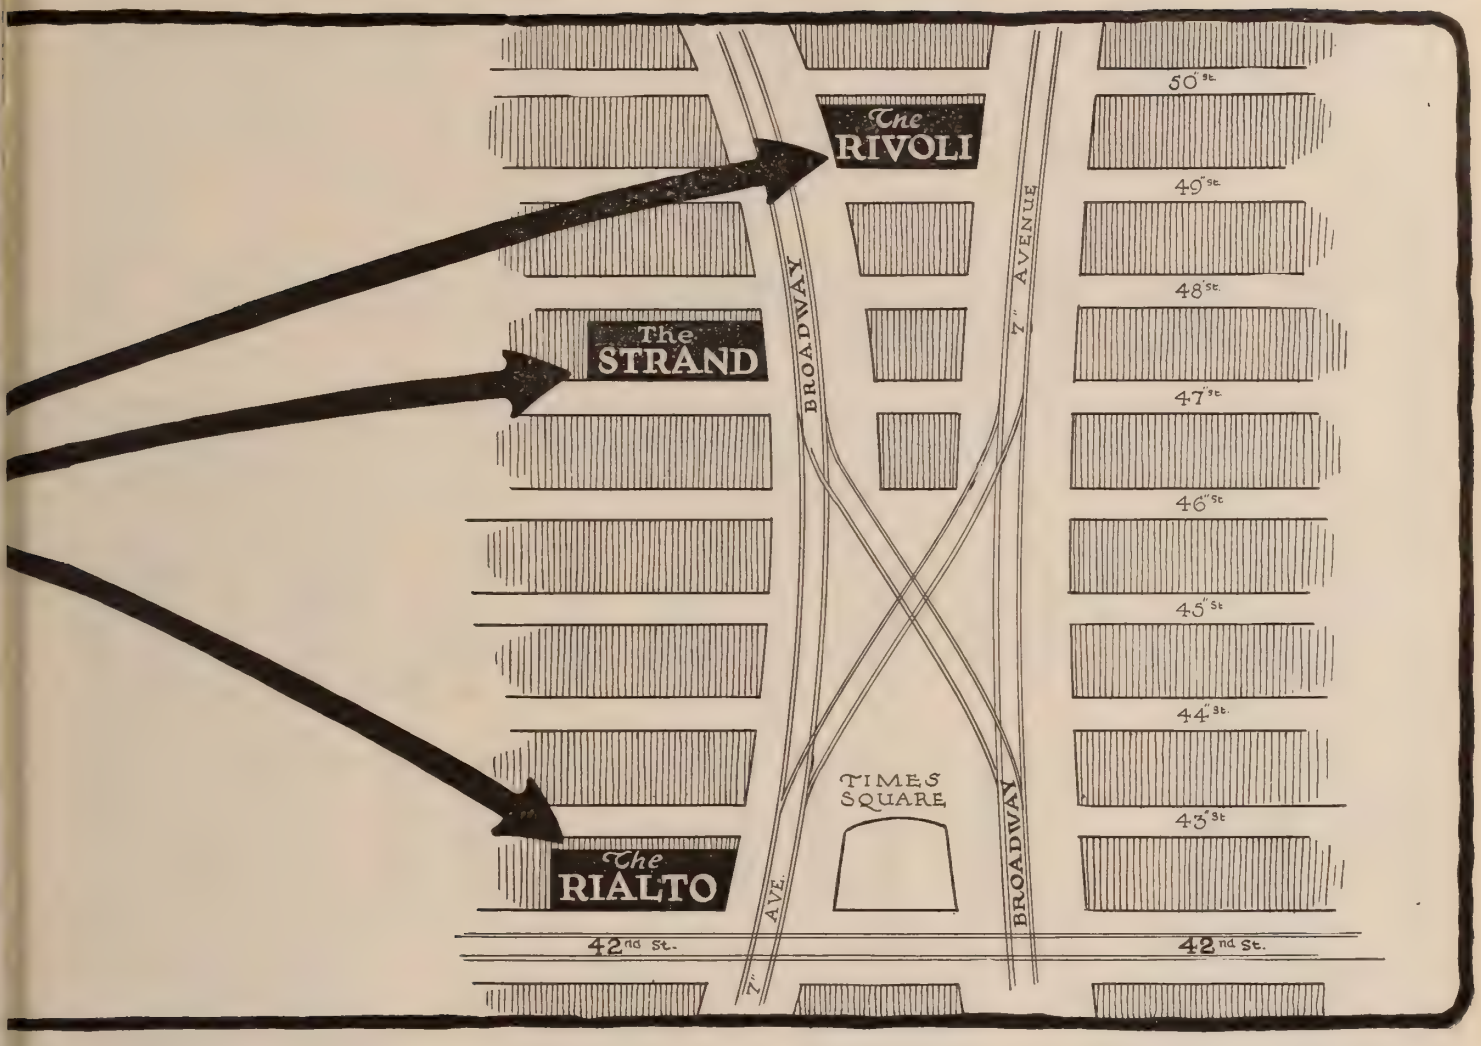
ARTCRAFT PICTURES



Kansas, Care About It?

Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Edel realize their responsibilities. They have performed splendid service for the industry in keeping before the eyes, not only of New Yorkers, but of the hundreds of thousands of visitors from all over the country, the very best in motion pictures.

Perhaps, Lawrence, Kansas, you do profit directly by this. Doubtless your leading merchant, in his trips to New York, has attended these theatres and has returned with new respect for you and your theatre. Doubtless he has boasted about you, telling his friends, "Why, they show the same pictures in Lawrence that they do in New York, and they show them just about as soon, too." But that is incidental.

The big thing is that what New York and its visitors think about motion pictures, is vital to every person connected with the industry. The leaders of America attend The Rivoli, The Strand and The Rialto, and for the good of all of us they must see the best the industry affords.

Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Edel, who realize the importance of their theatres to the industry, have chosen 121 Paramount or Artcraft Pictures for the year to come.

The way they rate the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's productions is significant.

These men believe that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has earned the right to be the predominant representative of the motion picture industry in New York in the year to come.

Do you think they are right, Lawrence, Kansas? Of course you do. And you'll be guided to no small degree by what they do.

Thanks, Lawrence, Kansas, for your attention.

ALBERT E. SMITH

IN

"The Clutch of Circumstance"

by Leighton Graves Osmun
Directed by Henry Houry

(Use this as advance copy for your program)

SHE had come to the Great City a stranger—a stranger to its ways, to its people—she who had been born and reared in the narrow confines of a New England village.

And because she was youthful and beautiful and different, she, all unknowing, won the heart of a man whose success with women had made him hold them lightly.

Then, when her success seemed complete, when she gazed from the heights of victory to the adoring world at her feet—then she discovered that her triumph had been builded on a man's desire. Should she pay? Or should she return to the obscurity whence she came? Or should she retain her triumphs and yet withhold their purchase price?

But there was one other way out. In this powerful modern drama, with its gay, yet fateful, scenes of Bohemia and backstage life, this woman struggles as only a woman can to unlock the grim clutch of circumstance.

NOTICE OF DISTRIBUTION

I HAVE looked over the entire field of motion picture distributors for the company best equipped to give "The Common Cause" the distribution its aim and theme deserve.

Measured by actual accomplishment, I have selected Vitagraph and its Distributing Organization as the most thoroughly equipped company in the picture field to present "The Common Cause" to the exhibitors, and through them to the people of America.

I know what Vitagraph has accomplished with "The Battle Cry of Peace," with "Over the Top," with "Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation," "Within the Law," "The Girl Philippa," "The Fall of a Nation" and other special productions. I know how thoroughly Vitagraph has covered the field and how splendidly it has served the exhibitors of the country with these productions.

With this first-hand information, I have arranged with Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, for the marketing through that organization of "The Common Cause."

Assured therefore of the highest efficiency in the matter of distribution, all that I am putting into the production of the "The Common Cause" will be well worth while, for I know that its message will reach to the farthest corners of the continent—into the smallest hamlet and cross roads.

The first complete films of a great battle

"Italy's Flaming Front"

The First Films of a Whole Battle

These are the latest official Italian Government war films

They were shown in 3, 2 and 2 reel installments at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, to such big business and excited such enthusiastic commendation from press and public that, after being viewed by our board of directors, they were purchased from the Italian Government's American representatives and will be put out as a 6-reel feature under the above title.

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

All bookings through First National Exchanges

You'll see Italian soldiers moving guns where mules and tractors failed to take them.

Actually, without exaggeration "Italy's Flaming Front" shows—

Mountain fighting: Bombarding enemy's trenches with big guns in preparation for infantry charge. Italian "75" hit by Austrian shell—smithereens! Italian artillery's hot reply—you never saw prettier work. Close-ups of dozens of different types of big guns, from 40 centimeters to trench "bombards" in action.

Men crouching low in trenches, bullets spatting on sand-bags overhead. They go over the top, advancing in short sprints, taking advantage of every bit of cover. The final rush, hand-to-hand bayonet fighting, victory! bringing back hordes of prisoners.

Italian grand battle fleet in bombardment of Austrian stronghold near Trieste. From dreadnoughts to submarine chasers hurling tons of shell at enemy. Close-ups and panoramic views of entire action. Italian monitors and floating gun carriages, each mounting one great gun, in action.

First complete air fight ever photographed. Austrian bombing plane attacks fleet. Six Italian sea planes give chase (two carrying enlisted cameramen). Shrapnel from Austrian batteries bursting around Italian planes. (Caught by Italian cameramen in planes.) One Italian plane's engine disabled by shrapnel and plane is forced to descend to sea under fire of Austrian batteries. Italian plane rescues aviators and destroys the plane to prevent its capture by Austrians. Austrian drops bombs at fleet, their explosions hurl huge pillars of water and spray skyward, a submarine chaser hit, you see the explosion and the craft capsize from quarter mile distance—Italian planes close in, Austrian in desperation does dare devil tail dive to sea and saves his life, but is captured by Italian torpedo boat.

In general:—

Fighting above the clouds. Italy's spider men on skis, the wonderful aerial cable communications, unbelievable feats of patience and hardihood, bridging mountain torrents and dragging great guns by hand to lofty positions where tractors, even mules are unable to go.

The eyes of the night. A night bombardment of Austrian positions, showing effect of shrapnel fire on barb-wire entanglements. Giant searchlights in operation, one of war's marvels.

Many other thrilling and interesting scenes not described here because of lack of space.

I have seen these Films and can personally vouch for the truth of these statements.

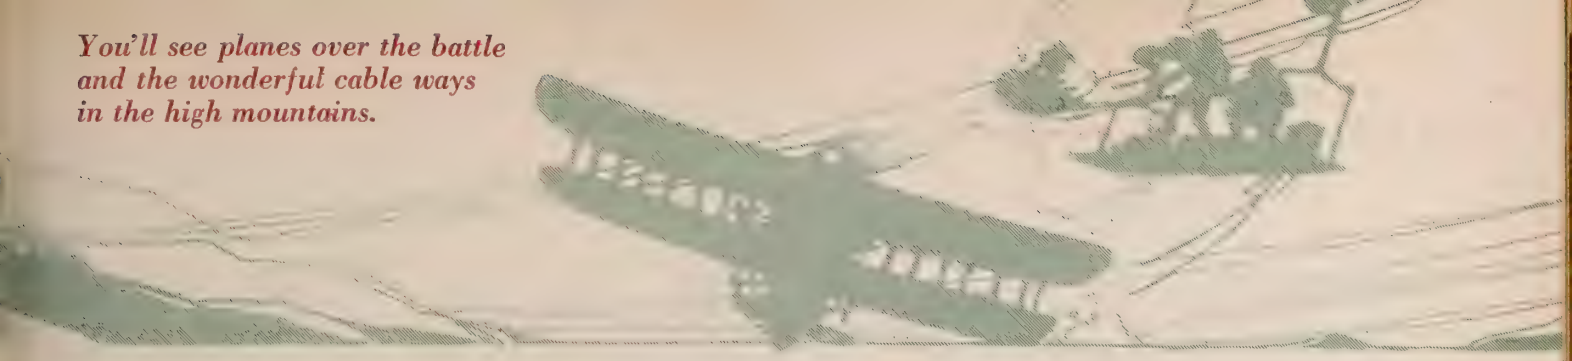
People have been waiting for such a picture of real fighting. You only have to convince them that this is the one—and you'll pack them in with "Italy's Flaming Front."

You'll see the Italian Battle Fleet bombard an Austrian stronghold



You'll see planes over the battle and the wonderful cable ways in the high mountains.

We don't have to tell you what an Official Film of a real battle will draw at your box office

"Italy's Flaming Front"

The First Films of a Whole Battle

a film full of action and fight!

You know people are waiting—hoping—to see just exactly what real fighting is like.

A real 6-reeler of real fighting seems hardly possible

This explains how the Films were made:

These extraordinary pictures were made possible by the mountainous character of the country where the battle took place. Sheltered and hidden by rocks and crags the enlisted cameramen (there were ten of them) were able to secure close-ups and panoramas of real fighting such as have never before been possible.

The aerial fight and naval battle were photographed by two cameramen in the Italian seaplanes and four on the fleet which took part in the action.

The Italian Government has made a supreme effort in these films to show its allies how hard Italy is fighting. Full preparations for filming the fighting were made in advance. The resulting films speak for themselves.

You'll see at least thirty types of big guns take part in the bombardment.

The films show a submarine chaser hit by an aerial bomb — photographed from a quarter mile distance.

New York Daily Papers

New York American:

"For exciting action and cumulative dramatic interest 'Italy's Flaming Front' is unquestionably the most remarkable ever filmed, its authenticity is self evident."

New York Sun:

"Italians storming an Austrian trench in a hail of shrapnel are shown in 'Italy's Flaming Front.' They are shown building bridges and carrying on the great mechanical work necessary to fight the Austrians over the mountains."

New York Tribune:

"These Italian War Pictures are quite different from any war pictures that have been shown."

New York Journal of Commerce:

"'Italy's Flaming Front,' the Italian War Film at the Rivoli, is creating an extraordinary amount of interest."

Motion Picture Trade Papers

Motion Picture News

"There is nothing 'Faky' about these pictures and every one of the scenes are actual war occurrences. As this picture was shown . . . it drew an almost continuous round of applause."

Moving Picture World:

"An Austrian battleplane pursued by Italian fliers and forced to capitulate. The bombardment of Hermada, overlooking the Adriatic. The hurling of smoke bombs and the infantry going into action under shrapnel fire protected by smoke clouds. The thrilling capture of hundreds of Austrian prisoners.

Exhibitors' Trade Review:

"If the first installment of the Italian War Pictures at the Rivoli is any criterion they will pack the Rivoli to the doors at every performance. In those being shown this week the work of the Italian army is brought out clearly, even to such minor detail as the manner in which one of the men uses his bayonet as he goes into the enemy trenches."

—and you don't have to book it until a big "First National" Theatre puts it over in your territory.

You'll see Austrian shrapnel bursting near Italian planes from which it was photographed.

PATHÉ

"You said she'd be here! Where is she?"

Some reasons why

RUTH ROLAND in HANDS UP

the cyclonic Pathé western serial, is an excellent booking proposition for you

1 - The star; for four years she has been one of the most popular of all screen players.

2 - The story; written by Gilson Willets, it presents something new in idea and development.

3 - The production; produced by Astra, the company which made some of the most strikingly successful photoplays ever released - the Pathé serials "The Fatal Ring" & "The House of Hate," among others.

4 - The direction by James W. Horne: smooth, finished and able.

5 - The national advertising; billboards all over the country will carry the magnificent 24 sheet advertising this superb production.

6 - The sensational nature of the serial; it is full of thrills - of ex-citing situations and suspense.

Over There and Over Here

Over there the valiant men of France, Great Britain, Italy and the United States are wearing down the resistance of the Hun and forcing back his fighting line toward the Rhine.

Over here men, women and children watch with feverish interest the papers day by day to see what the last few hours have brought forth over there. Every item of news, each picture that bears upon the endless battle, is scanned with eager eyes.

You can show them what the motion picture camera is seeing over there-first hand, fascinating information, if you show

Miss Dalton's supporting cast is deserving of highest praise, and the entire production is well up to the Ince standard. Grauman's Pictorial Weekly presented for the first time a number of the "Topics of the Day," selected by The Literary Digest, and each successive subject brought forth thunderous applause and considerable laughter.

It affords me great pleasure to be able to inform you of the wonderful success which your "TOPICS OF THE DAY" are meeting with here at the Strand Theatre, and I wish to state further unreservedly that they are as pleasing to our patrons as any specialty or film subject in the bill.

I can most enthusiastically endorse same and would advocate that exhibitors make some arrangement whereby this could be incorporated in their Review, the same as we are now doing.

Wishing you continued success which you are most deserving of for this splendid idea, I beg to remain,

Recent Review from the Motion Picture News

THERE is one of the cleverest effects achieved this week in the Topical at the Strand theatre that we have seen in a long time and this is done in a very simple manner through "Topics of the Day," something really new. This is a series of punch paragraphs, gathered by the Literary Digest, and thrown on the screen one after the other. There are no pictures with these, all of them merely short paragraphs from various papers, and most of them lambasting the Kaiser, but they delight the audience and get a series of big hands.

The California Theatre program for the week of July 14 was characterized by the abundance and variety of the features offered. In addition to the usual combination of Hearst-Pathe News, Gaumont and Gaumont Graphic, "Britain's Bulwarks" gave further world interest to the California Topical Review. "Topics of the Day," as prepared by The Literary Digest for the All Star Distributors of California, caused much merriment by the clever witticisms.

"A Burglar for a Night"

by

F. McGREW WILLIS

Produced under the personal supervision of
ROBERT BRUNTON

Directed by Ernest Warde

In the role of Kirk Marden, J. Warren Kerrigan will be seen as the son of an American railroad magnate; the embodiment of the American spirit to fight for right—and fight fair. In the Orient he meets William Real and befriends him. Upon their return to America he learns that his father is about to be ruined by a business rival. How he steals not only the papers that had been obtained through intrigue, but also the heart of a beautiful girl, presents Mr. Kerrigan in one of the most virile roles that he has ever interpreted.

"CLOTHES make the man" it is said Opinion may differ as to the exact truth of this quotation but it is true that a program, just like a man may be greatly improved by judicious "dressing."

The cut below is a most attractive design for the first Kathleen Clifford Plaza Picture "Angel Child." It will add to the selling value of your program a good deal.

Why Quality Producers release thru Hodkinson Service

SOME confusion formerly existed in the mind of the trade in reference to the W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION

By confusing the distributing organization of W. W. Hodkinson with the product it sells, many have entirely lost sight of the fact that this corporation is the only independent distributing channel in the industry absolutely unhampered by those entangling producer or exhibitor ties which, by strangling independence, forbid the impartial, fair and equitable business dealings with both sides, that characterize the Hodkinson method of doing business.

This fact and a knowledge of Mr. Hodkinson's principles and record of achievements has made the far-sighted producers now releasing through Hodkinson realize that his present organization spells big success for them because it is basicly right and entirely just in every way.

More than that, the comprehensive consolidation of the exhibitors' buying power throughout the country by means of the Hodkinson Co-Partnership Plan offers them a safe, assured and continuous market for quality product.

Hodkinson Service is being moulded to fit the needs of exhibitors and is being sold to them on a basis of profit to the exhibitor and producer.

RELEASED THRU W.W. HODKINSON CORPORATION

W. W. Hodkinson, Esq.,
527 Fifth Avenue
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Hodkinson:

J. Warren Kerrigan's first production under my management is being forwarded to you. Your distribution of this production will be, I am sure, the beginning of an enjoyable and profitable business association.

It has been three years almost to a day since I first talked with you about producing. Through all the changes and turmoil of those three years, I have retained my original viewpoint -- that the business needs new ideas and more ideals and that both are commercially possible with you at the head of a great distributing company. Your breadth of vision, ability, fairness & honesty will, of course, make for success.

I selected your organization because of my belief that the policy you have adopted for exhibitors will, in the long run, prove most satisfactory to all interests - exhibitor, distributor and producer.

With best wishes,

Very sincerely,

Jesse D. Hampton

Mr. W. Hodkinson,
President, W. W. Hodkinson Corp.,
527 Fifth Avenue,
New York.

My dear Mr. Hodkinson:

I feel it would be a serious personal lapse to let the consummation of our contract for the distribution of the eight Lillian Walker pictures, pass without an expression of my satisfaction in having effected this releasing arrangement with you.

As you know, I have been working for more than a year with exhibitors in an effort to develop some sort of practical co-operation between exhibitor and producer.

When I say to you, therefore, as I do, that I believe your plan is the only logical, business policy, now before the industry, that will gain genuine co-ordination between exhibitor and producer, I trust you will accept the assertion, not alone as a personal tribute, but as a plain statement of facts by one who has been in the closest touch with all the co-operative plans in the field.

In placing the series of Lillian Walker pictures in your hands for distribution, therefore, it is my honest belief that I have not only served the interests of my own company best, but that I am doing "my bit" along lines that have a most vital bearing on the interests of the exhibitors of the country as a whole.

Very sincerely yours,

Lester Dark

Timely Suggestions To Producers:

Never, in the history of the industry, has a substantial, efficient organization been so necessary to the successful marketing of productions in foreign territory. War time conditions make exacting service a paramount necessity. Our facilities for the sale, exploitation, routing, shipping, collecting, insuring, etc., of film are the result of years of experience in foreign fields. We would be glad of the opportunity to show you how the house of ROBERTSON-COLE can better serve you.

The scope of our sales organization is broad enough to meet the requirements of the most extensive producers who have to get big round sums for their pictures; and at the same time is so constituted that it can give the same painstaking, result-getting attention to the less pretentious pictures.

STATE AND MADISON STS.

DIRECTION
CASTLE AMUSEMENT CO. (INC)

CHICAGO, August 3rd, 1918.

George Kleine System,
207 S. Wabash Avenue,
Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:-

Believing that a great injustice has been done to the Essanay Company as well as yourselves by the Trade Paper advertising of one of your competitors in connection with the release of Charley Chaplin in "TRIPLE TROUBLE" I want to state actual facts in connection with the engagement of the picture at the Castle Theatre.

The Castle Theatre, ever since its opening, has been an exclusive first run house; we cater to the very best patronage in Chicago, consequently endeavor to use careful judgment in the selection of our program.

Never in the history of this theatre have we played anything but first run films.

I booked "TRIPLE TROUBLE" after witnessing a private screening and my judgment in its being a satisfactory box-office attraction in every way has been proven by the receipts.

The picture was booked originally for one week but owing to the very excellent business, and because of popular request, we have held it over for a second week's run, which is the first time this has been done in the history of the Castle Theatre.

"TRIPLE TROUBLE" PLAYED TO THE BIGGEST BUSINESS EVER DONE AT THE CASTLE THEATRE despite unusually hot weather conditions and gave complete satisfaction to my audiences. They thoroughly enjoyed it and the laughs were just as great as I have ever heard with any of Chaplin's pictures.

I am a stickler for fair play and in order that exhibitors operating first class picture houses may not be misled into believing that "TRIPLE TROUBLE" is not a brand new film in every sense of the word, never before shown - that it will give complete satisfaction to their audiences - that it will prove just as big a money getter as any of the Chaplins, I am going on record in this manner.

You have my permission to use this letter in any way you see fit and if further proof is desired you are at liberty to refer exhibitors direct to me.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) M.J.Weil

Thoughts on This and That

Going to Chicago?

ALREADY they are asking in New York film circles: "Are you going to Chicago?"

It speaks well for the forthcoming Convention of the A. E. A.—September 3-7, that New York should be convention-minded during dog-days; and there seem to be plenty of affirmative answers to the above query.

A good business chatauqua will do the industry a lot of good right now.

Many questions about the future of the business are being asked right and left. Some revolutionary changes are under way. A frank discussion, one which would clear up the rather vague outlook, would do the industry a practical good.

Why not lay aside a lot of silly stiffness, pride and—yes, shall we say buncombe—and talk straight out?

Another thing: New York never knows enough about the exhibiting field. There's a chance to learn something at this get-acquainted, business convention.

Who'll Make Them?

THE public has been taught to hate and fight by a number of the most remarkable films ever produced. And we need and shall have more such pictures.

But there are other big factors in the war besides soldiers and engines of war.

There's labor for one thing—the labor that's building the ships for the soldiers and that's making the engines of war.

Who'll make a war labor picture? The Bureau of Labor and all its civic affiliations will back the picture all across the country.

Who'll make a Y. M. C. A. picture?

The Y. M. C. A. is taking the American home over to the trenches on every battle front, British, French, Italian, American; and is making morale, by General Pershing's own statement, to such an extent that it adds one soldier to every nine.

The Y. M. C. A. with its widespread and effective organization will boost such a picture in every town and city in the country.

Don't forget, too, Mr. Producer, that the exhibitor needs a variety of patriotic pictures—not too many of the same kind, even if they are extraordinarily successful.

Speeding Up America's Message

IT does an American's heart good to walk into the offices of the Division of Films, Times Building, New York City.

There's a whirr of machinery everywhere; and that means the speeding up of film propaganda, the dissemination, through the screens, of Uncle Sam's mighty doings at home and overseas; the maintenance, through motion pictures, of that American spirit of confidence in right plus might which is at the heart of the new and great smash towards the Rhine.

The Government of the United States is relying upon the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information to get from the motion picture its utmost expression—for America and against the Hun.

The Division of Films is striving, we are confident, to do this supreme duty fairly and regardless of other considerations. This is as it should be, as it must be.

We of the trade are film men; but first, we are Americans. And we will put America first, making any necessary sacrifice and asking only that our own affairs be given thoughtful and just consideration.

No Danger!

THERE was a murmur from Washington last week that motion pictures might be reclassified as a non-essential.

This has not materialized and we are confident it will not.

It will not, so long as the producers turn out those patriotic films, which to an extent that will ever be credited to them, have put the spirit of fight into the American nation; nor as long as we make and send overseas those films which tell the true life and ideals of America; nor as long as the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information stands as a plain-as-day evidence of the government's war-time need of the motion picture.

A "Special Special"

We want serious war pictures of fact and fancy. The public wants them and the exhibitor makes them pay. The country needs them. They have been a force—the due proportions of which may never be justly recognized—in creating the new and wonderful American nationalism.

But people want bright things, too. We have appealed right along in these columns for pictures with the sunshine of life.

"Mickey" may not only be classed as a special in the trade sense of bigness but, also, the picture is specially vivid, happy and clean. That spells popularity, specially today

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

"Tell it me something, Abe," says Mawruss. "Is this here Fourth Liberty Loaner what everybodeh's talking about going to be a side-show for this here Motion Picturers Exposing?"

"Mawruss, you give it me a pain," countered Abe, "just on account it looks as how they ran out of Exhibitor Cons after Boston and Chicago got theirs and this fellow Elliott, he needs a new ballyhoo, you gets so mixed up that next I should expect it you will say as how Nat Rothstein or Arthur James started this here war just to put over a Kaiser fillum."

* * * *

BUT aside from the ruminations of our sidewalk "fillum" brokers, Abe and Mawruss, the prospect of a Motion Picture Exposition in October does bring its share of smiles.

Exhibitor Conventions have always been the alibis for Picture Expositions—you know the line, "Hundreds of exhibitors from all sections of the country."

Of course no experienced film person ever expected more than fifty exhibitors—and those the politicians—from cities outside the particular one holding the Convention and Exposition.

But the alibi was there, nevertheless. While this year we are to have an Exposition without a Convention, and with the additional patent fact that no exhibitor can be expected to absent himself from his theater during the Loan drive when his efforts at home are needed and expected.

So the beans are spilled and we learn at last that expositions are aimed at Mr. and Mrs. General Public.

As Goldberg puts it—"We never thought of that."

* * * *

Along with Abe and Mawruss we have lots of other purely personal opinions on Expositions, but as our circulation is 99 44-100 per cent exhibitor circulation—approximately—and exhibitors don't care a two-penny bow-wow about Expositions, we had better subdue our flow of words.

As Mawruss would put it, "Exposings, Abe, they are like poor relations—always with us. And all a feller can do, Abe, is hope for the best."

* * * *

AT the recent Boston festival a committee of the M. P. E. L. was appointed to wage the battle for Sunday shows throughout the country during the coming year. President Schaeffer, we understand, has already started the work.

We shall be interested in watching the activities of this committee, also of any amalgamated committee that may come out of the harmony session in Chicago—not to mention the National Association.

The thought is brought to our mind by the news story on Page 1205 of this issue treating of the Sunday question in Ohio.

The situation there is already a serious one. Take this in connection with the number of cities throughout the country where picture performances are barred on Sundays and we can reach a staggering total of possible revenue lost to film manufacturers and exhibitors.

And it wouldn't take a very large percentage of this total to provide an impressive war chest with which to set on foot an offensive movement against the Blue Law citadel.

Jim Hoff asks for additions and corrections to his roster of film men now in the service, "prepared from all available sources."

We hasten to volunteer the name of Ben Grimm, formerly of the M. P. W. staff and for the past ten months of Uncle Sam's Signal Corps.

The Honor Roll is found on page 1202 this week.

* * * *

THE anniversary of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau in its enlarged form is celebrated this week. There's an interesting summing up of past promises and past performances on Page 1221.

Be sure to read it. So much is heard about Service real and near these days that you want to get posted.

On Page 1208 there's a new step in distribution discovered—of unusual interest to large exhibitors and theatre chains. It's a sort of a "wide open market" step announced by Harold Horton for his travel series.

There's an interesting story from Select on Page 1202, summarizing the roster of men from that organization now in khaki. It lays emphasis on the point we made a few weeks ago that the distribution and sales end of this game is surely strongly represented on Uncle Sam's Hun-exterminating committee.

Watterson Rothacker dropped into the News office for forty-five seconds—we counted them—on Tuesday. "Watty" was a real busy boy. He arrived from Chicago at 10 o'clock and before lunch time had kept a half dozen appointments to talk business previously arranged.

We'll bet an early-in-the-season straw hat he gave Harry Schwalbe, J. D. Williams more than forty-five seconds.

* * * *

WE have one bit of news in this issue that the boss doesn't know about yet. We stole it from the columns of Printer's Ink and it concerns the coming Y. M. C. A. drive and William A. Johnston's appointment as publicity director for the important New York division.

We just had to print it for the rest of us here in the NEWS feels a sort of reflected share of the honor. The glory alone, though—not the work, for work it surely will be to handle the division expected to raise forty million of the Y. M. C. A. fund.

But don't worry about the NEWS—W. A. J. will continue to be close to the desk here at 729 Seventh Avenue.

* * * *

Picking winners is a failing with the News—we enjoy it and, we might add with modesty, succeed fairly well at it. Do you remember, several months ago, when W. A. J. saw "Three Faces East" in the making at Atlantic City, he enthused editorially over this first stage work of Anthony Kelly, pride of the screen?

Now New York has pronounced it an emphatic hit and, again, we repeat W. A. J.'s query: "Why not a screen version produced and released simultaneously with the New York run?"

* * * *

COULDN'T a real sobby old homestead scenario be written around the heading that greets you on the opposite page telling of the release of J. Stuart Blackton's "Common Cause" through Vitagraph?

Here's to the wish that the coming Blackton special adds another million odd to the Vitagraph receipts as did its predecessors, "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Womanhood."

The page across the way also tells you of Mary Pickford's new picture—release channel still a mystery. That's news.

Then on Page 1209 you learn that the Government has rescinded the ban on the photographing of aeroplane operations. Also some pertinent observations on the film outlook in the Northwest by James V. Bryson, pioneer Minneapolis exchange man.

Friend Bryson, by the way, is in New York looking the field over before making his fall plans. He's a good man to meet.

After all that has been said and written about United Theatres it might be wise to turn to Page 1208 and read of that organization's production plans which are now rounding into shape.

* * * *

Hist! Mystery! Hush! We saw Sidney Garrett and Walter Hoff Seeley at lunch together last week.

Now we've started a rumor in the export field.

And we'll bet the only thing that was merged was the luncheon check.

In and Out of Town

James C. Bryson, prominent exchange man, Minneapolis, was seen on Broadway this week. He looked in a business-like mood.

Watterson Rothacker, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, was a visitor in New York this week, combining business with a pleasure trip.

Willard C. Patterson, manager, Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., dropped in on New Yorkers this week on a business trip.

A. S. Seorrio, connected with Metro's business interests in the West, arrived in New York this week, from Metro's West Coast Studios.

Theodore and Leopold Wharton, Wharton Bros., Inc., were seen in the lobby of Hotel Astor last week. They both had some good fish stories to tell, and state that fishing around Ithaca is almost as good as the producing business.

Alfred Hamberger, one of the most prominent theatre owners in the Middle West, was one of the film colony seen in the Astor this week.

Blanche Sweet, star, now appearing in independent productions made by Harry Garson, returned to Los Angeles this week, after a three-weeks' stay in New York.

J. Searle Dawley, head of the M. P. D. A., returned to New York this week, after an extended trip to Alaska.

George R. Grant, First National, returned this week from a business trip to Minneapolis.

Bernhardt Writes Play for Protege

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Mme Sarah Bernhardt has written a drama for use as one of Mme. Yorska's film subjects, titled "The Net." It is to be produced by the Maxine Photoplay Corporation on its new program shortly to be announced, according to reports last week. It is probable that W. Lawson Butt will be the leading man.

It is said the story contains enough drama for twelve reels, but that it will be made in six reels.

Mutual Promotes Rollo in Sales Department

S. J. Rollo, who has been connected with the sales department of the Mutual Film Corporation for the last year, has been appointed assistant sales manager by A. S. Kirkpatrick, Mutual's new assistant general manager.

Mr. Rollo entered the Mutual organization from Montgomery Ward & Co., the big Chicago mail order house, after an apprenticeship in salesmanship with the National Biscuit Company.

Some months ago he was placed in charge of the employees' department.

Vitagraph Gets "Common Cause"

Blackton Picture Expected to Be Ready for Showing in Fall—Recruiting Mission Co-operates in Making

"THE COMMON CAUSE," the super-feature which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is making under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, is to be released through the Vitagraph distributing organization. The date of release has not been decided upon, although the production is about half completed.

In an authorized statement to the exhibitors of the country relative to his distribution plans, Commodore Blackton said:

"I have looked over the field of motion picture distributors for the company best equipped to give 'The Common Cause' the distribution which its aim and theme deserve.

"Measured by actual accomplishment, I have selected Vitagraph and its distributing organization as the most thoroughly equipped company in the picture field to present 'The Common Cause' to the exhibitors, and, through them, to the people of America.

"I know what Vitagraph has accomplished with 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' with 'Over the Top,' with 'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,' 'Within the Law,' 'The Girl Philippa,' 'The Fall of a Nation' and other special productions. I know how thoroughly Vitagraph has covered the field and how splendidly it has served the exhibitors of the country with these productions.

"With this first-hand information, I have arranged with Albert B. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, for the marketing through that organization of 'The Common Cause.'

"Assured, therefore, of the highest efficiency in the matter of distribution, all that I am putting into 'The Common Cause' will be well worth while, for I know that its message will reach to the farthest corners of the continent—into the smallest hamlet and cross-roads."

Commodore Blackton, who by his production of "The Battle Cry of Peace," "Womanhood" and other big Vitagraph specials in the past has won the title of "master of screencraft," declares that "The Common Cause" will be the greatest effort of his career.

While no date has been set for the release of "The Common Cause," it is estimated by Commodore Blackton that he will have it ready for distribution early in the fall.

Mary Pickford Plans for New Picture

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Mary Pickford will begin producing about September 10, it was reported from Los Angeles August 15 by wire, a new picture about which nothing has been announced as yet. It is probable that Miss Pickford will use Charlie Chaplin's studio for the work.

No decision has been made, it is said, as to the method of releasing the feature. The star is considering propositions from every angle, it is said.

Berst Resigns from Division of Films

Chas. S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has received the following letter of resignation from J. A. Berst, manager of distribution. The announcement of Mr. Berst's successor will be made later, it was said this week.

August 12, 1918.

My dear Mr. Hart:

The Board of Directors of the United Picture Theatres of America, of which I am President, have complained several times to me that I was not devoting sufficient time to the interests of the company, and that it was becoming more and more necessary that I abandon my duties at the Committee on Public Information.

As the business of the United Company is becoming more important every day, I feel obligated to devote to it all my time in the future, and I desire to be relieved from any duties in the department.

I wish to assure you that it is with very great regret that I will discontinue my association with Mr. Creel and with you, as it has been a great honor to work with you both in the interests of the United States Government.

Believe me,

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) J. A. BERST.

"Great Love" Opens in Los Angeles

(Special to Motion Picture News)

D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love" opened August 12 at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles to capacity business, the prices ranging from twenty-five cents to seventy-five cents. The advance sales indicate three weeks of big business.

The premiere of "The Great Love" was attended by all principals of the film colony, the picture attracting as much attention and carriage trade as Griffith's previous premiers. The Los Angeles papers have been lavish in their praise of the production, which is considered the most successful Artcraft release in the Los Angeles territory.

Fait Appointed to a Liberty Theatre

William Fait, Jr., managing director of the Avon theatre, Utica, N. Y., has accepted an assignment with the Commission on War Training Camp Activities as manager of a Liberty theatre. In all probability Mr. Fait will be located at Camp Sherman, Ohio.

Fire Destroys Films

CLEVELAND, O.—Fire broke out in the Orpheum theatre, Canton, last week, and destroyed about ten reels of film, among them a Sennett comedy. R. C. Steuve, manager of the house, reports that the accident occurred in the morning while the operator was adjusting the projection machine.

Plan Exposition for October

National Association Plans One Week Affair Linked with Liberty Loan Campaign — Banquet Same Week

THE Motion Picture Exposition—after three months as an "On Again, Off Again Finnegan" stunt is now "On again." Definite decision was reached last week at a meeting held in the National Association rooms to hold an exposition during the week of October 5 to 13.

The exposition will also be to some extent a "Motion Picture Liberty Loan Rally," while the banquet, originally scheduled by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and later taken over by the National Association, will also be held during this week.

It is believed that the combination of affairs will result in a successful exposition and incidentally show to that portion of the public which attends the Grand Central Palace show the work the motion picture has done in war work.

The meeting was presided over by William S. Sherrill, President of the Frohman Amusement Corporation and a director of the Motion Picture Exposition Company in the absence of President William A. Brady.

The meeting was called at the request of the Board of Directors of the Exposition Company who deemed it advisable that the companies which had contracted for space for the October show should learn of the plans which are under way.

It was reported at the meeting that twenty companies had actually signed up contracts amounting to about $24,000 and a majority of these companies were represented at the meeting when it was unanimously voted to proceed with the plans as originally outlined.

Bullock Needs No "Gew-Gaws" to Do His Bit

Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, has written Motion Picture News a letter which is self-explanatory. We publish is below without comment:

Cleveland, O., August 7, 1918.
Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

I note with interest the feverish preparations that are being made for various "drives" in the movies to help "Lick Hell Out of the Kaiser."

I also notice that "Victory Screen Pledge Certificates" and other "inducements" are going to be offered to managers to stimulate them to help Uncle Sam. This is dead wrong.

I say to hell with the manager who needs a "Gew-gaw" of any kind, especially since he and his employees are now beneficiaries under Provost Marshall Crowder's ruling.

If the growing casualty lists will not stimulate him he should be drafted at once. If too old his place should be closed and he should be interned as a "slacker."

There are plenty of slacker managers in strong pro-German locations who do not care how many "Victory Screen Pledge Certificates" their opposition gets—THEY GET THE BUSINESS by offending no one.

As an active officer in organization matters here in Ohio I have concrete evidence of this, so much so that after considerable correspondence with Messrs. Pettijohn and Rembusch in Cleveland have evolved a plan to make every manager in Ohio "toe the line for the boys over there"—to make it unanimous on all matters emanating from Messrs. Creel and Hart's publicity office, O.Kd by the M. P. industry's representatives. Non-members uncontrolled by League or A. E. A. orders or requests must be checked up.

Co-operation with the A. P. L. and kindred organizations will make for 100 per cent efficiency where "gew-gaws" will stimulate box-office profiteering by "slackers" at the expense of the patriotic manager who needs no paper "Iron Cross."

Yours truly.
SAM. BULLOCK,
Secy. Local No. 1 M. P. E. L. of A.
Nat. Director A. E. A.

Division of Films Adds New Branch

Chairman Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, makes the interesting announcement that it is organizing an Educational Branch under the direction of Clara deLissa Berg, formerly of the staff of the Motion Picture News. Various plans looking to the better knowledge of the motion picture among educators and the furtherance of its use along educational lines are under consideration.

Sliter Manages Exchange for Mutual

Fred G. Sliter, manager of the Albany branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been selected by President James M. Sheldon of the Mutual as manager of the New York exchange, succeeding M. J. Sullivan, resigned. Mr. Sliter assumed charge of the office August 4.

Jerome Safron of the sales force of the Philadelphia branch, has been promoted to branch manager at Albany, assuming charge July 31.

Mr. Sliter's promotion comes after three years of sales work in the Mutual ranks, and is in line with President Sheldon's policy of selecting men from within his own organization for important vacancies which occur. Mr. Sliter entered the Mutual service in 1915 as salesman at Albany. The next year he became branch manager at Albany, where he has remained since.

Prior to his entrance into the distribution of motion pictures, Mr. Sliter was for years in the theatrical business and the exhibition end of pictures. He was for a long time associated with his father, known professionally as Col. Stanton, in the management of theatrical enterprises.

Soldiers' Mothers See "America's Answer"

Business Manager George Bowles, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has received the following letter, dated August 13, from Grace C. Greene, of the 302d Engineers' Association; Mrs. Greene is the wife of Capt. F. S. Greene of the 302d Engineers, who are now in France:

Through your kindness and the courtesy of Mr. Howard Schnebbe, of the Harris theatre, one hundred mothers of the boys in Company B, 302d Engineers, were made happy by the receipt of tickets to witness the official war picture, "America's Answer."

Your generous offer was announced at our meeting on Monday night, and the mothers were filled with excitement and enthusiasm over the prospect of watching our soldiers at work in France.

I am glad that all the sorrowful parts were cut out, so that the happiness which you are giving these mothers will not be marred by any tears that night.

START Y. M. C. A. DRIVE

William A. Johnston in Charge of Publicity of New York Division

PREPARATIONS for the coming fund drive for the Y. M. C. A. work for the boys in khaki are now well under way. Bruce Barton, late editor of Every Week, is head of the publicity committee with separate advertising and new branches, the latter alone calling for the services of a director and thirty-six writers and correspondents in Washington, London, Paris and at the Italian front.

Kenneth Goode, formerly of the advertising department of Vogue, the Saturday Evening Post and the New York American, heads the advertising department. Charles T. Heaslip is in charge of the news department.

Branches for the department's direct work will be established in the six military divisions into which the country is divided. William A. Johnston, publisher and editor of Motion Picture News, will have charge of the New York division; S. C. Dobbs, vice-president of the Coco-Cola Company, Atlanta, will look after the Southern division; Henry Schott, of Montgomery, Ward & Co., Chicago, will direct the Central division; and Mr. Schlessinger, of The Emporium, San Francisco, will preside over the Pacific Coast division.

George W. Perkins, chairman of the Y. M. C. A. Campaign Committee, addressed the directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on Wednesday at a meeting to discuss co-operation of the film industry in the drive. Walter W. Irwin was appointed chairman of a committee to carry out the plans.

"Salome" Gets Private Show Before Opening

Preliminary to the opening of the new William Fox Liberty theatre, September 29, in St. Louis, there will be a private screening of the opening attraction, "Salome," the night before in the theatre, with Mayor Christman and more than 500 city officials and their friends as guests of the management.

According to an announcement by John Zanft, managing director of the William Fox Circuit of theatres, who has been in charge of arrangements for the opening, the first public opening of the new theatre will be Sunday, September 29. "Salome," the Theda Bara super film production, has been booked for an indefinite engagement, inaugurating a policy of high-class pictures which will put the William Fox Liberty theatre among the leading playhouses of the country.

Renovations on the Liberty theatre are progressing apace. Workmen have practically completed the installation of the $12,000 pipe organ, the changes and redecorating in the interior of the house are nearly completed, and the lobby has been enlarged and transformed until now the William Fox Liberty theatre has room for some of the finest lobby displays in any house in the Middle West.

Perret Lends Support to Lafayette Celebration

At the request of Leonce Perret, the Lafayette League, which is conducting a national campaign to perpetuate General Pershing's laconic speech at the tomb of Lafayette, "Lafayette, We Come!" is cooperating with the National Defense Society and the Lafayette Day National Committee toward insuring the success of the celebration of the anniversary of Lafayette's birth on September 6th.

Prominent figures in American civic and official life, including Theodore Roosevelt, Joseph H. Choate, Jr., George W. Wickersham, Charles J. Bonaparte, W. R. Hodges, Moorfield Storey and others of equal prominence are expected to take part in the festivities on that day.

The motion picture, "Lafayette, We Come!" (Pershing '17), based upon General Pershing's utterance at the tomb of Lafayette, will undoubtedly be called upon to aid this movement, and Mr. Perret has promised his co-operation in this respect.

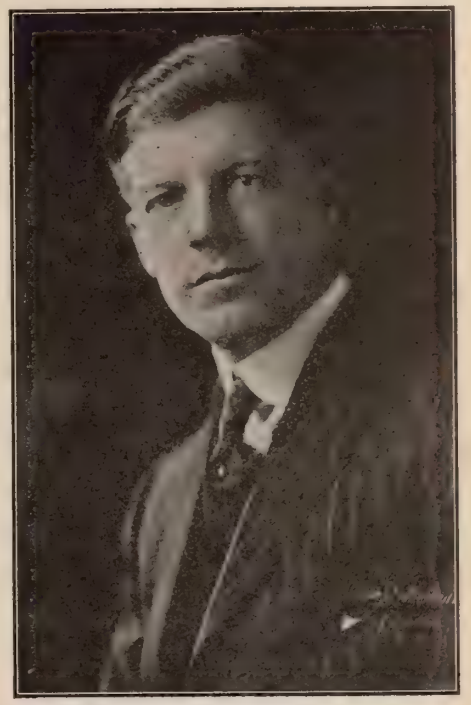
"Boost Prices"—Frank Quimby

Pathe Sales Manager Says Country-Wide Trip Shows Exhibitors Face Serious Problems Created by War



Frank C. Quimby, of Pathe

RECENTLY returning to New York after a swing around the circuit of Pathe Exchanges in the principal cities of the United States, F. C. Quimby, sales manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., declares that with a marked decrease of population because of the war and a big increase in overhead, the big problem before exhibitors today is to have the courage to increase admission prices.

The result of his investigations along these lines follow:

"The latest statistical figures from Washington state that $1.00 now only buys what 47 cents bought a little over a year ago. The public has accepted this increase in the cost of living as being part of the war and the great American business could not keep up with the present times if they did not advance their prices with the cost of the increased cost of doing business and the motion picture, the fifth largest industry in the world, is the only industry that has not increased its admission price.

"Very few distributors are making money and in places the same applies to exhibitors. Exhibitors have told me that they did not have the courage to increase their admission prices, fearing that their business would fall off. This is not good business. Exhibitors everywhere are going to be compelled to increase their admission prices to meet the cost of their overhead. Hundreds of thousands of Americans have gone to war or are in training camps who formerly patronized the motion picture theatres at different points all over the United States. With this loss in people and the increased cost in overhead, it is going to be absolutely necessary for the exhibitor to figure out what his percentage of increase must be and then have the courage to execute this necessity. This is not only going to be necessary in different localities but throughout the nation. Statistics show that in the past six months there has been a very small percentage of theatres that increased their admission prices. All the theatres that I have visited in the last two months are giving the public 50 per cent more show value than they are receiving in money. Sit down and think this over and you will realize the folly of it all.

"In Butte, Mont., Frank Bailey of the American theatre, sometime ago realized the impossibility of showing a profit in his theatre at the admission he was charging.

"He came out with full page ads in the newspapers, laying before the public the facts concerning the overhead expense of his theatre, etc.; he was losing money. He announced that on a certain date the admission price would be increased 50 per cent and did not experience any falling off in patrons. It is true that the public is fickle, but if you will be open and frank with them and tell them that every other commodity has increased in some cases over 100 per cent and that your salaries and overhead of your theatre has increased 100 per cent in the last year, and that you have stood it all, without any increase in the admission price, you will find that the public will be willing to pay for what they are getting.

"A great many exhibitors explained to me, 'I must have cheaper film. I must secure my service at better prices, etc.' That is not an answer to their problem. Some of them say, 'I am not making money and must cut down my expenses.' Saving a few dollars in film rentals will not offset the difference of increasing the admission price from 25 per cent to 50 per cent. Producers cannot make good pictures unless they can at least break even on the cost of production and unless the exhibitor is willing to pay for what a picture is worth in their particular community, it will be impossible for the producer to continue making good pictures. Jensen and Von Herberg, on the Pacific Coast, say that they would rather have a $1,500 a week picture than a $200 a week picture. Von Herberg says that a $1,500 picture will make him more money. Instead of spending their time looking for cheap pictures, they are spending their time looking for big, high-class productions which they are willing to pay for.

"The Pathe organization has continually been striving to do everything possible to co-operate with the exhibitor for the betterment of their business. We have continually sold our releases at prices that would allow the exhibitor to make money on his investment, but gradually as we see the increased cost of doing business, we naturally see the increased cost in service. The one that must stand the increase is the public. It is only fair and reasonable to think that the advance in admission prices in theatres should advance the increased cost of overhead and also the increased cost in other commodities."

Men of Select Heed Mars' Call

Nearly Every Select Office in United States Is Represented in Army or Navy — San Francisco Heads List

WITH scarcely a break in the line, Select Pictures Corporation's long list of offices throughout the United States have responded to Uncle Sam's call for men. Salesmen, bookers and clerks have laid away their contract blanks and pencils and are now either ploughing their way over the shell strewn fields of France, or training in the various camps of the country preparatory to their big task "over there."

Not a few of the members of Select's busy family abandoned their office duties when the United States first entered the struggle and many others, who were at that time rejected, have since been accepted in the selective draft.

San Francisco leads the list of Select's branch offices to be represented, with five members of the staff in the service. Following close on the heels of the busy Western metropolis are the home office in New York, with three stars in its flag; Omaha, Washington, D. C., and Pittsburgh. Atlanta answered the call with two men and an equal number have been sent from Cleveland, Boston and St. Louis, while Chicago, Buffalo, Kansas City, Dallas, Denver, Minneapolis and Los Angeles have each sent one.

Select is represented in every branch of the service—army, navy, marine, hospital, merchant marine, and aviation corps, although the army leads all others by a large percentage.

Very few of the men from the Select offices have been contented to remain in the ranks, and as a result of this "Select spirit" the men are showing in the field as well as at home, two have already risen to lieutenancies; one a second lieutenant and the other a first lieutenant, recently recommended for captain. Several have already been appointed corporals and sergeants, while of the men in the navy, a number have risen to petty officerships, which corresponds to the non-commissioned officer in the land forces.

The five stars that shine in San Francisco's flag represent Harry C. Cohen, Claude Waltimire, Joe Flannigan, James S. Hommel and W. C. Riter, who was connected with the Los Angeles office before being transferred to the San Francisco office. Mr. Riter has completed his course in the officers' training camp at Leon Springs and is now commissioned a second lieutenant in the infantry, stationed at Camp Cody, New Mexico. Another star represents Lieut. James S. Hommel who at the present time is in charge of a battery of French 75's on the western front. Lieut. Hommel was recently recommended for a captaincy, and it is expected that he will wear the coveted two silver bars by the time his next letter reaches this office. Joe Flannigan, who was one of the branch's most hustling members, is now studying aviation at Kelly Field, San Antonio, while Harry C. Cohen, another 'Frisco branch salesman, is in the medical corps. The remaining member from the San Francisco office is Claude Waltimire, who is now testing his sea legs in the merchant marine.

The Home Office in New York is busily engaged keeping track of Austin Keough, Robert Blattner and George Landy. Mr. Keough was formerly connected with the legal department, and is now in the signal corps, 104th field signal battalion, Co. B, 29th division, National Army. Robert Blattner, Select's home office credit man, is now in training at Camp Upton, while George Landy, formerly of the publicity department, is at Fort Niagara. "Landy" expects that he will soon be an officer, as he has been recommended for a training camp course by his superior officer. Mayer H. Monsky, a former salesman, and Earl B. Kerr, also a salesman, both of Omaha, preferred the water to fighting on land, and are now wearing the picturesque costume of Uncle Sam's navy. By this time Monsky and Kerr are both on the briny deep, where they divide their time between deck duties and answering the boson's pipe to mess. The only member of the Omaha force to join the army was Roy Bauer. Mr. Bauer enjoyed a long connection with the Omaha office before entering his country's service.

Pittsburgh is another of the second division cities that gave three men to their country. Edward H. Good, formerly shipping clerk of that branch office, was sent to Camp Upton, Yaphank, for several months' training, and is now among the first million "over there." A. E. Rosenburg, one of the road representatives, is now in the hospital corps at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., and Louis Antonetta, who replaced Mr. Good as shipping clerk, has recently received a call and expects to leave for camp within a few days.

Of the three men supplied by the Washington, D. C., office, one is in the aviation corps and the other two are in the army. The aviator is Hugh Bierman, formerly booker for the Washington branch, while the soldiers are William F. Ballenger and W. L. Parker, both stationed at Camp Meade, Md.

Boston, Mass., went 100 per cent for the navy, furnishing Uncle Sam and Secretary Daniels with a chief yeoman and a first class seaman. The chief yeoman is Charles Heath, formerly a salesman, while Frank Flanagan cast his lot with the deck division.

The two men from the St. Louis office are Charles A. Robinson and Leo Levy. Mr. Levy was formerly a salesman, but at the present time is one of the husky corporals at Camp Dodge, Iowa. Mr. Robinson used to spend eight hours a day with contract blanks and a pencil, but he finds more important work now with the 36th company, 9th training battalion, Camp Pike, Arkansas.

Atlanta, Ga., responded with two of its staff. The first to go was W. S. Tuttle, a brother of T. O. Tuttle, branch manager. Mr. Tuttle is now stationed at Fort

Honor Roll

Although the Honor Roll this week is not as lengthy as it has been for the past several weeks, it is nevertheless worthy of the same attention. The boys who are going now, be they fewer or be they in larger numbers, are just as patriotic and fighting mad to lick the Kaiser as those who have gone before.

This week, in addition to bringing us news of the boys who have shouldered the rifle within the past few days, the war accounts bring stories of and from the lads already at the front. Among the first is "Bob" McKnight, well known in newspaper and motion picture circles. Previous to joining the army of Liberty Mr. McKnight was press representative of the American Film Company, Inc., Chicago. Now he is a second lieutenant in the U. S. Air Service in France. In a letter "home" McKnight says he has been learning to fly since May, and expects to be over the lines by early fall.

Another soldier at the front who has postcarded a few lines across the "big drink" is Allan Adams, who was the first General Film man to enter the National Army. He has been abroad several months, and has been wounded. His letter says: "Still plugging away at the Boche, trying to bring the war to a close. Am at present in the hospital recovering from a slight wound."

A postal from the International Committee, Young Men's Christian Association, states the following: "Latest information from Herbert S. Griffin indicates that he has been doing very successful work among the Czecho-Slovak soldiers who are now stationed in Vladivostok in Russia."

Hunter Bennett, well known in the distribution end of the motion picture business, is located at San Diego, Cal., as a member of the Twenty-first Infantry, U. S. Regular Army, one of the oldest regiments now in service. Mr. Bennett, at the time of joining the army, was connected with Frank Hall in exploiting "The Belgian" and other pictures.

Alfred A. Samuelson (Al Santell) entered the Government service at Camp Fremont, near San Francisco, August 6, where he was assigned to special work in the Ordnance Department, for which he took an examination in May. Santell has been in pictures for five years, and was given that name by Harry Revier. He directed Kolb and Dill, Ham and Bud Kalem comedies, and recently Fay Tincher for World, and Bill Parsons for Goldwyn.

"Buster" Keaton, one of the brightest lights in the Paramount-Arbuckle comedies, once a member of the vaudeville family of Keatons, is now wearing khaki and what is more, already on his way to somewhere in Europe with Co. C, 159th Infantry. This is Roscoe Arbuckle's regiment, commanded by First Lieut. Harry Spain. Buster spent but a short time in quarantine at Camp Kearny before he entrained for the front.

FIFTEEN CENTS!

That's the Price of Motion Picture News on the Stands Now

COMMENCING with the present issue the single copy price of Motion Picture News will be fifteen cents.

Rising paper costs and expenses in all branches of publishing make the increase a necessary one.

As Motion Picture News has always been sold to newsdealers on a non-returnable basis—making its circulation a 100 per cent. trade distribution—the increase in single copy price makes it still further advisable for those purchasing from newsstands to place a standing order.

Be on the safe side—be sure you don't miss a single issue.

Root Adds Cash to Smoke Fund

One of the highest types of patriotic American showmen in the United States has been discovered in the person of J. M. Root, manager of the Strand theatre, Pasadena, Califoruia. Mr. Root is none other than the former well-known heavyweight pugilist, Jack Root, who met and bested many of the championship aspirants of his day. "Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund" is $226.05 richer through the efforts of Jack Root, who raised this amount through the medium of his Strand theatre by personal solicitation on the showing of "My Lady Nicotine," a Mutual Film Release which is also working for the Fund.

The total amount in the treasury of the Fund has now reached the magnificent sum of $288,947.87 and is mounting daily.

John Hazza Visits the Metropolis

Among the well-known film men from out of town who visited New York during the week of August 5th was John Hazza, general manager of the Northwest Theatres Company, Ltd., of Edmonton, Alberta, and member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Ltd., of Canada.

Mr. Hazza's visit to New York was for the purpose of getting into personal touch with business conditions at headquarters and to attend several important metropolitan film premieres, likely to help him in arranging his own plans for the coming season.

Yellow Dog Campaign Gets Help

Big Commercial Houses Flock to the Standard, Giving Universal's Co-operation Impetus — Picture Arouses Great Interest

THE nation-wide interest caused by the campaign to spread the spirit of absolute loyalty, in which movement Universal and Jewel Productions have been prime movers, has spread until it has attracted the support of great commercial houses and big business organizations throughout the United States. State and city officials, it is said, have also been aroused to an enthusiastic height, and have thrown their valuable aid into the scales.

The infectious spirit of pure Americanism engendered by Henry Irving Dodge's story, "The Yellow Dog," is remarkable, in that the book is not a war story except in that it deals with social conditions as they apply to patriotism prevailing in the average suburban town of today. Yet, the appearance of the story in the Saturday Evening Post and later in book form by Harper's, and then supplemented by the distribution of the literature prepared by Jewel Productions has aroused the fighting spirit of the civilian population of America.

It has conjured leaders from the most unexpected sources; men and women in all walks of life have stepped forward and are leading aggressive local campaigns that are stamping out enemy propaganda, and it is safe to predict that when the Jewel Productions fires the last gun in the campaign to suppress Prussian propaganda by presenting the film version of "The Yellow Dog" the public will view the production to look upon the mongrel patriot as a bygone species.

Among the most prominent big commercial houses that have taken up the campaign, are: The Black-Clawson Company, manufacturers of paper and pulp mill machinery, Hamilton, Ohio. This company carried forward the ideas contained in "The Yellow Dog" by having special literature printed to supplement that of the Jewel Productions and in addition to organizing their section of the State of Ohio, they distributed several thousand copies of the book.

The Kewaunee Manufacturing Company of Kewaunee, Wis., one of the biggest manufacturers of laboratory furniture, is carrying forward the campaign by distributing, through their branch offices, located in all the principal cities of the United States and in Juneau, Alaska, printed slips calling upon all of their customers and the business houses that they are associated with to read "The Yellow Dog" in the interest of promoting 100 per cent Americanism. In the circular letters sent out by this company, they say, "As a 100 per cent pro-American story, 'The Yellow Dog,' coming as it does at a time when the United States must become closely knit to wipe out the savage interference our Government has to cope with, a better story has never been written."

In Cleveland, the Cleveland Twist Drill Company has taken a most active part in spreading the campaign through the mails and by the publication of special articles in their house organ that has a wide distribution in sound commercial circles.

The Kempsmith Manufacturing Company of Milwaukee, Wis., one of the greatest manufacturers of mill machines in the world, has carried the campaign into Milwaukee in the most aggressive manner. Mr. Paul E. Thomas, president of the company, has formed Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs in that city that number over one thousand active members.

In Toledo, Ohio, the Toledo Exchange Club, composed of 225 of the most prominent business men of that city, has assumed charge of the Yellow Dog compaign and is recruiting all of the young men and boys in Toledo. At last reports this club expected to have an enrolled force of nearly three thousand boy detectives hunting down seditious statements in that city.

In Wheeling, W. Va., the Yellow Dog campaign is in the hands of the Wheeling Commercial Association, an organization composed of all of the prominent business men of that city, and the campaign is being conducted with all the thoroughness with which business men are capable.

Vitagraph Makes Seven for Liberty Loan

Vitagraph will deliver seven patriotic subjects to the Government for use in the fourth Liberty Loan drive, according to announcement from the company this week. Each of the pictures will be three hundred feet in length and the featured players will be Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Bessie Love, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith, Gladys Leslie and William Duncan, one star with well-known supporting players, appearing in a picture.

The first six stars named are the leaders on the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program, while Duncan has attained rank as one of the leading serial stars of the country.

No details are given out as to the character of the pictures, but it is learned that "wallop" will be their middle name. The scenarios are being written with the end in view of hitting the public right between the eyes with "the big fact; with the message that Uncle Sam needs the money and that the public needs Uncle Sam, to stand between it and the greatest peril that has ever confronted the United States and other civilized nations."

General Names New Kansas City Manager

A new branch manager at Kansas City is announced by General Film. The appointee is no stranger to General Film's friends in that territory, since he is C. S. Edwards, who was one of the company's very first exchange managers at Kansas City. Mr. Edwards was with General dating from the organization of the company until two or three years ago, when he became affiliated with Pathe as manager at St. Louis and at Kansas City. He has now taken charge of his old office and begun some important activities.

Newsy Reports From All Sections

Rochester Houses Name Plans

Piccadilly and Regent to Exhibit Goldwyn, Paramount, Artcraft and Select Productions—Exhibitors Make Policy Statement

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Announcement of plans for the next season was made by the management of the Piccadilly and Regent theatres, the two leading downtown theatres of Rochester, N. Y., last week. Contracts have been signed for the Goldwyn productions for next season, including all the releases of Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Tom Moore and Madge Kennedy. All the Paramount and Artcraft pictures will come to these theatres first also, with special mention of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clark, Wallace Reid, Elsie Ferguson and Jack Pickford. From the Select company will be taken pictures featuring Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Alice Brady and Constance Talmadge, and from Metro Harold Lockwood, Nazimova and other popular artists.

In making announcement of the kind of pictures selected Manager William A. Calihan of the Regent issued this statement: "More than ever does the task confront the motion picture houses of furnishing the necessary diversion in these war times. People need entertainment to prevent depression and too much morbidity as the result of seeing many of their loved ones marching off to battle for the future of the world. Not only does the screen furnish the necessary diversion and entertainment to take their minds off their burdens, but it also shows them through the war pictures every week just what their boys are doing. It creates a bond between those at home and those across the seas.

"More and more is the Government coming to recognize the value of the screen for carrying on various kinds of propaganda. It is now making pictures of its own, which drive home certain messages. The screens of the country have rendered invaluable aid in helping float the three Liberty Loans and in pushing the sale of Thrift Stamps, boosting food preservation and the like. And through the motion picture admission tax there have been purchased millions of dollars' worth of ammunition and supplies that are being used by the American army in driving the Hun back across his own borders."

The following bookings for the next few weeks were announced for the two theatres: Regent—Elsie Ferguson in Robert W. Chambers' story, "The Danger Mark"; Constance Talmadge in "A Pair of Silk Stockings"; Clara Kimball Young in "The Savage Woman"; Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star"; Norma Talmadge in "Her Own Way" and Jack Pickford in "Sandy."

Piccadilly—William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe"; Mae Marsh in "All Woman"; Elliott Dexter and Kathlyn Williams in David Graham Phillips' "Old Wives for New"; Irene Castle in "The Hillcrest Mystery"; Alice Brady in "The Death Dance"; Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure"; Douglas Fairbanks in "Bound in Morocco."

Express Bobble Causes Rochester Substitution

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Owing to a slip-up in express service, Manager John J. Farren of the Victoria theatre of Rochester, N. Y., was forced to make a hurried substitution in his picture bill last week. Alma Rubens in "False Ambition" had been booked and advertised, but on Sunday morning the film had not arrived and Manager Farren was unable to get any trace of it. Fortunately he had on hand the film of another recent Triangle release, "Alias Mary Brown," and put it on in place of the Rubens picture.

"This is only the second time that I have been disappointed by an express shipment in all my theatrical experience," said Manager Farren. "It left me in a rather bad fix, for people are quick to find fault when a theatre does not live up to its advertising. When people come to see a certain picture they want to see it and they are not interested in reasons why it is not shown."

Rochester managers have been surprisingly free from express difficulties so far, notwithstanding the congested situation everywhere. This is probably because the city is conveniently reached and the distance to the principal producing points is short. It was Manager Farren who solved a similar dilemma last spring by having a film delivered from Buffalo by aeroplane. He received the film in time for his afternoon show, after he had received word that the film had not yet been shipped and could not possibly reach Rochester that day.

Reavy Gets Promotion in Cleveland

CLEVELAND, O.—Harry Reavy, who has been handling Metro pictures in and around Akron for the past six months, has been promoted to the position of special representative for Screen Classics. He will spend most of his time in Cleveland in the future. Reavy's territory will be covered by A. Fletcher, who previously confined his energies to signing Metro contracts in the western section of Ohio. This part of the state will hereafter be covered by F. J. Nugent. Nugent is well known by all exhibitors. He was formerly connected with the distribution in Ohio of the Camp Sherman propaganda picture, "The Re-Making of a Nation."

Evans Leaves Minneapolis for East

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—R. K. Evans has resigned as manager of the Jewel productions department of the Minneapolis Universal exchange and has returned to New York. Louis H. Coen, Universal manager, will have complete charge of the Bluebird, Universal, Longacre and Jewel departments of the Universal exchange in the future. He will be assisted by Julius Bernheim, formerly of the Chicago Universal exchange.

Manager E. R. Pearson of the Minneapolis First National Exhibitors Circuit exchange, has begun booking one print of Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" on a percentage basis, sending C. N. Sutton out ahead of the show, and Sergeant Phineas Van Raalte, a returned Canadian soldier and lecturer, with the feature. Mr. Pearson reports great success in booking the governmental film, "Pershing's Crusaders."

R. L. Hewitt, for over two years manager of the Unicorn or American Standard exchange of Minneapolis, has resigned his position and will take up Y. M. C. A. war work. Mr. Hewitt's' successor has not been named. He has made many friends in the Northwest and he will be sorely missed from the local film row.

Manager Stombaugh of the Pathe exchange has booked the Inter-Allied War Review films into the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, and the New Garrick, St. Paul, for first territorial runs.

Coast Board Supplements Director Body

The Advisory Board of Motion Picture Directors, which is voluntarily assisting the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, will have its work supplemented on the Pacific Coast by an advisory board which has been appointed under an arrangement with the Motion Picture Directors' Association. Frank Beal has been selected as Chairman of the Western Division. The Directors composing the Board are: Lois Weber, Walter Edwards, Joseph De Grasse, William Robert Daly, and Ben Wilson. The nomination of this Board of Directors has been confirmed by Mr. Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films. Scenarios which are submitted to Mr. James Vincent, Secretary of the Advisory Board of Motion Picture Directors, Times Building, New York City, will be passed upon by the Eastern organization. Those that can be made to the best advantage in Los Angeles and vicinity will be sent to the Western Board, which will in turn designate the Directors who will make these pictures. Both the Eastern aid Western Advisory Boards will work in the closest co-operation, and the propaganda films which will be made under their direction are expected to be of great aid to the Government of the U. S.

Gathered By Our Special Correspondents

Storm Plays Havoc with Baltimore Picnic

BALTIMORE, MD.—Baltimore motion picture fans who expected a real treat when Frank A. Hornig and Louis A. De Hoff of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland invited a number of screen actors to attend their picnic which was held in Monument Park in this city on August 11, were doomed to bitter disappointment. A thunderstorm which arrived at an inopportune moment spoiled the treat for the thousands who braved the inclement weather to get a "close up" of their favorites in real life. The disappointment of the patrons was relieved in a measure, however, by the appearance of June Caprice, the only one of the five stars invited whom the bad weather could not keep away.

Miss Caprice arrived after the storm was all over and the crowd had waited for several hours.

Four other actors beside Miss Caprice, namely Kitty Gordon, Edward Earle, Florence Reed and Hale Hamilton, were scheduled to appear at the picnic. Some of them arrived in town, but it is believed that the storm kept them from coming to the park. However, this did not prevent the picnickers from having a good time themselves, and dancing and other amusements were enjoyed.

Liebmann Extends Parex Territory

CLEVELAND, O.—Walter R. Liebmann, manager of the Parex Film Corporation's Cleveland office, has had his territory extended to include all of Michigan. G. C. For the time being, Mr. Liebmann has placed Mr. George Lightman, one of his roadmen, in charge of the Michigan branch office. A permanent appointment for the position will be made within the week. Mr. Liebmann now has control of all the territory in Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and West Virginia.

Bayley with Hodkinson in Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—H. J. Bayley, former manager of the Greater Vitagraph exchange here and more recently in charge of the Goldwyn exchange at Chicago, has been selected to manage the local Hodkinson exchange which is to be opened immediately. Mr. Bayley arrived in the city recently and he is now busy formulating plans for interesting Northwest exhibitors in the Hodkinson service plan. According to Mr. Bayley permanent offices will be opened within a month.

Ohio Fights for Sunday Shows

State Screen League Jumps in with Both Feet and Creates Much Interest—Sixty-four Towns Are Closed

CLEVELAND, O.—Sunday closing in Ohio has assumed enormous proportions in local moving picture circles since the organization of the Ohio State Screen League. This League was formed early in June, to ascertain the attitude of exhibitors in regard to Sunday closing, and if the support of the exhibitors could be gained, then it became the intention of the League to go about changing the laws so as to give the Sunday movie legal status.

At the first meeting, to which all exhibitors in the state were invited, all present pledged their active and their financial support in obtaining favorable legislation. In order to secure this, the organization elected a chairman, Henry W. Lustig, of Cleveland, and a secretary, Fred Desberg, also of Cleveland. An executive committee consisting of five prominent exhibitors from different sections of the state, was also appointed to assist the officers in reaching all members of the industry.

A second meeting of this organization was held at the Deshler hotel, Columbus, Ohio, recently. A large crowd attended, and many plans were discussed, but it was finally agreed to leave the modus operandi to the executive committee which has been invested with full power to proceed in the matter of securing favorable legislation for the Sunday movie.

It had previously been announced that Peter Schaeffer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, would attend the meeting in Columbus, and offer the assistance of the N. A. M. P. I., but at the last minute a wire was received from Mr. Schaeffer, saying it would be impossible for him to be present at the meeting. He has since arranged to meet with the executive committee in Cleveland some time next week, when some co-operative plan will be worked out whereby the exhibitors and the N. A. M. P. I. will go about the most effective way to reach the desired ends.

At the meeting in Columbus August 1 the announcement was made that 64 towns in Ohio are closed on Sunday at the present time. This was news to the majority of exhibitors, for it was known that the blow had struck many towns, nobody surmised to what extent the industry was affected. A large proportion of the 64 towns are located in the southern part of the state. In fact, all of the towns south of Columbus have been closed on Sunday with the exception of Columbus, Cincinnati, Dayton, Hamilton, Middleton, Springfield and Bellaire.

The list, as given out this week, includes motion picture theatres in Findlay, Fostoria, Tiffin, Lima, Piqua, Portsmouth, Wadsworth, Bryan, Marysville, Wooster, New Philadelphia, Conneaut, Clyde, Lancaster, Circleville, Washington Court House, Delaware, East Liverpool, Wellsville, Xenia, Nelsonville, Athens, Logan, Ironton, Marietta, Gallipolis, Mt. Sterling, London, Wellston, Greenfield, Lisbon, Hillsboro, New Boston, Coshocton, Cambridge, Troy, Sidney, Connellsville, McConnellsville, Millford, New Lexington, Alliance, Sebring, Urbana, Bellefontaine, Mt. Vernon, Bremen, Pomeroy, Middleport, Medina, Steubenville, Canal Dover, Canal Fulton, Van Wert, St. Marys, Wapakoneta, Crooksville, Roseville, Junction City, Gloucester, Amanda, Williamsport and Pleasantville.

Stanley Circuit Names Woman Manager

PHILADELPHIA—Mrs. Charles Morton has been appointed manager of the Chestnut Hill theatre in Philadelphia. This is a new departure for the Stanley circuit of theatres but the change has met with hearty approval.

Managing Director Frank W. Buhler of the Stanley Company is arranging for community sings at the Stanley theatre to be followed by other houses in the circuit.

The old National theatre, a landmark of theatricals and the location of many of our best known actors of today when they played the 10, 20 and 30 routes, is to be made into a garage.

Clyde P. Hamilton has acquired the Knickerbocker theatre at 40th and Market streets. It is assessed at $130,000. It is closed for the summer.

Metro War Film Reported Going Strong

CLEVELAND, O.—"To Hell with the Kaiser" is rapidly getting a fine collection of broken records to its credit. Manager Almy of the local Metro exchange received word from Jim Dunlevy, manager of the Bank theatre, Akron, that the picture, during its week's engagement at his house which is just concluded, not only broke all house attendance, but exceeded all previous box office receipts at the same time.

Dunlevy advertised the picture extensively, especially in the foreign newspapers, but he got some free advertising that he wasn't looking for, and which did him a lot of good. It seems that the Akron Press was running a contest on "What to do with the Kaiser" at the same time that the picture was playing at Dunlevy's theatre. Dunlevy had a bright idea, and sent in his answer to the contest in these words, "To hell with the Kaiser." In addition to attracting a great deal of attention to the photoplay, Dunlevy is richer by five dollars, the amount awarded for the best answer to the contest.

Harrisburg "Mob" Helps Lewis

Populace Turns Out En Masse to Face Camera in "The Troop Train"—Governor Asks Exhibitor Co-operation

HARRISBURG, PA.—Despite a temperature of slightly more than 104 degrees, more than 2,000 residents of Harrisburg, in response to newspaper advertisements announcing that their presence was requested to participate in the making of the mob scene in "The Troop Train," the eight-reel play that is being filmed by Edgar Lewis, director of the Edgar Lewis Production Company—turned out in the broiling sunshine on the plaza in front of the Pennsylvania state capitol and voluntarily assisted in the making of the production.

In the story of the play the demonstration takes place at the capitol following the action of the governor in pardoning the hero, who previously had been convicted of murder by a pro-German jury because he killed two Germans who tried to blow up an American troop train.

The Harrisburg police co-operated with Mr. Lewis in the filming of the great scene, but at the first turning of the camera's crank the thousands of citizens, attracted by the advertisements, instead of fighting violently to get past the line of bluecoats, as they were supposed to do, made a lark of it all, patted the good-natured coppers on the back and appeared like anything but an angry throng.

In fact, so inappropriate were the actions of the crowd that Mr. Lewis had to have the scene filmed all over again. On second trial the throng did what was expected of them and it is believed an excellent scene has been produced.

Before departing from this city the Lewis Company filmed several other important scenes for the play amid the beautiful country along or near the Susquehanna river.

Glen White takes the leading masculine role in the play, while the chief feminine part is entrusted to the youthful Josephine Hill, who is just making her debut in the silent drama. Clifford P. Saum, assistant to Mr. Lewis, arranged all the preliminaries for the taking of the scenes and E. E. Earle, veteran photographer, was chief cameraman.

Every motion picture theatre in Pennsylvania has been called upon by Governor Brumbaugh to co-operate in making "fire protection day," October 9, a huge success. The governor issued a proclamation fixing that day as the time for the whole people of the state to take precautions to prevent fires during the winter, and State Fire Marshal G. Chal Port has issued a program for the day's observance, including meetings and addresses in every town and city in which the public will be exhorted to adopt fire prevention methods. The part that the motion picture theatres are expected to take will consist in throwing slides on their screens, some of which have been prepared as follows:

"Today is Fire Protection Day. Statistics show that a fire occurs every fifteen minutes in Pennsylvania, destroying property worth $70,000. Help stop this preventable evil. Make every day a Fire Prevention Day."

"Pennsylvania's fire loss in five years amounted to nearly $100,000,000. Think what this money would do for the Red Cross, and the supplying of food and supplies for our soldiers."

"Two-thirds of our fires are preventable. Carelessness, indifference and neglect are the causes. Precaution will eliminate this menace. Keep your premises free from waste accumulation. Discuss fire prevention with your neighbors; all will benefit."

"Write the State Fire Marshal to send you monthly bulletins on fire prevention. No charge. You will become interested in the subject and learn to be helpful in preventing fires."

"Report to the State Fire Marshal conditions you may deem to be fire hazards. Prompt action will be taken for correction. Remember, conservation of food and essentials are endangered by conditions of this kind."

Protection Lease up in Cleveland Court

CLEVELAND, O.—To whom does a film belong after the expiration of the protection lease? This is a matter to be decided in the court of Common Pleas sometime this week.

Last week, the Standard Film Service obtained a temporary injunction against the Sterling Film Service, both of them being Cleveland concerns, restraining the Sterling Film from releasing any of its thirty-five prints of Christy Comedies. These comedies are all old ones, which previously belonged to the old Tri-State Film Company. When that company left the field, Joseph Diener, as manager of the Sterling Film Service, bought them. Since that time, the protection by the Christy Company has expired.

The Standard Film Service releases all of the recent Christy Comedies, and it is the contention of that firm that the old comedies having outlived their contract, should revert to the original producer.

CARUSO SINGS

A NUMBER of trade paper representatives and a hundred odd extras had the pleasure last Friday of hearing Caruso sing "I Pagliacci," and it didn't cost the trade paper boys a cent while the extras were paid for it.

It happened at the Manhattan Opera House, where Caruso was engaged in taking scenes for his coming screen debut with Artcraft. Caruso's own chorus from the Metropolitan and a large orchestra took part in the scenes, while the extras draped themselves familiarly about the front row seats.

Of course the tenor's silvery notes could not register on the camera, but he insisted on actually singing in the scene so that he could get the proper atmosphere for his acting.

And take it from Director Edward Jose, who is staging the Artcraft production, Caruso CAN act. The director is enthusiastic about his star and says that film followers are going to get a pleasant surprise when they see him on the screen.

Maigne Writes and Directs for Select

The work of preparing scenario, directing production and titling and assembling the picture is being attained, according to Select, in a way that is likely to make film history in a forthcoming production which Alice Brady is making for Select Pictures at the Paragon studios.

The man who is thus made the producing genius in the Brady production is Charles Maigne, already well-known as a scenario writer. Mr. Maigne has before contributed notably to one of Alice Brady's Select Pictures, having prepared the scenario of "The Knife," from Eugene Walter's play. In the present instance it is a short story by Fannie Hurst, recently printed in one of the popular magazines, which serves as a basis for the photoplay. Working in harmony with the author of this story, but with an entirely free hand, Mr. Maigne is said to have prepared a scenario which goes a step further toward that ideal of perfection ever sought by the scenarioist. It is, in short, what Mr. Maigne considers the best scenario he has ever prepared, and now he has been given the direction of the picture. He will, as well, personally write all the titles shown on the screen, and personally supervise the assembling of the picture's several parts.

The conviction that Mr. Maigne, and only he, should direct this Brady production, was reached after a reading of the scenario which this writer had prepared. So many original ideas were contained in the script, and so much that was unique in the way of handling situations, that officials of the Select Company at once decided that Mr. Maigne's cherished ideal of directing should become a reality. Closely associated as he has been for more than a year with other directors in the making of their pictures, the departure is not as great as it would be if a man unfamiliar with work in the studio was given charge of the work of production. With Mr. Maigne at the helm, there will be removed any cause for friction.

Chicago Sees Kleine Italian Film

The George Kleine firm will offer for two weeks at the Playhouse, on Michigan avenue near Van Buren, Chicago, the first official showing of "Behind the Lines in Italy," it has been announced.

This picture was taken by Cines, of Rome, at the request of the Italian Ministry of Arms and Munitions, and tells the story of Italy's progress in her war industries since the opening of the war. The film takes you through gun factories, munition works, where thousands of Italy's daughters make, fill and check the shells that shall destroy the Austrian and Hun; through auto factories, into glass factories, then to the flying machine shops.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Lichtman?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

WASN'T it only last week we read in MOTION PICTURE NEWS that Al Lichtman, manager of distribution for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, had returned from a week's business trip with contracts for $1,000,000 worth of bookings tucked away in his vest pocket?

Yes, it was. And the Fates alone know what we might read this week or next.

But you are a skeptic. "Pish! Tush!" you say. The press agent is loose again."

And so might we—if it were any person other than Al Lichtman mentioned in the story.

But gathering contracts for a million more or less doesn't strike us as anything extraordinary for Al Lichtman. It seems, to our recollection, that Al Lichtman has been gathering contracts ever since there was a reel of film to contract for.

Today he has the impressive title of "Manager of Distribution for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation," and when he sells his flanks are guarded by the efficient exchange managers in the different cities visited.

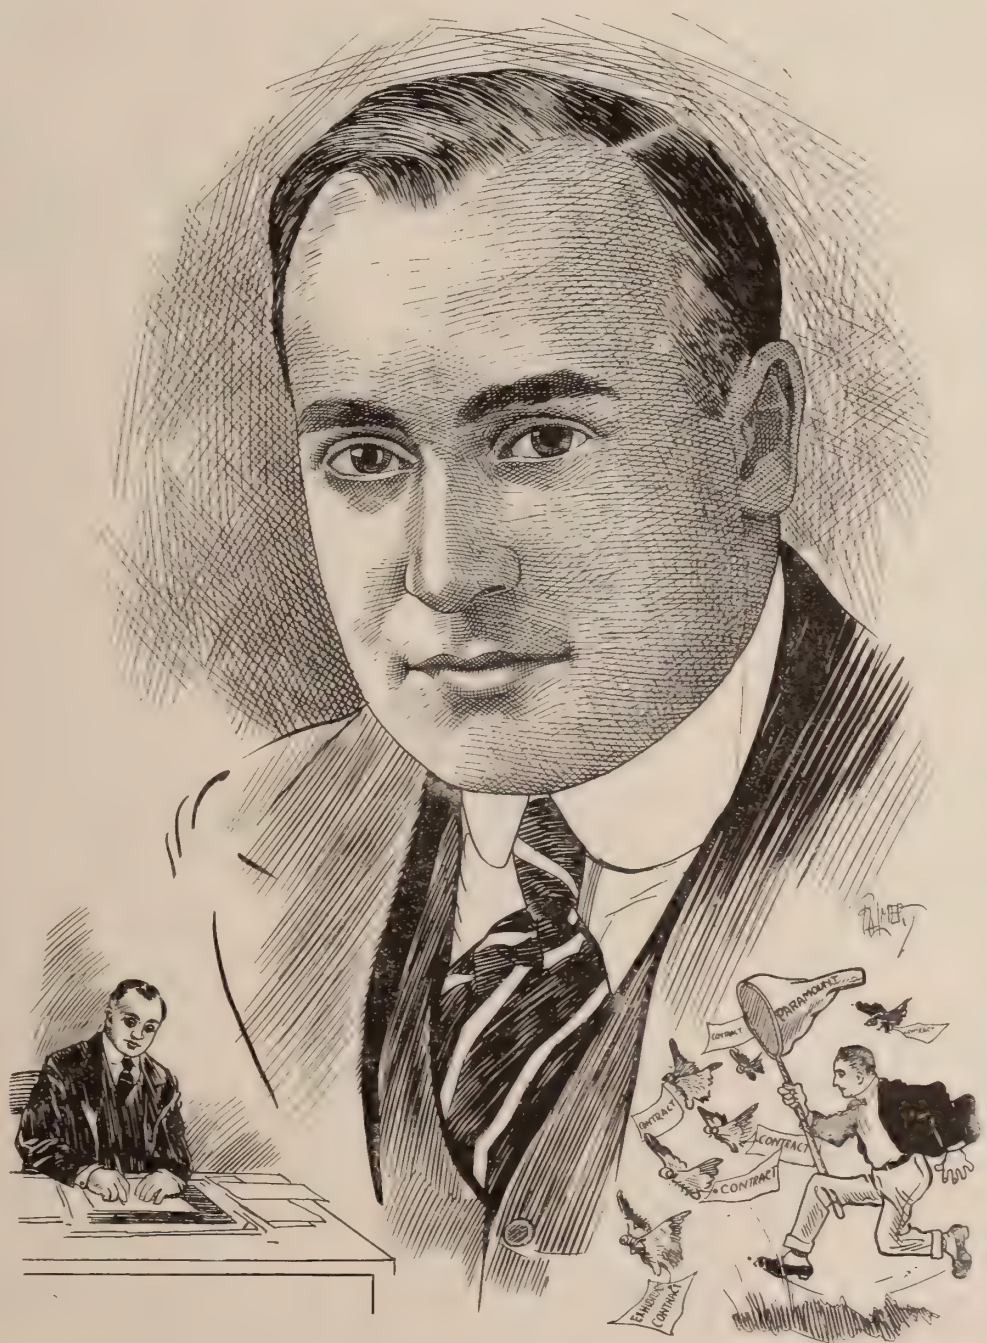
But we remember the time when Al Lichtman went out of New York with the reels of his one feature tucked under his arm—and he got contracts then, too.

That was, if our memory serves us, eight years ago, as measured by the calendar, but about eight centuries if measured by film. The feature was "Queen Elizabeth" — the star, a certain Sarah Bernhardt. And a certain more or less well-known gentleman by the name of Adolph Zukor was banking much of his hopes for a future in the motion picture business on what happened to "Queen Elizabeth."

Looking back now it may seem like a simple task booking Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth" several years ago. But if ever Al Lichtman walks into your house in search of a contract make him pay for it by telling you some of his experiences as he trudged around from store show to worse trying to convince exhibitors that there was something other than split reels and chases.

Al Lichtman was plugging away several years ahead of the game then. But he was getting the experience that makes him now, in our estimation, one of the best posted film executives in the game. We have never yet asked Al Lichtman for a fact or figure on exhibitors or distribution that we haven't received an on-the-spot reply. And later results always proved that he was right.

Al Lichtman was still ahead of the game when, some four odd years ago, he formed the Alco Company. Here was a brand new idea—and it was Al Lichtman's. Alco gave us a form of feature distribution later developed in the Metro idea.



If Dame Fortune hadn't gone to sleep at the switch many persons who today can't ever remember that there was an Alco would be speaking of it and Al Lichtman with the same hushed breath that Famous Players-Lasky now gets

Later we find Al Lichtman attempting the resuscitation of the remnants of United—but "the doctor was too late." So soon we find that Dame Fortune must have all along intended that Al Lichtman should be back at the right hand of Adolph Zukor, and there he went—first with the Select, that was the forerunner of Artcraft, then with Artcraft, and now with the big combined three-ring show — Famous Players-Lasky.

On the personal side there is little that we can say. So many Broadway film men, so many more exhibitors know and like the personality of Al Lichtman that praise is not needed here.

He is on the under side of thirty and an off-hand meeting is apt to leave his youthful

United Lines Up Its Features

Announces That First May Be Propaganda Picture, But Details Remain Mystery — More Members Enroll Steadily

FOLLOWING closely on the heels of the news last week that United Pictures Theatres of America is fast lining up its stars and productions for future release, comes the announcement this week that the first production to be released will likely be a propaganda picture. A great deal of mystery surrounds the statement, in view of the fact that it has just been announced that United has secured "The Light of the Western Stars" from Harry Sherman, and it was generally understood that this was to be the first feature offered.

In the United announcement it was stated that the first production will "equal in dramatic force and drawing power the biggest successes of the past few months." It is further said that this picture will provide United exhibitors, executives of that organization believe, with the opportunity for an interesting comparison of the prices which will be asked under the United plan of booking with those which have been paid for special attractions of similar value.

It is the United plan, it is said, to specialize exclusively in attractions of big appeal. By this is meant not so much the length of the subject, but the manner of its handling. The sponsors of the United believe that the reputation and drawing qualities of practically all of the big stars of the present day are due to the manner in which they have been handled. They point to the fact that program companies, where they were given mediocre direction and productions, these same stars had only mediocre drawing power.

The plan of the United, according to J. A. Berst, its president, is to take stars, already big, and make them bigger by providing them with big themes, expert direction and proper settings.

As an illustration of how this policy is to be conducted, it is understood that the first story in which Kitty Gordon will appear, cost $10,000. At the same time Miss Gordon will have the benefit of the direction of a man, considered by many the best director of women in the picture field.

Farnum's stories and productions will be of equal calibre. His first offering, Zane Grey's novel of the Southwest, "The Light of Western Stars," is of such widely-known popularity as to need little comment. His two succeeding productions, "The Wolf Breed," by Jackson Gregory, and "The Man in the Open," by Roger Peacock, are equally powerful. All three have been selected with the definite view of surpassing the appeal of Farnum's success, "The Virginian."

The United promised its members a few pictures in October. During the first part of August United contracted for nineteen super pictures and other important announcements are soon to follow.

New Open Market Plan Advanced

Harold Horton Plans Direct Sale of Travel Films to Big Exhibitors and Chains

HAROLD H. HORTON, for many years prominent in the production of travel subjects, has come to the front with a radical step in distribution for the new seires of pictures which he will release during the coming year.

Mr. Horton, whose subject, "The Isle of Cuba," was recently shown by S. L. Rothapfel, and reviewed in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, announces nothing less than the outright sale of one a month releases to big exhibitors and chain theatres in various sections of the country. The subject then becomes the property of the buyer for unrestricted use in the United States.

The travel pictures will be sold at a price of $100 per reel of one thousand feet, each subject to be simultaneously released and sent by special delivery insured mail from New York.

Speaking of the plan, Mr. Horton declares: "Each new print will assure these leading houses the perfect projection they require, but in addition, a large return may be obtained by the sale or rental of the film to other theatres nearby and not directly competing with the buyers."

The first release will be "The Isle of Cuba," dated for September 19. The foreign rights on the subjects have already been sold for Norway, Denmark, Sweden, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand. Canada will be handled on the direct to the exhibitor system as in the United States. Other details of the plan will be found in Mr. Horton's announcement on page 1289.

Select Men Heed Call

Travis, San Antonio. The other is B. J. Wolfson, a former salesman, who is now at Fort McPherson, Atlanta. Both boys preferred heavy artillery to life in the trenches, although the neighborhood around where the big guns are stationed is often the most dangerous place on the front.

Harry Goldberg and Henry Fosbender, both of Cleveland, Ohio, office are now wearing Uncle Sam's khaki. Before this country opened fire on the Huns, Mr. Goldberg and Mr. Fosbender were chasing contracts in the Middle West, but at the present writing they are spending twenty-four hours a day chasing boches in Europe. The Cleveland office has prepared a frame for the Kaiser's mustache, as Goldberg and Fosbender have both promised to bring it home.

Although the Chicago office is one of the largest branches in the Select chain, it has contributed but one man to the service. This is due largely to the fact that most of the men connected with the Chicago office are married men and have large families. The only one who could be spared from this locality was Edwin Silverman, a former booker, who grasped the opportunity to enlist in the navy. At the present time Mr. Silverman is stationed at Camp Dewey, on the Great Lakes, but he expects to be transferred to one of the big sea fighters at an early date.

Buffalo is next in line, with one star in its flag for Thomas Bandes. Mr. Bandes was formerly a clerk in the Buffalo office, and is now in training at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I.

Denver, likewise, has but one star in its flag, but it expects shortly to be able to replace it with a silver one. Murray Hawkins, the representative from this office, is now in the officers' training camp at San Francisco. In addition to this training Mr. Hawkins spent several years of his early youth at the Sewanee military school at Sewanee, Florida. With his present training and natural military ability at his command, Mr. Hawkins should easily reach the rank of major before the end of the war.

The remaining branch offices on the list are Kansas City and Dallas, Texas. Each office is represented at the front by one man. William Warner from Kansas City is in the infantry, while McClellan Roberts, formerly booker in the Dallas office, is also in the army.

The latest member of the big Select family to join the colors is Alan Crosland, Alice Brady's former director. Mr. Crosland will be remembered as having directed Miss Brady in "The Whirlpool."

Reed Advances Rapidly

Luther A. Reed, until recently a member of Metro's scenario staff, has broken all records among draft men for reaching an officers' training camp. Like the citizen who arrived at Camp Dix one evening and found himself on a transport bound for France the next morning, without even getting a peek at Dix in daytime, Reed, within twenty-four hours after his induction into Upton, was headed for Camp Lee, Va., one of the latest officers' training camps to be established by Uncle Sam.

Carlyle Robinson, until recently press agent for Charles Chaplin, and who was a member of the Twenty-first Infantry, U. S. Regular Army, at San Diego, Cal., has left for the Officers' Training School at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark., it was reported last week.

appearance as the most outstanding recollection. He is young in the cheerful smile and pleasant recognition he always has for everyone.

He is young in that—in many years of film wanderings we have never heard a person even whisper a knock on Al Lichtman.

He is old—in knowledge of films and in the staggering roster of Al Lichtman boosters.

HART HONORED

Three of Most Important Loan Districts Ask His Aid

LOS ANGELES (Special)—William S. Hart has just been asked to tour three of the most important districts of the United States in the coming campaign for the Fourth Liberty Loan.

Joseph Hartigan, chairman of the New York City Committee, the most vital district in America, has asked Hart through the Liberty Loan Committee to cover New York. Philip Dalton, Boston chairman, and Harry Hodge, Philadelphia chairman, have also requested Hart to tour their districts.

Hart will commence his tour early in October. He covered the West during the Third Liberty Loan campaign collecting over two million dollars in bond subscriptions. His value to the Government is evident in the fact that the three most important districts have requested his services in the next campaign.

Lift Ban on Aeroplane Scenes

News Weekly Men May Take Photographs of Aeroplane Making and Operation Under Government Supervision

NOTICE was received this week by the news weekly companies that the Government had lifted the ban previously in force on the taking of photographs of aeroplane operations. The official word came from Captain Lawrence Rubel of the Committee on Public Information.

An interesting sidelight is thrown on the rescinding of the rule by speculation among film men as to its probable effect on the showing of Universal's big special, "The Yanks Are Coming." This production, showing the plans of Uncle Sam for an aeroplane offensive was recently withdrawn after the rumpus caused by its announced opening at the Broadway theatre without the sanction of the Committee on Public Information.

It could not be learned Thursday Thursday whether the lifting of the ban on news weekly scenes of aeroplanes would have any effect on the earlier production. The Universal office was unusually busy, however, Jack Cohen, in charge of news weekly activities, telegraphing to all his men within striking distance of the twenty-six aeroplane camps to get busy immediately.

The decision permits film men to take pictures, under official supervision, of course, of airplane construction as well as the actual flying affairs. It means that hereafter a vast new vista is shown of how the United States is working the doom of Germany.

Film men express the belief that the tremendous aid the news weeklies have given to the Liberty Loan Committee, Food and Fuel Administrations, Departments of Labor and Agriculture, Red Cross and the war making services of the country in general has influenced the Government in modifying its restrictions.

Bryson Likes the Film Outlook

Northwest Film Man Visiting New York Says Good Crops and Other Signs Point to Prosperity for Northwest

JAMES V. BRYSON, the well-known exchange man of Minneapolis, is in New York on a visit to look over film conditions and renew acquaintances with the many film men he has met during his long period of activity in the Northwest.

Mr. Bryson is accompanied on his visit by his wife, the couple having traveled the entire distance from Minneapolis by auto, by way of Chicago, Detroit, Hamilton, Ont., Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and on to New York, a trip measuring 1,938 miles.

"The business outlook in the Northwest was never better," declared Mr. Bryson to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. "I believe it will be in wonderful shape for business this fall and winter. I have spent the entire spring in the States of Minnesota and North and South Dakota, and found the exhibitors much encouraged over the outlook.

"The crops in the Northwest are reported great, better than anything the farmers have ever had before. That is all the assurance that is really needed for good business, for in the Northwest the crops are an unfailing index. The exhibitors in the smaller towns depend entirely on the state of the farmer's pocketbook."

Mr. Bryson, whose experience in the Northwest probably ranks him as one of the most experienced exchange executives in the country, is looking closely into affairs in the New York film centre with the idea of establishing himself soon in active harness again after the spring and summer spent in motor observation of Northwest conditions.

Vitagraph New Comedies Come September 16

Vitagraph is out this week with the definite announcement that it will, on September 16, inaugurate a weekly two-reel feature comedy service, releasing fifty-two of them during the coming year.

According to the statement of the company, the name Big V will continue to be used in the brand name of the comedies, these one-reel subjects having found a place on the programs of the country's theatres. It is stated, as a matter of fact, that the decision to increase the length of the Big V's was reached following requests from thousands of exhibitors, who declared, in substance, that they desire to feature the Vitagraph humorous subjects in the newspaper advertising and the electric lights of their house canopies.

Although the release of the two-reel feature comedies will begin on September 10, Vitagraph will continue, for a time, to put out single-reel Big V's, because when the decision was made to double the length of the laugh-makers the company was so far ahead in its comedy production that there are several single reels still to be put out. Following are the one-reel subjects scheduled for release during the month of September: Sept. 2, "Mutts and Motors"; Sept. 9, "Capers and Crooks"; Sept. 16, "Wild Women and Wild Waves"; Sept. 23, "Stripes and Stars"; Sept. 30, "Hula-Hulas and Hocus-Pocus."

With the release of "Hula-Hulas and Hocus-Pocus," on Sept. 30th, the company will discontinue the one-reel Big V subjects and release only the two-reel feature comedies.

Writer Sees Women Control Scenario End

Clara S. Beranger, the scenario and continuity writer now with World Pictures and formerly with Pathe and other well known producers, who has just completed the continuity for "Heart of Gold," a new World Picture, says that women are going to come into the writing end of the picture industry in greater numbers than ever before. "The motion picture as an entertainment," declares Miss Beranger, "appeals more to women than to men. This fact is bound to be admitted if the exhibitors' statistics are to be given the credence they deserve. To appeal to the female patrons the photoplay must display the feminine point of view

"It needs no cursory glance at the current releases and those of even six months ago to prove that there are more writers among the feminine sex than the male persuasion."

Madge Evans Made Major of Guard

Miss Madge Evans, the nine-year-old World Film star, is Honorary Major of the American Guard. This is an auxiliary unit of the United States Army, Brig. Gen. Dyer commanding. Accompanied by several members of the Guard detailed to assist in the recruiting of British subjects, she arrived at the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission, 220 West 42nd street, one day last week and was greeted by Capt. H. A. Peppler, Adjutant.

Madge is doing her bit to induce hundreds of loyal Britons to "join up." She is rendering timely assistance in this work for Brig. Gen. Dyer, commanding the America Guard. Major Madge Evans received the highest praise from the officers of the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission in the United States, for her work.

The little star continues with her screen work for World Film Corporation.

THE READER HAS HIS SAY

Exhibitor Tells How Producer Can Give Some Real Aid—Minus Lemon

YOU ask that I suggest some manner in which the producer can help the small town man, and, as I have suggested myself that such a thing can be done, nothing remains for me but to strap on my (t)rusty six-gun and go "over the top."

When I speak of the "small town man" I mean the managers of theatres in towns of 4,000 population or less. Of the others I know nothing, except by hear-say. My six years' experience in the business has been devoted to a town of 2,500 and of them I know whereof I speak

The small man is proud, as well as modest, and will, in the majority of cases, go to the wall with a smile rather than ask for assistance, therefore, aid which is given him must be diplomatically given. It is seldom that one will come out in the open, as I have done, and set up a cry for assistance.

There are so many ways that good substantial help can be given this important factor of the industry, it seems almost irrelevant that such a question should be asked.

Assistance can be given, not only by the producer but by the exchange and trade papers as well; assistance which will cost little but help much. Your advisory board has touched upon some of these things, but a mere touch is not sufficient. You cannot build a house by driving a single nail or paint a picture with a single stroke of the brush. It requires time and labor and persistence to accomplish much in these lines, as heretofore the big man has had all the consideration and the little man ignored entirely. In many cases the manufacturer is so "bull-headed" as to think he can mold the industry to suit his fancy, irrespective of what his fellows think about the matter. To this fellow nothing short of a good substantial hickory club will do much good, and it must be applied with a will, not a mere "touch."

THE MANUFACTURER CAN HELP

1. By withdrawing from publication the stories of their pictures at immediate release dates, and, if it is found necessary to publish them outside of the trade journals, to present them in such journals as "Photoplay," etc., either three or four months ahead or after release date. By this method the stories are either forgotten by the time the small town man gets them or they are fresh in the minds of his patrons, dependent upon the time they are published. Personally, I would suggest the latter method for the greater good to the greater number.

2. By having single (one) column plate—not mat—stories made of the film stories for distribution through the sources supplying the country paper with such material, at the time the picture is run in the exhibitor's town. I believe that such matter rents at 20 cents per column. The average editor of the small town paper has his space to fill and a good story is all he needs. Ordinarily he will use the plate if the theatre man will furnish it, and will probably add the caption, "This story in pictures at the Blank theatre tonight." A sort of "one hand wash the other" proposition as it were.

3. By eliminating the "star" propaganda from the press matter and supplying the exhibitor with actual incidents in the story in from three to fifty lines. The most foolish thing the small town man ever did was to boost stars in place of story.

The stunts suggested by the press sheets are generally so expensive as to be beyond the purse of the average small town man. In suggestions of this sort, which, candidly, I do not think should be used at all, expense should be the first consideration.

4. By assisting in the music problem. Suitable phonograph records, synchronized with the picture, and played by one of these thirty-piece orchestras we read about, would give the small man some real music. The records could be supplied at low rental and give the little fellow good music without bankrupting him.

These are but a few of many methods along this line.

THE EXCHANGE CAN HELP

1. By overcoming the idea that the exhibitor is a thief, a liar and an uncaged criminal, as I have seen expounded in your NEWS. By treating him as a human he will be human. Retaliation is the cause of the attitude of the average exhibitor toward the exchange.

2. By establishing a central poster depot in every exchange center from which all posters can be supplied in weekly shipments, all orders for paper being turned into this department by all exchanges, expenses and dividends apportioned in proportion to the volume of business done by each. This method would systematize the poster end and overcome the confusion now prevalent incident to the various methods of distribution now in use.

3. Apportioning the war tax assessment on reels proportionate to footage and film rental charge, instead of the flat 15 cents per reel as at present. The present system is unfair to all.

4. By the establishment of a machine inspection department in connection with the central poster depot. The duty of this department being to keep the machine of exhibitors in condition at a nominal monthly charge, furnishing parts and doing adjusting as required, by a traveling mechanic. The expense of maintaining this department would be no more than that of a traveling salesman, and the saving in films in a year would be enormous. It would be a money making proposition if the work were done gratis.

TRADE PAPERS COULD HELP.

1. By giving reviews which are actual opinions of the merits of the picture as a drawing card and not suggestions to the manufacturer as to how he could have improved his product, or the actor his work. Each picture should be classified as to its nature, as sex, problem, society, etc., and as to whether it is clean and wholesome or risque. The opinion of the National Board of Censors briefly appended to each review would be a great benefit to the small man.

2. The establishment of a question and answer service department relative to legal and other matters conducted by some one familiar with the requirements of the small man. A big town man CANNOT think for the small man; the conditions are entirely different.

I have submitted to you a few of the many things which could be done for the small man which would greatly benefit him. I am willing to go into further discussion upon any of the items enumerated briefly in this letter, if, by so doing, I can benefit my brother and sister exhibitors.

As I stated in the beginning, mere touching will not do; these matters must be handled with a club, and constantly harped upon if any good is to be derived.

Thanking you for your patience in reading this lengthy effusion (if you have reached this far), I beg to remain,

Respectfully yours,

This Exhibitor Says "Damphool" Is Right If You Buy What You Don't Want

Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.
Gentlemen:

As an exhibitor and a reader of the NEWS I am going to tell you how much pleasure it gives me to get the NEWS and a few hours with nothing to do but read.

I surely did enjoy those little chats of, "Are film salesmen pirates?" and "Damphool Exhibitor," and I agree with all of them, and, to a certain extent, I think an exhibitor is a "Damphool," if he doesn't know what he wants, and, again, he is a damphool if he buys anything he doesn't want just because a salesman says I have something special or the best on the market.

Now, I don't believe in being a knocker, and if I contract for a few pictures, and they are not what I thought they were, I try and forget about it, but I don't knock. I can't see the pictures before I book them, but I follow the trade journals very closely, and, if I think a feature is all O. K., I put it down in a record book for that purpose, and whenever any film man comes, I know just what he has got that I can use, and, if I can get it at a price I can afford to pay, I book it or nothing doing. So you might say, I am my own judge in choosing pictures, and I am not afraid to back it up by paying in advance for fifteen or twenty features, and don't say a word if some are not up to standard. I find all salesmen good fellows at heart, and some are stickers for talking, for that is their business.

Now, here is what I have always wanted to say, "Why don't all the exchanges or producers cut out the salesmen's salaries and sell by mail, and perhaps cut the rental of film?" I believe most exhibitors use their own judgment in choosing pictures; therefore, the salesman is of no value to him, or, I might say, he is of no value to me. I know what I want, and I don't take anything I don't want, although I had (recently) a St. Louis manager of a big film company give me a hell of a calling down because I said to him I would not have some of his pictures as a gift. That was after he asked me, "Where do you get your authority on features?" I said MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and he said, "The sooner or quicker you little exhibitors get away from the NEWS and take some one's advice on pictures, the better off you will be."

Some boost for the NEWS, but I told him I don't take any one's advice on features, but use my own judgment, and to every person who asks me, "How's business?" I reply, "I'm still a-going," and if I get the NEWS put up like it has been in the past, I am going to keep on going.

I don't know how this letter sounds to you, but it is just the way a little exhibitor like myself in the country feels, but it is the truth, and that hurts no one.

Trusting you will give this the once over before it goes in the waste basket and to get the NEWS every week, I am,

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) JULIUS SCHMIDT.

Outing Tops Week in Cleveland Circles

CLEVELAND, O.—Fifty Famous Players Film Service employees of the Cleveland branch had a unique picnic last Saturday at the Cleveland Yacht Club. Commodore Kirby attended the picnic and personally conducted a series of rides on his yacht, Rachel. Bathing and water sports were indulged in in the afternoon, and after dinner there was dancing, or refreshments or both for those who cared for indoor sports.

C. R. N. (Battleship) Morris of the Famous Players Film Service returned to town with a nice little contract this week. It was with the Union Opera House, New Philadelphia, and included the entire Paramount-Artcraft program, features, comedies and all.

E. T. Gerrish, manager of the Famous Players Film Service exchange in Cleveland, has returned to his office after a two weeks' trip through New York state by motor.

The Grand Opera House in Canton opened last week with "Pershing's Crusaders," after having been closed all summer.

The Colonial theatre, Akron, has resumed its vaudeville and picture policy for the new season beginning last Saturday.

The new fall season has no terrors for Manager Bandy of the Cleveland Goldwyn exchange, for he has had a rush on bookings for his new releases. Among the most prominent bookings for the 1918-19 season are the Strand theatre, Akron; Marion theatre, Marion; Schade's theatre, Sandusky, Bannon's theatre, Elyria; Wonderland, Lorain; Imperial, Zanesville, and the Alhambra, Canton.

H. E. Genet, recently appointed assistant manager of the Cleveland Pathe exchange, has been recalled to fill an important position in the Pathe office, New York. His successor has not yet been appointed.

Manager C. E. Thompson of the Cleveland World office has appointed Mr. R. E. Flagler as assistant manager, to succeed E. C. Fielder who is now Cleveland representative of Paralta pictures. Flagler was previously connected with the Pathe sales department.

Bert Diener is now in Detroit managing the Victor Film Company's office. He notified Cleveland friends of his whereabouts this week, and for the information of the many who are interested said that he is at the present time handling the William S. Hart features, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain"; "The Bandit and the Preacher," "The Hell Hound of Alaska," "The Lone Avenger," as well as "Beware of Strangers" and the reissues of the Chaplin one and two-reel subjects.

Minneapolis Exchangemen Are Active

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Dan Donnelan, of the Minneapolis Mutual Exchange, is one of the most popular and most successful exchange managers in the Northwest. If the three sheets one sees displayed in front of numerous Twin City theatres can be taken as a criterion, "Up Romance Road," a Russell, and "Social Briars," a Minter, must have been booked by ninety per cent of St. Paul and Minneapolis theatres. Donnelan has not only given the Minter-Russell-Fisher pictures a wide distribution, but he has secured a record number of showings of Edna Goodrich features, the Chaplin-Mutuals, and has placed the new Outing-Chester Series in the biggest and best theatres of the territory.

Manager A. H. Fisher, of the Metro Exchange, Minneapolis, has returned from a managerial conference at New York brim full of "pep" and optimism. Fisher claims the fall and winter Metro releases are going to "set 'em all talking."

Manager E. S. Holmes, of the Greater Vitagraph Exchange, is back from Kansas City and Chicago, where he attended sales conferences. Holmes reports big business with "Over the Top" and "A Fight for Millions" everywhere. Earl Conlan, Vitagraph's booker, has entered the coast artillery service, and will be stationed at New York for some time. His successor has not been named to date.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

"The Great Love"

Harrison Can't Shower Enough Praise on This

(Artcraft—Aug. 12. Directed by D. W. Griffith. Screen time, 95 m.)

BEFORE you read another line of this review make up your mind that you are going to advertise this production big; that you are going to please your patrons, whether of the high, middle or low class; and that you are going to get some money out of it. You don't come across diamond mines every day, so then take advantage of a good picture when you get one now and then. I would even advise you to charge the same admission price as "The Hearts of the World." And why not? To my estimation, "The Great Love" is equally as good, and in some respects better, as it contains all the elements of the former, such as romance, comedy, human appeal, pathos, suspense, excitement dramatic intensity and besides it is more compact, being in seven reels.

This offering, like most of Griffith's contributions, opens figuratively speaking, as a clear day would, with a beautiful sunrise. Little by little the clouds commence to gather, then the storm breaks out with a crash. It ends in a calm sunset, leaving only traces of the conflict.

The story starts with a little love affair between the hero, an American young man, who comes to London and enlists to fight for the world's democracy, and the heroine, an Australian maiden. Their love affair breaks up on account of a little misunderstanding, such as is common to romantic youth. He is called to the front. She marries Giovanni Alligeri, Count De Monte Leone, Baron De San Marino (it is all one man, Henry Walthall), an Englishman of Italian descent, member of a pacifist organization, the head of which is a German in disguise.

The boy comes back from the front wounded and calls on the girl to renew their friendship. His dream collapses as he finds she is married.

There is a Zeppelin raid to take place in order to destroy the munition plants, and the spy is ordered to have his men point the way with a light from an automobile.

On the night of the raid the spies are arrested while on their mission. A woman confederate now undertakes the task, and making the Baron her unwilling tool orders him to drive towards the munition plants. She uncovers the searchlight secretly and points it skyward. The hero, now an officer, notices the signal, speeds his automobile, overtakes them and destroys their searchlight. He now turns around and leads the raiders away from the plant, towards a vacant lot where they expend their bombs.

The Baron is given a chase, and realizing his guilt, runs to his wife to save him, but as he is about to be caught, commits suicide.

The boy and the girl are united.

The most predominating point in this picture is the air raid. It is realistic beyond description. It shows the destruction of several Zeppelins and aeroplanes.

There is lots of humor in some of the subtitles, and in a few of the situations, and a great deal of comedy due to the funny acting of the two stars. It acts as a relief and robs the picture of excessive tensity.

Several high personages of the English nobility, including Queen Alexandra, appear in some of the scenes.

From the exhibitors' angle the pleasing feature about this attraction will undoubhtedly be that it is as good as described. It is the first program feature Mr. Griffith has personally directed in some years. As he had devoted his time to super-attractions more or lesss since then, there was a doubt in the minds of a great many exhibitors as to whether Mr. Griffith would apply himself with equal energy and attention to small details in the shorter features. All uneasiness is now set at rest.

There are several points in this picture that you could employ in your advertising, such as Mr. Griffith's name, the fact that it is a war picture and so on. There is one factor, however, that I wish in particular to call your attention to, and that is, the Zeppelin air raid. I don't know what the advertising matter that will be furnished with this offering looks like, but if it was possible for you to have a painting made of the air raid showing the Zeppelins soaring over a city dropping bombs and the aeroplanes and anti-air craft guns attacking them; also any details that you could crowd in, such as the searchlights scouring the heavens; an automobile running towards a munition plant with its searchlight pointing skywards guiding the raiders; another automobile racing to catch the first one, would prove a good medium to attract the attention of the passers-by if placed in front of your theatre or any other suitable place. It doesn't have to be an expensive one. Any fairly good artist would possibly undertake to paint one for you at a reasonable figure. Two or more of you could combine and share the expense.

"The Girl from Bohemia"

An Average Program Offering with Irene Castle

(Pathe—Aug. 25. Directed by L. B. McGill)

THIS is just an average program offering. There is lots of walking—if that is action—but the picture contains no situations with human appeal.

Lois Zellner, the author, introduces the heroine as a young girl, of artistic temperament, living a Bohemian life in New York's Greenwich Village. She is willed a fortune provided she will make up her mind to live in the old homestead. Reluctantly she leaves New York.

In her home town she gets acquainted with a little motherless girl whose father is conducting a saloon, and becomes attached to her. Later she meets the hero, a young man, who owns an interest in the ship yards. They fall in love.

Because the saloonkeeper's little girl was refused the society of other girls on account of his calling, he is angered, and incites a strike among the workers. The strikers are ready to put fire to the shipyards when the heroine seizes an American flag, runs on top of the building and begs the strikers to be good Americans and refrain from destroying the ships because the government needs them. They return to work cheering, while the heroine falls in the arms of the hero.

The introduction of the American flag in such a plot is not a happy choice.

"Love Swindle"

Edith Roberts in a Pleasing Romance

(Bluebird—Aug. 5. Directed by Jack Dillon)

"THE LOVE SWINDLE" is a clean and pleasing romantic drama with some light comedy sprnkled throughout.

The plot is based on the story, "Doing of Diana," by Rex Taylor. It presents the heroine as a young orphan girl. She is sought after by many suitors on account of her wealth, but favors none of them.

Her automobile breaks down near her country residence while driving in a rainstorm. In entering the house she is attacked by three hoboes who took refuge in it, but the hero, a young man, passing by, comes to her rescue. A friendship springs up between them on the spot and she falls in love with him.

On account of some bad habits, such as smoking and drinking cocktails, the custom among society of her set, he forms a bad opinion of her. In order to win back his estimation, she assumes the identity of a non-existing sister who is supposed to have quarrelled with her. She brings him together with this supposed sister (herself in disguise), and by her graceful manner and good habits wins his love and they get married. Eventually the worthy deception becomes known.

Of course the plot is not plausible, nevertheless it will entertain. Miss Roberts is very charming in her role. The picture is clean and suitable for all classes.

"The Changing Woman"

Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon the Stars

(Vitagraph—Aug. 19. Directed by David Smith)

THIS offering is about on a par with the usual O. Henry stories that have been put into five-reelers. About the same tone prevails through all of them. There isn't much body to them except that they have some unusual and unexpected twists which some people like very well.

In this case the heroine is the star actress in an opera company traveling in Mexico. Their business manager fails to find a suitable place in the town to give a performance, but President Blanco comes to the rescue and secures a hall for them.

Among the audience are some Indians who become charmed with her voice. They abduct her to the mountains just to hear her melodious voice oftener. The hero now comes along, saves and takes her back to civilization. Eventually they become engaged.

You will be able to get by with it provided you boost the author's name more than the quality of the picture. It is clean.

"The Savage Woman"

Clara Kimball Young as a "Wild, Wild Woman"

(Select—Aug. 12. Directed by Edmund Mortimer)

YOU will have a hard job making your patrons swallow this. It has been a long time since I have seen such an impossible story picturized. Here is a pitiful waste of good money and sincere efforts. There is something decidedly wrong when such stories are O. K'd.

The plot is based on the French novel, "La Fille Sauvage," by François Curel. It is a mixture of genuine Abyssinian tradition and wildly imaginative fiction, at least as presented on the screen.

The story introduces the heroine in the Abyssinian mountains wearing tiger skins. Her intoxicated father falls off a cliff and is killed.

While wandering in the wilderness, she comes across the ruins of an ancient temple. She is scared away by the visiting King Menelik and his retinue. Then she meets the hero, an explorer, who, amazed by her beauty, white skin and ability to talk French, induces her to go to Paris with him.

Under his tuition she becomes civilized and falls in love with him.

Angered by his failure to respond to her affections, she destroys some rock specimens, from ancient ruins, of great archæological value. She immediately regrets the act and goes to Abyssinia to bring back a bunch of them from the temple where such specimens abounded.

Thinking she had run away and realizing for the first time he had lost his heart, the hero follows her there. They again meet, he expresses his great love for her, and their troubles are thus ended.

Let us analyze some of the situations: To begin with, the heroine absorbs civilization with extraordinary ease. Where a swift transformation is required, as from a savage to a civilized or from an uneducated to an educated state, the fact must be borne in mind that it is impossible to make the situations convincing, because such changes cannot take place as easily as pictures would have it. The inclination then of the picture goer would be to doubt, and this lowers the entertaining values of the whole picture by several degrees.

Again, after deciding to leave Paris for Abyssinia, the heroine once more dons the tiger skins, sprints to the seashore, grabs a rowboat from the astonished fishermen, rows to the offing and approaches a liner. (The impression the picture conveys is that she, in a rowboat, overtakes the liner.) The captain stops the ship, rescues and takes her along. As the boat nears the African coast she jumps off and swims ashore. After a while she reaches Abyssinia, although we are not shown how.

Now, this kind of screen diet is hard to digest. First of all, everybody knows that Paris is an inland city and that the heroine could not get the liner there. Secondly, the first thing any sane captain would have done would be to put her in chains as a lunatic. The worst thing of all, however, is the fact that she is able to reach her goal, even after she leaves the boat, without any means of subsistence. It is not shown that she has any money to buy food with. She must have evidently been living on water and hot air.

The picture on the whole lacks heart appealing situations. It is based solely on physical action and scenery, real as well as fake (the latter plainly visible at times).

Although excellent in society roles, Miss Young is hardly at home when portraying a young, wild creature.

One redeeming feature about this picture is its cleanliness.

You may be able to get by with it, but don't boost the production too strongly.

"The House of Mirth"

Katherine Harris Barrymore in Well Produced Drama

(Metro—Aug. 5. Directed by Albert Capellani)

PROVIDED your patrons don't object to such a theme as this, "The House of Mirth" ought to please them as it has been produced splendidly. It contains some human appeal and keeps the action at a good pace.

The scenario has been taken from Edith Wharton's novel of the same name. It deals with the unpleasant subject of love sacrifice to the altar of mammon, and marriage infidelity. The heroine is forced by her aunt to marry not the man she loves but the one who has money. Her husband proves unfaithful and starts affairs with the willing wife of his friend. The friend, in turn, tries to force his attentions on the heroine.

The friend of her husband tricks her into visiting him at his home. The willing wife, who was out all night with the heroine's husband, is informed of the visit (but not how it was caused), and insults her publicly. The heroine is divorced on account of the scandal, and, although she possesses evidence of her husband's unfaithfulness, she refuses to use it.

The heroine secures a position away and in a strange place and tries to find happiness in hard work. However, she becomes despondent and attempts suicide just as the hero, her former sweetheart, who had waited all this time and never lost faith in her, enters the room in time to save her. They are now happily united.

The allegory at the beginning and the end of the picture showing an old man weighing virtue with gold, with a human skull on the table, is not very pleasant. It adds very little to the dramatic values and subtracts manyfold from the entertaining. Such scenes have no popular appeal.

"Inside the Lines"

(World—Aug. 26. Directed by David M. Hartford)

HERE is a spy picture that does credit to the industry. The different situations in the story have been developed along logical lines. There isn't one incident that you could condemn as improbable, unless it be the recognition of the heroine by the Shermans, stranded Americans, at Gibraltar, where they met again, while she had her face turned in the opposite direction. No doubt this is an oversight.

The most striking feature, however, is that the characters of both sides, British as well as Germans, are endowed with some intelligence. Under such circumstances, the ending—which shows the triumph of the British side—becomes more dramatic and so much more pleasing.

The plot is based on the Earl Derr Biggers' stage success. It is wound around the fact that the Strait of Gibraltar is mined. The explosion of all the mines being controlled from a single point, the signal tower.

The German spy organization tries to appoint in that important position a member of their own in the guise of a British officer to enable them to blow up the British fleet. In this case, however, the man sent for this mission happened to be a real British officer who was able to become a wheel in the German machine without being detected. Thus the British are enabled to round up several German spies.

One of the pleasing features in this picture is the fact that at no time can the action be guessed in advance. At several points you are held in suspense trying to guess what is going to happen.

Director Hartford has used some common sense in developing the different situations. He deserves credit for their convincing touch.

This may well be considered one of the few realistic and pleasing spy pictures.

"Green Eyes"

Dorothy Dalton Better with Each Release

(Paramount-Ince—Aug. 26. Directed by R. William Neil)

MISS DALTON, it seems, improves with every new picture. Of course part of the credit belongs to Director Neil. But whatever the cause, one thing is noticed, she is gaining in popularity daily.

"Green Eyes" contains the element of heart appeal in a very small measure, but the swift action, the suspense, the star's excellent acting and Mr. Neil's judicious directing, raise it up to the same level as Miss Dalton's late contributions.

The subject dealt with by this picture is of a rather peculiar nature. Although it teaches more or less of a moral lesson—it depicts what mischief jealousy can do—I am sure it will please picture goers as it is presented in an entertaining form.

The hero marries the heroine, much younger than himself. He is jealous of her. The fact that she speaks to a neighbor, arouses his ire. He reprimands his innocent wife in a manner as if her fidelity is in doubt. She resents the insinuation and says she will go back to her mother if he thinks her unworthy of him. They make up again.

The brother of the hero returns from college and a strong friendship develops between his sister-in-law and himself. His sweetheart gets jealous, and tells the hero to watch his wife. This helps fan the fires of old jealousy again.

The neighbor comes uninvited into the house during a reception, and, being intoxicated, insults the women. He is thrown out of the house by the young brother. The villain falls on a fence and is slightly hurt. Immediately after the young men enter the house the villain is shot and killed by a white-skin negro for old grievances. When the body is found by the servant, the young brother is notified. He is sure the job was done by him. He begs his sister-in-law to hide him. The husband sees the shadow outside of the window and commands the original to come into the room. The appearance of his own brother from hiding inflames his jealousy and strengthens his suspicions of his wife. He tries to explain but the heroine forbids him. This causes his suspicions to go a notch higher.

Shortly the murderer appears on the scene and confesses. This explains everything and proves the suspicions of the hero and the little girl unfounded. They fall in each other's arms, forgive and forget.

The picture is strictly clean and suitable for any kind of an audience.

"The Bird of Prey"

Gladys Brockwell in a Blood and Thunder Melodrama

(Fox—Aug. 11. Directed by E. J. Le Sains)

IT is not necessary to express my views at length regarding the quality of this picture. Below is an extract, word for word, from the press sheet furnished with the picture.

"A THRILLING TALE OF A LAWLESS LAND, WHERE LOVE REIGNS SUPREME." "When the man who is infatuated with Adele During, fearing disgrace, kills himself in her presence, his friend, Robert Bradley, threatens to denounce her as a murderess unless she submits to his wishes. Bradley takes her to a lonely part of Mexico and leaves her at a disreputable dance hall, where she becomes one of the leaders of a band of brigands, who plot to kill the American owner of the mine."

The heroine is presented in the story as living lawlessly with the hero's friend. She, in this particular instance, tires of him, therefore he kills himself. Then follows what has been described in the above extract of the story.

The Mexican bandits decide to kill the mine owner, an American. Her Yankee blood asserting itself, however, she decides to notify him. She rides to the mine and is surprised to find that it was none other than the man who forced her to continue the rotten life. The common danger from the approaching Mexicans unites them. They attempt to escape and are caught. But they again escape and cross the border into the United States. Having now become a hero, the villain is united with the heroine.

That particular scene where the heroine thrusts the sword in the back of the bandit Mexican while attempting to escape, killing him, will cause shivers to run up and down your spine.

"The Ghost Flower"

Alma Rubens in a Realistic Drama

(Triangle—Aug. 18. Directed by Frank Borzage)

THIS offering has been produced in such a realistic atmosphere that you almost forget it is a picture. The characters seem to live their parts instead of acting them. Director Borzage deserves credit. The direction may be called masterful.

Madeline Matzon, the author, gives Naples, Italy, as the locale of the story.

An agent of a secret underworld society is attracted by the beauty of the heroine. Threatening the life of her father unless he consents to deliver her to him, he obtains permission for a marriage. But the heroine is horrified and runs to her sweetheart, whom she begs to save her. The villain follows, and a struggle ensues, in which her lover is killed. She is assisted by some kindly neighbors to escape.

While wandering on the beach she is met by a kindly French poet, pitied, taken to Paris and educated. There she meets a young man and they fall in love.

All this while the villain was conducting a search. Having located her residence, he enters the garden and kills the poet. Her sweetheart attempts to overpower him. In the struggle the villain is wounded with his own knife, though he escapes. But he dies from the wound. The two lovers are now united.

The action is swift throughout and the suspense well maintained. Miss Rubens does the best work of her career.

The picture is free from suggestiveness. It ought to take well with any kind of an audience.

"Triple Trouble"

Chaplin Will Get the Laughs in This

(Two Reels. Made by Essanay. Released Through Kleine-Edison)

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S tricks in this offering will get the laughs, you needn't worry about that. In fact I can safely state that they will be as hearty as any that have ever been caused by their introduction in his contributions in the past.

There isn't much to the story of course. The comedian is supposed to be hired as a janitor to take care of the house of Col. Nutt, an old man working on a formula for a new explosive.

A count and his conspirators are trying to steal the formula. They are overheard by the police and are watched.

Charlie is paid off and goes for a good time. That night he sleeps in a cheap lodging but is awakened by the jingle of coins while being counted by their owner, a robber. He grabs the purse and runs.

He returns to Col. Nutt's house just as the burglars are ransacking the place. He calls the police. It results in a chase through the rooms. One of the bullets goes astray, strikes the explosive and everything goes up in the air.

Chaplin, who is seen in about half the scenes of the picture, appears in the usual wide trousers and his customary mustache.

The picture is free from vulgarity. The "Kicks" that used to be so common in the old days are absent except in one or two instances.

"The Eyes of Julia Deep"

Mary Miles Minter Puts This One Over

(American-Pathe. Directed by Lloyd Ingram)

MISS MINTER'S charming personality and the fact that no attempt has been made to put any seriousness in it, makes this offering entertaining. It may be classed as a romantic drama. It contains plenty of light comedy situations and a little heart appeal.

The story, by Elizabeth Mahoney, concerns the heroine, an orphan, working in a department store.

At the house where she is rooming lives also a young man, whose principal occupation is spending the money his father willed him. After it is all spent he attempts to commit suicide, but is prevented by the heroine.

Eventually she makes a man out of him and they get married.

Much better results could have been obtained from the story had a more successful choice of a supporting cast been made. Although the story in this picture is absurd, the comedy element ought to help make it acceptable with any kind of an audience.

"The Guilty Wife"

Jane Grey the Star in This Drama

The story introduces two orphan sisters. The oldest one marries the hero, a man she met in the big city, turning down her sweetheart. Shortly afterward she returns to her home town with her husband. She meets her old sweetheart and they renew their friendship. The husband, finding his wife in the arms of the man, becomes angry. She tells him she had made a mistake to marry him and that she still loved her sweetheart. He immediately leaves for the city and obtains a divorce.

While driving that evening the automobile is overturned and the woman and her sweetheart are killed. She is survived by a baby girl.

The youngest sister returns from the city, where she was taking violin lessons, and takes charge of the baby.

Some years later the hero, now in the West, is informed of his wife's death and that he is a father. He returns East to claim his daughter. Learning of the aversion the heroine had for him on account of misinformation as to the cause of his separation from her sister, he seeks an introduction under an assumed name. She falls in love with him, but when by chance she is informed of his identity she scorns him. After an explanation all barriers are removed and they become united.

The picture is not as salacious as the title might lead you to think. In fact, as far as the nature of the subject is concerned it contains no situations strong enough to make it objectionable even to the best houses, were it not for the direction which is very amateurish. Everything is introduced mechanically. You almost feel that there is somebody behind somewhere telling the actors what to do. There are innumerable other little details that are wrong.

This offering will no doubt please patronages that are attracted by such titles as this one.

"The Source"

Wallace Reid in a Story of the Lumber Country

(Paramount—Sept. 1. Directed by George H. Melford)

THE principal points from which the entertaining values of this picture are derived are physical action and pretty lumber scenery.

Clarence Kelland, the author, introduces the hero as one of a bunch of drunken derelicts who have been drugged and shanghaied to a lumber camp. There he meets the heroine, under whose influence he is regenerated. In the end they get married.

Those of you who cater to exclusive family trade, I am afraid, might object to the picture's opening. It shows a bunch of drunken and drugged men, presenting anything but a pleasant appearance.

The incorporation also of the scene where the young girl (not the heroine), dressed in black, tells the hero of her having been wronged by the villain I am sure is unnecessary and could have been omitted or altered. It is the only suggestive point in the entire production. Such a situation weakens rather than strengthens the picture, as such points are objectionable to some audiences.

"Riddle Gawne"

"One of Hart's Best," Says Harrison

(Artcraft—Aug. 19. Directed by W. S. Hart)

MR. HART is developing a talent along the directorial lines equal to that of his acting abilities. "Shark Monroe" had set us to thinking seriously of this theory, but "Riddle Gawne" proves it conclusively.

To the majority of picture goers, especially to those who love to see Mr. Hart in lively, manly photo plays, this offering may be considered one of his best. It contains all the elements, such as heart appeal, dramatic intensity, action and suspense, that characterize the stories peculiar to his type. The star has also been given a comedy part in one or two situations which he portrays as satisfactorily as any full-fledged comedian. This ought to furnish the producers with a new inkling; it may, after all, be wise to cast Mr. Hart in comedy-dramatic roles, since he is able to portray such roles so ably.

The only objection a great number of picture goers will find with this attraction is the fact that it is somewhat too brutal. There is a great deal of shooting and killing in it. One particular scene, I am almost sure, may cause some protests. It is the one showing the killing of the dog, although the actual shooting is not shown. But this scene can be eliminated without injuring the continuity of the story.

The plot is based on "The Vengeance of Jefferson Gawne," by Charles Alden Seltzer, published serially in the Argosy magazine in the October-November number of 1917. The hero is given a sympathetic role. He takes the part of a brave hearted man who turned to be a woman hater because the wife of his brother followed her lover, the latter killing his brother before they fly away.

In his bitterness the hero does not forget chivalry, so, at the risk of his life, he takes under his protection a young girl. In the end he married the girl, but not before meeting, fighting and killing the villain, his brother's murderer.

The picture is not suggestive.

"In Judgment Of"

Anna Nillson and Franklyn Farnum in a "New Thought" Tale

(Metro—Aug. 12. Directed by Will S. Davis)

SOME people will go wild about this feature, especially those who believe in occult powers. Others will not care a bit for it, a number of them might even laugh at it. This depends entirely on which way their personal beliefs are inclined. It is one of these subjects that could not have a universal appeal, owing to its nature.

The story has been contributed by George D. Baker. It presents the heroine as a young lady who possesses the power of mind reading, inherited from her gypsy ancestors. While driving she is attacked by a robber, but is saved by the hero. He is surprised when the heroine pronounces his name, as if they had met before. In time they fall in love.

Later he is accused of a murder. During the trial the heroine's occult powers tell her he is innocent and that her father, the presiding judge, was the guilty one. The hero is adjudged guilty by the jury, but, through her invisible powers, she compels the judge to confess. Thus the hero is exonerated.

Proving that he had committed the murder in self-defense, the father is also acquitted. In the end the two lovers are united.

Judge your audience and act accordingly, regarding this attraction. It is clean.

"On the Quiet"

John Barrymore Scores in Screen Return

(Paramount—Sept. 1. Directed by Chester Whihey)

PICTUREGOERS will derive some real fun out of this farce comedy. Mr. Barrymore impersonates a drunken person to perfection. Most of his comical tricks at the introduction of the picture are of the Charlie Chaplin style, slap-stick.

The action at the beginning is somewhat slow, but it picks up as it goes along until it becomes brisk, also very funny, towards the end.

The stage play of the same name, by Augustus Thomas, forms the basis of the story.

The hero falls in love with a girl, but as her brother objects to any love affair, they marry on the quiet.

His wife's sister and her husband, a duke, don't get along. The brother-in-law states to the hero he loves his wife, but he can't find out whether his love is reciprocated. The hero advises that he test her. They scheme to have the duchess find her husband in company with some chorus girls, but a cog slips loose and the plan goes to pieces.

When the brother was informed that his sister was out all night and found in company with the hero he thinks it disgraceful and gives a chase. The couple don diving suits and take refuge at the bottom of the sea, where they are at last unmolested. The brother in the end is informed of the secret, the duke and wife become reconciled and everything ends happily.

The submarine scenes are about the most perfect imitation ever screened. The audience may swear they are real.

The direction is creditable, so is the supporting cast, but Frank H. Belcher, as McGeachy, deserves special mention.

San Francisco in Contrast

Far From Being as Liberal as Los Angeles, Motion Picture News is on Dollars and Cents Basis

EVERY now and then we hear a story that San Francisco is going to make a fight for some of the film studios that are located in Los Angeles. Now, we are concerned with nothing more in these articles than to discuss the question of co-operation between the newspapers and the theatres, but the least that we can say here is that there is a decided contrast.

Now, by the census, San Francisco lacks 70,000 of being as big as Los Angeles, but it has an immense disadvantage, in that it has little territory outside of the city from which to draw. Oakland, right across the bay, is too far away to get patronage, and then the latter city has some fine theatres of its own. That is important, because the San Francisco theatres should, apparently, show more rivalry in their advertising in this distinct territory, but, as a matter of fact, most of them seem content to go along in the accustomed way, no matter what is the attraction.

Of course, the argument is that those theatres are making themselves institutions and that they do not need advertising beyond the mere announcement of the bill. Yet, New York City is ten times larger and the Rialto and Rivoli are the heaviest advertisers of any theatres in the city. And these theatres are certainly institutions.

But there is an answer to this. The amusement rate in the papers, especially in the Sunday papers, is outrageously high, and the theatre gets practically nothing for it. Now remember, that in this discussion we are considering the Sunday morning and the Saturday afternoon issues; for, like we did in Los Angeles, we want to get some lessons from what the newspapers are doing during the week and what they are doing on Saturdays and Sundays, and on what they could do.

There are six daily papers in San Francisco; and, with their circulations as given by the Lord and Thomas directory, they are:

Bulletin, Afternoon Daily (105,655).
Call-Post, Afternoon Daily (103,950).
Chronicle, Morning (82,472) and Sunday (11,394).
Daily News, Afternoon Daily (53,073).
Examiner, Morning (122,036) Sunday (241,493).

Now according to the estimates from San Francisco, none of these papers has over half of the circulation in the city. The Examiner, especially, has a large out-of-town circulation that does the theatres no good. Advertising in this Sunday issue will benefit the general advertiser, but from the justice of results given the motion picture theatre, there is no reason in the world why they should pay more than the commercial rate.

Now the Examiner insists on the motion picture houses paying it $7 an inch on Sunday and $5.60 on other days and will give no commercial rate. If we were operating motion picture theatres in San Francisco we would certainly stay out of that paper, for the returns cannot represent the expenses. The theatre is called upon to pay for a large amount of waste circulation that does them no good, for the reason that it is among people that cannot get to their theatres.

So far as we have been able to learn, the Call-Post is the only paper that has made any serious attempt to develop the motion picture business. Some months ago it assigned a special man to cover the motion picture news and to attend to the motion picture advertising. Then it made some concessions, which provide that, to take advantage of the commercial rate, the theatre must carry two inches daily at the amusement rate ($4.20), but if forty inches are used during one week the price will be reduced to $2.60 per inch. That does not seem unreasonable if the proper co-operation be given.

Now we must recognize that a newspaper is as much a business proposition as anything else. It owes a duty to its reader just as you owe a duty to your patron—to give him as nearly as possible what he wants. But we cannot and do not expect a newspaper to go ahead and lay out plans for a department, without some assurance as to what the theatres are going to do—some definite schedule on which to figure returns.

What we do object to, in the case of so many newspapers, is to arbitrarily put the motion picture rate high and then give no co-operation beyond illustrations and a pure reading notice, and to ignore the great interest of the general public. We believe that every newspaper that takes this attitude is weakening itself, from a circulation point of view, and is proving of less value to the general advertiser—the department store and the soap manufacturer—than it would be if it gave the real motion picture NEWS the attention to which it is entitled. And we do object to seeing pages given to baseball and boxing, which are today, no more national amusements that is the cinema.

We object to everything being made commercial about the motion picture and that entirely forgotten with the diamond. But to go on:

The Bulletin arranges things slightly differently, having an amusement rate of $2.40, which applies to all but forty-inch copy going into a specific issue, and then the rate is $2.80 for that particular ad only.

The Chronicle, the other Sunday paper, has a Sunday rate of $5.60, and $3.50 when forty inches or more are used. The daily rates are $4.90 and $3.15. The Daily News has an amusement rate of $2.50, and of $1.10 when forty inches or more are used.

Seeing some of the handicaps that the theatres are up against, let us look at the houses themselves. Now, there are only thirty-five motion picture theatres listed in San Francisco, and certainly that is a very small number, considering the size of the city. The average daily attendance is estimated at 40,000. That appears to us another argument why the newspapers should devote real attention to motion picture matter—with 40,000 interested in motion pictures every day.

The principal theatres:

The California seats 2,400 and is the largest in the city; yet Mr. Roth does not believe in large advertising, using a two-inch space in some of the papers. While we have already indicated the difficulties that managers are up against in San Francisco, it is nevertheless true, the example of the manager of the largest theatre using very small space, is certainly not inspiring to the newspapers to seek to do more or to make concessions. In every city that we have discovered, we have found that where the biggest theatre does not advertise—no matter what good reasons the manager may have—the effect on the newspapers has been the same.

J. A. Partington, manager of the Imperial, which has a capacity of 1,800, has done some large advertising from time to time, and some mighty clever advertising.

The other downtown houses are:

The Portola, which is also under the management of Eugene Roth, and which seats 1,000.

Strand, with 1,800, uses quarter and half pages at times and three to five inches daily, with twenty inches in the Saturday and Sunday issues.

Tivoli runs two inches daily in most of the papers with three in some of the others and occasionally larger space.

Rialto, with 1,400 capacity, is one of the biggest advertisers in the city, using daily space with forty to sixty inches in the Saturday afternoon and Sunday issues.

Alhambra, with 1,100 seats, uses two inches three times weekly.

Mission and Fillmore, two handsome suburban houses, advertise occasionally, though they have capacities of 1,500, and the

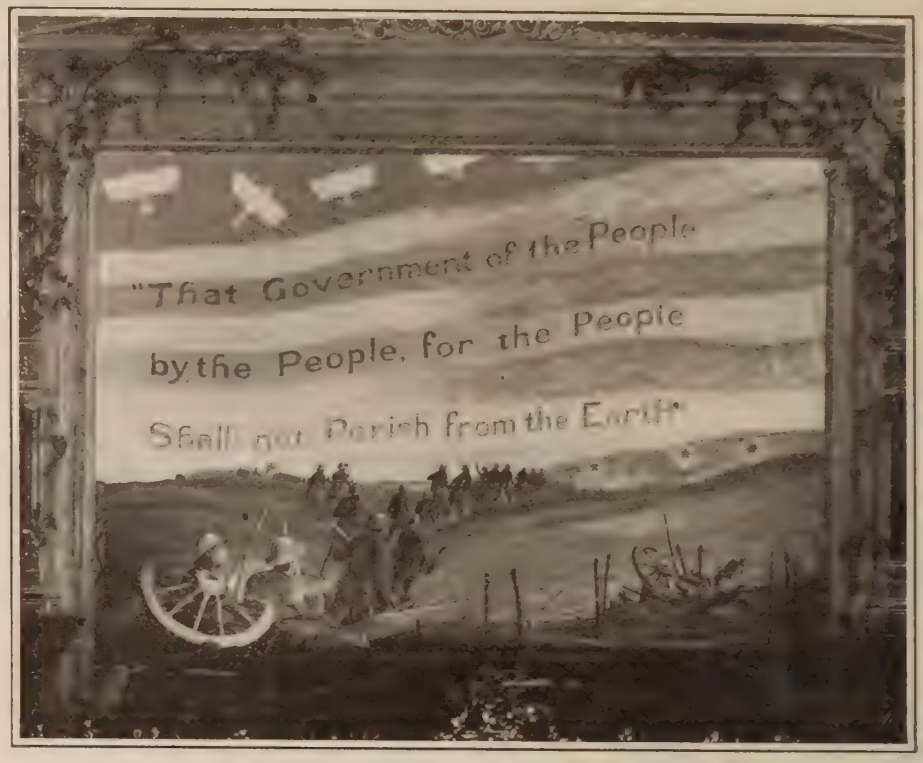
Rothapfel Gives Some Hints on Weeklies

By S. L. Rothapfel

This is the second article by Mr. Rothapfel on the handling of patriotic pictures, with special reference to the news weeklies. In the next article he will go into detail and explain the make up of one of his Animated and the music that he used with the various pictures.



Patriotic stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. While this was being shown the orchestra played "Evolution of Dixie"

I HAVE found most success in using patriotic propaganda in the news weekly, and since we entered into the war it has constituted more than 75 per cent. of this unit. Music plays an all important part in presenting these pictures and a general scheme to follow is to use good common sense and to get some advice if you don't know. The Sousa marches like "Hands Across the Sea," "Stars and Stripes Forever," "Jack Tar March," "Liberty Bell," and almost all of his marches are exceptionally fine for this kind of work, but those mentioned are favorites. George M. Cohan's "Over There," is generally a good theme, La Rondeau, and two nautical marches, "Before the Mast" and "Our Jackies," are good numbers to use for the nautical events. The national airs of the different Allies, or their favorite marches are very easily obtained and could be used to good advantage.

The way I generally do is to open up with some big thrill. This gathers your audience into your lap as it were. Carry them along (making sure you don't give the thrill too soon or else you will slip the climax) and then follow up by some weaker stuff. Arrange your magazine so that it ends with a wallop. Don't wave the flag in a manner that isn't good taste. There are plenty of ways to use it that will thrill and not become cheap. Remember that the dignity of the service is uppermost at all times. Avoid playing the national anthem unless on some special occasion because if you do your entire audience will rise and destroy the psychology of the whole thing. Understand that I do not say not to play it but great judgment must be used. The same is true of the "Marsaillaise," "Rule Britannia," the "March Royal," and the different national airs of the respective countries.

Don't make your subjects too long. When troops are marching try, if possible, to keep time with them on the screen. This is very important. Play the whole Weekly with snap and spirit as though you really meant it and the spirit will communicate itself to your audience. Rearrange your subject matter so that it will have a continuity. For instance, when you show troops marching follow up by showing them preparing to go into action, then in the trenches and then "over the top." Sound effects are also greatly to be desired if they can be handled in the right way, but if you do not know how a big gun sounds and the noise it makes don't use any effects until you find out. It is more than simply a smash on the drum, because some shells shriek through the air and some sound like the whirr of an express train. The effects we get are by a simultaneous crash of cymbals and then a rumble on the organ with the biggest pipes we have. This is very important and it takes a lot of practice to do it the right way.

Be careful how you place the subjects in your Magazine. Be sure that the rulers of different countries be given the place of

A Year of a Pledge—Kept

TODAY, August 24, marks the end of the first year of the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU. Under such a heading the department first appeared in the issue of August 25, 1917.

This Bureau was founded on the conviction that the great thing needed at that time was genuine SERVICE to the exhibitor. We believed that there was an absolute necessity for a department where the interest of the exhibitor would be the single thought in its conduct. We believed that such a department could become the forum where the exhibitors of the nation may gather. Our first announcement said:

> Through various departments the MOTION PICTURE NEWS deals with the activities of the exhibitor, but here it is sought to give specific aid in the handling of pictures. It is no purpose of this department to dictate rules for business conduct, but rather to utilize suggestions that have been successful with others—to draw from the experiences that have have been valuable and those that have been disastrous a sort of consensus of opinion—to save the exhibitors from the "experiments" which have wrecked others and at the same time to gather the money-making plans with suggestions and additions that will adapt them to all sections of the country.
> Further than this, the department purposes to afford direct and definite service to any exhibitor upon his request, to aid him in any way in the exhibition of pictures, in his publicity, and in any step to increase his business and popularize his theatre. MOTION PICTURE NEWS invites the theatre manager to consult this department as he himself would consult a physician, to call upon this department for any suggestion or help that he may desire. There is to be no limit to the field that the bureau hopes to cover.
> This department invites suggestions and criticisms and, similarly, reserves the privilege of suggesting and condemning. Many efforts to aid the exhibitor appear to have evolved into mutual praise departments. In various parts of the industry the attitude toward the showman has been the slap-on-the-back policy and "fine, old boy" comment. Certainly there is no benefit to the exhibitor in being told that some shop-worn idea is splendid and original and that some policy that has been proven a failure is excellent simply for the purpose of temporarily flattering him.
> Nor will this department declare "splendid and invaluable" half baked ideas and useless advertising aids simply because they emanate from some large producing company, when common sense tells us that such plans are worthless or even dangerous.
> This department is SERVICE. It hopes to supply a bureau to which the man from California, Kansas or Maine, or the owner of a syndicate of houses and the proprietor of a two-day-a-week house in a hamlet may turn for specific help.

Have We Kept the Faith?

YOU know that this department has been run absolutely for the benefit of the exhibitor. You know that if this were not the case we would not have the splendid Advisory Board of Exhibitors who are aiding us and you.

You know that this department has not been prostituted to the use of the advertiser and we challenge the publication of an idea in these pages in any issue that has come from an advertiser where we have recommended it to you unless it did not have worth.

You have not found in these pages suggestions of ridiculous exploitation stunts. You have not found in these pages the "aids" of the man who sits in his office and dreams them. What you have found here are the accounts of actual experiences of exhibitors all over the country—not things that might be done, but things that HAVE been done.

There were three pages of this department in the first issue. We expected the start to be slow. We were told on every hand that "it couldn't be done," that the exhibitors would never trust any one that was offering them service, that promised to do something that had never been done. We knew that suspicion. We knew how the exhibitor had been bunked, but we had the faith that the men who knew exhibitors and who were experts in their chosen fields could do this.

ARE WE RIGHT?

FROM the first issue there have been advertising and exploitation talks in every issue. An offshoot of this was "Your Idea and Ours," a department which has weekly contributions not only from every nook and corner of the continent, but from foreign nations.

Then came a series of articles on "Is This Your Theatre?" which covered the field and which was followed by "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," one of the most valuable series of articles that has ever appeared.

"Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel" was one of the first departments. It was the first time, and it is still the one instance where a man familiar with exhibiting conditions all over the country has the privilege of seeing the show "made" and being able to analyze it for others.

A later otugrowth was the Advisory Board. We selected men representative of the industry and they have been contributing to these pages week after week, and we know that their expressions have resulted in many great improvements in the industry. We told you that all of these men would be EXHIBITORS and that they would run the Board on your behalf. There can be no challenge to the statement.

Now such men as Mr. Rothapfel, S. Barret McCormick, Harold B. Franklin and many others are regular or occasional contributors here. They are successful showmen and the worth of their matter is apparent.

In the past year we have given every service from naming a theatre in a village to planning productions for theatres in the biggest cities. The actual exhibitor correspondence of the Bureau occupies more than thirty-two hours, or four days of eight hours, a week. Our files show over 8,000 exhibitor letters written during the year and it is still growing.

We are planning bigger and better things. We are doing more week after week, and we know that we are going to DO STILL MORE. AND WE ARE GOING TO DO IT.

A year ago we asked your co-operation and we invited you to call on us for any SERVICE without cost of obligation—either through the pages of the NEWS or in personal letters.

We renew the invitation and with it our PLEDGE TO YOU.

Your Idea and Ours

WHEN you really do an unusually big business on a bad night, it is a good thing to advertise it—once in a while. But be sure of your facts before you start your display. If you had your house only half full don't devote your newspaper space to telling how you turned them away.

"Try to get in" is a line that was originated on the Coast, and it is being used by a lot of theatres. It's all right if you are doing big business, but it's far from right to have people see this day after day in your displays and then come regularly to your theatre and find it half filled.

Majestic theatre has used the idea of telling about the crowds on a rainy night to excellent advantage in this display, six inches by three columns. It has left it for the picture of Nazimova to put over the rest of the appeal and we have no doubt that it worked.

A smiling face around the theatre will save many a burning ear. Get that?

THERE is never any excuse for a misleading advertisement. If "To Hell With the Kaiser" is not a war play we do not know what it is. There is not a scene in it that does not bear directly on the war and there is no sense in fooling the public. You are hurting your theatre.

The way to exploit this picture has been very clearly given you. We wrote and published a special service section on this picture which told you clearly just how to go about your exploitation, and that is along the line that the picture shows you what you would like to see happen to the Kaiser.

We gave you as a feature line, "Compact of Hell and the Hun." In adition to this Metro has issued excellent advertising aids that have been used successfully by scores of theatres.

This advertisement, 4½ inches double double column, of the Mary Anderson theatre, Louisville, Ky., is not only bad in every way, but it is untrue and it deliberately ignores the real selling power of the picture. In some cases there is an excuse when the selling point was not made clear to the exhibitor. But in this case it certainly has been.

Your theatre is yours, but how long it will remain so depends on how much you make it the public's.

WITH the exception of the name of the theatre and the date at the top and the two lines at the bottom about the organ and the hours of performance this entire display was taken bodily from one of the Universal advertisements in the Motion Picture News. It is effective and would have been more so if it had printed better.

However, still stronger is the display which appeared in the Constitution on the same day that the first was in the Journal.

Manager J. F. Jackson, of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., asks us which of the two we think the better. The longer of the two displays is certainly much better printed and comes out more clearly and of course that goes a long way in settling the point. "She belongs to me, get that?" the line in the quarter page ad in the Journal is the strongest of any of the lines used and had the half tone stood out as it should have done it would be hard to get away from. But the ad in the Constitution is the better, in the first place, because it features the title of the picture stronger than the name of the star and this is a case where that should have been done. The design used is excellent, but the top of the mortgage goes up too far and fails to allow the selling line to stand out as it would have done had it been against a white background. But leave out that sentence, "Don't miss it."

Mr. Jackson asks whether we believe that he is using too much space in quarter pages. Emphatically no. Use half pages and full pages if you can afford it. The man who has the theatre and who has the productions can make money the stronger he exploits them. Until very recently Atlanta has been a mighty poor advertising city from a motion picture point of view. Stereotyped ads sent out by the producers were used, the bill for the last half of the week advertised as prominently as that for the first half, and three houses under the same management formerly grouped the announcements together. Readers of this department from the beginning will remember that this is one of the first points that we criticised and most of these faults have been remedied.

Tudor theatre is going to get business with the plan it is following. And let us add that we like the way that it keeps the theatre the big thing.

Even money jingles and it likes smiles and courtesy.

THIS is a case where the cut has been made to carry practically the whole of the display on the picture, because the Strand theatre, New Orleans, wanted to call attention to other features. Now there is another house that has just opened in that city and there has been more or less competition in the advertising of the houses themselves, and the Strand continues to call attention to the excellence of the theatre. Another big feature of the house is the orchestra and ever since it opened this has been featured in the advertising. So, in the seven inches, double column, that was used there was not very much room to do anything else, but the writer of this display has been able to get over the impression because he had a picture of a pretty girl who is one of the principal characters in the story.

We hardly think that the average reader will get the expression "cut from the heart of the studio" that it includes motion picture scenes. We would have made this very clear.

Just think this over: The shrinking violet was finally plucked.

FREAKISH, but a good ad, except for that terrible heavy black border and the Gothic type that most of the theatres in Duluth, Minn., insist on using. Used once it will make the people read the message that you have to send them. The text matter is excellent and it ought to get people to the theatre.

Now this display could have been improved considerably. We would have used the cut of Miss Normand in the upper right hand corner, an oval one preferably

WHO IS SHE?
Of course we knew you'd know right away who she was—but we thought we'd do it "just for fun." Everybody wants fun these war times—even the kaiser is dancing—to the tune of "Yankee Doodle." For real, unadulterated, spontaneous fun, MABEL NORMAND in "THE VENUS MODEL" makes C. C. look like an undertaker at a wedding. And girls—if you would win yourself a fortune and a husband—take a tip from Mabel; she puts it over in a manner that would make "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" look like a piker.

that wouldn't give the sawed-off-at-the-bottom effect that we have here. Then we would have used a light rule border—a distinctive one, if possible, running up to the cut. Now this oval cut would have occupied just half of the width of the advertisement and right along side of it we would have had the question "Who is she?" Then immediately under this we would have had the matter that is used except that we would have left still more of a margin of white space at the side, then we would have had the other attractions and then the name of the theatre—with a name plate—and the price, broken into the bottom of the advertisement with the ruled border coming to either side. Take out your pencil and paper and sketch out this suggestion and you will see how much better it looks.

How many of you make these rough sketches, for yourself, before you send the copy to the printers?

Yes, ideas come from a mine, and you have to dig for them.

SORT of a cut that you use in your display means a whole lot to the punch. You had better omit them entirely if you cannot get them to carry the appeal of the picture.

Now this first advertisement of the Washington theatre, Detroit, gets a good sales line into the display with the lines

"A story of the golden north where men think with their fists," but it kills this appeal by using a cut of Clara Williams with a broad smile on her face. This four-inch, three-column display absolutely fails to put over any punch and the whole thing remains a bare announcement of the attraction. The exhibitor who merely fills a certain amount of space each week is not advertising.

How different the effect with the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga. Here the space used is ten inches, three columns, but the larger space is well worth while. Now the name of the theatre and the title of the picture have been made the most prominent thing in both of the displays, but one remains a pure announcement and the other breathes the atmosphere of the picture.

The Criterion has used a picture of Miss Williams in the Carmen garb and in it has given the atmosphere with the lone pine tree and the sketch of the man guiding his dog team through the snow. There is needed but the single sentence to get over the appeal of the picture. And it gets over.

If you cannot get a cut that means something in connection with the picture, omit the cut or use a straight one of the star. You wouldn't carry a white flag into battle.

WE regret that every time we have been called upon to comment on the advertising of any of the Albany, N. Y., theatres we have been forced to say that they were very bad. Writers of advertising there seem determined to crowd the announcement for the entire week into the display, with a lot of reading matter and getting a messy result.

Here is the first creditable advertisement that we have seen come out of Albany. It is used by the Clinton Square theatre and is adapted from an advertisement which appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Chart showing arrangement to divide the responsibility with the proper employes

Franklin Urges Managers to Organize Theatres to Make All Do Their Work

"SUCCESSFUL business acumen of the present day requires system and organization, the old hit or miss method of running theatres is gone," said Harold B. Franklin, in an interview with the NEWS representative. "The manager should so systematize the regular routine of his theatre that it will run automatically, so to speak. As a result he will himself have more time for the arrangement and presentation of his program.

"Don't be an 'all around' manager," continued Mr. Franklin. "Get away from the habit of doing every little thing yourself. The time one spends in putting pictures in frames can be used more profitably. Arrange your operating schedule so that minor details be taken care of systematically and so that you can save your surplus energy for the big task of presentation; to meet and study your patrons.

"Many exhibitors are 'jacks-of-all-trades,' and in looking out for the little things overlook the big essentials. Organization is the first requisite of big business. This is especially true in a present-day motion picture theatre where there are so many intricate details to look after at all times.

"Of course, the manager should supervise every detail, guiding and helping his staff of employes until they are fully familiar with their respective duties. Once you have trained the staff to accept responsibility you will have an organization which will be an asset instead of a liability.

"The entire fabric of organization is built on the selection of house employes. Use good judgment in choosing your staff. It is advisable to draw out a plan where responsibility can be shouldered by employes. This is applicable to the small as well as the larger theatre. Hammer the idea into each employe that upon his faithful observance of his duty depends the smooth operation of your entire organization. Make he or she feel that they are part of a big chain, each link of which is essential to the smooth running of your program.

"At Sheas' Hippodrome we make the head of each department feel as though they are part of the management. All department heads are brought together once a month, sometimes oftener, when the progress of the preceding month is reviewed and when suggestions for the betterment of operation are always in order.

"One of the big problems of every business is to keep employes loyal. The busy manager cannot keep in close touch with all, but through the department head the manager can instill the proper enthusiasm and spirit.

"Our first step at the Hippodrome is a classification of all departments and their responsibilities. The chart illustrated here probably cannot be used by everyone, but it can be applied to almost every theatre, large or small.

"Each department head is required to make a daily report, noting any unusual incident which may occur in the house. This system is worked out so carefully that should there be a break of film at any time, this fact would be reported to the office automatically by four different department heads.

The above chart clearly shows the responsibility of all department heads, and there can be no mistake.

The true executive will cultivate cheerfulness and practice diplomacy—it smooths the rough spots. Taken up by your organization, it gives your patrons better service."

Current Programs at the Rialto and Rivoli

The programs for the week of August 11, at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, are no less characteristic of the general excellence of bills presented there than usual. Managing Director Rothapfel switched back to the lengthy feature at the Rivoli, in direct contrast to the bill presented the week previous. This, as has been cited before in these columns, serves to break the more or less monotonous tone of a bill with a feature of five reels or more run week after week.

The show at the Rivoli begins with an overture from "William Tell," by Gioacchino Rossini, with Lieut. Rothapfel himself conducting. For exhibitors who use this overture it would not be a bad idea to follow Mr. Rothapfel's style and give a short story of the overture, as follows: "'William Tell,' based on Schiller's play, which in turn was based on the well-known Swiss legend, thought for a long time to be history, was produced at Paris, August 3, 1829. The overture pictures first the storm, a pastorale, and ends with a galop based on a theme which sounds like a hunting call. None of the music of the overture is drawn from the themes of the opera itself."

Then follows "American Troops on Furlough," taken by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army. Gladys Rice follows with a song, "I Hear You Calling Me," by John P. Marshall, which Lieut. Rothapfel repeated this week because of numerous requests for the number.

Rivoli Animated Pictorial, personally edited by Mr. Rothapfel, is then flashed on the screen. This includes also the Creel Committee's Official War Review. Next is a song by Desere LaSalle, the baritone, entitled "Dio Possente."

The Rivoli program now swings into the featured motion picture of the week, William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawne," an Artcraft picture directed by Hart, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. In the cast are William S. Hart, Katherine MacDonald, Lon Chaney, Gretchen Lederer, Gertrude Short, Leon Kent, Milton Ross and E. B. Tilton.

In the interval between feature and the short reel which followed the orchestra played selections from "Maytime." The subject at the close of the program was, "Who's Who in Baseball," showing the big league players in action. This is the third in a series of the Marty McHale Baseball Pictures.

The Animated Pictorial used at the Rivoli was composed of the following subjects selected from the various news weeklies: Gaumont News: Fourth of July parade in Paris; Gaumont Graphic: Opening of "Washington Inn," the Officers' Rest House in London; Gaumont Graphic: King George and Queen Mary inspect the nurses' training school at Aldershot. Also visit a clothing factory; Hearst-Pathe: Silver wedding celebration of King and Queen of England in London; Gaumont News:- Launching of the first ship from Hog Island, with Mrs. Wilson christening

How Liberty Theatres Will Help Exhibitors

By Edward L. Hyman

Film Director for All Liberty Theatres in the U. S. Operated by the War Department Commission on Camp Activities

As manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, Mr. Hyman was one of the most successful of the younger managers in the country. However, his services were volunteered to the Government and he was sent to manage the Liberty theatre at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and later was sent to Camp Gordon, Ga., and there put in charge of booking the pictures for ten Liberty theatres. A few weeks ago he was given his present post and he will select all the films that the soldier boys see. Unquestionably the war is going to have a big effect in shaping the future of motion pictures and Mr. Hyman's article will be found valuable to manager and producer alike.

Here is the soldier boy orchestra at Liberty theatre, Camp Gordon, Ga.

WHAT bearing does the military camp Liberty theatre have upon my business, is the way in which the average exhibitor is due to talk when the subject is mentioned.

It doesn't interest him—it's too far removed from his own house.

But it should interest him, for the Liberty theatre gets the raw recruit and the officer when both are shaping new visions upon life.

And then, too, looking at it from an economic standpoint, isn't it true that if a Liberty theatre feeds the men cheap stuff the hunger for better motion pictures will not be developed?

In running a house in civilian life I found that you could educate a patronage to higher class pictures and higher prices. And also you can keep them coming by giving them stuff that gets by.

Wouldn't you rather have a Liberty theatre screen the sort of plays you are offering so that when the men come home again they will seek out your place and pass up the cheaper haven of the animated?

There is a very important relation between the Liberty theatre and your house! Don't forget it for a second!

Let me give you an insight into the careful thought and psychology that goes into the operation of a Liberty theatre as exercised by the Fosdick Commission.

The Liberty theatre aims to give good stuff for a moderate charge, an admission just sufficient to clear expense items.

It doesn't aim to make money and naturally its ideals are perhaps a little higher than those of a small group of movie men in business life.

The Liberty theatre plays to all sorts and manners of men. But there is gold in all of them and often a good picture helps a man to see that he really likes the high-class stuff better than the senseless jumble of some junk that is unloaded on the film market.

Before becoming director of films for all Liberty theatres I managed the camp theatre at Camp Gordon. This is as large an institution as a big New York theatre, seating 2,400 men and with a stage equal in size to that of the largest metropolitan houses.

I found that in order to make the soldiers come in to this theatre, I had to show the sort of stuff that would please the officers. The private seems to figure that if a thing goes with an officer, it is real stuff. Naturally I had to feature high-class offerings to meet the standard of these splendid military leaders. They were the critics and were just as harsh as the privates. In other words I had to get right with the high moguls in order to impress those below them in military station.

The same applies back home. I impress the best people and the others will seek the same level. Every person has a yearning for the better things, especially if they are of a happy trend.

That advertising is the life of the film business, the very Alpha and Omega, is proven again in the administration of the Liberty theatre. You can't market something the public doesn't know you possess.

At first some of the theatres felt that being part of a military institution it wouldn't be necessary to advertise. They forgot that town attractions beckon, that the soldier often goes to the city near the camp and looks for excitement which may lead him into trouble and even the toils.

I insisted that the advertising be kept normal to that of a live, successful city theatre. The men want something that smacks of home, and if you advertise as much as they do back home, it helps. I "billed" the camp, let the boys know what they could get for a moderate expenditure. I used the camp organ, the military newspaper, and advertised in every way possible.

Of course the attendance increased and I was able to put on better stuff. There is always a temptation to show cheap stuff when there is a run of bad business and the practice is liable to become permanent if fostered.

I insisted on as good an orchestra as they would get back home. And as large a one, too. It was necessary to search the camp, but was able to find a group of instrumentalists, all professionals, that would please a New York or Chicago top-notch exhibitor.

An effort was made to engender friendliness between the men and the management. None of the up-state stuff existed. It was made apparent that the theatre was theirs and what they wanted in the way of service—was up to them. And faith was kept with them for many do not have much to expend upon amusement. When a soldier left the Camp Gordon Liberty theatre, he generally went out whistling and in complimentary mood rather than kicking and grouching.

In fact it is my objective and always will be, to keep the Liberty theatres on a par with the high ideals of the Fosdick Commission, and in so doing I will be keeping on a level with the best picture theatres in America.

You may rest assured, I believe, that when the men return victorious their sessions at the Liberty theatre will not have weaned them away from your type of theatre—if yours is at least 90 per cent RIGHT.

Woodward Theatre to Be First Run House

Charles H. Miles, lessee of the Woodward theatre, Detroit, has challenged any manager of his section by the announcements that he has made for the coming season. The theatre was operated last year as a combination house, but on September 1 it starts a policy of first run motion pictures only.

There will be a fifty-piece orchestra to furnish the music and this will be under the direction of Ward J. Hutton who led the Majestic theatre orchestra for three years. Henry Santroy, whose singing has made a big hit at Detroit theatres, has also been engaged for an indefinite term.

Thomas Makes His Own "Paper"; Finds Ready Made Product Worthless

AT the start of the discussion of the exploitation of pictures by the Advisory Board, H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto and Strand theatres, Omaha, pointed out the inferior quality of the display matter that is being sent to exhibitors. Finding that he could not get from the manufacturers the sort of material that he wanted he set about to construct his own displays and in this work he had the co-operation of an excellent artist.

Most of the one sheets are made from cut outs of the stock one sheets, but these are blended in so that it is hard to tell them from the card itself and they appear almost as paintings.

"I am a believer in one sheets of this sort," says Mr. Thomas, "at least until the time that the producers are willing to put out a one sheet that will attract business.

"I have made this experiment any number of times: Put nothing but the stock one sheets up in the frames in front and then watch my patrons 'shop' the display. The majority of those who stopped to examine the display did not go in, but passed up the picture because the display did not look inviting enough. Understand that I do not say that everyone who goes to a motion picture theatre 'shops' the display frames, for there are a great number who know from the newspaper exploitation and other sources what picture you have. But especially do these displays appeal to the transients and those who have failed to read the papers that day and happen to be passing the theatre.

"To get the contrast on the very same pictures I have then put out attractive cut-out one sheets and the result certainly must have been gratifying and profitable for I am still using them. Oh, for the day when the producers will give us some real one-sheets."

The three sheets which Mr. Thomas uses are drawings and some of them can be seen for a block and work wonders in getting the people to the theatre. One of the most effective that Mr. Thomas has used was one that bore the large head of Hart and the simple title in large letters "Shark Monroe." Note that the name of the star was not used, but still these three sheets were given the credit for bringing increased business.

Mr. Thomas finds that the "talking" three sheets are mighty good business getters. He says that especially did the one on "Old Wives for New," which is reproduced cause crowds to gather to read them, but that they drew business into the theatre. This same wording was also used in the newspaper advertising and was varied on other ads.

In addition to the one and three sheets described Mr. Thomas also uses on each production a three sheet reading about as follows:

RIALTO DATA

NAME FEATURE:	SHARK MONROE
PRESENTED:	July 21, 22, 23 and 24
CAST INCLUDES:	WILLIAM S. HART, Katherine MacDonald
DIRECTED BY:	THOMAS H. INCE FOR "ARTCRAFT"
LOCALE:	Alaskan gold fields and on board steamer en route to Alaska
KIND OF STORY:	New characterization for Hart—playing part of ferocious sea captain, nicknamed "Shark" by his associates on account of being so bloodless and cold—a regular human icicle, but finally melting under a woman's smile.
OTHER PICTURES:	Official Government War Pictures! Rialto News, Mack Sennett Comedy with Chester Conklin, Harry Gribbon and Mary Thurman.
COMING THURSDAY:	Lina Cavalieri in "Love's Conquest"

Mr. Thomas finds that a three sheet of this kind gives the prospective patron all the information he desires, and is well worth the money it costs.

Wood Sends Ad Specimen

J. M. WOOD, manager of the Weneeda theatre, Milton, Wis., writes: "I read your comments in each week's News with great interest. They are a great help to the small town exhibitor." Then he encloses some of the specimens of his latest advertising. We suggested that since he was in a small town (census population 833), and that he used the country weekly as a medium, he should try to tell something about the picture. And he does a great deal more in this case than a celebrated New York theatre did when this feature was advertised. He told that it was made from Mrs. Burnett's "Sarah Crewe." Just a point here. Please, please all of you avoid the superlative. It is unnecessary and leads you astray. "Sarah Crewe" is a wonderfully charming story, but we'll wager that twice as many people read the same author's "Little Lord Fauntleroy." What's the use of making any statement that the reader will be inclined to refute?

Profit Sharing Week Puts New Record Up in Boston Theatre

"THE dullest week in the year made one-third more business than the same week in any other year."

That is the unique record that has just been set up by Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand, Lowell, two of the most up-to-date houses in the country. To Profit-Sharing Week is credited this great showing.

Mr. Soriero is a careful student of affairs of the business world, and when he saw how successful the profit-sharing system was proving in big industries he came to the conclusion that the same principle would apply to motion picture houses, where so much depends on the employes having the interests of the house and the patrons always at heart. So he arranged the Profit-Sharing Week. Now the result of the practical working of the week was that fewer passes were used than ever before and that checks and money for tickets came in in greater quantities than ever before.

The benefit of this was equally divided between patron, employer and employe because business increased, the patrons were in a happy frame of mind and the employe was financially much better off. Uncle Sam also benefited because the condition of the profit sharing was that the employes should buy War Savings Stamps with their share of the profits, thus helping the Government and encouraging thrift.

Mr. Soriero declares that the plan was a success in every way and was well justified by the results. He believes that employe as well as employer is decidedly concerned in the financial success of the institution which employs him and he should be encouraged to greater efficiency by the knowledge that he is to share in the benefits which his additional efforts help produce. Employes in a theatre are no different from those in any other occupation and must be given assurance of steady employment fifty-two weeks in the year if they are to be kept contented and efficient. Proper treatment, profit sharing, steady work, adequate pay and fair chance of advancement will go a long way toward attracting the right kind of employes to the moving picture industry.

So far as we have any record this is the first time that the plan has ever been followed in a theatre. There is no reason why it cannot be used anywhere where there are a considerable number of employes.

Iowa Manager Takes Advantage of Raid on Moonshine to Put Over Picture

ABILITY to take advantage of an opportunity often differentiates a successful manager from a poor one. The man who is not up on his toes looking to make the most of what is going on, in a legitimate way, is not going to be long at the top. And though we do not like the usual stunt suggested by the press books, the ability to convert some local situation into advertising for the theatre or the picture is well worth while.

An example of that comes from Burlington, Iowa, where Manager L. P. Blank of the Palace theatre, put over a remarkable campaign on "Moonshine," the Fatty Arbuckle picture, by taking advantage of something that really happened. Here is Mr. Blank's own story of it:

"The basis of my campaign was taking advantage of a situation. As you know, Iowa is 'dry,' both by State and Federal laws. Bootlegging was carried on in our city and the State officials decided to take a hand. They sent several agents in town to clean it up. The first day they landed, they rounded up about twenty alleged bootleggers. This is the synopsis or basis, on which we started.

"A couple of days after the first raid by the State men, we got out card No. 1. These cards were put out after 12 o'clock at night, in newspaper offices, business houses and out in residence districts. The next day people commenced to talk. Some thought it a joke, others said the liquor interest did it. Anyway, they talked; each one trying to find out who knew something about the cards. The next move was the finding of a moonshine still. That night we put out a second card.

"The next day everything was 'Moonshine'; it was the chief topic wherever one went. Fellows had cards in their pockets, they were up in barber shops, factories, etc. The majority of people, by this time, had it doped out that the liquor element was surely doing it; the dry ones were looking for the moonshine place. The day before we played the picture, we put out card No. 3. When the people found out what it was all about, they thought it a good joke; and will add, all wanted to see the picture.

"In conjunction with this blind advertising campaign, we worked the billboards this way: When we started the cards, we put out 300 one-sheets reading: 'Fatty Arbuckle Will Appear at Palace in His Latest Scream, July 17 and 18.'

sixes and ones, on billboard stands over the city, the regular paper, and also used numerous cutouts of Arbuckle. You can see how the two stunts worked by themselves, and in the end, how they both centered on the one object: 'Moonshine' and Arbuckle.

"We were very successful, and will say that it proved to be the greatest thing we ever did or saw pulled off. It not alone worked in our city, but was spread in all nearby towns. Of course, as stated in the first place, we took advantage of a situation, but we cannot see why it would not work with equal success in any State that is 'dry.'

"I assure you, personally, that I had a regular circus out of it, listening to all the talk and remarks made during the campaign. Of course, this might not appeal to many exhibitors, on account of the cost of campaign, but if you want a good stimulator, this will do it."

At the Rialto the program begins with a selection from "Rigoletto," with Hugo Riesenfeld conducting. As is the case at the Rivoli, the brief story of the music is given, as follows: "Rigoletto" was first produced in Venice, March 11, 1851. It is based on Victor Hugo's drama, 'The King Amuses Himself,' but the locale of the play is changed from France to Italy, and the French King becomes a Duke of Man-

San Francisco Papers Put Picture News on Strict "Dollars and Cents Basis"

Progress, a 1,000-seat house, under the same management, seldom uses the papers. There are eight smaller and cheaper downtown houses, which do not use the papers at all.

Then let's look at the Saturday afternoon issues. Now we want to tell you in advance, that the men in charge of these papers, as a general rule, seem to have a heavy leaning to the legitimate stage and are willing to do a great deal more for such attractions than the motion picture. One must remember also, that the specimens reproduced are from late in mid-summer papers, at a time when the legitimate houses are not at their best. But you will find them getting an even break with the motion picture, in spite of the fact that the great bulk of the advertising comes from the motion picture.

First, let's take the Call-Post, which we would expect to be liberal, since it is starting a drive for motion picture advertising. The first page of this is devoted to the legitimate and vaudeville, although we figure but 16½ inches for all of those houses, to 85 inches for motion picture houses. We have counted in the advertising on "Hearts of the World," which is at the Alcazar, normally a legitimate house. Strand theatre here used five inches double, Rialto ten inches across three columns, and the Tivoli 10 inches double. The others have two inches single, except the Alhambra, which uses three.

As to co-operation. There is a six-column layout and a reading notice for each theatre, with the heavier advertisers getting little more recognition than is given those who are using two inches with more or less regularity. NO NEWS on either page.

The Bulletin accords practically the same treatment and carries the same advertising, except that of the Rialto, which uses only two-inch space here.

However, let us say here, that the Imperial, in both the Call-Post and the Bulletin, pays for fourteen inches triple column, in connection with the same amount from the Famous-Players, and is, therefore, the largest advertiser of them all.

In the Saturday Daily News there are parts of two pages devoted to motion picture and general theatrical matter, each reading notice given a separate head. California and Columbia are in with their regulation two inches, while Strand, Rialto and Tivoli have their large ads, as in the Call-Post. Still NO NEWS

Turning to the Examiner, Sunday Morning, we find the California and Fillmore each with two inches single, Rialto with three inches double, the Strand and Tivoli with five single and the Imperial with 6½ single. But note the space that is given to the layout. The Examiner wants to make a splash. It evidently wants to make the appearance that it is giving recognition to the motion picture, but certainly it is blind to the sort of matter its readers want. Still NO NEWS.

In the Chronicle the same conditions apply, reading notices and layouts, but it has slightly the more advertising; Rialto, Imperial and Strand have the same advertising that they use in the Examiner, with the Portola joining the California and Fillmore in two-inch space.

AND STILL NOT A LINE OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS IN ANY OF THE SATURDAY OR SUNDAY PAPERS.

Of course, we believe that it pays a theatre to advertise, even if it does not get a line of matter free, but what we want to again register our protest about is that continued amusement rate when there is not any real co-operation. Now let us admit that the theatres are paying that amusement rate to cover the cost of the cuts that are made and the white paper used for the reading notices. From that point of view and to the extent of a certain amount of advertising the amusement rate may be applicable.

But aside from that, haven't any of the Saturday or Sunday papers of San Francisco any interest in what their readers want—don't they believe in printing a complete paper that will interest everyone? If they do, why do they ignore the interest of at least half of the people in their city and fully eighty per cent of their whole subscription list?

honor. If you have, for instance, the ruler of Great Britain reviewing troops which is followed by something else, always give him the place of honor in the subjects mentioned.

Avoid swaggering, boasting titles by all means. Instill spirit, pride of country and oodles of patriotism, but don't brag and don't let anyone in the Weekly brag. Carefully rehearse the News Weekly with the music and arrange it so that it will play smoothly and the music will not have any abrupt breaks or stops. It isn't necessary always to start a march from the beginning. Play according to your subject and if necessary start at the trio and then go back to the beginning. Oftentimes a piccolo and drum is very effective or bugles and drum. The big national airs like "Hail, Columbia," "Red, White and Blue," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Marseillaise" and "Rule Britannia," should always be played as a big Maestoso movement using plenty of organ. In other words, they must have a martial spirit.

Next week I will go into a little more detail and take one of the Magazines, telling you exactly why I placed the subjects in the order which I did and why I selected certain music.

STORY OF THE PLAY

The birthday of Angela Moore is the same as that of her country—the fourth of July. She is a typical American girl living in Washington She is courted by Count Jules De Destin of the French embassy, but her affections are centered in Karl Von Austreim, a young German-American, who, although he lives in Washington, has been educated in Germany

Karl has proposed to Angela and has just been accepted when he is secretly called to Germany and vanishes before war is declared Jules goes to join his French regiment Angela receives no word from Karl, and when her aunt, living in a French chateau, requests that she join her, Angela gladly accepts and writes Karl that she is sailing Karl receives this note and at the same time news that the Veritania has been torpedoed. Believing his sweetheart drowned, his whole nature changes Angela manages to reach the chateau, which is in the path of the German attack There she encounters Jules, who has lost an arm in the service of his country, and he asks that she permit a spy to act as her butler and communicate with his battery by means of a hidden telephone

The Germans fire on the chateau, killing the spy Karl and some of the younger officers break into the wine cellar and then rush through the chateau hunting for the women Karl sees a girl disappear into a dark room and starts after her, seeking a kiss. He grabs her in the dark, but his arm strikes an electric light button and he discovers his sweetheart

Angela in his arms Angela appeals to him for protection for her women servants, but he informs her that it is impossible to help them, as he is a necessary but a cog in the great Prussian machine

Angela sees some of her servants killed, revolts against the Prussians and telephones the range of the German batteries to the French gunners The German Colonel orders the house searched and Karl catches Angela in the act of telephoning She is brought before the court martial and sentenced to death It is then that Karl realizes he is in the grip of a relentless military system He throws down his sword, renounces his allegiance to the Prussian army and the two are ordered shot Jules hears Angela's screams over the telephone and realizing something must be done, orders the French to concentrate their guns on the chateau

The rules of the firing squad are about to end the lovers into eternity, when the deluge of shells wreck the building and the two manage to crawl across "No Man's Land," between the warring armies, dodging the blinding light of the star shells until they find themselves in a chapel The chapel is blown away and the field of battle is swept over the ruins The next morning Jules finds Angela and Karl at the foot of the crucifix, which is all that has been left standing

Angela is turned over to friends and Karl is sent to a concentration camp Through the efforts of Jules, and in return for Angela's assistance in repulsing the Germans, Karl is granted his freedom and returns to his sweetheart

Theatre in Rural Town Scores Success by Intelligent Printed Talks on Pictures

ON this anniversary of the establishment of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau this story is appropriate in showing that the exhibitors in the smaller cities are reading and benefiting from the articles that appear here. This is only one of the scores of cases in which this SERVICE has been accomplished by personal correspondence in addition to the general matter that appears in these columns.

Early in April, W. D. Martin, manager of the Badger theatre, Neillsville, Wis., sent us some of the specimens of the programs and the printed matter that he was using. They were very bad and we wrote him to that effect without hesitating to say what was wrong. Mr. Martin has the ability to do things and only needed to be shown what to do. The result is that in four months he has progressed from the point where he was wasting money and geting no results to intelligent, effective exploitation.

Neillsville is a town of about 2,500 and located in a dairy community. Because the residents of the section are busy through the day matinees have been found not to pay. Now naturally the Badger theatre must appeal to the patronage of not only the people who live in the town itself, but the surrounding territory. The problem of the Badger theatre therefore was as much of making the theatre an institution as is the Rialto or the Circle of any of the other fine houses of the country.

In announcing recently that we were going to devote more space to the problems of the exhibitors in the towns and the villages we referred to the fact that while these exhibitors could not do things on the same scale that the really big houses in the principal cities follow they can get a great deal out of the accounts of what they were doing, because the same policies can be modified and applied on less expensive scale to smaller theatres and less important communities.

Now let us quote for a second some of the things that we wrote to Mr. Martin about the programs that he sent us: "The whole program is unattractively set up, consisting of a mere mass of type that will never attract attention and which will be thrown away by three-fourths of the people who get it. . . . In its present form it is good for nothing but scrap paper and we are not surprised that it fails to bring you substantial returns." Then we proceeded to tell him what should be done. And then Mr. Martin set to work. He only needed a hint for he knew what to do. But he wasn't afraid to spend a little more money and to get real results. And he is getting them.

We illustrate here two of the program folders which he issued and which he is distributing through the country. One of these consists of four pages, 3¼ by 8 inches. We have reproduced the front and back pages of this. Now these consist in talks about the pictures, covering each day of the week. The following week the Badger had three unusually strong pictures in the same week, "Thais," "The Little American" and "Ruggles of Red Gap." So Mr. Martin issued a four-page folder, 5½ by 8¼, printed on a good stock of white paper, covering the announcement of the three attractions. We have reproduced the first and third pages of this. Each of the pictures is treated similarly, the casts being given and the story of the picture told.

Now this is matter that the recipient will save and read. It is splendid exploitation for a small town or a rural community. Mailed to the people of the section we believe that ninety per cent will read every line of this matter and that a considerable portion of them will then come to the theatre.

Because you have a small house and are located away from a city there is no reason why you should not do things in the right way. Because it costs a few dollars to do things right, many exhibitors cannot see why they should increase expenses, especially if they are already doing poor business. But doing things better pay wherever you are. If you cannot do the thing right, better drop it entirely. Four months ago the Badger was not doing things the right way and the money that was being spent on printed matter was practically wasted. Today it is doing things the right way and with success.

"There's a reason."

ZUKOR SAID IT

JEROME BEATTY, advertising manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has called our attention to the fact that Exhibitor C. A. Lick, of Fort Smith, Ark., made use of Adolph Zukor's recent statement in the Famous Players-Lasky 1918-9 announcement for his dandy ad, "An Essential Wheel in Uncle Sam's Great War Machine," which was reproduced in the August 10th issue of Motion Picture News.

There is value in the tip to exhibitors to study carefully the possibilities of the trade paper advertising pages in preparing their own local material.

Neighborhood Theatre Sends 30-Day Pass to Everyone in the Section Called in Draft

W. A. STEFFES, manager of the Northern theatre, one of the principal neighborhood houses at Minneapolis, is using an idea that is bound to make a hit in any smaller community or in neighborhood theatres in the larger cities. It is simple and inexpensive, but it shows that the theatre is in touch with its patrons and apparently interested in their welfare and enjoyment of life.

It consists in sending a pass good for a month to each person called in the draft from the section of the city to which the theatre appeals, in this case North Minneapolis. The letter, which is reproduced here, begins: "As you are about to leave for a U. S. A. training camp we wish to present to your dependent a complimentary pass good for thirty days at North Minneapolis' leading playhouse, The Northern, 404 Twentieth ave., N."

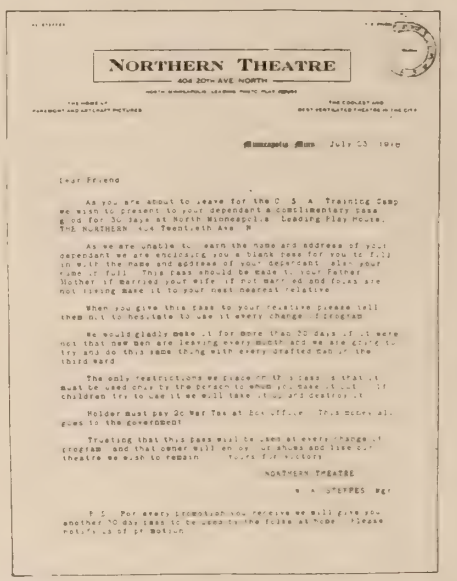
There is also a clever little postscript to this letter saying that for every promotion the recipient received the theatre will give another thirty-day pass to be used by the folks at home, and then adds, "Please notify us of promotion." That one paragraph brings the theatre into close touch with the boys that are going away. And remember that most of these boys are coming back again and the interest that the theatre is taking in them is going to mean future business.



NORTHERN THEATRE

W. A. STEFFES Mgr

P. S. For every promotion you receive we will give you another 30 day pass to be used by the folks at home Please notify us of promotion

Business building letter sent to every draft man in section

No one expects that the reward of a thirty-day pass is really going to make any soldier win the promotion, but it does keep the man in close touch with the theatre, and we feel mighty sure that the Northern will get postcards from the training camps and from the front that will bring lots of news of the successes that the boys of the section are making.

While many theatre managers would like to admit all men in uniform free to their theatres it is a problem that cannot be solved. That is simple in most communities where there are only a few men in uniform at home at any time, but in the larger cities and especially those near training camps it is impractical because the result would be that the theatres would be filled with soldiers and sailors and there would be no revenue to even pay the rent. But Mr. Steffes has gotten around that point, and he has really put over an idea worth while.

Immense Letters Attract Attention to "Heart of the Sunset"

A MOST unique and effective exploitation plan has just been used by Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto theatre, Butte, Mont., in exploiting Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset." It consisted merely by placing three-foot Compo board letters spelling the words, "See the Texas Rangers in Action in Rex Beach's 'Heart of the Sunset' at the Rialto" The accompanying photograph shows how the letters looked "in action."

Between the windows of the third and fourth floors was the first half of the sentence in red letters and between the second and third was the title of the picture in blue letters. Of course these stood out so that every one noticed them, and though it was unusually simple the scheme attracted great attention. The combination of colors—blue and red letters against the white background of the building—brought out the pleasing and timely effect of the Red, White and Blue.

Over the marquee at the Part Street entrance to the theatre was a cut-out from a 24-sheet, showing the heroine of the play with her horse. This display was in vivid yellow and its novelty attracted wide attention. During the period in which the picture was run the pavement directly in front of the Rialto was undergoing repairs, and Mr. Ruffner again proved his originality and showmanship by placing a large sign on a pile of bricks and rubbish. The sign carried the warning and the invitation: "No Man's Land—Seek safety in the Rialto—the Texas Rangers will protect you."

"When I have faith in a picture, I don't hesitate to spend real money to advertise it properly and place it before my public." Mr. Ruffner said. "I know positively that Rex Beach productions have no equal as drawing cards, and this was proved beyond all question in 'Heart of the Sunset.' We had to use the S. R. O. sign daily during the four-day run, and the very fact that Rex Beach's name appeared on display signs was enough to attract the crowds to my theatre."

tua. It is one of Verdi's masterpieces, not only in its dramatic characterization, but in its consistent musical developments.

Then follow pictures of Mexico under the title, "In the Silver Country." These are released by Educational Films Corporation.

Scene in prologue arranged by Miss Flossie Jones in putting on "Toys of Fate" with Nazimova

Atmosphere Achieved by Woman Exhibitor Who Uses Local Talent in Her Prologues

ATMOSPHERE is the thing to get in the theatre. It doesn't matter whether you have the biggest house on Broadway or the only theatre in a town of 800. It is the biggest selling power that you have.

This is a story of the way that Miss Flossie A. Jones put over "Toys of Fate" in a little city of less than 10,000 people. The answer to all of your questions is this: She thought.

The gypsy atmosphere of the picture was carried out in the prologue that she arranged. The setting showed a typical camp scene, with the trees in the background and the group of characters gathered around. Those who took part in the prologue were largely amateurs. That means something more than getting the people cheap.

Recently an exhibitor in Chicago wrote us, asking for some suggestions in putting on a certain war picture. He runs a neighborhood house with a wide community appeal. We suggested to him a trench scene, and that he use in this a couple of dozen Boy Scouts. He wrote back to us and said that he could get a detail of six soldiers. In return are answered that the Boy Scouts would be the best. Why? Of course, the audience would see that these boys of from fourteen to sixteen were not the real soldiers, but they would get the same spirit of democracy with them.

For a big first-run house down in the centre part of the city we would not consider this good business. But in a neighborhood or a small city theatre, you have the local interest to consider. You have these "actors" that the people know. You have these people and their friends going about and talking about the theatre. Any reader of this department knows how strong we are in advocating the use of newspapers, but we have told you time after time that if you can get the right sort of "word of mouth" advertising it is the most valuable of all. Use of local people will bring this most desirable asset.

If we had a theatre in a city of less than 50,000 people we would encourage the use of local actors within their sphere. We do not mean that when we wanted to put on some big effect we would use some local person that we knew would not get quite up to the mark, but we would bring them in where we knew that they could get away with it.

But back to the presentation of "Toys of Fate." The gypsy camp scene was shown with the lights down and the camp fire burning to the dreamy Romany music. There were a couple of basket weavers shown and a group of the most ragged urchins that could be found in the community. The curtain went up with the orchestra playing soft and low, and a girl singing a gypsy love song, with her lover answering in the chorus. Then they repeated the chorus together. Following this the princess did the "Gypsy Fire Dance," and at the finish of this the gypsy seeress recited to the band:

"You are all but Toys of Fate.

"Happy in your ignorance of life, being content to drift from place to place."

Then stepping forward and taking the princess by the hand, she foretold her future in these words:

"But you, Azah, gypsy princess, will be brought in contact with civilization.

"Misery will take possession of your soul.

"You will suffer.

"Then comfort with its healing powers will revive and refresh you.

"Then love will gladden you and happiness will be yours forever after."

This scene then faded into the picture itself.

It was most effective. It was comparatively simple. But it was unusual because Miss Jones does the unusual things at her theatres. Why don't you?

Representatives of Smaller Cities Appear on the Advisory Board

WEEK after week we are showing you that we meant business when we were going to see that the smaller cities were well represented on our Advisory Board. We have proceeded slowly, but wisely.

The new members who appear this week are W. S. McLaren, manager of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, Mich., a city of 34,097, and A. H. Hilton, manager of the Paramount theatre, Lewiston, Idaho, a city of 6,043. We know what some of these men have done in the past and we are mighty sure of the real service they can give on behalf of their fellow exhibitors.

Mr. McLaren writes: "I assure you that I will be glad to be associated with your fine publication in doing what I can for my fellow exhibitors. I feel highly complimented that you have felt that I was the proper man for the place and assure you that at all times I will endeavor to give you the best that I have."

Mr. Hilton has this to say in his acceptance: "I take great pleasure in accepting your offer to become a member of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau and assure that I will do all in my power at all times to help the good cause along.

"I have been reading the articles written by other members and can realize that not only the exhibitors but the entire industry can derive a great benefit from the Service Bureau."

"The Great Love" Scores Hit

Runs Week to Excellent Houses at Strand on Broadway—Exhibitors Promised Unusual Feature in Griffith's Picture

D. W. GRIFFITH'S special Artcraft picture, "The Great Love," broke records at the Strand theatre, New York City, and turn away business was the rule since the opening of this film August 11th, at which time a line of patrons formed in front of the theatre a half hour before the show started. The drawing power of Griffith and the merits of the Artcraft picture have been considerably enhanced by an advertising and publicity campaign by the Strand theatre in co-operation with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

As guests of Manager Harold Edel, a large number of representatives of the various British war missions now in this country, together with officials of the British, Canadian and American recruiting and relief organizations and many prominent individuals, were present on Monday evening at a performance given in their honor.

Among those who attended were representatives of the British Consulate in New York, British and Canadian Recruiting Mission, Y. M. C. A., Nurses' Concentration Association, British-American War Relief, British War Mission, British War Relief, National Security League, American Red Cross, National Allied War Relief, French Heroes Fund, Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense and Stage Women's War Relief.

An audience which packed the theatre to the doors applauded the picture from main title announcement to the final fade-out, while outside would-be spectators stood in line throughout the first performance of the evening, many of them standing in vain, for it was impossible to accommodate all who wished to see the latest Griffith production. Especially pleased with the picture were the invited guests, for whom the boxes had been reserved, and who gave much evidence of their pleasure.

Among those present on this occasion were Hon. C. Clive Bayley, H. B. M. Consul-General, and party; Brig.-Gen. W. A. White, C. B., G. M. G., British and Canadian Recruiting Mission, and party; Major Norman G. Thwaites, M. C., O. B. E., and party; Col. Sir William Wiseman, Bart., C. B., and party; Sir Henry Babington Smith, K. C. B., and party; Commander T. N. Blackwood, R. N., and party; Percy S. Bullen, S. J. Clark, W. W. Davies, Sir John Fraser, J. W. Harding, J. Walter Williams, W. W. Hawkins, Warren Mason, Norman MacCallum, P. Whitwell Wilson, W. G. Bullock, Levy Lawson, Frank Dilnot, F. T. Circhall, Charles M. Lincoln, Frank Munsey, Fred J. Wilson, J. J. Ohl, Roy Martin, Arthur M. Howe and Frank Simonds.

The Strand theatre staff, although considerably augmented in anticipation of big business, was taxed to its utmost in handling the daily crowds that flooded the neighborhood of the theatre.

Mr. Edel, on Monday following the opening, wired to D. W. Griffith his congratulations as follows: "At opening of 'The Great Love' yesterday, line formed at 11 a. m., and there was continuous turn away all day. 'The Great Love' eclipsed all former Strand records for attendance, thereby showing to more people in one day than any theatre in the world. Artcraft extended every aid and co-operation. Congratulations to you and your players."

Exhibitors Use Records with Pershing Film

Many exhibitors have been quick to take advantage, it is said, of the opportunity afforded them by the Columbia Graphophone Company, which is announcing the production of a record containing "Pershing's Own Voice from the Battlefields," and "Ambassador Gerard's Address on Loyalty."

When showing "Pershing's Crusaders" or "My Four Years in Germany," many First National exhibitors have been quick to take advantage of the opportunity presented to install a phonograph on the stage or in the lobby to run this timely record.

In many of the towns the newspaper publicity received for this innovation has amply repaid the exhibitors for the small extra expense involved.

Second Calvert Feature Now Showing

With the release of "Out of the Night," which was shown to the public for the first time during the week of August 11, the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation has presented to the public its second feature photoplay with Catherine Calvert as star. Reports from exhibitors are to the effect that the two pictures have taken a very strong hold on public favor, and rosy predictions are made for the future of the Keeney enterprise. All of the pictures thus far made by this concern have been under the direction of James Kirkwood. All are being distributed through the William L. Sherry Service.

For a week or more Bennet Musson, Mr. Keeney's scenario editor, and Larry Williams photographer, have been busy cutting and titling the next Keeney release, "Marriage," by Guy Bolton.

Allison-Metro Nears Completion

"The Testing of Mildred Vane," May Allison's forthcoming picture, following "The Return of Mary" and "The Successful Adventure," is nearing completion at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, with Wilfred Lucas directing.

The star has the only feminine role of consequence in the production. Darrell Foss is her leading man, and others in the cast are George Field, as the physician with the withered hand; Fred Goodwins, as a snob, and Nigel De Brullier.

Metro Plays Big Part in Parade

Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood were represented prominently in the great victory parade held in Los Angeles on Wednesday evening, July 31st, under the auspices of the Motion Picture War Service Association. The procession, held at night by torchlight, was perhaps the most pretentious ever staged in the City of the Angels.

Anna Q. Nilsson, who was leading woman to Bert Lytell, young Metro star, in two of his recent pictures, "The Trail to Yesterday" and "No Man's Land," impersonated Liberty, receiving the sword of Cuba, impersonated by Ilean Hume, to be unsheathed in the great cause of democracy. A hundred miniature electric lights, operated by storage batteries, illuminated the float.

The parade was in celebration of American and Allied successes on the battlefields in France. The Metro float was designed and built by the technical department at the studios under the supervision of Ralph C. Godfrey.

August 26 Brings Blue Ribbon Winner

"The Clutch of Circumstance," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature announced for release the week of August 26, presents Corinne Griffith in what is said to be one of her strongest and most appealing roles—that of a girl-wife who makes supreme sacrifices and wins fame for the sake of a crippled husband who, saturated in Puritan intolerance, spurns her because of the bigoted belief that no woman can succeed alone in life's battle and remain good.

Miss Griffith is supported by Florence Deshon, David Harblin, Robert Gaillard, Denton Vane and Esta Banks. The author is Leighton Graves Osmun, and the picture was produced in Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. Henry Houry, who directed Miss Griffith in "Love Watches," also directed her in this.

Vitagraph Proves Its Efficiency

Plans for New Blue Ribbon Booking Policy Mapped Out Well in Advance—Contracts Assure Its Success

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, revealed last week that the announcement of the new Blue Ribbon feature booking policy was preceded by several weeks of preparation during which the entire sales organization of the company was thoroughly instructed on all angles of the plan. The result was that on August 10, the date set for simultaneous publication of the plan, the salesmen in the twenty-seven branch offices of the organization were turned loose and in forty-eight hours had returned far more than enough contracts to insure the success of the newly devised plan, which is unique for its fairness, reliability and elasticity.

Mr. Irwin states that the response of exhibitors to the new Vitagraph plan has been extremely gratifying, and the home office and the branch offices already are beginning to receive letters of commendation on the extreme equity of it. One of these letters, addressed to Mr. Irwin by J. H. Hitchins, manager of the Frostburg, Md., Opera House, read in part:

"Your announcement of a new era in Vitagraph Service, in MOTION PICTURE NEWS reads good. Some of our motion picture producers are introducing business methods and "conscience" in booking contracts that is positively unknown with the great majority of exchanges. Many of the branch representatives are men who would put the average mercantile house on the bum in ninety days. A man ought to have the same standard of honor in selling pictures as the salesman representing a responsible wholesale mercantile firm, visiting his merchant trade every little while, where his word must be as good as his bond and his goods reliable beyond question."

The new Vitagraph plan, as laid out in the official announcement published in the trade papers last week, definitely fixes the release date of each production of each star during the entire fifty-two weeks beginning September 30, 1918, with six stars rotating on the program, at exactly six weeks intervals. Thus the exhibitor not only knows the star, pictures and the dates upon which he will receive them, as far ahead as September, 1919, but he also knows that he will receive a picture of each star at exactly six weeks intervals.

As outlined, there will be eight Earle Williams productions, eight Alice Joyce features, nine Bessie Love pictures, nine Harry T. Morey productions, nine Corinne Griffith productions and nine Gladys Leslie productions.

As outlined by Mr. Irwin, these stars may be booked by exhibitors on the basis which best suits their business, provision having been made for booking on the rotating star plan for fifty-two weeks; on the single star series plan whereby a particular star's plays may be contracted for; on a star combination arrangement permitting the booking of two or more stars, or, in case of an emergency for the accommodation of an exhibitor, the booking of a single picture of a star series.

Jewel Handles Laemmle Film

"Crashing Through to Berlin" Opens to Large Audiences at Broadway Theatre in New York—History of the War

THE pulling power of a film and the enthusiasm of a crowd caused a quick deal by Jewel Productions, Inc., when it secured "Crashing Through to Berlin" immediately after the first showing of that photoplay.

Unheralded and almost unannounced except for brief notices that appeared a few hours ahead in the daily press, "Crashing Through to Berlin" made a crash with its debut August 11 at the Broadway theatre, New York. The film attracted an attendance that packed the theatre.

There were said to be about 1,000 persons in the disappointed crowd that swarmed outside for admittance, when Manager Kashin was compelled to stop the sale of tickets.

The officers of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, the Department of the East, and members of the Committee on Public Information, who were invited guests at the opening, joined in the indorsement of that first night crowd.

Another demonstration of favor came the next morning when the critics of all the newspapers voiced unstinted praise. They had seen an audience go wild, and they testified their belief that "Crashing Through to Berlin" was worth the acclaim it had received.

The photoplay was produced by Carl Laemmle. Its scenes were compiled and arranged by Jack Cohn. It is a historical document, a fact narrative of the world war. The film reviews recent history from the very beginning of humanity's tragedy to the very present. It depicts in actuality the real flesh and blood characters and high-light events of the last four years with vivid detail.

Aside from the thrills, its scenes provide, "Crashing Through to Berlin" has a big appeal as a refresher of one's memory.

Those who have forgotten facts and dates and events of the war, and who are confused by the crowded recollections of four years, will have their minds cleared by this photoplay. History is made to repeat itself. One sees all the misty happenings of the past enacted over again in all their truth and horror.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" picks up the war narrative with the burial of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and his consort. This scene was vital prelude, the pretext, the spark that set the world ablaze. Here the film reveals the huge coffins, the white robed priests and the enactment of the ritual for the dead that four years ago distilled death for future millions.

Jewel Productions is working overtime turning out a supply of prints to meet the demand it is certain will be made for "Crashing Through to Berlin." Patriotic societies have already announced their intention to co-operate with Jewel in bringing about a wide circulation of the film.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Invites New Ideas

WHILE several novel ideas have been used by various exchange managers in the intensive booking campaign inaugurated for "Pershing's Crusaders," it remained for Douglas Hawley, new manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit at Dallas, Tex., and former news editor of the Times-Herald there, to introduce still another rather unusual and effective plan to secure bookings and at the same time bring the exhibitor and the local newspapers into closer co-operation.

When Mr. Hawley sent quotation cards on "Pershing's Crusaders" to the theatres in Texas and Arkansas he also sent a strong circular letter to the editors of 150 selected newspapers, with an advance story enclosed on the United States Government's first official war feature. In the letter to the editors Mr. Hawley urged that they call upon the local exhibitor as a patriotic duty and request the exhibitor to book "Pershing's Crusaders," with the assured co-operation of their respective newspapers.

Portland, Ore., is another of the large cities in which the local newspapers have given columns of publicity to the big picture, and as a result it has been held over at the Heilig theatre for an additional week.

In Denver, "Pershing's Crusaders" was shown twice daily at the Broadway theatre under the auspices of the Civic and Commercial Association. The band from Fort Logan played at the opening performance and recruiting officers were on hand at all times.

W. H. Releases Second Barriscale

W. H. Productions Company announce that they are now ready to release the second of the Bessie Barriscale super-features, which is entitled "The Straight Road," formerly entitled "The Painted Soul," which features Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray. The first of this series of five features, "Satan's Pawn," adapted from the famous French play, "The Devil," was released several weeks ago. There are several territories still open on this production, and from the results achieved on this feature, the second of the series, "The Straight Road," is destined to go over with even greater success.

W. H. Productions Company have also prepared for distribution among the exhibitors by the exchange, a press sheet on this production, covering the various advertising aids furnished for this feature, viz., one, three and six sheet posters, a lobby display of ten 8x10 and six 11x14 sepia brown photos, title cards, press stories, single and double column half-tone and line cut advertisements for use in local newspapers, etc.

Blackton Children in "The Common Cause"

The two youngest but by no means least important stars in the all-star cast which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is directing in his production of "The Common Cause," are the producer's small children, Violet, who is eight years old, and Charles Stuart, "going on five." As two little French refugees, their work in this superfeature which Commodore Blackton is producing under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, to be released through the Vitagraph distributing organization promises to be one of the surprises of the production.

Claire Anderson with Wellington Cross

Wellington Cross, favorably known as a vaudeville headliner, and also for good work in various musical reviews, has forsaken the glare of the footlights for the silent drama and will make his initial appearance in screen work under the Triangle trade-mark. His first picture will be "A Gray Parasol," in which he will be jointly featured with Claire Anderson, another Triangle player. The directing will be in charge of Lawrence Window, and the story is by Fred Jackson, a New York playwright of reputation.

De Luxe Sets Release of New Film

With favorable reports coming in from "The Street of Seven Stars," the first of the releases of Doris Kenyon, at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Theodore C. Deitrich, president of the company, has arranged for the release of its second production, "The Inn of the Blue Moon,'" on August 18. Both pictures are by American authors.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton Is Making Excellent Progress on "The Common Cause," a Propaganda Special, Which has Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer in the Star Roles. Commodore Blackton Is Shown in the Centre

Will Rogers Story Makes Good Progress

Work is progressing rapidly at Goldwyn's Fort Lee Studios and at various nearby locations on "Laughing Bill Hyde," Rex Beach's story of "the men who licked Fate,'" which Mr. Beach and Willard Mack are making into a motion picture for release under the Goldwyn star series plan. With good weather the production should be completed in another ten days or two weeks.

Will Rogers, famous lariat-throwing wit of the "Follies,'" who has the name role in the picture, is ready to admit that all is not movie gold that glitters. For nearly two weeks he has labored like a Hercules, working days in the picture and nights at the New Amsterdam theatre. Two whole days he spent climbing up and down the Palisades, most of the time carrying in his arms the inert figure of an actor representing his penitentiary pal, with whom he had escaped some hours before.

Later Rogers was called upon to jump to Boonton, N. J., for work on location. There he had his first chance to make love for the camera; and to say that he did it well would be gilding the lily. Any man with four years' experience in the "Follies" to his credit admittedly is a past master at the art. Anna Lehr has the role opposite him, that of an Alaskan Indian girl, in the picture.

"Oh, Annice" Bought for Viola Dana

Viola Dana is promised another charming role in "Oh, Annice," soon to be produced from the Woman's Home Companion serial of the same name. Director John H. Collins is now working on the screen adaptation of the story, which will be made under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, manager of productions for Metro.

"Oh, Annice," finds the star in the role of a little girl in a country town whose chief sorrow is that many young men go through the town in automobiles, but none ever stop. She uses force to make one stop and there the story begins.

Hodkinson Completes Program

Promises Any Type of Star and Picture with Rental Based on Location Instead of on Census Population

WITH the addition of the Lillian Walker Productions to its program, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation believes it can supply any type of star and picture, thereby offering the exhibitor several series of pictures possessing individuality.

Lillian Walker brings to Hodkinson Service a series of "happy" pictures, the first of which, "The Embarrassment of Riches," by Louis K. Anspacher, is a comedy drama of New York life, in which Miss Walker starts life as a child of the tenements and rises to a high social position, only to find it is not the exalted region she believed it to be.

J. Warren Kerrigan, so far the only male star on the Hodkinson program, will be presented by Jesse D. Hampton in stories of romance and adventure, such as his current release, "Burglar for a Night," which has been well received by both critics and public. "Prisoners of the Pines," the Kerrigan-Hampton release for September, is a story of the Wisconsin-Canadian woods adapted from Kenneth B. Clarke's story, "The Swamper," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post two years ago.

Louise Glaum, believing war time unpropitious for tragedy, has wrapped his cruel, wicked, calculating temptresses up in their scarlet gowns and put them away. Her future Paralta-Hodkinson plays will be strong dramas providing her with sympathetic roles, such as "A Law Unto Herself,'" a story of France and Miss Glaum's best effort.

Bessie Barriscale adds spice and piquancy to her appearances in being, one moment, a comedienne and the next an emotional actress. However, her future Paralta plays are to be mostly intense dramas. "The White Lie" is such a picture, telling the story of a woman who lied to bring happiness to her husband and then almost lost his love because of her deed.

The new brand of Plaza pictures present Anita King in outdoor stories of love and adventure. As a suffragette in "Petticoats and Politics," her first Plaza-Hodkinson release, she keeps not only herself, but a whole town, in action.

Kathleen Clifford gives a child delineation in "Angel Child" that is as novel as it is refreshing. Miss Clifford is also a Plaza star.

The Douglass Natural Color pictures fill out the Hodkinson Service program with scenic pictures in nature's own colors. "Cupid Angling,'" which has already enjoyed hearty ovations given it on the Pacific Coast, where it was given pre-release showings, combines story and scenery. Ruth Roland is the star.

The schedule of prices instituted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for its product is believed to be a new one, based, as it is, on the tested and proven box office value of each star in each and every section of the country, instead of on census population.

It is the belief of Mr. W. W. Hodkinson that this way of scheduling the price of stars is the only fair and equitable one for not only the exhibitor, but the producer as well.

Hampton Names First Kerrigan Film

The first Jesse D. Hampton picture starring J. Warren Kerrigan has been titled, "Prisoners of the Pines," so called because it is a story of the workers in the lumber camps of the north, so far away from civilization as to be literally prisoners of the trees from which they earn their living.

"Prisoners of the Pines" is a picturization of "The Swamper," a Kenneth B. Clarke story published in the Saturday Evening Post two years ago. It will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

William Farnum, In "Les Miserables," Seems Destined to Place That Fox Production In the Hall of Fame. On the Right Is Jewel Carmen, In "Lawless Love," Adapted From "Above the Law"

Fox's Big Six Smash Through

Favorite Films Including Bara and Farnum as Stars "Carry On" in Fine Shape—Exhibitors Pleased

THE William Fox Big Six of 1918, which started as one of the sensations of the summer season, continue to prove bonanzas for the exhibitors who booked them, it is shown by telegrams from exhibitors all over the country received by the Fox Film Corporation. In practically every case where theatres took the Big Six—"A Fool There Was," "The Two Orphans," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Bondman," "A Soldier's Oath" and "The Plunderer"—capacity business was the rule.

W. A. McCarthy, manager of the Princess theatre, Oil City, Pa., has telegraphed to the Fox Film Corporation the following: "Have just finished playing 'A Fool There Was' and 'The Bondman' at advanced prices to the biggest business of any week so far this summer. The public remember the good ones." John Hemrick, the Little theatre, Seattle, Wash., declared: "Played 'A Fool There Was' to capacity business—this in spite of extremely hot weather and unusually keen competition." From George Zepper, Rex theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., came this wire: "I ran William Farnum in 'The Bondman' and it certainly did pull like the name—big." Martin R. Toohey, manager of the Emery theatre, one of the principal motion picture theatres in Providence, R. I., stated: "On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week I played Theda Bara in 'A Fool There Was' to sell-out business. I also just signed first run for Providence 'Cleopatra' and 'Les Miserables.'"

"The biggest three days' business we have had in eight weeks," is the report of W. Ledonx, president of the Empress Theatre Company of Omaha, Neb., on the showing of Theda Bara in "A Fool There Was." C. E. Rogers, manager of the Crumps theatre, Columbus, Ind., telegraphed that his theatre played "A Fool There Was" to capacity audiences, resulting in big business. "Big Six production, 'A Fool There Was' opened to satisfactory business Sunday," was the report of the Royal theatre, Des Moines, Ia. Stanley Chambers, manager of the Princess theatre, Wichita, Kan., telegraphs: "'A Fool There Was' and 'A Soldier's Oath' played to capacity all week. Big winners." F. J. Meyer, manager of the Grand Opera House, West Chester, Pa., wired that "the Big Six are the best hot weather tonic I have had in my house this summer, both for business and satisfied patrons."

Director Claims New Record in Expensive "Shooting"

Wallace Worsley, who directed "A Law Unto Herself," the latest Louise Glaum Paralta play, is authority for the statement that he has filmed in this picture the costliest dissolve yet made in film history. The making of the five feet of film, which flash by in five seconds on the screen, cost approximately two thousand dollars. Needless to say it is also the highest priced five-foot strip of film on the market.

This cost was necessitated by the fact that a huge cannon, an exact reproduction of the Krupp 42-centimeter which was so popular with the Hun at the beginning of the war, was called for in this dissolve. It had to be taken from the studio to a location in a vineyard in the town of Sierra Madre. Here a cement foundation had been prepared for it. The dissolve shows one of the characters of the story gazing at the foundation before the gun is upon it, and before him appears the vision of the gun which is to be placed there in later years.

The camera was set first to take the empty foundation, and then it was left rigidly in place, with the cameraman standing guard over it to see that no one moved it, for two hours and a half, while the heavy gun was brought up in trucks and mounted on the emplacement. Then came the other part of the dissolve showing the monster cannon being fired.

Complete Many New Triangles

Finishing touches are being put to a number of productions at the Triangle Culver City studios. The roster includes attractions starring Gloria Swanson, Jacke Abbe, Jack Richardson and Pauline Strake.

Miss Swanson will be seen in "The Secret Code," with Barney Sherry, Rhy Alexander, Dorothy Wallace, Joe King, Leslie Stewart, Lee Phelps and little Irene Yeager. Albert Parker is directing.

"The Spirit of Adventure" is the coming Jack Abbe vehicle. E. Mason Hopper is producing. The support includes Clara Morris, Martha Taka, Larry Steers, W. H. Bainbridge, Liu Chung, M. Seki and others.

Jack Conway is directing the Jack Richardson feature, "Mountain Law." Leotta Lorraine, Ray Hanford, Leo Pierson, George Pearce, Albert Whitman, Bert Appling, James Farley, Phil Gastrock, Curly Baldwin and Joe Singleton complete the cast.

Pauline Starke is working under the direction of William Dowlan. She will be seen in "The Atom." Miss Starke will be jointly featured in this production with Harry Mestayer, who has just finished working in "High Tide," under Director Hamilton.

Theda Bara Finishes "The She-Devil"

A telegram received by the Fox Film Corporation from the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., states that Theda Bara has completed photographing "The She-Devil," a super-production which tells the story of a beautiful woman without a conscience.

"The She-Devil" was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, this being the twenty-eighth picture which Mr. Edwards has made for William Fox.

In "The She-Devil" Miss Bara portrays the role of a Spanish girl, who is the reigning belle of the mountain town where she lives.

Tom Moore Begins New Goldwyn Film

With "Just for Tonight," his first Goldwyn starring subject, being shown at Goldwyn branches throughout the country, Tom Moore is at work in the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee on his second production as a star. It is "Thirty a Week," from the stage play by Thompson Buchanan, and is said to give Mr. Moore a role even more suitable than that afforded by his first production.

"Thirty a Week" is being directed by Harry Beaumont, engaged especially by Goldwyn to supervise the Tom Moore productions. His successful direction of the "Skinner" pictures—"Skinner's Dress Suit," "Skinner's Baby" and others, in which Bryant Washburn was starred, makes him especially well fitted to handle Tom Moore. He and the star are in accord in believing that "Thirty a Week" will be a whirlwind of adventure and fun.

The supporting cast of "Thirty a Week" and other details of the production have not yet been announced. Goldwyn promises a surprise in the announcement of the name of Mr. Moore's leading woman.

Zukor to Aid U. S. on Billboards

Following the recent announcement of the elaborate Famous Players-Lasky billboard campaign throughout the country, correspondence between Government officials and Adolph Zukor has resulten in the latter pledging space on the billboards and other aid to the work of the Department of Labor.

David K. Niles, of the Department of Labor, requested space on the twenty-four sheets of the film company to carry the message of that department to the public, but in his reply Mr. Zukor not only volunteers this space, but also opens up an interesting field in offering co-operation to distribute one sheets and other posters in theatre lobbies throughout the country. The full resources of the Famous Players-Lasky Company are put at the department's disposal.

Farnum Begins on "Man of Power"

William Farnum has just begun work on a new play at the William Fox studios at Hollywood, according to a wire received by the Fox Film Corporation this week. The play is titled "Man of Power." It was written by Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director, and the production, of course, will be directed by Mr. Lloyd. The play is said to be one of exceptionally strong situations.

Mr. Farnum's tremendous industry is shown by the fact that he rested less than a week following the filming of "The Rainbow Trail," before beginning work on "Man of Power." "The Rainbow Trail" has been put together and shipped East to the Fox home office. Both "The Rainbow Trail" and "Man of Power" will be Standard pictures.

U. B. O. Takes It for Vaudeville Theatres of the Circuit—Was Shown First at Rivoli on Broadway

THE American Red Cross film called "The Fourth of July in Paris" has been assured an immediate countrywide showing in the vaudeville houses of the larger cities, it was announced this week by General Film, which is handling the distribution of the subject for the American Red Cross.

The announcement carries the news that, due to the interest of E. F. Albee and John Murdock, of the United Booking Offices, in all that appertains to the Red Cross, the vaudeville theatres which draw their bills through this booking organization will show the Red Cross film as part of the program.

In co-operation with General Film, Albee and Murdock have closed a broadcast booking. This means a time of 2,000 days or so, it is said.

A pre-release showing of one week at Rivoli in New York demonstrated that the subject, which shows our boys and Red Cross nurses marching in the Fourth of July parade in Paris, is a suitable picture for any theatre. It reflects much credit upon the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, which secured and brought over the film.

The U. B. O. engagement of "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris" means that the film will be programmed in the larger vaudeville theatres in the country, besides about 400 smaller houses. Perhaps 2,000 days of exhibition is thus assured the picture. Some of the houses included are the Keith, Proctor, Poli, Orpheum, Interstate, Tri-State, Wells and Western and Southwestern circuit houses. Keith houses Greenpoint; Orpheum, Brooklyn; Keith's, Cincinnati; Keith's Hippodrome, Cleveland; Keith's at Columbus, Dayton, Indianapolis, Jersey City; the Mary Anderson and the National at Louisville; Keith's at Lowell, Mass.; the Alhambra, Colonial, Harlem Opera House, Palace, Riverside and Royal in New York City; the Scenic at Pawtucket; Keith's at Philadelphia, Portland, Me.; Providence and Toledo; the Hudson at Union Hill, N. J.; Keith's at Washington and the Bijou at Woonsocket, R. I. The Proctor houses include the Fifth Avenue, the Twenty-third Street, the Fifty-eighth Street and the 125th Street in New York City, and the Proctor theatres in Albany, Elizabeth, Mt. Vernon, Newark, Schenectady, Troy and Yonkers.

The following big independent houses, that book through U. B. O. are also concerned: The Maryland at Baltimore; Shea's at Buffalo; Temple, Detroit; Colonial, Erie; Empress, Grand Rapids; Lyric, Hamilton, Ont.; the Davis, Pittsburgh; Temple, Rochester; Shea's, Toronto; Garrick, Wilmington; Hippodrome, Youngstown.

Southern houses represented in the booking through the U. B. O. include the Lyric, Augusta; Lyric, Birmingham; Rialto, Chattanooga; Academy of Music, Charleston; Arcade, Jacksonville; Bijou, Knoxville; the Trenton, Lynchburg; Grand, Montgomery; Grand, Macon; Palace, New Orleans; Princess, Nashville; Lyric, Richmond; Academy of Music, Norfolk, and the Bijou, Savannah.

Laemmle Shows New War Film

"Crashing Through to Berlin" Is Among First Animated Pictorial Histories of Conflict—Invited Guests at Initial Presentation

KARL LAEMMLE'S new Universal production, "Crashing Through to Berlin," which is declared in an announcement from Universal to be the first animated pictorial history of the world war, was shown for the first time at the Broadway theatre in New York on August 11. The picture, in seven reels, shows the causes of the war and the principal historic events from the beginning of the conflict to the cyclonic Allied attacks which forced the Germans to retreat to the Marne.

To this formal opening the officers of the Brooklyn Navy Yard and the Department of the East at Governor's Island, as well as the members of the Committee on Public Information, were personally invited by Carl Laemmle, to whom "Crashing Through to Berlin" stands in the light of a personal contribution to honor America's part in the great conflict.

Starting with the events in 1914, "Crashing Through to Berlin" shows the funeral of the Archduke, Francis Ferdinand, and his consort, murdered in Serajevo. This film shows the entrance of every one of the Allies, first Russia, then France, then England, then Italy and finally the United States, in the Allied determination to make the world for all time safe for democracy; the preparation of every one of these nations for its tremendous task, the frantic opposition to the Boche war machine as it rumbled through Belgium, the successful opposition of Marshal Joffre at the first battle of the Marne, Italy's wonderful Alpine warfare, the Allied campaigns in Egypt, Mesopotamia and Palestine, the frightful submarine warfare, unspeakable German atrocities in Belgium and Northern France. All of the outstanding features of the terrible conflict are graphically depicted in "Crashing Through to Berlin" until we come to the culminating scenes of triumph at Cantigny and Chateau Thierry and the promise through the huge airplane production of this country of final victory over the beast of Berlin.

In view of the fact that almost every scene which it contained came within the province of the Committee on Public Information to review, Carl Laemmle ordered the print of "Crashing Through to Berlin" to be shown to that committee at the earliest opportunity. The committee viewed the subject and passed it for presentation, with the elimination of a few scenes which it has been its practice to eliminate from every film for public exhibition.

Famous Players Reports New Contracts

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY declared in an announcement this week that never since the inception of that organization has the sales department seen such activity as is at present being evidenced in connection with the handling of the new year's bookings. It is reported that contracts are coming in every day requesting 100 per cent service. These, it is said, come from exhibitors, large and small, throughout the country. Despite many additions to the home office staff, the sales and booking departments are said to be working day and night in an endeavor to keep up with the flood of contracts.

It is said that many expressions of appreciation in connection with the merit and drawing power of the Famous Players-Lasky product have been received from exhibitors who have closed for all Paramount and Artcraft pictures for the season of 1918-19, beginning September 1.

Among the most recent theatres listed in the Famous Players-Lasky announcement are: Hippodrome, in Philadelphia, Pa.; Grand, Chester, Pa.; Majestic, Grand Island, Neb.; Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa.; Grand, Vineland, N. Goldwyn Inspires Exhibitor to Enlist

In an announcement this week Goldwyn stated there are two opportunities for engaging "For the Freedom of the World." The first is to write any exchange of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. The second is to roll up your sleeves and tell Uncle Sam you're ready to enlist "for the freedom of the world."

Mac Scoffield, owner of the Film theatre, Vollmer, Idaho, wanted "For the Freedom of the World" for his theatre, so he booked it. He looked it over and was so impressed that he decided to join the army of freedom.

Mr. Scoffield notified the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation of his decision. Here's how the notification read: "I am sorry that I will not be able to use 'For the Freedom of the World,' as I am going to be engaged in a little battle 'for the freedom of the world' myself. I am now in the army and leave shortly for training camp."

Mr. Scoffield personally told a Goldwyn representative that he had advised his successor to play "For the Freedom of the World" at the Film theatre.

General Names New O. Henry Releases

As a fitting celebration of the fifty-fifth anniversary of O. Henry's birthday in September, General Film will release two of this author's most intensely amusing satires upon human nature. The subjects are "Transients in Arcadia" and "Tobin's Palm." Both stories have a New York atmosphere. The former is located in a fine, dignified old downtown hotel, believed by O. Henry experts to have been the Astor House. The other story, "Tobin's Palm," has its setting partly at Coney Island and partly in the Chelsea and Greenwich Village sections of the city.

These two-part releases, "Transients in Arcadia" September 14, and "Tobin's Palm" September 28, are expected to be worthy successors to the recent O. Henry bookings at the Rivoli, New York. They alternate as Broadway Star Feature releases with the Wolfville Tales, by Alfred Henry Lewis. The first of these for September is "The Wooing of Riley," with Kate Price and Otto Lederer in the leading parts, it being a comedy with, as usual, a touch of drama.

Gerard Film Scores in Australia

It was declared by First National Exhibitors' Circuit in an announcement this week that James W. Gerard's picture, "My Four Years in Germany," is creating unusual interest in Australia, and the eight prints now there are said to have already established a record for that territory. First National announced that this statement had been substantiated by Millard Johnson, American representative in New York of Australasian Films, Ltd.

"The showing of 'My Four Years in Germany' will cement the bonds of friendship between America and Australia by permitting America and its enormous resources and forceful spirit to be shown to our people on the screen," Mr. Johnson also stated, according to First National.

Goldwyn Ships Its Star Series

Farrar, Normand and Moore Productions Being Exhibited to the Trade Throughout Country —Exploitation Conferences Hold Sway

How She Can Stare! But Such a Magnetic Look of Surprise. Yes, It's Madge Kennedy In Goldwyn's "Friend Husband"

EXHIBITORS in all sections of the United States are this week seeing Goldwyn's first star series releases for the coming season—Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl," Tom Moore in "Just for Tonight," or all three productions.

Shipments of prints were made last week by Goldwyn to all of its offices to enable exhibitors to have pre-views of the three pictures with which the company launches its second year, increasing its output from twenty-six to fifty pictures.

Coincident with the shipment of these productions the Goldwyn Cleveland office, through its manager, H. A. Bandy, and his service department aide, W. J. Brandt, held the most novel meetings ever devised in the industry.

Every Goldwyn customer in the Cleveland territory, as well as all other interested exhibitors, attended an exclusive showing of Miss Farrar's first production, not merely as spectators, but as theatre specialists co-operating with each other for the purpose of agreeing upon an advertising campaign in their respective Ohio cities. Among those attending this showing were George J. Schade, of the Schade theatre, Sandusky; C. W. Deibel, general manager of the new Liberty theatre, Youngstown; H. C. Horater, of the Alhambra theatre, and Edward A. Zorn, of the Temple theatre, Toledo.

In truth, the meeting was an exploitation conference that had been prearranged for several months—a score of successful showmen having decided that for the first time in picture history they would analyze a picture together and each give the other plans and suggestions for the promotion and exploitation of the production. Therefore, when "The Turn of the Wheel" is advertised in Ohio the advertising campaign will represent the combined ideas of twenty or more men, and the methods of lobby display and outdoor local campaigns for the various cities will embody the suggestions of experts.

Sarver Would Encourage Scenario Writers

"AFTER seeing the mass of photoplays presented day after day in the motion picture theatres and looking over the past releases of the different producing companies, one wonders how long will it be before the supply of material for screen entertainment becomes exhausted," says Charles Sarver, scenario editor of World Pictures.

"In Reginald Clarence's 'Stage Cyclopædia' there is mention made of over fifty thousand English plays. The French drama include over twenty-seven thousand plays. Spain, Italy and the rest of the continent have given us nearly twenty-five thousand. Of course, out of this great mass of dramatic literature less than fifty per cent are adaptable for motion picture purposes.

"We have also as a source of supply the current magazines and collection of novels and short stories. But from these inspirations we are bound to pick and cull, because they include in many instances the same situations that give the photoplay its punch. There is one thing we must bear in mind—that the day is fast approaching when a picture play entirely original in every way will be an isolated production. There will creep in these features something that either reminds us of a picture we have seen or a situation that has been used over and over again.

"The number of stories that daily come to the scenario editors passes all belief. From the length and breadth of this land are writers who are making valiant efforts to break into the ranks of photoplay writers, and it is well for scenario editors to encourage these people. For it is from such sources that we will in the future have to depend for stories that have the elements of originality. After so long a time the experienced writer becomes so blase that his output is marked with commonplace ideas."

Quinn's Rialto Gets General O. Henry's

Continued evidence of the popularity of the O. Henry stories is found in the fact that Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles has just signed a contract with General Film to screen the O. Henry stories as rapidly as they can be released. Initial showings of these subjects in the Rialto won instant favor.

For several months the O. Henry stories have been shown continuously at the Rialto theatre in San Francisco, where they have obtained an unusually large following. The Wolfville Tales, which are released adternately with the O. Henry stories, also are becoming regular features of the Rialto program and are proving a hit.

Art Museum Praises New Pathe Poster

THE Pathe twenty-four sheet poster advertising the new serial, "Hands Up," which is now posted in every city of any size in the country, has received distinguished mention from one of the most exacting art juries in the world, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. Under date of July 31 they wrote Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., requesting that they be sent one of these twenty-four sheets to place on file in their library of Commercial Art. In this library, they state, they only file the best posters. As the ones, threes and sixes are of the same high class as the twenty-four, exhibitors are thus assured that the paper they are receiving on "Hands Up" is of a character that will materially aid them in securing notable business.

With the release date set for August 18, the various Pathe Exchanges have reported many excellent bookings. As a matter of fact, "Hands Up" starts with a better showing in the matter of business booked than any serial Pathe has ever put out. Pantages has booked it for every one of his houses.

The Consolidated Amusement Co. of New York, operating eight theatres, has booked it for them all. The Atlanta office of Pathe reports booking the Odeon, of Birmingham, for two days; the Champion of the same place for two days; Dallas reports the Queen and Wigwam, of San Antonio, for three days each; Boston reports the Fox, of Springfield, Mass., for three days; the Orpheum, of New Bedford, three days; the Orpheum, of Malden, three days; the Lyceum, of New London, Conn., two days; the Central Square, of East Boston, two days; Royal, of Lowell, two days; the Casino and Allen, of New Bedford, two days each; Orpheum, of Haverhill, Mass., two days; Broadway, of Somerville, two days; Crown, of Manchester, N. H., two days.

This list is incomplete, as other bookings have been added.

Walsh Brothers Work on Breezy One

Another George Walsh-R. A. Walsh picture has been started. Under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh, George, the athletic Fox star, has just begun work on "How Do You Get That Way?" a picture which promises to be as breezy and as full of snap as its title.

"How Do You Get That Way?" was written by R. A. Walsh and Ralph Spence, and, while it is not a war play, it is said to have a strong patriotic punch. George, as the hero, routs a few nests of German spies, raises havoc with other undesirables and finally comes out on top in a burst of glory. The picture gives George opportunities to perform every athletic feat of which he is capable.

This is the first picture which the two Walsh brothers have made for William Fox since "The Pride of New York."

Miscellaneous Notes

Lucille Lee Stewart has been selected by Maxwell Karger as leading woman for Metro's new star, Hale Hamilton, who is to begin work immediately on George Randolph Chester's story, "Five Thousand An Hour."

In the forthcoming production of "The Driving Power," a World Picture, in which Montagu Love is starred, the unusual situation of having only one female acting is employed. The direction of this photo play will be assumed by Oscar Apfel.

With the first episodes of Goldwyn's production of "The Hell Cat" nearing completion in Wyoming, Geraldine Farrar and her company are preparing to travel farther toward the heart of the West for the remaining scenes of Willard Mack's drama.

Marin Sais is playing opposite Sessue Hayakawa in his latest production—the third to be made by the Haworth Pictures Corporation for Mutual release. No definte title has yet been decided upon, and probably will not be until the picture has been finished. William Worthington, who directed the Japanese star in "His Birthright," is producting the third picture.

World Engages Vekroff as Director

Perry N. Vekroff has been engaged by World Pictures to direct Barbara Castleton in a series of features. He will begin work at once at the World studio at Fort Lee.

Mr. Vekroff was born in Alexandria, Egypt, and was educated at Robert College in Constantinople. At the University of Sofia he studied law and dramatic art. His stage career has been one of unusual variety, having had experience in opera, vaudeville and the legitimate stage. His first American appearance on the stage was with the late Augustin Daly. He has also appeared in productions of Klaw and Erlanger and Henry W. Savage.

His screen career embraces three and a half years spent with the American Kinemacolor Company, the Metro Company, Vitagraph and others. While with the Vitagraph he directed Anita Stewart and Charles Richman in "The More Excellent Way." His first production with the World Company will be "What Love Forgives," by Gardner Hunting.

Fang Comedies Meet Demand for Novelty

General Film Company announces that the Charlie Fang comedies being distributed for the Scrantonia Film Company, have met an instantaneous demand for novelty. The idea of a Chinese comedian has proved attractive to showmen in search of new program material, the General reports, and bookings for the initial releases promise a great deal of favor for Fang.

"Parson Pepp," the first release, presents the Chinese player as the valet of a forceful missionary who attempts to revolutionize the morals of a mining camp with his fists and his Bible.

"Fang's Fate and Fortune," the second release, is marked by many refreshing comedey touches.

Gladys Brockwell Completes "Strange Woman"

Word has been received by the Fox Film Corporation from the William Fox studios at Hollywood that Gladys Brockwell has completed the filming of "The Strange Woman," the screen version of the famous stage play of the same name which was written by William J. Hurlbut. Several exceptionally magnificent sets were required for the picture, which was made under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint.

"The Strange Woman," in the opinion of officials of the Fox Corporation, will prove one of the sensations of the coming season, as there are several scenes in it of unusual dramatic power. The play has to do with the problems of marriage and free love, and is said to be of particular interest to married people and those contemplating marriage. "The Strange Woman," it is expected, will be the second Gladys Brockwell release under Victory Pictures.

"Johanna Enlists" Has Three Male Leads

When that comedy of war times, "Johanna Enlists," is released on the Artcraft schedule in September, it will be found that there are three leading men provided for Mary Pickford, though the actual male lead is taken by Douglas MacLean. Monte Blue and Emory Johnson are both cast for important roles and all three are suitors for the hand of the delectable Johanna. MacLean, as the captain, finally wins her and carries her away in khaki on the caisson of a gun to be married.

This is a story of war times, though not a war story. In other words, it all happens at a farm house somewhere in America, when a body of troops pass by and are forced to camp when one of the officers falls ill.

Metro Completes New Nazimova Picture

THE news that "L'Occident" in photoplay form, starring Mme. Alla Nazimova, which will shortly be released by Screen Classics, Inc., reaches completion this wek under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, will no doubt be acclaimed by exhibitors and audiences the country over. "L'Occident" is by the Belgian dramatist, Henri Kistemaeker, was translated by Mme. Nazimova's sister, Mrs. Nina Lewton, and its scenario is the work of June Mathis and Albert Capellani.

"L'Occident" is directed by Albert Capellani, assisted by Henry Kolker. Eugene Gaudio, who was brought on especially from Metro's west coast studio for this production, is the camera man. An unusual feature of this organization was the appointment by Mr. Karger of Henri Menessier, the eminent French technical director, to make the art drawings for all sets used in "L'Occident," while their actual building was placed in the capable hands of E. J. Shulter.

"L'Occident" contains some of the most interesting and beautiful sets ever seen on the screen, which any producer can promptly exclaim over for their intricate construction. The home of Capt. Cadiere in Marseilles reveals the interiors of no less than seven spacious rooms at one and the same time, everyone furnished with the luxurious taste of the wealthy globe trotter; another shows Hassonnah, the Arabian girl, in her Oriental court; a typical city of Tangiers was built in its entirety and therein many of the most important and picturesque scenes were shot; for another episode a complete traveling circus was used; still another reveals impressive scenes of the desert life. Many intensely dramatic scenes were actually played on the decks of a well known French cruiser, which privilege, rare indeed, was extended to Metro by representatives of the French government and the ship's officers. Incoming exterior scenes have been filmed at many of the most spacious and elaborate country residences in the environs of New York City.

General Releases Three Diamonds

In clarifying a situation which developed last week through the announcement that General Film denied any new arrangement with Frank Donovan for the release through General of Diamond Comedies, General Film this week brought new emphasis to bear upon this fact. However, General Film is handling three Diamond Comedies which were placed with the distributing organization some time ago. General states this arrangement was not made with Mr. Donovan.

In conclusion, the General statement said: "Three releases finished by Diamond are being distributed by General Film, but no General Film Company release arrangement for new comedies has been made with any of the Diamond Company's former directors."

General did not confirm nor deny the recent statement that it would release future Diamond Comedies which have not been completed.

Hayakawa Bookings Go Upward

New Chicago Theatre Opens September 1 with "His Birthright"—B. S. Moss Circuit Uses Them in Brooklyn and New York

THREE bookings, which Mutual announced this week as very important, have been closed within the past week by the sales force of the Mutual Film Corporation for the series of eight Sessue Hayakawa specials produced by the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

The Riviera, Balaban and Katz's new million dollar theatre in Chicago will open on September 1 with "His Birthright," first of the Hayakawa pictures.

The productions have been contracted for by the B. S. Moss circuit to play in the six Moss theatres in metropolitan New York and Brooklyn. Each picture is scheduled for three days in each of the big houses.

The series has been booked for the new Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, which opened a couple of months ago, and has been one of the successes of the Midwest.

Balaban and Katz took over the Riviera, at Broadway and Lawrence avenue, when it was in the final stages of completion as a vaudeville theatre, and announced that it would be devoted exclusively to pictures.

All three contracts were signed only after a previcw screening of "His Birthright." Balaban and Katz were scouring the market for the very best available release for their opening night and when they saw "His Birthright" closed for the entire Hayakawa series.

These bookings closely follow the signing of a contract for presentation of "His Birthright" and the ensuing seven Hayakawa productions at the Ziegfeld, Chicago, under the prereleasing arrangement of the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

The Chicago bookings are significant in that they are in three diversified districts. The Ziegfeld is on Michigan avenue, catering to a loop patronage, largely transient. The Riviera is located in the heart of the north side residential district, not far from Lake Shore Drive, surrounded by high class apartment houses. The Woodlawn is in the University of Chicago neighborhood, a semi-business, semi-residential district.

Parsons on Thirteenth Capitol Film

"Smiling Bill" Parsons, back at his Hollywood studios after a six weeks' transcontinental vacation tour, is at work on his thirteenth Capitol Comedy, as yet unnamed, enthusiastic over the receptions accorded him everywhere and delighted with the praise heaped upon his productions by theatre owners and patrons alike.

Prints of his two latest Capitol Comedies, "Up a Tree" and "Bill's Sweetie," have been sent from Hollywood to all Goldwyn exchanges for distribution among the exhibitors who play and are loud in their praise of Parsons' up-to-the-minute vehicles of mirth.

Parsons promises a surprise for his friends in the new Capitol Comedy he is working on. It will present the fat funster in a role strikingly different and even funnier than those that have evoked howls of laughter from lovers of clean, wholesome comedy.

R. J. Bergquist, who has been with Metro for a long time as cameraman with Bushman and Bayne, has been engaged by Managing Director Edwin Carewe to photograph Harold Lockwood's Metro productions. He assumed his new duties this week.

"Our Bridge of Ships" Released in Two Reels By General

How American workingmen are "making the stars fly 'over here' that the Star Spangled Banner may fly 'over there,'" is graphically told in "Our Bridge of Ships," the United States official war film, released by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, and distributed by the General Film Company.

"Our Bridge of Ships" is a two-reel production. Its purpose is to visualize just what American shipbuilders and American ship yards are doing to meet the sub-sea menace of the Hun. It is a pictorial answer to the Kaiser's declaration that "America cannot build ships as fast as we can sink them."

"Our Bridge of Ships" pictures the tremendous work accomplished in little more than a year since the United States entered the world war. An example of what America can do when backed by thoroughly determined workmen is shown at Hog Island, where the fifty ways were completed and ready for the laying of keels within six months.

Keenan's "Long Chance" Issued Again

"The Long Chance," released three years ago with Frank Keenan in the leading role, as a Broadway Universal Special, is to be brought up-to-date and issued again—this time under the Bluebird standard.

Originally issued as a six-reeler, "The Long Chance" will be brought to five and snapped up with new titles to become a Bluebird. In addition to Frank Keenan, who scored a success in this production when originally shown, the cast includes Fred Church, Stella Razeto, Beryl Broughton, Jack Nelson, Jack Curtis and Clyde Benson.

Peter Kyne wrote the story, while E. J. Le Saint directed from the screen adaptation by Harvey Gates.

"Waifs" Said to Be Cashing In Strong

A WORD to the wise is sufficient, according to a statement issued by Pathe Exchange, Inc., which claims that the comedy drama "Waifs," featuring Gladys Hulette, supported by Creighton Hale, is cashing in for the exhibitors who have booked this production. It is stated that the return booking of "Waifs" are unusually numerous. In other words, it is one of those rare productions by which exhibitors profit by word of mouth advertising.

A member of the family sees "Waifs" and tells the rest of the folks about it, and later the motion picture exhibitor who has presented "Waifs" receives numerous requests for a repeat, and there is nothing to it but a second booking and big business.

In the new million dollar moving picture theatre in Dayton, Ohio, "Waifs" was shown recently to audiences that packed and jammed this palatial playhouse, and it is stated that the production really took the gem city by storm. This is just one incident of the success that is achieved by this play.

SHORT NOTES

Tsuru Aoki has one of the leading roles in the new Haworth production upon which Sessue Hayakawa and his company are at present working for Mutual. This production will be the third of the new Hayakawa pictures made by the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Early last week Director Chautard finished the production of "Paid in Full," the Eugene Walter drama, in which Pauline Frederick has the leading role, and with Assistant Director Al Lena is now engaged in cutting and assembling the film. It will be released on the Paramount schedule following Miss Frederick's production of "The Shadow of the Rope."

"Salome" Opens at Casino in New York

"SALOME," the super film production which Theda Bara has made for William Fox, will have its premier at the Casino theatre, New York City, Monday night, August 19. This picture of the love and hate of the daughter of Herodias, will be shown for a limited engagement only, it is announced, and the exhibition of the picture is expected to be the screen sensation of the coming year.

The engagement derives additional interest from the fact that the engagement at the Casino will be the first showing on any screen in the world of Miss Bara in "Salome."

As with previous big productions it is New York that has been selected by William Fox for the premier of "Salome." The metropolitan verdict and the prestige of a New York run have always been considered essential to the success of such a big picture as "Salome." "A Daughter of the Gods" was kept in New York for several months before it was sent to any other city.

In "Salome" Theda Bara is said to have the greatest role she has ever essayed.

Miss Bara is said to have made "Salome" thoroughly human and convincing. In a special report made after a private screening the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has declared that "Salome," in the opinion of those present, was a serious and dignified portrayal of the story of Salome, imaginative and dramatic, and presented in a way that should rank with the best screen productions of the day."

Fred Stone Finishes His Second Artcraft

FRED STONE has romped through his second Artcraft picture, "Johnny Get Your Gun," for, while this picture will not be released for some time, Stone has given himself only a limited period in which to do three pictures. His third will be started shortly and it is said will be an absolute novelty. Frances Marion is author and the plot it is asserted supplies the comedian with enough opportunity to satisfy even his indefatigable zeal for stunts and action. Donald Crisp is authority for the statement that "Johnny Get Your Gun" will be a riot of merriment. Those who know the play from its stage record realize that it affords a delightful part for the star. Meantime the public will soon have an opportunity of seeing the noted legitimate comedy favorite in an exhilarating effervescent circus play, "Under the Top."

Ethel Clayton, long a star in filmdom, but with Paramount for the first time, appears shortly in "The Girl Who Came Back," an Americanized version of the play, "Leah Kleschna" by C. M. S McClellan, the scenario being by Beulah Marie Dix. Robert Vignola recently completed this picture and has begun work on the second, which has as a working title "Woman's Weapons" and is entirely different in character though permitting of much emotional work as well as good comedy. Vignola is also director of this picture, and Elliott Dexter is again leading man. Miss Clayton has become acclimated and accustomed to work in the west and finds it distinctly agreeable.

Director Bradbury Injured

While directing a Wolfville Tale at the West Coast studio of Broadway Star Features, Robert N. Bradbury was injured during the excitement attending a scene on location. However, he did not give up, although ordered to go to bed. He finished the picture with the aid of the players, they lifting him on and off his horse to move from one location to the next.

"Money Mad" Shows Marsh Prettily Garbed

Mae Marsh's many pretty gowns in her latest Goldwyn picture, "Money Mad," set for release August 25, will be a treat as well as a surprise to her admirers, Goldwyn contends. Motion picture devotees seldom look to Miss Marsh for fashionable frocks. By her art alone she has won her name on the screen. In only one other Goldwyn production, "The Cinderella Man," was she so prettily garbed.

In the opening scene of "Money Mad" the Goldwyn star is introduced as a girl in her early 'teens seated in a swing and wearing a lavender linen dress trimmed with tan linen to offset her blonde curls. Later, while at boarding school, a gray jersey dress embroidered with a darker shade of gray silk gives Miss Marsh an extremely chic costume.

A month before work was started on "Money Mad" Miss Marsh's modiste and her staff were busy on the Goldwyn star's frocks and Miss Marsh was a daily visitor to the shop.

Peggy Hyland Starts Excel Program

Peggy Hyland in "Bonnie Annie Laurie," a Scottish tale of patriotism and love, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as the first release under the William Fox new brand of Excel Pictures. The picture will be released early in September.

"Bonnie Annie Laurie" was written by Hamilton Thompson and was directed by Harry Millarde. In the cast besides Miss Hyland are Henry Hallam, William Bailey, Sidney Mason, Dan Mason, and Marion Singer.

The story of "Bonnie Annie Laurie" centers around the love affair of the daughter of Old Sandy Laurie, who desires that the girl shall marry Donald McGregor. When Donald receives orders to take his company to the front, Annie becomes betrothed to him. Later Annie rescues an unconscious man from the sea and mutual love springs up between them.

About New Pictures

"His Bonded Wife," Emmy Wehlen new Metro play, is rapidly nearing completion at Metro's Sixty-first Street Studio, under the person supervision of Maxwell Karger. Miss Wehlen, Director Charles J. Brabin, his assistant, Alfred Raboch, and the entire company have been working night and day to finish the production in record time.

Mae Murray startled Universal City by appearing in the make-up of a genuine cowboy of the woolly days in which costume she played the featured role in a Liberty Loan film for the Government which has been titled, "The Taming of Kaiser Bull."

The first two-reel Pathe-Diando comedy featuring the little negro who is known as Sunshine Sammy, has been completed under the direction of Walter MacNamara, and titled "Black Cupid." Sunshine Sammy has played in many of the Baby Marie Osborne pictures.

Players of exceptional merit, well known for their work in stage and screen productions, give Mabel Normand admirable support in her newest Goldwyn Picture, "Peck's Bad Girl," by Tex Charwate, this star's first production of Goldwyn's new year.

"The Testing of Mildred Vane," May Allison's second picture, to be produced on the West Coast, is making excellent progress at the Metro Studios in Hollywood. Most of the interiors have been photographed, and Technical Director Ralph Godfrey has erected an immense ballroom set.

Hamilton Smith, the author of "The Millionth Chance," is spending a few days at the studio watching the work on his story that Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are using for their next starring subject.

Gardner Hunting has completed the continuity of Wallace Reid's forthcoming Paramount picture, with a working title of "Some one and Somebody," from a story by Porter Emerson Browne. James Cruze, widely known among Paramount audiences as a character actor, will direct.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the diminutive Fox stars, have begun work week on the first of their pictures, which will be released under the William Fox brand of Excel Pictures. The play bears the temporary title, "Go Get 'Em," and is said to be full of thrills and opportunities for the Lee children to play their mischievous pranks.

A gun fight at night and other "rough stuff" figure in the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature in which Alice Joyce will star, and adaptation of O. Henry's story, "Brickdust Row." The picture has not yet been given a title. To get realism Miss Joyce and her company and Tom Terriss, who is directing the picture, made a journey to Bond street, which is located in one of the slum districts of Brooklyn.

For his first Paramount picture, "The Gypsy Trail," Bryant Washburn is to have a leading lady, Wanda Hawley.

Walter Edwards directed the picture which was written by Julia Crawford Ivers from the play by Robert Housum.

Henry Otto will again direct Harold Lockwood in Metro Productions. This is the substance of a statement issued this week by the Metro offices announcing Mr. Otto's return to the Metro fold after a two years' severance of relations. The re-engagement of Mr. Otto was accomplished by Managing Director Edwin Carewe, of the Yorke-Metro Company.

Gail Kane's next production in the series of eight-feature pictures she is to be starred in by Mutual, is from "The Daredevil," Maria Thompson Daviess' novel, the pictorial rights of which have been purchased at Miss Kane's earnest request.

Furniture of the "dollar down and dollar a week" variety is suddenly changed as if by magic, in Emmy Wehlen's coming Metro feature, "His Bonded Wife," to the most expensive Japanese lacquered hand-painted kind known to art lovers.

World Pictures has completed the cast for "Snug Harbor," the new picture which Tefft Johnson will make his debut as a director with this organization. Madge Evans is the star, and will be supported by Jack Drumier, Charles Sutton, William T. Carleton, Blanche Craig, Sam Ryan, formerly with many of George M. Cohan's successes; Charles Jackson, Kate Lester, Nora Cecil, Charles Ascot and Estar Banks.

General Releases New Doll Comedy

"The Knockout," another of the Cinema Doll Comedies, presented by animated manikins, is now released by General Film. This Emerald Comedy is said to be a clever burlesque on a popular slapstick star. Some novel and refreshing comedy effects have been obtained with the use of the doll players, whose clever manipulation makes for excruciating comedy. The production contains a real story, which adds to the entertainment.

The demand for the Emerald Comedies has been such as to keep all prints constantly at work, says General Film Company. The first two releases, "The Burglar Man" and "The Handy Man," are proving to be among the most widely booked single-reel releases.

Fisher-American-Pathe Subject Named

"Money Isn't Everything" is the title of the first of the new American productions starring Margarita Fisher, which are being offered to exhibitors by personal representatives of President Hutchinson of American, stationed at each of the Pathe exchanges throughout the country.

It is announced that bookings on this first of the Fisher series, as well as the first of the new Minter subjects, can now be made at the nearest Pathe exchange. The pictures themselves will be shown upon application to any of the American Film Company representatives stationed there.

"Angel Child" Comes September 9

Kathleen Clifford has Fred Church as her leading man in "Angel Child," her first Plaza picture, released September 9 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Miss Clifford is the diminutive star from Charlottesville, Va., who is less than five feet tall and weighs but ninety-eight pounds.

"Pals First" Released as Screen Classic

In fulfillment of its recently announced decision to promote Harold Lockwood in the special attractions class, Metro announces that it will release the newest Lockwood feature, "Pals First," under the banner of Screen Classics, Inc. The picture has been in course of production under the direction of Edwin Carewe since the Lockwood company's arrival from the Coast, and as only a few scenes remain to be made the film will soon be ready for release.

The picture is an adaptation of the stage play, "Pals First," prepared by Leo Wilson Dodd from Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the same name, published by Harper and Brothers.

The story has to do with the adventures of two hardened, wayfaring pals, Danny Rowland and Dominie, who find refuge in a Tennessee home when an aged darky servant believes he recognizes in Danny his long absent master, Dick Castleman.

Harold Lockwood has a congenial role as Danny. His large cast includes Ruth de Remer as Jean Logan, James Lackaye as Dominie, Richard R. Neill as Dr. Chilton, Frank De Vernon, Anthony Byrd, Pauline Dempsey, Walter P. Lewis and Rollo Lloyd.

Rolfe Tells How He Screens Houdini Tricks

Many exhibitors have written to inquire as to how Houdini will do his self-liberation stunts before the camera, and as this is one of the important points in the Houdini serial, I have come to the conclusion that the only way to successfully perform these tricks would be in an uninterrupted close-up.

"Almost any actor could fake Houdini's liberation stunts with a camera, but it would be impossible for any man on earth to perform these various acts in an uninterrupted close-up. I have given instructions to take all of Houdini's tricks without a camera break. In other words, if Houdini makes an escape from handcuffs or the various other impedimenta used to confine him the action will take place on one piece of film without a break. This film will be used in its entirety and will not be cut."

Christie Names Releases for September

Releases of the Christie Company for the month of September are completed and ready for shipping to the various Christie exchanges throughout the country. With each picture goes a full set of stills and straight pictures of the principals in the respective casts. Coming Program Offerings

"Ghost Flower" from Triangle

Heads List Announced for Release on August 18—Is Story of Victory of Patriotism—Rubens Starred

Alma Rubens Is Starred by Triangle In "The Ghost Flower," Directed by Frank Borzage

A DRAMA of love and sacrifice, "The Ghost Flower" heads the Triangle program for August 18, presenting Alma Rubens in the leading role.

"The Ghost Flower" is a story of the victory of patriotism. The heroine debases herself in the eyes of the man she loves that she may save him from death. But face to face on the battleground, come her sweetheart and the man who has determined to kill his rival for her affections. Both have faced the tragedy of the World's great conflict, and in the face of death and devastation the villain's conscience is awakened. Personal quarrels are forgotten in the turmoil of the battles of the Nations and to the hero comes the knowledge of the nobility and sacrifice of his sweetheart's love.

Alma Rubens is an Italian girl, Guilia, a character which should conform admirably to her brunette beauty. Several new players are included in her supporting cast, among them being Charles West and Emory Johnson.

Frank Borzag who directed this production is said to have furnished one of the most artistic sets ever erected at the Triangle studios, a Naples street scene. Madeline Matzen wrote the story which was scenarioized by Catherine Carr. Jack McKenzie handled the camera.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton's latest picture "High Tide" in which Harry Mestayer, the former Broadway star is featured, is the second release for the week.

In "High Tide" Harry Mestayer is shown as a successful playwright and author who has risen from a street "newsie" through sheer ability. The plot centers around the love of Barbara Edwards, an aristocrat from New England, drawn to the city by the urge of ambition, and the conflicting affections of a show girl Polly Staire. Mestayer portrays Hudson Newbrook and Jean Calhoun is Barbara. Yvonne Pavis and Jack Rollen are new players especially engaged in this production.

"High Tide" was written by B. D. Carber with scenario by Catherine Carr. Gilbert Warrenton was the cameraman.

Pathe Sets "Her Man" as First Fall Feature

PATHE'S first big feature for the season of 1918-19 will be "Her Man," according to an announcement this week from Pathe Exchange. This picture is scheduled for September 8.

The picturization of "Her Man" is adapted from the novel by Charles Neville Buck, "The Battle Cry." Elaine Hammerstein is the star of the picture, which was directed by Ralph Ince. The Advanced Motion Picture Corporation produced it.

"Her Man" is a picture of which the Pathe organization is very proud. Not only is the story said to be a strong one, lending itself perfectly to screen purposes, but the cast, locations, production and direction are all said to be excellent. The picture deals with what is perhaps the most picturesque people in the United States today, the mountaineers of the South. The scene of the story is laid in the mountains of Kentucky and practically all the exteriors were filmed there. It is interesting to note that Director Ince selected for the making of his picture the same place of which Mr. Buck wrote in his book. Therefore the locale is authentic and the types used as "extras" perfect, for natives were employed wherever possible.

W. Lawson Butt plays the leading man, having the part of "Bad Anse Havey," the clan leader. Mr. Butt not only does splendid work in his interpretation, but in addition he is an excellent "type" for the part, broad-shouldered, dark, and with strong features.

"Efficiency" Stars Mutt and Jeff

Mutt and Jeff in an Animated Cartoon entitled "Efficiency" is one of the coming releases announced by the Fox Film Corporation.

The story of "Efficiency" revolves about the inventive genius of Mutt. Mutt decides to put this talent at the service of the Government and thus help win the war, so when Jeff drops in on Mutt in the latter's drafting room Mutt explains minutely the operation of his new device.

Doris Kenyon Returns

Doris Kenyon returned this week from Kentville and Halifax, N. S., where during the past three weeks she has been visiting relatives.

Louise Glaum's Newest Paralta Play Is Called "Wedlock"

"Marriage Ring" Released August 26

In place of "Coals of Fire," originally announced as the Enid Bennett-Paramount release for August 26, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has placed "The Marriage Ring" on the Paramount schedule for that date. A tropical flavor, the atmosphere of the sunlit Hawaiian Islands, is said to have been imparted to this Thomas H. Ince production, in which Miss Bennett is starred. The story begins in San Francisco and culminates in the island possessions, and is said to be an intensely emotional drama.

An interesting fact in connection with this drama is that it was directed by Fred Niblo, erstwhile legitimate star and husband of Enid Bennett. Mr. Niblo played opposite the star in a recent picture and has now tried his 'prentice hand at the megaphone, to use a mixed metaphor.

Jack Holt is leading man and there is a good cast. The story is by John Lynch and the photography by John Stumar. According to report, it is one of the most powerful dramas that Miss Bennett has yet been supplied with, and contains a story that is at once pleasing and compelling.

World Changes Release of Two Pictures

World Pictures announces a shift of release date of two of its pictures. "The Road to France," instead of being presented on September 9, will have its screen premier on October 14. "By Hook or Crook," another Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley picture, will be the September 9 offering instead of October 14, as previously scheduled. The necessity of this change of dates grew out of the inability of World Pictures to secure the completion of the lithographs necessary to adequately exploit "The Road to France." The printers are unable to complete the work because of the unusual amount of advertising matter ordered, including, as it does, an eight sheet. This will be the first eight sheet ever employed by the World.

Program Glances

Elinor Field, the Los Angeles girl who is starring in Strand comedies on the Mutual schedule, has already produced half a dozen one-reel pictures. Her latest release is "Winnie's Wild Wedding," scheduled for August 20.

When "In Pursuit of Polly," Billie Burke's new photoplay, is released on the Paramount schedule, that company declares, it will be found that an unusually strong combination of talent has made success inevitable for the picture. For in addition to the fact that an exceptional cast will be seen in support of the star, the authors, scenaroist, director and cameraman all commend themselves to the most discriminating exhibitors as well as their audiences, Paramount inists.

Sunday, August 11, George Kleine gave the first production in America of his new Italian war picture, 'Behind the Lines in Italy," at the Playhouse in Chicago, where it was launched for a run under the auspices of the Italian societies of the city. This picture was made by the Cines Company at the command of the Italian Government, and the battle scenes were taken by the Cinematograph Corps of the Royal Italian Army.

"The Lost Express," the railroad serial released by Mutual, starring Helen Holmes, is still going strong and getting the money for exhibitors, Mutual declares. The Orpheum theatre, Lexington, Ky., did a splendid business with "The Lost Express," notwithstanding the fact that half the serial had already been run by the Ada Meade theatre in Lexington, which closed down.

Norma Talmadge in her latest picture, "Her Only Way," directed by Sidney Franklyn, was shown for the first time at Loew's New York theatre Sunday, August 18.

In "In Pursuit of Polly," her newest Paramount picture, released August 19, Billie Burke is seen as a chauffeur in overalls, who does not disdain to repair her broken-down automobile and who, while engaged in this occupation, is discovered by a millionaire who offers to assist her, and later, following a series of the strangest kind of adventures, marries her.

General Film Company claims a new excellence mark for pictures featuring a child star in "Miss Mischief Maker," the third of the Oakdale Productions just released. The work of Gloria Joy, the seven-year-old star, is considered especially appealing, while the story presents strength and attention value. Supporting the little leading lady are Nell Saalman, Ruth Lackaye, Ethel Pepprell, Edward Jobson, Albert Rockett and Charles Dudley. The production was directed by Sherwood McDonald.

Pathe insists that Toto will make you chuckle, giggle and then laugh in his comedy, "Nipped in the Bud," produced by Rolin and released the week of August 25 by Pathe. He performs a number of unusual acrobatic stunts, and there is a whole lot of fun from start to finish.

A woman's coiffure proves the hiding place of a costly string of pearls in Mae Marsh's latest Goldwyn Picture, "Money Mad," by Lois Zellner, set for release August 25. And their discovery is brought about in an equally original manner.

Under the direction of Edward Jose, Enrico Caruso and his company engaged in the filming of "My Cousin," the tenor's first picture for Artcraft release, went down to the Metropolitan Opera House last week for a number of interior scenes. About five hundred extras were used in the making of scenes with the "diamond horseshoe" and balconies as background.

Baby Marie Osborne scores an unqualified hit in the drama of heart interest, entitled "Winning Grandma," recently released by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Ferdinand Zecca, Director General of Productions of Pathe, when he saw this production on the screen pronounced the story as one of the best of its kind he had seen this year.

"Springtime a la Carte," one of the quaintest O. Henry comedy-dramas released in some weeks, takes its place on the General Film schedule this week after a week's run as a prerelease at the Rivoli theatre in New York. Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres, featured in recent O. Henry productions, again appear in the stellar roles. The production was directed by Kenneth Webb.

In releasing the Paramount picture, "Green Eyes," with Dorothy Dalton as star, the production being by Thomas H. Ince, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation asserts that the setting of the story being Southern is certain to prove highly popular with the masses of film patrons.

"Hands Up" Is Said to Be Winning New Laurels for Pathe As a Distributor of Excellent Serials

Pathe Announces Program for August 25

"The Girl from Bohemia," for August 25, is a comedy-drama from the story of Lois Zellner, directed by L. B. McGill and produced by Astra, featuring Mrs. Irene Castle. It has to do with a girl from Bohemia who, as a result of an inheritance, finds herself in the provincial town of Mayport, and there love and adventure develop.

Episode No. 2 of the latest of Pathe serials is entitled "The Missing Prince," and continues the adventures of Echo Delane, the magazine writer, with her cowboy lover, "Hands Up," and the search of the mysterious tribe of Inca Indians for "The Missing Prince," who is to marry the Bride of the Sun.

"Nipped in the Bud" is a farce comedy, featuring Toto, supported by a capable cast of fun makers.

"A Sun Kissed Isle" is the subject of the Post Travel Series No. 11, and presents interesting scenes in our island possession of Porto Rico.

Official War Review, released in this program and presented under the Government's direction, shows the very latest scenes of Uncle Sam's activities on the firing line of France.

Hampton Representative Visits Hodkinson

John H. Blackwood, personal representative for Jesse D. Hampton, is in New York, making his headquarters at the office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. Blackwood announces production satisfactorily progressing on J. Warren Kerrigan's first Hampton picture, "Prisoners of the Pines," and states they have other good stories from the pen of the same author, Kenneth B. Clarke.

One of the objects of Mr. Blackwood's visit is the selection of more stars for J. D. Hampton productions for distribution by Hodkinson Service.

Educational Strides Forward

Production and Distribution End Enter Upon Era of Increased Activity—Fall Holds Forth Much Promise

WITH the return of Vice-President E. W. Hammons to his New York desk after a short vacation and the reports of new business received through recently established exchanges in Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit, the Educational Films Corporation of America enters upon an era of greatly increased activity both on the production and the distribution end.

The novel offerings for the fall season will include a fresh series of Robert C. Bruce Adventures in the Northwest, newly made this summer; a series of at least twelve one-reel pictures by Dwight L. Elmendorf, depicting European architecture and scenery and Far Eastern travels; a series of six tabloid, native Indian dramas, made by the Northwestern Film Corporation of Sheridan, Wyoming; a new series of E. M. Newman travels, containing the results of his visit to the Western war front; the first pictures of the political and official life of Mexico, including President Carranza, now being prepared by George D. Wright, author of "Mexico Today"; a number of individual scenic, instructive and scientific novelties; "Your Fighting Navy," patriotic five-reeler now ready for release, and "When the Giant Wakes," the coal drama, many scenes of which have already been taken in West Virginia and the studio scenes of which are now in progress under the direction of William Parke.

The wider selling of Educational pictures is made possible through the recent organization of the Educational Distributing Corporation. The following new exchanges have been established: Chicago, the Bee Hive Exchange, 220 South State street, R. C. Cropper, manager; Detroit, 63 East Elizabeth street, Harry Abbott, manager; Cleveland, 322 Euclid avenue, Robert McLaughlin, manager.

The Bee Hive, which will henceforth handle the Educationals not only for Chicago, but throughout Illinois, southern Wisconsin and northern Indiana, is one of the most enterprising independents in the Western field. A large number of salesmen are working on the road, and the office force under the energetic management of R. C. Cropper is alert to the needs of the exhibitors. In Detroit, Harry Abbott, who was formerly connected with William Fox's Academy of Music, has been appointed to take charge of Educational sales for the State of Michigan. In Cleveland, the Argus Company, a comparative newcomer in the business, but now working out exceedingly valuable ideas, has the distribution in charge for the Educational Distribution Corporation. The active force is Robert McLaughlin, the former manager of the Colonial theatre in that city. He is well known as a brilliant theatrical executive and an able playwright.

Together with the already established branches in the principal Eastern cities, Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, they promise the beginning of a great field organization for the marketing of the Educational's unique product. Mr. Dean of the Educational Distributing Corporation will shortly add to their number by a trip to the South and West.

Burstein Produces "The Telephone Girl"

Louis Burstein, one of the comedy producers in the motion picture field, through his association with King-Bee and Vim, acting through the Authors Associated Agency, has secured the motion picture rights to "The Telephone Girl" and plans on reproducing the play on the elaborate lines with which it was originally produced by George W. Lederer, the stage producer and manager.

Mr. Burstein is to supervise the production himself.

Harry Sherman, Who Has Placed "Light of the Western Stars" with United

United Theatres Take Harry Sherman New Production

The distinction of being the cause of the breaking of the seal of silence of United Picture Theatres of America in regard to the constituent pictures of the program assembled by them for exclusive release to members houses, belongs to the latest of the Sherman productions, which stars Dustin Farnum in a picturization of Zane Grey's novel of the Southwest, "The Light of Western Stars." This picture is the one selected by United to inaugurate its policy of the release of one superfeature each week to the theatres comprising its co-operative chain.

Furthermore, it having previously been announced that the entire output of from six to eight picture stars would furnish the backbone of the United program, it is now announced that Mr. Farnum is to be the first of these. On the strength of his achievement with "The Light of Westeren Stars," United has contracted with Mr. Sherman for six more Farnum features of equal strength, the stories to be passed upon by United before the work of production is taken in hand. Two of these stories have already been accepted, the second of the series to be "The Wolf Breed," by Jackson Gregory, and the third, "The Man in the Open," by Roger Pocock.

George D. Wright, Maker of the "Mexico Today" Pictures for Educational. He Is Now Filming Carranza

Wright "Shoots" Carranza and His Staff

Under date of July 26, George D. Wright, who has had such success with his "Mexico Today" pictures, writes that he is starting to take motion pictures of President Carranza and the members of his political and military staff for the next Mexican series to be released by the Educational. Mr. Wright is very popular in Mexico. As an instance he was asked recently to prepare a motion picture drama of sacred theme which was subsequently endorsed by the Archbishop at Mexico City and witnessed by great crowds of the faithful. In the present "Mexico Today" series, the director had many nooks, byways and corners of Old Mexico opened up to him that escape the attention of the average visitor. One of these is "A Mexican Venice," a single-reel picture which goes out to the regular Educational houses the week of August 26. It deals with the Viga Canal, where river life that was old when Cortez went to Mexico in 1520 is preserved almost unchanged today. The stream that supplies Mexico City with most of its vegetable and floral produce is a study in the primitive.

On the same release date (August 26) the International distributes through the Educational its newest Happy Hooligan cartoon comedy entitled, "The Latest in Underwear." This is a truly black-and-white rumpus in 500 feet, in which Happy, a Chinese laundryman, a colored washerwoman, and a goat are the participants. The motif is the theft of clothes from the line and the need of a detective to discover the culprit.

New "Hun" Picture Features War Aviator

CARLE E. CARLTON, president and general manager of En l'Aid Cinema, Ltd., has announced that active work has been going on for the past seven weeks in the production of "En l'Air," or "Fighting the Hellish Huns in the Air," adapted from the book of the same name written by Lieut. Bert Hall of the Lafayette Escadrille.

Harry Revier, the director of the last two Lillian Walker productions, is the director of this new attraction, which, it is expected, will be completed in time for release about September 15.

Lieut. Bert Hall, who, with Major William Thaw, constitute the only surviving members of the Lafayette Escadrille, appears personally in the production.

As a part of the production there is 1,500 feet of motion pictures, taken by Lieutenant Hall's observer, of actual battles in the air, including the destruction of a Hun biplane, and the blowing up and destruction of an observation balloon. This negative brought from France constitutes a small portion of the thrilling episodes of the entire production.

Supporting Lieutenant Hall as the female lead in the cast is Edith Day.

Others in the cast are Stuart Holmes and Warner Richmond.

The United States Government is cooperating with the producers in the use of battle planes, observation balloons and hydroairplanes.

An observation sausage balloon in which Lieutenant Hall and Miss Day ascend is destroyed in midair through an attack by hostile airplanes.

The production will be released in approximately eight reels for the state rights market. An exclusive advertising campaign has been inaugurated, including the syndicating of Lieutenant Hall's book in more than one hundred newspapers throughout the United States.

Leonce Perret, Producer of "Lafayette, We Come!" With His Family and Some Friends on the Piazza of His Summer Home

Kempner Would Give Branches Free Sway

SALES DIRECTOR J. L. KEMPNER of The Manx-Man Company, believes, as the result of an analysis of letters from his traveling representative Leon Schlesinger, that branch exchange managers are more and more coming to use their own initiative in securing results, as against relying on home office instructions.

"When I entered this business, branch managers were home office automatoms," Mr. Kempner states. "The system never made for initiative. Very often jealousies in the home office served to tie capable branch men hand and foot. The certain result was that no branch showed the business it would have if the managers had possessed some freedom of action. Home office executives were continually making trips around the exchange discharging the employees. And each new set of managers got in the rut of the set they succeeded. Talk about chaos!

"What a change in conditions Mr. Schlesinger's letters indicate! It is almost too good to be true. He has been doing his boost work for 'Manx-Man' in conjunction with the Goldwyn exchanges and so meets their managers. He writes that every Goldwyn exchange man is a 'Goldwyn general, in command of his district.' That there is a 'supreme command' sure enough in the Goldwyn main office, but that it expressly seeks to keep its hands off the operations of its managers—except to inspire them to use initiative and not to wait on the home office. Most of the branch managers are idea men who like to put across merchandising campaigns for their customers and this has helped us get on special Manx-Man exploitation plans before the best exhibitors in every center visited."

Recent "Manx-Man" bookings include the Washington theatre, Detroit, Finn and Heiman Circuit, opening at the Fuller, Madison, Wis.; and Exhibitors Club, Milwaukee, Wis., thirty days.

Rolfe Engages Thomas as First Assistant

Clark W. Thomas, who for a great many years has been connected with the motion picture industry in executive capacities, is now associated with B. A. Rolfe as assistant to him with production and manufacturing.

Mr. Thomas will have supervision of the laboratories and assist Mr. Rolfe in formulating the operating plans for the various producing companies now working.

Maciste Stays off Broadway This Time

When the 1918 Maciste production, about which Harry Raver has been communicating between New York and Turin for months, makes its initial bow to the United States the customary "Broadway run at standard prices" will be conspicuous by its absence, Mr. Raxer announced this week.

In telling why he reached this conclusion, Mr. Raver said:

"When I prepared 'The Warrior' for the market I called in friends of mine who are considered authorities in the industry and asked them what they thought of the picture. The biggest man among them said he wouldn't give me thirty cents for it, which was quite a shock. But I had faith in 'Maciste' as a star and the production was timely. I felt it would be liked by the public and so I spent $4,500 a week, at the Criterion theatre, just to convince the buyer that I had an attraction the public wanted. As a result I received offers for the production on the opening night and later sold at a satisfactory figure.

"Now things are different. 'Maciste' is now a recognized star and his productions are in demand. It would be a waste of good money to finance a Broadway run."

Garrett Maps Tour for Rita Jolivet

Since the announcement that Rita Jolivet had made arrangements in connection with the house of J. Frank Brockliss to visit various countries in Europe with the prints of the Metro special, "Lest We Forget," some new developments have occurred.

Miss Jolivet is insistent upon the production being shown as produced here in America, and to insure this fact she has agreed to include practically half the entire world in her trip, immediately following her visit to Europe.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, has asked her to include China, Egypt, India and Central and South America in her itinerary. In each new contract he is including a specific clause stating that the picture must be exploited at once when purchased and the production shown just as presented here originally. Failure to do so gives the firm of J. Frank Brockliss the right to resell same for that territory.

Perret Stars Placed Under New Contract

As a result of their contribution to the success of Leonce Perret's patriotic propaganda film, "Lafayette, We Come!" (Pershing, '17), Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, who co-starred in this production, have been signed up by Leonce Perret to appear in another Perret production which is as yet untitled.

In spite of the fact that Miss Cassinelli abandoned the motion picture stage several years ago, her popularity with motion picture fans has not waned, it is said.

Eugene H. Kaufman, Manager of Carbon and Accessories Department, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation

Although the film "Lafayette, We Come!" (Pershing, '17), had been completed several weeks ago, Leonce Perret, its creator and producer, has been correcting and changing some of the scenes and titles and now announces that the production is fully completed in every respect.

Before commencing work in his next production Mr. and Mrs. Perret have decided to leave on a several weeks' vacation.

Anticipating that Eastern studios will encounter difficulties arising from the shortage of coal during the coming winter, Mr. and Mrs. Perret will undoubtedly go to California and negotiate to take over a studio in or near Hollywood.

Kleine Releases Seond Rialto-De Luxe Film

Following the reception of its first production, Grace Valentine in "The Unchastened Woman," the Rialto De Luxe Productions announce the second special release, Marguerite Marsh in "Conquered Hearts," a photoplay which was enthusiastically received at its initial trade showing. Distribution will be through the George Kleine system in the United States and Canada, and for all foreign countries through the Piedmont Pictures Corporation.

Affiliated Distributes Its New Booklet

"The Exhibitor Dominant" is the title of a sixteen-page booklet just issued by the Affiliated Distributors Corporation which is being mailed this week to the members of the various affiliated units throughout the country.

The book explains in detail the platform of exhibitor controlled co-operative booking, as worked out by the Affiliated plan, and contains an interesting chart of the benefits derived by both exhibitor and producer.

Miss Gordon Has Own Company

Will Produce Six Features Each Year, with Scenarios by Wilson Mizner —Mahlon Hamilton Is Star's Leading Man

"TO provide the luxurious charm and the regal grace of Kitty Gordon with worthy pictorial settings" will be, to quote the certificate of incorporation, the fundamental purpose of the latest film company to be formed. The output of this company will be known as The New Kitty Gordon Pictures.

With the formation of this company are set at rest all rumors to the effect that the star is to turn her back upon her screen career and to return to the speaking and singing stage.

There are to be six of these new super-features annually, each from the pen of Wilson Mizner, one of the wittiest and most adroit of Broadway's playwrights, whose many successes include "The Deep Purple," written in collaboration with the late Paul Armstrong, and "The Only Law," written in conjunction with Bronson Howard. Mr. Mizner is perhaps the best-known survivor of a school of red-blooded, all-American writers who "packed a punch." His adventurous life, which included excursions into the Klondike in the gold-strike days, on the Western plains and in the South Sea Islands, and his caustic wit, which has made him the most-quoted man on the Rialto, have contributed to make his nearly seven feet of brawn one of the most discussed and most admired figures in the literary world.

The new company is to be Miss Gordon's own, her business affairs being in charge of Sydney L. Cohan. Her leading man in the new pictures is to be Mahlon Hamilton, best remembered, perhaps, as Mme. Petrova's leading man in many of her pictures.

Miss Gordon herself needs no introduction at this late date.

The first of the new Kitty Gordon pictures will be finished and ready for release about the middle of October.

Harry Raver Brings Maciste Back in Film

"MACISTE," the herculanean Adonis of the screen, "discovered" by Gabriele d'Annunzio for the outstanding character in "Cabiria," and later the much discussed star of "The Warrior," returns to the screen shortly in what Harry Raver terms "the most unusual serial ever offered the American fan." No announcement has been made as to the title of the "Maciste" serial.

When it is remembered that Harry Raver's Samsonic star enacted the role of "The Warrior" while serving as a soldier in the Italian army and that the Associated Press dispatches from Rome reported him killed in action, cable advices from Turin to Harry Raver disproved the report by stating that he was only wounded and was "enjoying his usual appetite." The new serial, according to Mr. Raver, has been in course of production since July, 1917, and was finished only three weeks ago, the delay being caused by the war activities of both "Maciste" and his director, Pastrone, while serving the colors.

No decision has been reached by Harry Raver in the matter of exploiting the serial. He did say, however, that the picture would not be given a "Broadway run" at his expense as the star, backed by the earning power of his previous productions, had sufficient prestige to put the serial over, and, as "The Warrior" was sold outright, after its run at the Criterion theatre, last summer, Mr. Raver may decide to dispose of his North American rights to the new production without exploitation on his own part.

Greiver Makes Speed with Distribution of Ford Weekly

The Greiver Distributing Corporation which is handling the national distribution of the Ford Weekly, reports great progress in closing with the leading exchanges throughout the country.

Simeon B. Greiver, president of the Greiver Distributing Corporation, has been deluged with inquiries from exchanges throughout the country concerning its release, it is said.

A complete list of Independent Exchanges will be given out in a few days, it is expected, then a national campaign will be started giving the Ford Weekly its place as an educational and topical weekly.

Perret's Work Brings Congratulations

EXECUTIVES of the Perret Producing Company who witnessed the first screening of Leonce Perret's much heralded patriotic film, "Lafayette, We Come!" expressed their gratitude to Mr. Perret and his staff for their co-operation and effort, which contribution has assured the success of the production.

Those who attended the screening were Leonce Perret, E. K. Lincoln, Dolores Cassinelli, Cameraman Alfred Ortliev, Technical Director John Burkel, Adolphe Osso, Miss Georgette Duchesne, Madame Perret and Allan Rock. In addition to Mr. Perret and his staff the directors of the Leonce Perret Producing Company were also present. After the screening Mons. F. Du Fourno, one of the directors, impressively addressed Mr. Perret and all who were present as follows:

"It is said of the motion picture and its entertaining and educational values that the surface of these possibilities has merely been scratched. Such is the opinion and belief of many in spite of the fact that in America, if not throughout the entire world, the motion picture has already earned for itself the distinction of being man's greatest and noblest invention."

Mr. Perret's sales organization are busily engaged negotiating for the disposition and release of the film to be preceded by a showing on Broadway. Announcement of the completion of these negotiations will be made shortly.

New "Hun" Picture Enters the Field

Exclusive Features, Inc., this week brought across the horizon of the state rights field of the industry a new war picture, which is called "Who's Afraid of the Hun?" The organization, with offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, is exploiting the picture on a wide scale to state rights buyers, including page advertising in Motion Picture News.

"Who's Afraid of the Hun?" is in two reels, and is said to be a spectacular patriotic feature from start to finish, with scenes of war and its victories for the Allies. Advertising helps are numerous and include one, three and six-sheets, pictorial posters, photographs and special art announcement slides.

Edwin A. Frazee, Who Has Introduced Illusions Into "The Haunted House"

Frazee Illusions Featured in His Releases

Edwin A. Frazee, whose first independent release, "A Haunted House," was booked by W. H. Clune of Los Angeles for a run at Clune's Broadway theatre, is introducing bewildering illusions into his new two-reel mystic-comedies.

Mr. Frazee states that the time has come for a distinct departure in the making of comedies in order to keep abreast of the times.

The introduction of illusions into future Frazee pictures, concerning which Mr. Frazee has patent protections, will form a part of each story, but in deference to Houdini's wish—never making an exposé of how the various illusions are accomplished.

The Frazee Film Productions are announced for the open market under the guidance of Ernest Shipman.

"Ruling Passions" Nears Completion

Abraham S. Schomer, whose stage and screen plays include "Today," "The Yellow Passport," "The Inner Man" and others, is busily engaged at the Biograph Studio completing the production of his latest screen effort, "Ruling Passions," upon which he has been working for the past three weeks. Those who have seen that part of the play already completed declare that it is bound to meet with and attain instantaneous success. It deals with a vital and interesting problem of life.

Mr. Schomer has selected his cast with great care and skill. Its leading members are Julia Dean, Edwin Arden, Claire Whitney and Earl Schenk.

"Ruling Passions" will be presented at a Broadway theatre for a four weeks' run and then released throughout the country by the Schomer Photoplay Producing Co., Inc., of 1440 Broadway, according to present plans.

United to Announce Program Soon

The coming week is expected to bring announcement from United Theatres of America of some of the stars and productions which will be released to the members of that organization.

Four stars, assuring twenty-four release during the year, are promised.

"Shifting Sands"
(Triangle—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

SKILFUL treatment has made the somewhat conventional story presented in "Shifting Sands," a well sustained and pleasant entertainment. This treatment extends to the handling of the scenario, the direction and the work of the star, Gloria Swanson. Miss Swanson, of all the ex-Keystone beauties who have been introduced to the dramatic photoplay has made good beyond the fondest expectations. Her beauty is a rare delight and her acting appears to improve with each of her pictures. Her role in "Shifting Sands" offers her a wide variety of opportunities, all of which she seizes upon with sincerity and with highly gratifying results. She is the young girl or the young woman at will and her characterization of Marcia Grey is sustained from the first to the last of "Shifting Sands."

The story was prepared by Charles T. Dazey, who has utilized the plot concerning the woman with a past which she desires to keep from her husband. The climax is, however, brought on in an unconventional fashion. A little German spy melodrama is introduced, the leader of the spies being the man who holds the secret of the wife's past. But instead of assisting him when he threatens she plays a clever game and succeeds in turning him over to the Secret Service operators.

Joe King is seen as the husband, and Harvey Clark as the German spy. Lillian Langdon, Arthur Millett and Leone Carton give adequate performances. Pliny Horne was at the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marcia Grey (Gloria Swanson), an unsuccessful artist, resents the advances of Von Holtz (Harvey Clark), a rent collector, and so incurs his wrath. He succeeds in "framing" her, and as a consequence she goes to jail for "attempted theft." Released she joins the Salvation Army, and in this way meets the rich John Stanford (Joe King), who is interested in settlement work. In time they marry, and several years later are living happily together when Von Holtz appears on the scene again, this time bearded, and presenting himself as an English nobleman. Marcia penetrates his disguise. Stanford, a member of a government committee, holds valuable papers. Von Holtz demands that Marcia secure them for him, threatening exposure of her prison term. She agrees. Stanford's mother (Lillian Langdon) sees her depart one night with Von Holtz, and believes her eloping with him. She tells Stanford, who anxiously follows. Arrived at their destination Stanford discovers to his surprise and glee that Marcia has also been working hand in hand with the Government, and that she has turned Von Holtz and his band of spies over to the American officials.

"The Source"
(Lasky—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE SOURCE" is a picture that one can heartily recommend without any supplementing "buts," "ifs" or "howevers." It is the sort of picture that takes firm hold of the spectator and fairly sweeps him along with its impetus. The mention of the fact that is an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post serial means little of itself. There seem to be more Post stories on the screen today than there are in the back files of the magazine itself. But "The Source," by Clarence Budington Kelland, was one of the best, in the opinion of the reviewer, that ever appeared in that source of so many pictures. Mr. Kelland writes of the big outdoors graphically. He apparently loves to write of the lumber camp and the lumberjack, and he knows his setting and its people. "The Source" is laid in such a locale, and here a worthless drunkard works himself into a real man in a fine, virile drama.

Credit is to be divided between Monte M. Katterjohn and George Melford, respectively the adaptor and director of the production, for the excellent manner in which the original work has been treated. Mr. Katterjohn's scenario follows the work of Mr. Kelland very closely and is a skilful piece of writing from every angle. The continuity runs smoothly, the high lights are well emphasized and the various touches of comedy and human interest which made the story so exceptional have been incorporated in the script to fine effect. Mr. Melford has handled the task of producing the picture in a big way. The lumber camp scenes are striking in their atmosphere. There are some exquisite shots of tree-felling and logging, one scene of the river showing thousands of logs being swept downstream. The locations were selected with an idea for beauty as well as for realism and were exceptionally well photographed.

Wallace Reid in the stellar role of Yard, the derelict, who redeems himself in the lumber camp, does sincere work, which is praiseworthy in effect. Ann Little is again his leading woman, fitting the role of Svea Nord to advantage. Theodore Roberts is excellent as Big John Beaumont, the self-made, fighting American. Raymond Hatton's comedy as Pop Sprowl, the postmaster, always registers. James Cruze presents another remarkable make-up as Langlois, the heavy, and Charles Ogle makes a natural and likable Slim-Sam. Charles West, Nina Byron and Gustav Seyffertitz complete the cast.

Perhaps the reason for "The Source's" big appeal is the fact that the unvarnished element of struggle dominates it from one end to the other. The struggle of Yard to overcome his handicap results in physical and mental thrills in great measure. And, speaking of physical thrills, not the least of them is the mob encounter between the loyal lumberjacks and the hirelings of the disloyal power company.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

With other derelicts Van Twiller Yard (Wallace Reid) is shanghaied off to a lumber camp and there made to work in the forests. Svea Nord (Ann Little), daughter of the superintendent (Noah Beery), takes an interest in him but scorns him when Langlois (James Cruze), the foreman, fells him with a blow from which he does not rise. However, hard work hardens Yard's muscles and it is not long before he thrashes Langlois for an attempt to incite the men to rebel. This occurs before Beaumont (Theodore Roberts), the owner of the camp and he is so impressed that he gives Yard a letter putting him in full charge of the outfit. The logs are to be sent to a sulphite pulp mill down the river. Langlois is secretly in the employ of a pro-German company that plans to hinder Beaumont's activities in this line. Nord is his tool. Yard discovers this and discharges Nord, keeping him on the pay roll for Svea's sake. At first she resents Yard's act but later her father confesses to her and she admires him the more. The time comes when the alien company, which has built a dam across the river, refuses to open it. Beaumont's logs lie by the bank ready to begin their trip to the mills, but there is no water. Followed by his army of faithful lumberjacks, Yard attacks the dam, vanquishes the forces of Langlois and opens the flood gates. And so the situation is saved. As a reward, Yard is made general manager of the company and in his private office which Beaumont has set up for him, he discovers Svea awaiting him.

"The Geezer of Berlin"
(Jewel—Two Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

JEWEL'S extensively advertised production, "The Geezer of Berlin," a travesty on its "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," should prove welcome wherever its more serious predecessor has been shown. In many respects it follows the kaiser picture. For instance, the episode of the officer striking the kaiser is shown, only in "The Geezer" he kicks him in the "royal compartment." The burly blacksmith is shown as a baker, played by Hughie Mack. Von Turpentine and Von Hindenbug are made up very much like the originals and constaontly court the kaiser's good will and fear his bad will. The Clown Quince is there too .

The hero of "The Geezer," ropes the kaiser and flies away with him in an airplane, dropping him through the roof of the bakery and then descending to pelt him with pies. We imagine patriotic American becoming gleeful as the custard rapidly obscures the kaiser's map. They put him in an oven finally and build a fire. Here the travesty skips to "To Hell with the Kaiser."

The two reels contain a fine lot of burlesque in the subtitles and a considerable portion in the pictures. As said before houses that played "The Kaiser" should secure this. Its points of travesty are taken directly from the big picture. And "The Geezer" should go well anywhere. A picture that shows the kaiser being strafed arouses applause anywhere these days whether it is good or bad and "The Geezer" is not bad.

Ray Hanford is the kaiser, while Marvin Lovach, Walter Bytell, Richard Pennell, Jack Stewart, Earl Lynn, Maxine Burkett, Monty Banks and Bert Roach complete the cast. Arthur D. Hotaling directed.

"The High Cost of Weddings"

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

ELINOR FIELD is proving herself a worthy successor to Billie Rhodes in these Strand comedies, and in this her latest, scores a decided success. Her father and the father of her beau, have just been apprised of the fact that a certain fashionable wedding, recently solemnized among their friends, cost $5,000, and they know Mabel (Elinor Field) and Jack (Cullen Landis) are engaged and about to ask for permission to do likewise. Being at their wits' end, the two parents frame up an elopement for the sweethearts, which the latter fall for without suspicion. When all is over Mabel's father declares he has saved $5,000, and so decides to divide the "loot" with the newlyweds.

It's a mighty clean, harmless picture and reflects creditably upon Scott Sydney, who directed.

"The Savage Woman"

(Select—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG'S latest picture is an adaptation from a French novel by Francois Curel entitled "La Fille Sauvage." It is not "Frenchy" in the sense of the word as applied to Latin novels, although probably the original work developed situations fully which in the picturization are only hinted at. The scenario made by Kathryn Stuart traces the fortunes of the titular character from the time Jean Lerier, the Frenchman, discovers her, wild and uncouth, roaming in the jungle, through her life as his mistress in Paris, and finally through the episode in which he learns to love her as a wife.

Miss Young carries her role effectively. In her tiger skins she makes a splendid looking woman and well portrays the untamed, savage creature of the jungle. Her work as the woman of Paris is tinged with not a little sympathy and a pleasant supply of comedy provided by her uneasiness when initiated into the ways of the civilized world. Milton Sills is her opposite and does very good work as Lerier. Marcia Manon makes a striking figure of Aime Durcharme, the courtesan, while Clyde Benson and Edward M. Kimball are seen in other roles.

The production given the film by Edmund Mortimer is adequately realistic and in many respects lavish to a startling degree. The scenes staged in the Abyssinian wilderness are replete with atmosphere and are excellently photographed and lightd. Arthur Edeson was the cameraman.

Miss Young's followers will, no doubt, delight in "The Savage Woman." The picture and her individual work are well up to the standard she has set in her recent productions, while the early scenes coupled with the original makeup of the character give it an individuality that will instantly arouse comment.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

On an expedition through the Abyssinian Mountains Jean Lerier (Milton Sills) meets Renee Benait (Clara Kimball Young), a savage woman of the wilderness, whose only human acquaintance had been her father (Edward M. Kimball), who died of drink. Lerier, thinking of the striking appearance she would make in Paris, takes her back with him, and has the great satisfaction of arousing the jealousy of Aimee Ducharme (Marcia Manon), a woman with whom he was once deeply infatuated. But after a while Renee begins to realize that Lerier does not really love her. She discovers that there is such a thing as a marriage ceremony, and asks him why they are not married. He gives no answer. Furious with rage she smashes somme ancient bits of stone bearing prehistoric inscriptions which were sent to him to decipher. Then relenting she puts out to sea in a rowboat, innocently thinking to go back to her native land where she knows that are many other such stones. Through a series of adventures she finally gets there. Lerier, now realizing that he loves Renee, seeks to drown his sorrow on another expedition. He is captured by a native prince (Clyde Benson), who takes him to an ancient temple to sacrifice him to his goddess. His goddess is none other than Renee, whom he had once seen. And Renee appears, and goes on her knees before Lerier. The natives flee. So the lovers are reunitd in safty.

FROM the story of J. W. Riley has been woven a scenario that gives Sessue Hayakawa such opportunities for the display of his undoubted histrionic ability as to leave no room for conjecture. He handles every situation to the top notch. Every phase of the picture seems to melt into his makeup so that he is truly the perfect exemplification of the part itself. He is a master of "register"; his eyes "speak'" volumes—whether to denote fear, anguish, love, hope or nonchalance—and all of these emotions are called for during the picture's run.

The direction of William Worthington seems to leave nothing to be desired in that respect, and the photography, in many instances, is little short of marvelous, and shows the great possibilities of the camera when capably handled.

It is, perhaps, possible, however, that some slight objection might be raised to one particular scene, where in payment for securing from his putative father—an Admiral in the U. S. Navy—certain secret papers, the vampire, Edna, promises that she will——! The question, naturally arises, she will What? There is no mention of money, and Edna has already made unmistakable overtures in her endeavor to enlist his help in the securing of said papers. But, perhaps, even then the old adage, "Evil be to him who evil thinks" might well apply.

This is a picture which doubtless will be well received wherever shown, and should stamp the Jap as one of the best in the business.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Yukio (Hayakawa), son of Saki San (Esuru Aoki) and Lieut. John Milton (Howard Davies) is twenty-one years old before he learns the true story of his mother's life. He sails as a cabin boy determined to trace his father to America.

Milton, now become an admiral, is transferred to the Pacific coast. Yukio plans to kill him and confides in Edna Kingston (Marian Sais) a spy and adventuress, who has befriended him. Edna, in the pay of Germany, has other ideas as to Yukio's ultimate revenge. An important message is known to be in Milton's possession and Edna, taking advantage of Yukio's love for her, persuades him to steal the document from his father.

Although Yukio goes to the admiral's residence bent upon killing the man, he obtains possession of the papers, which he hands over to Edna. As reward for this act Edna promises her love. She succeeds in eluding Yukio with the paper, hoping to get out of San Francisco before he can claim his reward, but the boy's sense of honor comes to his rescue and he goes back to get the paper from her. Then the woman's true character comes out and Yukio, set upon by her male accomplices, fights all of them and gets the paper, which he restores to his father.

Milton breaks into the room where Yukio is fighting for his life and honor, and is followed by police who arrest the whole spy band. Convalescent in his father's house Yukio abandons ideas of revenge, and determines to enlist in the service of America.

"The Eyes of Julia Deep"

MARY MILES MINTER ran headlong into romance when she clothed herself in the personality of Julia Deep, the heroine of Kate L. McLaurin's "The Eyes of Julia Deep," produced by the American Film under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham and distributed on the Pathe program. Pathe is now distributing the American Film product and this is the first Minter subject that goes the round of its exchanges.

As its first Minter subject, Pathe has not been given the best that the little star has done but it has been given an above-the-average romantic story. It is a good program subject and will make the rounds of the Pathe exchanges, leaving both public and exhibitor well satisfied.

The author has taken the department-store girl and woven around her a romance that gets away from the "old and tried" and develops situations that reveal appealing, human touches and places Miss Minter well up in front with every opportunity to play up her individual characteristics which have made her a star of the screen. Alan Forrest who has been seen opposite Miss Minter in a good many of her successes, again takes up the duties of leading man and gives the same finished quality of work in the role of Terry Hartridge that has characterized his performancese in the past.

Elizabeth Mahoney did the continuity. Miss Mahoney has a number of adaptations to her credit and her work always presents the finished product. She has not failed to live up to her reputation in this work. Some nice bits of comedy are brought to light during the courtship of Julia and Terry and the more serious vein of the drama is nicely contracted with the lighter veins. "The Eyes of Julia Deep" is not an offering which the public will rave over, nor is it one that will have its turn on the screen without eliciting favorable comment from the public. It's a good program offering—what more can be said. Alice Wilson, George Periolat, Ida Easthope, Carl Stockdale and Eugenie Besserer are seen to advantage in minor roles.

The production does not call for lavish sets but holds itself to the modest surroundings of the working girl. The photography is of the best, the lighting had been handled by an expert.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Julia Deep (Mary Miles Minter) is employed at the exchange desk in a large department store. She lives with Mrs. Turner (Ida Easthope), a boarding-house keeper, and formerly housekeeper for Terry Hartridge (Alen Forrest), a father, now deceased. The father had left his son all his wealth, and Terry proceeds to blaze a wide trail through the Gay White Way. The result is that he wakes one morning, finding himself broke.

Terry has a suite of rooms at the home of Mrs. Turner. Above him lives Julia in a modest hall-room. Julia is fond of books, often goes to Terry's rooms while he is out and reads. He returns home one night unexpectedly and finds Julia. He tells her his troubles, and she suggests that he appoint her his guardian. He gets a job as a laborer, and later as a clerk in the department store. He forgets White Lights. They pool their earnings, decide to settle down in a cottage.

"Cactus Crandall"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

ROY STEWART took up the pen as well as the six-shooter in "Cactus Crandall," his latest Western, and it may be said that he proves himself as good at the job of creation as he is at his more familiar task of execution. Particularly does "Cactus Crandall" impress because the author based his story, to a certain extent, on actual happenings on the Mexican border. And in the scenario, prepared by George Elwood Jenks, the action has been expertly handled. The story covers no long lapses of time, the action, in fact, taking place within the short space of a night and a day. Crandall's adventure into the stronghold of the enemy Mexicans, his rescue of the girl and his long ride back to the United States pursued by the bandits are the principal episodes of the story. A wealth of interesting detail serves also the purpose of building up the suspense in these passages of the picture.

Stewart appears in the title role and gives a likable performance from start to finish. Cliff Smith's direction is highly commendable as always. The atmosphere of the real West which he communicates to his work is probably the most striking injected in this type of production. He has some wonderful shots of cattle in the round-up, these being well photographed by Steve Rounds. The fight between the cowboys and bandits is well handled and the thrill when he leaps to the back of the villain's horse and rescues the heroine is a good one.

Marion Marvin, heralded as a "find" at a stenographer's desk is a much rescued heroine. Pete Morrison, William Ellingford and Joe Rickson fill the other principal roles creditably.

STORY AND PLAYERS

Cactus Crandall (Roy Stewart), ranch-owner, believing certain of his cattle have been driven off by a Mexican band headed by Mendoza (Joe Rickson), journeys to Mexico, across the border, to investigate. He receives a cold welcome from the hangers-on in the barroom and dance hall. He meets with his friend Carter (Pete Morrison), who tells him that the Mexicans plan to trap him. Investigation shows that the building is surrounded by Mendoza's guards. Cactus catches sight of Helen (Marion Marvin), a captive American girl. Mendoza has cast her father (William Ellingford) in jail, because the girl has refused to marry him. Carter and Cactus plan their rescue. The former goes to the jail and succeeds in liberating the father. While they are well on their road to the states Carter fires two shots, which is the signal for Cactus to act. He startes a fight in the saloon below, and then while the rough-and-tumble rages, dashes upstairs, overpowers the two guards, knocks Mendoza out, and carries Helen off. They are pursued across into the United States. The cowboys come out and give them battle. Helen and her father are sheltered in the ranch house. Mendoza, who has also followed, succeeds in sneaking into the house and carrying Helen off again, but Cactus gives chase and, overtaking Mendoza, kills him to prevent further trouble.

And making the bird work right in with the players too. The seals furnish a lot of sport and the plot regarding a fortune hunter, an heiress and a bogus countess is continuous. "Crashing Through to Berlin"

(Universal—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

UNDER the auspices of Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Corporation, a digest of the important events leading up to and occurring during the progress of the present World war is released, under the title "Crashing Through to Berlin." The subject is in seven reels, edited by Jack Cohn. Commencing with the murder of the Arch-Duke Ferdinand, which act is conceded to be the first gun fired by the Kaiser as an excuse for declaring war, "Crashing Through to Berlin" reviews in sequence the big events taking place during the first four years of the war. The program issued at the Broadway theatre where the picture opened Sunday night with the S. R. O. out, reads that the events, as picturized, are "authentic and historically-true accounts of the World War, to date."

The whole has been compiled from numerous news weeklies, Government war films and other sources reaching the public through the medium of the screen. Some of the subjects shown in this offering have been seen before, others, as far as the reviewer knows, have not. At all events, each and every foot of this offering is of the utmost interest as was demonstrated by the enthusiastic manner in which the picture was received by a crowded Broadway house on the opening night. There is one objection to be noted and that is, the subject as a whole is in too many feet or two many reels, depending upon the enthusiasm of the audience or individual. This may or may not be an objection as in the minds of many; too much of this sort of screen entertainment cannot be afforded.

There is another point in connection with this offering which is due especial mention, and that is the very clever manner in which it has been edited and subtitled. Some of the best titles that have ever explained a subject for screen presentation are seen in this picture. Each and every one "hits the nail on the head" the first crack. Some have been written so masterfully that they possess the quality of inspiring to a greater degree than the action as portrayed in pictures. They are examples of carefully written explanatories.

Carl Laemmle offers the public a brand of entertainment in "Crashing Through to Berlin" that could hardly be surpassed for its quality to arouse and inspire true patriotism. No props (one exception) have been used or are there any impersonations. The actuality, both in settings and personages, have been shot. The Kaiser, with his withered arm hiding itself in disgrace, is seen marching before his vandals, plunging on to the tune of the ridiculous goose step. The insipid, silly-looking son of his, the Crown Prince, is shown grinning into the camera. No better evidence of his simple brain, could be given than that silly smile. Von Hindenberg, whose death has been reported as many times as the bandit Villa's was during the Mexican uprising, is shot by the camera as he is leaving Potsdam Palace. So much for the German side.

Following the episode of the Arch-Duke's death, come scenes following the Huns raid through Belgium; King Albert himself and his troops; General Leman, defender of Liege, the ruins of the Battle of Liege and German occupancy of Belgium. The British Grand Fleet is shown in action, a brief review of the obstacles which had to be overcome by the sons of Italy before they reached and conquered the Austrian hordes; General Cadorra, Commander-in-Chief of the Italian Army is shown in a close-up; the battlefield of Verdun. Then we see President Wilson appearing before a joint session of Congress, advising that war be declared on Germany; President Wilson signing the declaration of war and von Bernstroff, German ambassador, leaving America with his passports. The sinking of the Aztec has been portrayed by aid of props and miniature work; the Lusitania is shown at her dock in New York, prior to her last voyage across; France's navy in action; Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia (British), reviewing England's troops; French Marines (this is probably the first time that the French Marines have been seen in action), during the opening scenes of the war; Earl Kitchener; Papa Joffre and last but not least, "Black Jack" Pershing. Some of the best pictures that have ever been presented of General Pershing, on this side and over there, have been compiled for review in this offering. Our troops in training, leaving for France and then their hearty welcome by the French. The last episode of this offering show the activities of our air fleets. A striking picture of the famous French Ace, Guynemer, who fell to his death early in the summer, is shown and a close-up, revealing on his breast, every medal that can be awarded by the French Government for bravery. It may be mentioned that this picture received an immense amount of applause by the Broadway audience.

Many of the episodes enacted in this offering have been seen before but none of their entertainment value has been lost. They will all stand a second rehearsal and the patrons of any theatre will welcome every foot of seven-odd thousand that go to make for "Crashing Through to Berlin." The photography, in general, is exceptional. By judicious cutting and excellent sub-titles, events move in logical sequence and with much the same suspense as is sustained in a good mystery drama.

"The Bird of Prey"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THERE isn't a doubt but that the works of Guy de Maupassant, the French writer, have inspired many a scenario writer. In the case of William Fox's late offering starring Gladys Brockwell, it is admittedly so, for in the salutary remarks following the main title as it is flashed on the screen, appears this announcement, "suggested by a short story of de Maupassant." Charles Kenyon, who has done most of Miss Brockwell's stories, is credited with the inspiration and elaboration. Mr. Kenyon has demonstrated by his past performances that he can write for the screen and develop something worth while in dramatic construction. "The Bird of Prey," his latest work to be offered to the public for consideration, will depend in a great measure, for its popularity, on the frame of mind in which it catches its audiences.

First of all it is a distinct sex picture. It opens with the sex problem well in the rays of the spot light and so it continues throughout the run. There is never a moment that Adele Durant is not on "the auction block" excepting in the last few flashes of actionable drama, and then, the happy ending.

Considered as a sex picture, "The Bird of Prey" has been handled with infinite care with two exceptions, viz.: the action in the first reel which reveals an "accidental" murder which could have been substituted with far better results by a less repulsive episode and the action in the last reel which shows Adele Durant stabbing to death her unprincipled Nemesis. All will admit that Pedro Vasquale deserved such a death but few will welcome its actual perpetration on the screen. It were better to have either left this episode to the imagination of the audience or else have left Pedro's fate to the hand of Providence.

But, because "The Bird of Prey" is distinctly a sex picture, is not reason for adverse criticism. On the contrary, it is a good and sufficient reason why it should be commended, for as a sex picture it has been developed, with the above two exceptions, with a subtle sort of frankness that brings it within the realm of realism. Because such affairs are prevalent is all the more reason why the public at large should take cognizance of them, and no better exposition of such unfortunate affairs could be found than that exposed in "The Bird of Prey." If we admit nothing but the truths that inspire us to better things, then the truths that if practiced will degrade are to multiply in the absence of opposition. Cognizance of such fact is the best preventive and a preventive is what is needed.

The picture as shown for review evidences one of two things—either Director Edward J. Le Saint has been careless as to detail or the detailed work that is missing in the picture as shown for review, has found its way to the cutter's waste basket. Which ever it is, the fact remains that such carelessness has taken from the picture a certain convincing element that should be felt. Reference is made to the episodes in the later reelage which show, or more properly, are meant to show, the starving condition of the band of Americans, held captive, by the Mexican brigands. We are led to believe that this little band of women, children and men, are in a state of starvation, yet there is nothing to indicate it, other than explanatory sub-titles. The men, women and children look the picture of health, yet we are led to believe that they pay fifty dollars for a loaf of bread.

In all other respects, Director Le Saint has given us a production, teeming with action, picturesque in its Western settings and heightened to the ninth degree by the excellent performance of Miss Brockwell and cast. Miss Brockwell cannot be too highly recommended for her ability to act before the camera. She is an artist whether she be handling the lighter veins of the drama or its comedy or emotional element. Her work is always commendable. L. C. Shumway, who has been seen in several of Miss Brockwell's late pictures, is not given prominence in this offering as he meets an untimely death in the first reel. Herbert Heyes has the straight lead. Nor is his role given over-prominence. Willard Louis, as the Mexican villain, has the real big male role of the production. His work in this character role is excellent. The photography and lighting is of the best. The technical man has been given little chance to show his cleverness in arranging the spots and overheads as most of the action takes place in the open and the California sun has substituted to perfection.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Adele Durant (Gladys Brockwell) comes under suspicion when she is seen bending over the dead body of Dick Brown (L. C. Shumway). An admirer, Robert Bradley (Herbert Heyes), a friend of Brown's, threatens to denounce Adele as a murderer unless she places herself under his direction. In punishment for her treatment of Brown, Bradley takes her to a lonely spot in Mexico and places her in a disreputable dance-hall, where she becomes one of the most notorious of women, and leader of a band of smugglers. Pedro Vasquale, the Mexican who carries out Adele's instructions and secretly admires her, is plotting to kill a new-comer into that region. The new-comer is a young American who takes possession of a rich mine. He proves to be Bradley. Adele hurries to warn the stranger and finds that she has troubled herself to save the man she hates. He persuades her to flee with him to the States. They are pursued by the bandits and during their flight Adele learns to love and respect the man whom she thought she hated. They come upon a band of Americans being held captives by Pedro, the bandit. Adele and Bradley are captured and Pedro threatens to kill Bradley unless Adele acceeds to his wishes. She consents but is saved by the arrival of a band of cowboys who were summoned by the captives released on Adele's promise to give herself to Pedro. Adele and Bradley are united.

"Inside the Lines"

(Pyramid-World—Six Reels)

SOMETHING different in the war drama class is offered by World Film in the screen version of Earl Derr Biggers' stage success, "Inside the Lines." Not alone is something new in the war drama offered, but the personnel of the cast presents a face, familiar to the spoken drama, but a stranger before the camera. Strange as his face may seem, Lewis S. Stone is no stranger to the dramatic art as registered by the camera. He gives to this production a resounding punch at the start, and the echo of his first appearance is heard throughout the six reels with dramatic emphasis, and a man's personality that rivets attention. Therefore, it can be safely asserted that the exhibitor and public get something different when "Inside the Lines" is presented on the screen.

It is not alone different, but it represents an above-the-average photodramatic production. In personnel of cast, rapid-fire action, dramatic episodes, continuity, photography, lighting and production, it shines. It's not big in the sense that we would refer to a spectacular drama, with trench scenes, booming guns and marching soldiers, but it is big from a straight dramatic angle. It has substance, strength of plot and story and does not presume to rest upon its merits as a patriotic subject.

When Spy No. 1932 is ordered to proceed to Egypt by the Imperial Secret Service in Wilhelmstrasse, Berlin, and make way with Captain C. J. Woodhouse, of the English Army, No. 1932 is for all the world working hand-and-foot with the Kaiser. With the introduction of the American girl, Jane Gerson, a New York buyer of fashionable gowns, the slightest and most subtle suggestion is offered to identify No. 1932. But the next reel follows, and the next, and still another, until the climax, and the identity of No. 1932 remains a secret. The suspense has been cleverly sustained. Not, however, without slight discrepancies creeping into the texture of the plot, as it has been woven by the scenario writer.. He falls to the level of those scenario writers who couldn't get any further than the third or fourth scene of the initial reel, were it not for "convenient coincidents." But these defects are few and far between. The play, in general, is so fascinating that the scenario writer's carelessness in this respect will be waved aside for more interesting and sustaining facts to come.

Earl Derr Biggers has shown by such works as "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the George M. Cohan success, and voluminous writings that he appreciates and understands the finer points of dramatic construction. In "Inside the Lines" he has fashioned an excellent frame-work for picturization. Pyramid Film Company's screen version of it testifies to the correctness of the statement.

David M. Hartford directed and deserves a lot of credit for the production he has given it. Marguerite Clayton, who until her appearance opposite George Cohan in the screen version of "Hit-the-Trail Holliday" a short time ago, had been absent from the screen for some time, is seen opposite Mr. Stone in "Inside the Lines." She gives a good performance. Credit is not given the other members of the cast.. The one who appears in the role of the Globe Trotter, is deserving of mention. His work in this picture is one of the shining lights. The one appearing as the commander of the English forces at Gibraltar, is an excellent type, but an amateur actor.

"Inside the Lines" is destined to make a hit on any and all programs. It has the punch that gets over and brings results.

"The Girl From Bohemia"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

ACCORDING to Pathe's announcement, Irene Castle's last appearance on the screen is in "The Girl From Bohemia," shown for review this week. Mrs. Castle, however, denies this.

Her work before the camera has always carried with it the same fascinating grace, the same poise and the same artistry that characterized her appearance on the ball-room floor and as dancing partner of her late husband, Vernon Castle, who met his death while in the service of his country. Mrs. Castle is one of the few personages appearing before the camera who can elicit the admiration and praise of her audiences by sheer force of character and personality. She is not a dramatic actress in the same sense as one would refer to Mme. Nazimova, Ethel Barrymore or John Drew. Her value lies in her wonderful personality and grace of manner. She is one of the very few screen celebrities who can execute the mere act of exiting from a set and do so with significance attached to her movements. Her very poise is grace personified.

In "The Girl from Bohemia," her latest work, she is not called upon to execute any of the artistic touches of a real dramatic artist. The authoress, whether with intention or not, has fashioned a script which places the role of the Bohemian Girl before an audience with all prominence. And Director L. B. McGill has never once failed to bring to light the star's predominating characteristics. He has let her interpret the part in her own way and in doing so has used sound judgment. Mrs. Castle fits into the environment of Greenwich Village, like a hand-made glove and when the elusive dollar draws her from her Bohemian home and places her in a small country town with a maiden aunt and little to amuse her in the way of attractive young men or girl companions, she is resigned to her fate and makes the best of it.

In short, without attempting to make a "mountain of a mole-hole," she presents her ownself, as she would expect to live if she were the Queen of Bohemia and later, the mistress of a country estate. The story which has been given Mrs. Castle is not the best. It closes with a rather limp attempt at patriotism and presents nothing in the way of originality. Mrs. Castle is the main objective. She is the life of the picture and her many followers will welcome this offering with open arms. The press sheets do not credit the supporting cast for their appearances. Mrs. Castle's leading man gave a good performance, and the one who was seen in the role of the saloon keeper is an ideal character man. He has been seen in other productions and his work is always finished. The photography is clear and has been heightened by good lightings. The exteriors are beauties.

One of O. Henry's Most Fascinating Stories, "A Bird of Bagdad"—Eddie Earle

(General Two-Reel Release)

"A Bird of Bagdad"—either Rudyard Kipling or O. Henry—give you all one guess. Right! It's an O. Henry. Only a Kipling or an Henry could pen such a title. It might be the work of either or both. But it's not alone the title that's fascinating but the story that has been built around it. It smacks of O. Henry's wonderful imagination from title to finish. Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres, Frank Kingsley, Frank Norcross and Arthur Donaldson have the principal roles. The picture was produced under the direction of Kenneth Webb for the General program. It is in two reels, but when the run has finished you will have received the average amount of screen entertainment that is generally expected from a five-reeler. "Caliph" Quigg runs a cheap restaurant by day and a seeker of adventure by night. Ed. Simmons and Bill Hillman are two hard-working employes of Ogden, a prosperous harness maker. Laura, the harness-maker's daughter, is the object of both their affections. Laura has ideas of her own regarding a prospective husband but dares not communicate them to her father, fearing the harness strap. She is only a kid and should not be dreaming of husbands. Her dad is insane on the subject of riddles and when the question of which she shall choose for a husband is broached he asks the following riddle: "What kind of a hen lays the longest?" Get O. Henry's answer in the snappiest of climaxes.

Gloria Swanson, Triangle Beautiful Star in "Shifting Sands"—Joe King Supporting

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"Shifting Sands," written by Charles C. Dazey and produced for the Triangle program under the direction of Albert Parker, features Gloria Swanson, the little Triangle girl who became one of our leading stars over night, and Joe King. Others in support are Harvey Clark, Leone Carton, Lillian Langdon and Arthur Millett. Miss Swanson is known to the public as "the sweetest girl in filmdom." There is not a girl appearing in the silent drama who is more deserving of this title than this same Miss Swanson. She won her laurels through sheer ability, greatly enhanced by that elusive quality, personality and personal beauty. "Her Decision," "Station Content" and "You Can't Believe Everything" are some of the dramatic features in which she starred. Her late work, "Shifting Sands," presents her in the role of Marcia Grey, whose ambition is to become a portrait painter. But the New York art dealers give her little consideration and less encouragement. On one of her many visits to the art dealers, she meets John Sanford, a wealthy art patron, who takes an interest in her. Later, Marcia is insulted by von Holtz, a young German, and because she rejects him, he brings false charges against her. She is sent to Blackwell's Island. On her release she is befriended by the Salvation Army and devotes her life to welfare work. Stanford marries her, ignorant of her past. Von Holtz, at the outbreak of the war, enters the Stanford home to obtain valuable papers. He is detected by Marcia and he threatens to expose her to her husband if she does not assist him. She refuses and tells her husband all.

Wallace Reid in "The Source"—Story of Adirondack Lumbering District

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Wally Reid as a lumber-jack—the star of "Believe Me, Xantippi," "Less Than Kin" and other successes, is seen in the picturesque role of the lumber-jack in the Adirondack Mountains of New York. "The Source" is the title of the picture. It was written by Clarence Budington Kelland and adapted to the screen by Monte Katterjohn. George Melford, who is responsible for the direction of many of Sessue Hayakawa's pictures, directed "The Source." The management of the ———— theatre, where "The Source" will be shown on ———— of ———— week, cannot recommend this feature too highly to his patrons. It represents one of the most entertaining photodramatic offerings in which Mr. Reid has ever appeared. One of its strongest points is the story—the story is there from start to finish. Mr. Reid has gained a reputation on the screen that is held by few stars today. He has personality, dramatic ability and is one of our best light comedians, as he has so many times demonstrated. In "The Source" he is supported by Ann Little, in the featured feminine role; Theodore Roberts, the "ace" of character men; James Cruze, another character "ace"; Noah Berry; Raymond Hatton, who has few equals in character acting; Charles West, Charles Ogle, Nina Byron and Gustav Seyffertitz. The role of Van Twiller Yard, a young man given to excessive drinking, is given to Mr. Reid. While under the influence of liquor, he enters a cheap boarding house in Boston, from which he is shanghaied and carried to the Adirondack lumbering district. The experience is the making of a real man.

"The Geezer of Berlin," Wherein Old Bill Gets a Custard Pie Bath

(Jewel-Universal Two-Reel Comedy)

A travesty on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin"—what could be more satisfying than to see Old Kaiser Bill getting a bath of custard pies and the "Clown Prince" mimicked into ridicule. Well, "The Geezer of Berlin" does this and some more. The Jewel-Universal, under the direction of Arthur D. Hotaling, has produced a new Kaiser. The Geezer and the boy—that Geezer is put to the test. Everything that could possibly happen to a man of the Geezer's stamp, happens to this fellow. "The Geezer of Berlin" is in two reels, and within those two reels there is jammed enough comedy-farce to sustain a ten-reeler, because from the first flash the Geezer and the Clown Prince are raked from head to feet and made the goat. There is the Geezer of Berlin, the Clown Prince, Don Hindendoig, Von Turpentine, Cancellor Von Bethman-Bowlegs, Palace Cop, a Buxom Baker, his Daughter, the Doughboy and a German Germ. With such an array of talent to be made the butt of innumerable jokes and ridicule, what else could be expected excepting a half-hour of riproaring fun and intense satisfaction. Nell Saalman, Ruth Lackaye, Edward Jobson, Edward Saunders, Ethel Pepperell, Albert Rockett and Charles Dudley are seen in the principal supporting roles. Roy Stewart in Play Written by Himself, "Cactus Randall"—Story of Southwest

Others in the cast are Pete Morrison, William Ellengord and Joe Rickson. He sure has penned a good one in "Cactus Crandall" and his character part of the title role is put over with a bang. Cactus owns a large ranch in the Southwest and wakes one morning to find that he is short five hundred steers. He suspects his foreman, Jim Rider, who has disappeared. Crandall starts out in search of the missing steers and his foreman. Make all the use of the exploitation of your stars that you can, and keep the material before you. It is a good thing to file all the material you get about the players for future reference. But one of the important parts in exploiting any star picture is in telling the public the character of a picture in which the player is to be seen.

These Ad Talks will provide the material along these lines. If a certain player is popular with you, talk about her and try to tell the public just the sort of a picture that you are offering. It will make business for you.

"On the Quiet"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

YOU wouldn't believe slap-stick comedy was in John Barrymore's line, but he can fall into a bathtub and sleep in ash cans with all the slap-stick knowledge of a Charlie Chaplin of a Mack Sennett star. "On the Quiet," which marks the first screen appearance of this popular star of the spoken drama on the Paramount program since "The Man from Mexico" and "Are You a Mason," were seen three or four years ago, is not a slap-stick comedy, but there are bits of this comedy brand brought to light and in all justice to Jack, these bits are emphasized and registered with artistry. With the few exceptions of slap-stick, the screen version of Augustus Thomas' stage success, in which Willie Collier starred, is straight-from-the-shoulder comedy-drama of the cleanest and most enjoyable type. Mr. Exhibitor can run these five reels through his projector, appoint himself a committee of one on reception, and bid everyone a hearty welcome and an unashamed au revoir, but not good-bye, for the man, woman or child who sees Jack Barrymore in "On the Quiet" is coming right back for more with the following visits of this star. Therefore, before going further with this review, place your bets now and get down on the odds—to win.

Chester Withey handled the megaphone during the reproduction of Mr. Thomas' work for the screen. Director Withey needs no introduction to the exhibitors of the country and all the praise that could be accorded him in this review would not overestimate his ability. One production made by Director Withey comes to mind as we write this criticism—"The Auction Block." You exhibitors cashed in on that one, didn't you? Then you're taking no chances with this late work of Director Withey. After this much in praise of Mr. Withey, let us call his attention to one fact noticeable in his production of "On the Quiet"—never let Jack Barrymore, or anyone else, supposed to be in their right mind, leave their traveling bag, and especially the one that contains their marriage certificate, at the station and forget forever afterwards that they owned such a piece of property. It's all wrong, Oscar.

Now for the comedy element—and it's all comedy—from start to finish. In short, the best ever, comes to light in "On the Quiet" and friend Jack puts it over in great shape. A bit too anxious at times, to register, but when it comes down to "cold turkey," Jack never misses fire. With his dumb friend, the cat, his chance acquaintance, the bookmaker, and his life-saver the ash can and forget-me-not, the booze, Jack swings through the scenes of "On the Quiet," just gathering up the laughs with both hands. Some pretty good comedy has to be staged in order to extract a laugh from the hardened reviewers sitting in a projection room with the thermometer hovering around the century mark, but Jack Barrymore did just that. And the brand of laughs that we hear from the boy and his best girl just in from the country, is the kind that emanated from the front seat of Paramount's new projection room. They have to come pretty good to get these results.

We would like to see Mr. Barrymore in a straight drama—something like "Peter Ibbetson." He is such a through artist that comedy comes as readily as straight drama. It's a toss-up but we still stick to our wish for his appearance on the screen in a straight drama.

Lois Meredith is given the role of Agnes Colt and Miss Meredith makes a pretty picture. She could have been a bit more enthusiastic in her work and injected an ounce or two of the so-called "pep," but on the whole, her work has been done well. Frank Losee has a character role of little importance as are the roles of the remaining members of the cast, including J. W. Johnston, Al Hickman, who as the reporter makes the mistake that all "movie" reporters make—that of appearing with pad and pencil and writing dexterously throughout the interview; Helen Greene, Cyril Chadwick, Frank H. Belcher, who in the role of the bookmaker is fine; Nan Christy, Dell Boone, Dan Mason, Frank Hilton, Otto Okuga and Louise Lee.

"The Love Swindle"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

EDITH ROBERTS as Diana Rosson in The Love Swindle essays a role requiring no small capacity, and that she acquits herself creditably is readily conceded. As a rich girl she shows all the earmarks of the present-day well-bred girl, and when posing as a working girl, her demureness—while not quite that of some shop-girls, still is sufficiently real as to be convincing. She is ably seconded by Emmanuel Turner, who as Dick Webster, makes a real, honest, matter-of-fact auto salesman.

On the other hand Frotwell (Leo White), a fortune hunting spendthrift, with a keen eye on Diana's fortune rather than on the girl herself, gives a fairly good account of himself, but in poses and mannerisms emulates the comic page lordling, rather than the real.

The selection of locations shows the master hand, and in point of photography there is scarcely a weak point to be noted. Especially commendable scenes are those of the country club, and a torrential downpour of rain wherein Diana's auto gets stalled, and causes the meeting between her and Dick.

The story is by Rex Taylor, its scenario by Fred Myton, while Jack Dillon directed.

It is a picture that should and doubtless will find ready acceptance in any community.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Diana Rosson (Edith Roberts) is a wealthy, cultured girl, not of the pampered variety, and she rejects with scorn the several eligibles trotted out by her aunt (Clarissa Selwynne), declaring that she wants a real man, not one of such that her aunt describes as "in our set, dear." To get away from their unwelcome attentions, she autos to her country estate, is caught in a downpour of rain, and then on account of a breakdown is compelled to finish the journey afoot, only to find "Greycourt," her house in the hands of a quartette of ugly-looking burglars. At this juncture, however, Dick Webster (Emmanuel White) happens to be caught in a similar predicament on the same road, and makes for the only house showing signs of habitation. Here he encounters the four burglars, and so endears himself to Diana. She later tries all the wiles known to feminity to win his love, but having seen her at the Country Club sipping cocktails and smoking cigarettes, he decides that though a nice girl, Diana has decidedly been spoiled, but does not tell her this.

She therefore decides on another plan, that of posing as her sister, who had run away from home. In this she succeeds admirably, and they are married, and only by a peculiar twist of fate does he learn that he has been duped.

He is at first chagrined and crestfallen, but an explanation of Diana is accepted, and they are happy in each others love. She gains her point in obtaining a real man for a husband, much to the dismay and disgust of her titled suitors.

"The Changing Woman"

(O. Henry-Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

A STORY of a soubrette's singing having such an effect upon a body of tense, though well meaning South American Indians as to cause them to abduct her and carry her away to the mountains, and who, on being rescued goes back to the old life in the gay palaces of a southern republic, and her ultimate reclamation is the theme unraveled in this mildly interesting feature. Nina Girard (Hedda Nova) is the center figure in the play, her rescuer is John Armstrong (Frank Glendon), and the balance of the cast are "merely players therein."

Perhaps the most remarkable and noteworthw feature is the wonderfully impressive scenery, which includes wide expanses of woodland, crag and mountain side, all of which is well photographed.

Hedda Nova, with her bewitching eyes and captivating manners gets all possible out of the picture, which by no stretch of the imagination can be classed as a record breaker. It has some entertaining features, however, and doubtless will please.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Live Triangle Items

President Harry E. Aitken of the Triangle Film Corporation and President S. A. Lynch of the Triangle Distributing Corporation are expected on the Coast within the next few days, where they will spend several weeks at the producing plant of Triangle Plays at Culver City. R. W. Lynch, vice-president of the Distributing Corporation, has been at the studios for several weeks. No hint is given at the producing plant that the coming of the presidents will mean any material change in the policy now effective with respect to producing Triangle plays.

Triangle is to introduce a new photoplayer, who has made good on the musical-comedy and vaudeville stage, having contracted Wellington Cross to appear in a number of subjects, the first of which will be a comedy-drama. Lawrence Windom, who came to the Coast with Taylor Holmes, has been selected to direct Cross in his first photoplay, which is "Grey Parasol," a comedy-drama by Fred Jackson, New Yory playwright. Cross came to Los Angeles on Orpheum vaudeville, where he closed last week, and this week began his first work in films. Claire Anderson, Joe Bennett, Frank Thorn and Ed. Brady are in the cast for this subject.

Taylor Holmes is to be directed by Christy Cabanne, but work on his first subject, "A Regular Fellow," has not been started and cast has not been named. Dr. Goodman, of the Triangle scenario department, is the author of this subject, and cast will be made up this week.

Vitagraph News Bits

William Duncan has the last few scenes for the last episode of "A Fight for a Million" serial to film, and then the serial will be completed. Following this Mr. Duncan will produce a propaganda picture for the Government, to be contributed by the Vitagraph Company for the next Liberty Loan. This will be about one reel, and then comes another long grind of a fifteen-episode serial for this director-actor. The working continuity for the new serial has been received, but Mr. Duncan has so far kept it in the original sealed package, believing he will save worry by so preserving it until time for production work arrives.

Miss Bess Meredyth has prepared an original story and continuity, which will serve as a vehicle for Earle Williams' next Vitagraph subject. Grace Darmond is to continue as his leading woman, and James Young has been engaged as director.

David Smith upon the completion of his present subject, "By the World Forgot," which has Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon as leads, will take up the direction of Bessie Love in her first offering for Vitagraph. This week the Smith company is making exteriors, supposedly to be on an island in the vicinity of Laguna Beach.

Roy H. McCray, who for more than a year has served as technical man at the Vitagraph studio, this week took up the direction of the Montgomery and Rock company in the making of two-reel Big V Comedies. McCray is a former actor and director, who served at the Universal and other companies in these capacities.

The Larry Semon company is also beginning the making of its first five-reel Big V Comedy.

Nell Shipman has completed her work in the Vitagraph propaganda picture to be used by the Government during the Fourth Liberty Loan drive. This week she was guest of honor at the Red Cross Tea Room at the Kinema theatre.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

With the arrival of Jesse L. Lasky at the Coast studios August 3rd it became known that practically all the producing forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be transferred to the West Coast for winter and spring production work.

Plans announced by Mr. Lasky provide that all possible work will continue at the Eastern studios of the company, but eventually Elsie Ferguson, Jack Barrymore, Shirley Mason, Ernest Traux and others will come to the Coast shortly, as subjects now planned are finished in the East. This means that the winter and spring season at the Hollywood studios of the company, as well as the one built by the Bosworth organization, will be used to full capacity, and it is probable additional facilities may be needed for such a large producing organization.

All companies are continuing at the studio this week, taking the greatest possible advantage of the excellent filming conditions of the present time, regardless of the extremely warm weather.

Frances Marion, who for almost two years has been writer of continuity for Mary Pickford Artcraft subjects, left August 4th for the East, where she will embark for Europe on her mission for the Government. Prior to her leaving members of the studio staff gave her a farewell at her Hollywood home. Practically all the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and many of the professionals being present. Miss Marion plans to be absent from the studio about six months, her leave of absence providing that period. However, this may be extended to meet the desire of the Federal officers, who sought Miss Marion to make the survey of European conditions preparatory for the rehabilitation work among wounded soldiers in America.

Fox Studio Doings

Theda Bara is to remain in Los Angeles for still another production, it became known this week. Miss Bara this week will appear in the last scenes for "The She Devil," from the original story by Neje Hopkins. This has a Spanish atmosphere, and for it a Spanish village of an unusually large proportion was built at Brown's ranch, in the Santa Monica mountains. Al Roscoe is leading man in this picture, and other principals are George McDaniel and Fred Bond.

Lynn Reynolds and the Tom Mix company began work in Arizona on "The Two-Gun Men" this week, and Edward J. Le Saint, with Gladys Brockwell as star, will finish "The Strange Woman" within the next ten days.

Frank Lloyd has written an original photoplay for the next William Farnum picture. According to the present script, this is to be Farnum's greatest fight picture, as there will be three or more fist encounters. The present title on the story is "A Man of Power."

The Fox production forces have been reduced one company by the recent leaving of Jewel Carmen. This unit was directed by Robert Thornby, who has also left the Fox company, together with other members of his staff.

Universal Newsettes

Production work at Universal is going along at full speed, but by a very unusual train of circumstances there was not a new subject put into production last week. It so happens that all companies have not completed the films on which they were working.

Eugene B. Lewis has been named as associate manager of the continuity department, which is headed by Elliot Clawson. Lewis has had a wide experience as writer, and served as head of departments at several of the most important studios of the West Coast. George Hall, former newspaper writer, is a new member of the Universal scenario department.

Waldemar Young, former scenario writer for Universal, who prepared the scripts for the last six Rawlinson subjects, including "The Man Trap," "The Crookedest Man in the World," "The Clean-Up" and "Fast Company," has been re-engaged and will write exclusively for Monroe Salisbury. For the past several months Mr. Young has been engaged in newspaper work at San Francisco. He is author of "A Press Agent to Julius Caesar," vaudeville sketch, which played the big time circuits for several consecutive years.

Announcement is made that Jack Mulhall, who has been playing in "The Brass Bullet," serial, is to be featured in comedy-drama as soon as the remaining two episodes of this serial are filmed.

The first of a series of two-reelers to be made by Harry Harvey and featuring Helen Gibson was begun this week. This has been titled "The Tigress," and will have Mark Fenton, Frank Whitson, Jean Calhoun and Frank E. Lee as principals.

The Lyons & Moran Comedy Company, making Star Comedies, last week leased a large pool at a private home of a retired millionaire east of Pasadena, where they took scenes for the comedy titled "All in the Swim." The Lyons & Moran troop were augmented for this comedy by six professional diving girls from the Venice beach.

Messrs. Lyons and Moran have been receiving many compliments as the result of their comedy "A Duck Out of Water" being held over at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, for the second consecutive week. This is said to be a precedent for a comedy of this size.

Here and There

An accident which caused injury to Carl Stockdale prevented work of the William Russell company last week. Stockdale is taking the principal character role in the subject in the making, "When a Man Rides Alone." It is believed he will be sufficiently recovered by the latter part of the week to appear before the camera, and if such is the case the company will go to San Diego, where the remainder of the picture is to be made. This story is by Stephen Fox, and in it Mr. Russell has as his leading woman Olga Grey.

Lois Weber is shortly to begin the filming of a new subject, having completed "Orange Blossoms," which is a drama of the type of "The Price of a Good Time," written by the same author, Marion Orth. Besides Mildred Harris, who is featured in "Orange Blossoms," the principals are Louis J. Cody, Edward Peil, Edith Chapman, George Nichols and Helen Rossen. Miss Weber has had a strenuous time for the past few weeks, as she has been editing two films, preparing story for her next production and devoting considerable time to the work of the Woman's Division of the Motion Picture War Service Association, she being chairman of the woman's section or committee.

The only new subject put in production at the Robert Brunton studios is that which will star Louise Glaum, and at present is known as "Part White." Miss Glaum in this story takes the role of a quarter-breed Indian maiden.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Mae Murray won first honors by being the first star to complete her 300 feet of film and have it in the hands of Adolph Zukor, chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Fourth Liberty Loan.

Even in Cody, Wyoming, Geraldine Farrar could not get away from the ubiquitous press reporter but had to submit to being interviewed for the Park County Enterprise, published in Cody once a week. It was founded by Buffalo Bill and Colonel Peake. Farrar's picture is the first metal cut that has ever appeared in this western sheet.

The Blackton youngsters, who were so cunning in "Country Life," produced by Paula Blackton several years ago for Vitagraph, will be seen as Belgian refugees in "The Common Cause," the production now being filmed by their father, J. Stuart Blackton.

Tom Moore entertained four actor friends now in service, at his country home at Gedney Farms last week. He had a good time proving to them that they were better marksmen than golfers.

Mae Marsh proved herself a real "marine" when she found time the hottest week this summer to send her boys in the 145th Machine Gun battalion, stationed at Camp Kearny, Cal., 200 pairs of khaki socks and 5,000 cigarettes.

What could be higher praise? Harriet Underhill, in reviewing "The Great Love," says of Lillian Gish and Robert Harron, "Both may be pointed to as shinning examples of what screen lovers should be. There is nothing left for them to learn." And Robert Harron has enlisted and will soon be sailing over sea.

Louis Sherwin, well-known dramatic critic on the Globe, in order to learn first hand all the angles of the picture business is playing a bit in the last Alice Brady production which is being filmed under the working title of "The Golden Fleece." Mr. Sherwin also made the adaptation for a previous Alice Brady picture.

David Powell, whose most recent release is "Her Husband's Honor," with Edna Goodrich, will open in a new stage play in Chicago some time this month. Mr. Powell plays the lead in this Alice Brady picture.

Charles Maigne, heretofore scenario writer par excellence, has stepped into the director's class with this newest Brady-Select picture and has chosen the Catskills for most of the exteriors.

A letter from an ambulance driver, Maxwell Rose, a former Cornell man, states that Sidney Drew comedies are being shown within one kilometer of the front line trenches and that they are the most popular ones with the men.

It is reported that Helene Chadwick will be featured in two-reel dramas released by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Miss Chadwick gave an extremely clever portrayal of a girl of the underworld in "The House of Hate," and it is as such a girl that she will appear in all probability in the first two dramas whose titles are tentatively given as "The Honest Thief" and "Get-away Kate."

It is rumored that Olga Petrova will not appear in pictures again until after a return to the stage, which she contemplates for this fall. She has in view a play, "The High Altar," written by herself and W. E. Roberts, an English author.

In Nazimova's latest picture, "Eye for Eye," one episode calls for a nunnery, a Roman Catholic Cathedral, and a Mohammedan mosque. All of them were reproduced right in the studio, though it took every inch of floor space there.

Virginia Pearson's latest interest is in a process which she has invented to preserve flowers and ferns. It gives to them the appearance of a shimmering brilliant ornament which, placed upon a white arm or neck, gives an exceedingly attractive effect. Vive the inventive spirit.

May Allison is so thoroughly in the spirit of her new picture, "The Testing of Mildred Vane," which has to do with spiritualism, that she insists she feels the workings of a subtle influence while she is working on the picture.

Peggy Hopkins, having finished "It's Greek to Us," a James Montgomery Flagg comedy, is resting at her home in Great Neck, which really means racing around over Long Island in her Stutz roadster.

Frank Mills, Leading Man, Whom Metro Has Engaged to Appear Opposite Edith Storey

Charles Brabin, Metro director, who has just finished "His Bonded Wife" with Emmy Wehlen, is the proud possessor of two service stars, as both of his brothers are in active service "over there."

George Siegmann, the German spy in "Hearts of the World," has just received a commission in the United States Army and will leave for France soon. He appeared in person as one of the attractions at the celebration of the 300th performance of this Griffith success.

Niles Welch has arrived at the West Coast Lasky studios where he received a most enthusiastic reception. He expects to begin work in the near future.

Barbara Castleton is a pretty lucky person to return from a month's vacation to be sent to Lake Placid for exteriors, as there is some difference between the temperature there and at Fort Lee. Her next feature is "The Driving power" with Montague Love. She is the only woman in the cast.

The new Enid Bennett picture which Fred Niblo is directing has a Hawaiian setting which calls for a mastery of the ukelele by the heroine. "Perfectly simple" says Miss Bennett after one lesson by an adept in the gentle art.

William D. Taylor, that popular West Coast director, recently stopped off in New York on his way to an officers' training camp in Halifax. Mr. Taylor was born in Ireland, witness the middle initial "D," standing for Desmond, and was educated in England at Clifton College.

That Mahlon Hamilton will make a splendid foil for Kitty Gordon in her new pictures produced by her own company, is the concensus of opinion. Mr. Hamilton has appeared recently with Elsie Ferguson and Alice Brady in "The Danger Mark" and "The Death Dance." He admits having been educated at the Maryland Agricultural College. Perhaps that is a reason for his marvelous physique.

Since beginning work in "Peck's Bad Girl" Mabel Normand feels qualified to advise the old woman who lived in the shoe. "Caring for children is a simple matter," says Miss Normand; "just hold the baby on your lap and let the rest play around in the grass." It worked perfectly with twenty-one youngsters, all under six, who appeared in "Peck's Bad Girl."

When Will Rogers signed up with Rex Beach to play the title role in "Laughing Bill Hyde," he made the condition that he should not be asked to play a "handsome hero." "I ain't no beauty," said he, "and no powder and paint ain't going to make me look like one."

Local 306 to Put Increased Wage-Scale Into Effect

WE are advised by Local 306, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., of New York City that upon the expiration on Sept. 27th of the present contracts between its members and the various exhibitors employing union operators, an increased schedule of wages will be put into effect. Mr. Morris J. Rotker, the secretary of Local 306, advises us that the new scale of wages was unanimously decided upon, and that it has the sanction of the parent organization, the I. S. T. S. E. of the United States and Canada. Under the provisions of the new scale, which follows in full, motion picture entertainment is divided up into four classes, the compensation for operators engaged in the various classes of work being as follows:

No man is permitted to work more than 8 hours per day.

* * * *

The new schedules which are being drawn up by the various operators' locals throughout the country are in line with the general trend of conditions. There are, however, as we have pointed out so often before, two things which are not taken into consideration by the men themselves and which, in all disputes when a raise of this kind is put into effect, causes no end of trouble.

First. Absolutely incompetent men are demanding just as high pay as the competent. These latter deserve every cent they demand. This means that the inefficient are carried along by the efficient who are always the minority. This smothers personal ambition and the desire on the part of the inferior ones to learn and improve themselves, which is the essence of democracy.

Second. This leads, as pointed out last week, to the need of classification among all the members of all locals, grading all in accordance to their ability and actual knowledge. It will be found that the majority of the capable members will all favor this step for the better.

E. K. Gillett.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Illumination and Its Measurement

[EDITOR'S NOTE—Many questions on matters regarding illumination addressed to the Projection Department of the NEWS would seem to indicate the usefulness of some elementary information on the units and methods of illumination measurement. Such information is of considerable importance to the operator, for in addition to the measurement of screen brightness, the lighting arrangements of the theatre have sometimes to be studied, as they frequently exert an influence upon the illumination of the projection screen. The following notes on illumination were prepared by the Engineering Department of the National Lamp Works, Cleveland, Ohio.]

Introductory

A MASTERY of the principles of illumination can only be gained by studying the subject from the ground up. In this, as in other scientific subjects, it is necessary at the outset for us to familiarize ourselves with the various terms used in the art, especially those terms which designate units of measurement, for these terms constitute the foundation work upon which the final structure is to be built. Just as we once had to learn that there is a unit called a yard which is used to measure length, and that this unit has been subdivided into three feet and each of these in turn into twelve inches, that the gallon is a unit used to measure quantity and contains 231 cubic inches, so in illumination we have certain fundamental units to study before measurements can be made and before definite relations of cause and effect can be comprehended or expressed. Basic definitions have a very academic and sometimes a very technical sound, although the units themselves, once their definitions have been assimilated, and not merely learned by rote, are comparatively simple. The definitions which appear in the course of this article should be thoroughly digested so that the reader will grasp the distinction between the different units and obtain a working knowledge of what each stands for and the quantity it represents. The schoolboy may be able to define an acre very accurately, but a farmer may not even know how many square feet there are in an acre and still have a better conception of the extent of an acre; the one point they both must first appreciate is that the acre is a unit of area rather than of length or volume. Very few electricians or electrical engineers could offhand give a basic definition of the ampere,[1] although they might all know that it is a measure of the rate of flow of electric current and have a practical conception of the magnitude of the unit. In illumination it is of more practical value to have a conception of the quantity of light represented by one lumen—to know that, for example, 75 of these units represent the quantity of light given off by a 10-watt lamp—than it is to be able to tell precisely what a lumen is. If the unit of length which we call a mile were arbitrarily made shorter, the distance between New York and Chicago would still be the same, or if the day were divided into ten equal parts instead of 24 hours, the planets would not change their speed of travel or rate of rotation. Obviously, it is of advantage to standardize certain units so that relations of magnitude can be expressed and understood with precision, although the value we arbitrarily assign as a standard is of little importance except from this standpoint.

Units of Measurement
The Candle

A generation or two ago when new light sources began to supersede the candle, it was most natural that the illuminating power of these new sources should be expressed in terms of the candle which was familiar to all. It is probable that the very first comparisons of two light sources were made by setting up the two lamps in the line of vision and gauging them by means of the eye, the most natural direction in which to look at the sources being horizontal. A glance at Fig. 1 shows that the eye (an extremely fallible instrument of light measurement at its best) is capable of measuring only a very slender cone of light at one time; in fact, if the eye is an appreciable distance from the source the cone RST becomes virtually a single line. While there are an an infinite number of directions from which the eye might look at the source, the light-giving power in a horizontal direction was made the basis of comparisons, and the strength of the light in this direction from a candle made according to certain definite specifications, was arbitrarily chosen as the unit of intensity and called a candle. The newer illuminants appearing on the scene were rated according to their strength in this same direction and were stated to give so many candles, so that when we say a lamp gives 10 candles, we really mean that its intensity or strength in a horizontal direction is equal to that of a group of ten standard candles. This rating of a lamp is made by means of an instrument known as a photometer, a description of which will follow later. One essential point to remember in this connection is that that the candle-power of a lamp represents the intensity in one direction only. In practice it has been customary for years to rotate the lamp about a vertical axis while the candle-power was being determined, and the result was known as the mean or average horizontal candle-power, but even this determination gives an average value of the intensity in the horizontal directions only. It should be stated, however, that in comparing lamps on the basis of their horizontal candle power, the light in directions other than the horizontal was not really ignored, for it was taken into consideration that most sources of light then in use gave off their light in about the same proportions in the different directions, and that for this reason the candle-power in a single direction furnished a criterion sufficiently accurate for the needs of the time.

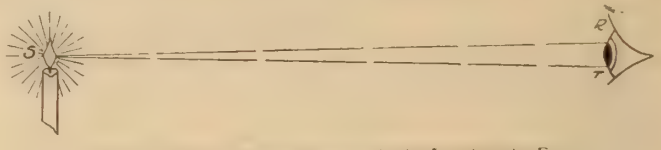

Fig. 1—Only a Slender Cone of Light Reaches the Eye

To carry our conception of candle-power a little further, let us assume the conditions existing in Fig. 2. In Case A we have on the left a standard candle, and on the right a photometer pointed toward the candle. From what has already been stated, it is obvious that when the photometer is balanced it will indicate an intensity of 1 candle. In Case B we have surrounded the same candle with a sphere having a moderately large opening. The inside of the sphere, we will say, has been painted a dead black, so that none of the rays striking it are reflected, but are absorbed and cease to be light—in other words, are thrown away as far as our experiment is concerned. In this case the photometer will still indicate an intensity of 1 candle in spite of the fact that a great deal of light has been thrown away. In Case C, we have used a sphere with a much smaller opening and are therefore wasting still more of the light, but even in this case our photometer will indicate an intensity of 1 candle. In fact, our reading will be 1 candle regardless of the size of the opening—that is, regardless of the quantity of light we allow to be emitted, provided the direct rays from the candle to the photometer are not obstructed. The proverbial candle hidden under a bushel will still give an intensity of 1 candle if there is a small hole in the bushel for a beam to escape, although as far as its illuminating value is concerned, it is still "hidden under a bushel." This leads us to the important conclusion that the candle-power of a source gives no indication of the total quantity of light emitted by that source. Candle-power, we may say, is analogous to a measurement of the depth of a pool of water at a certain point on its surface—a measurement which is useful for certain purposes, but in itself gives no indication of the quantity of water in the pool.

The first fundamental concept we have to deal with in illumination, then, is candle-power, which is the measure of strength of a source to produce illumination in a given direction, and the power in a horizontal direction of a candle made according to certain specifications and burning under certain conditions has been arbitrarily chosen as the unit for measuring this strength.

Closely related to candle-power is mean spherical candle-power. The mean spherical candle-power of a lamp is simply the average of all the candle-powers in all directions about that lamp. A source giving one candle in every direction would have a mean spherical candle-power of 1, or if a source gave off various candle-powers in different directions, but if the average of all these candle-powers were 1, this source would have a mean spherical candle-power of 1. We must remember, however, that the infinite number of directions in which a source ordinarily emits light do not all lie in the same plane, but extend into space on all sides about the source, like the spines of a chestnut burr.

The Lumen

We have seen from Fig. 2 that candle-power alone gives no indication of quantity[2] of light. It is necessary, therefore, for us to develop a unit whereby we can measure the quantity of total flux of light emitted by a source. For this purpose let us assume a source giving one candle in every direction, and that this source is placed at the centre of a sphere painted black on the inside and having a radius of, say, 1 foot, as shown in Sketch A, Fig. 3. OR represents an opening in the sphere through which some of the light may escape. The quantity of light allowed to escape may be varied by varying the size of the opening, with the candle-power of the source and the radius of the sphere remaining fixed; if we decide on some definite size of opening at OR we shall have a definite quantity of light which we can use as our unit for measuring quantity. The simpest area or unit to assume for OR is 1 square foot, and if we do make this opening of an area of 1 square foot the amount of light that escapes is considered to be the unit of quantity, and is called a lumen.[3] Thus we have established a permanent unit for the measurement of quantity of light; the mathematical relations used to fix it serve only the same purpose as two scratches on a platinum-iridium bar in the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, the distance between which at a definite temperature is called a meter.

If the area of OR is made ¼ square foot, the light escaping will amount to ¼ lumen; if the area of OR is doubled the light escaping will be 2 lumens. On the other hand, if we have a uniform source of 2 candles instead of 1, 2 lumens will be emitted through an opening of 1 square foot in this particular sphere. We know by arithmetic that the total surface of the sphere having a radius of 1 foot is 12.57 square feet.[4] In other words, removing the sphere entirely, we would have the equivalent of 12.57 openings the size of OR; that is, if the candle gives one candle in every direction, with the sphere removed it would give 12.57 lumens. This means that if we know the mean spherical candle-power of a lamp, by multiplying this value by 12.57 we obtain the number of lumens emitted by that lamp. A value of 12½ is sufficiently accurate for most practical purposes, and is somewhat more convenient for calculation inasmuch as it is necessary only to divide the mean spherical candle-power by 8, with proper regard to the decimal point, to arrive at the lumen rating. A lumen may also be defined as being equivalent to the quantity of light intercepted by a surface of 1 square foot every point of which is at a distance of 1 foot from a source of 1 candle (Fig. 3, Sketch B).

Fig. 3, A—Opening OR has Area of 1 Square Foot and Emits 1 Lumen
B—One Lumen Falls on Surface O P Q R

While the foregoing definitions establish definitely the quantity of light that we use as our basic unit, it must be remembered that a lumen, in order to be a lumen, need not necessarily conform with these specifications if the quantity of light represented is equivalent to that prescribed by the definition. A bushel might be defined as the quantity of any commodity contained in a cylindrical measure having a diameter of 19½ inches and a height of 8 inches; however, a bushel of potatoes spread out in the field is just as much a bushel as though the shape of the pile conformed in every respect to the dimensions just mentioned.

A Measurement Analogy

A conception of the relations just discussed may be obtained from the following simple analogy: Suppose that we have a pool of water of unknown depth, whose area has been found to be 5,000 square inches, and it is desired to obtain a measurement of the quantity of water in the pool. At first thought, one might be tempted to measure the depth at some point by means of a yardstick. If, for example, the depth at this point were found to be 6 inches, he might say that the pool contained 6 inches of water. Obviously, such a measurement would be practically useless. A measurement of this sort corresponds to the measurement of the quantity of light given off by an illuminant as determined by its candle-power in a single direction. On second thought, the investigator might make determinations of depth at regular intervals along a straight line through the centre of the pool from edge to edge and find the average depth along this line to be, say, 4 inches. To say that the pool contains 4 inches of water would hardly be more conclusive than the first determination. Such a measurement would correspond to the mean horizontal candle-power of a light source. If the surface of the pool were divided into a large number of equal squares and measurements of depth made at the centre of each square, the average depth thus found would give a definite idea of the quantity of the water in the pool since the surface area is already known. This determination corresponds to mean spherical candle-power. Now, if the average depth of the pool as just determined, is, say, 4½ inches, the quantity of water in the pool is four and one-half times 5,000, or 22,500 cubic inches. To say that the pool contains 22,500 cubic inches of water is definite and positive, and this measurement corresponds to the number of lumens given off by a light source. The average corresponds in this analogy to the average intensity of the light source in all directions, and the area of the pool corresponds to the area of the imaginary sphere about the light source.

It might be said that the above method would be a very awkward one to employ in determining how much water there is in the pool. A more practical method would be to pump the water into some measuring vessel, as a barrel graduated in gallons. As a

[2] Quantity is here used in the sense that it indicates only a summation of flux as throughout a given solid angle about the source, and over a given area illuminated to some average value. Quantity in a more precise sense is a summation over a period of time and is measured in lumen-hours.

[3] We could choose a sphere of any radius we cared to, as long as we kept the proportion the same by making the size of the opening such that its area would be equal to the square of the radius. The quantity would still be one lumen.

[4] The surface of a sphere is equal to the radius squared multiplied by 4 × 3.1416.

Blames Carbons for Unsteady D. C. Arc

Mr. Will J. Fallon, Sioux City, Iowa, a valued correspondent of the Projection Department, sends in the following remarks on our reply to a correspondent of Storm Lake, Ia., which appeared in the NEWS of August 3, pages 774-775:

"I noticed in last week's issue of the NEWS where the operator at Storm Lake, Iowa, was having trouble with his arc on a motor generator set.

"Before proceeding I don't want you to think that I am the wisest guy in the motion picture game, but I do differ with you especially on the Storm Lake operator's trouble, providing it is anywhere near like the trouble I've had and I do have at times yet.

"This is my trouble and I will try to explain it. I am using a G. E. Compensarc or motor generator set on a 2-phase A. C. circuit 110 volt 60 cycle.

"I find I have and can keep a better light at about 50 or 55 volts and about 45 to 50 amps., with a ¾-inch cored upper and a ⅝-inch cored lower and keeping my carbons about ¼-inch to ⅓-inch apart. There are days when I can run along and never have a sputter, not even when I strike the second arc, and then there are times, especially on retrimming, that I can't keep a steady arc even if I run my voltage up to 65 and my amps to 45 and 50, so you can see I lay it entirely on the carbons and I think I'm right. If the Storm Lake man has only been using a motor generator set for a short time I think the only difficulty he will have is to stop his arc flaming on change-overs; but after he gets over that part he will not trade his generator set for anything else.

"Now, where I differ from you is that I don't believe a ⅝-inch upper carbon is big enough for 45 amps. I've tried it out and say I had some fun, and in regards to the Silver-tips I just don't like them personally, although they are a very good carbon.

"Some time ago I wrote you about a ghost I was having. I thought I knew what caused it and I found out it was the carbon. The core was very hard and would cake, and as soon as it would burn off it would disappear. I had this trouble only appear while I was using a bunch of new carbons, and as I have used that bunch all up Mr. Ghost has never appeared since.

"I am enclosing a stunt which I think is a good one and it is certainly self-explanatory, especially when it is used on the telegram. Show me the operator who would stop to read it.

"Thanking you in return for what MOTION PICTURE NEWS has done for me.

"P. S. Out of a membership of 23 Local 355 has 7 members on the Honor Roll."

Comment: It will be recalled that in replying to the Storm Lake correspondent, Mr. Phillip Frahm, we were under the handicap of insufficient information, as he failed to advise us as to the make and type of his motor generator set, etc., but Mr. Frahm has since advised us that he surmounted the difficulty of a sputtering D. C. arc by changing the setting of the carbons, after first attempting to get results with the setting employed by his predecessor at Storm Lake.

Mr. Fallon's suggestion as to the handling of the G. E. motor-generator set (compensarc) should be of interest to other users of these outfits, but we believe he is rather hasty in condemning the carbons, as it is our experience that very few arc troubles can be laid to the carbons. The ghost trouble alluded to by Mr Fallon was treated in the Projection Department months ago, and that was one instance where defective carbons were to blame.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

but in general it is faulty manipulation and adjustment, or inadequate current and poor current regulation which cause the arc troubles of the operator.

We have generally found, contrary to Mr. Fallon's experience, that a 5/8-inch cored upper carbon in combination with a 5/16-inch metal-coated solid negative carbon of the varieties now obtainable would yield a satisfactory arc with 45 amperes of D. C., and this also seems to be the experience of the carbon manufacturers, but we concede the possibility that in some cases a larger carbon combination would yield a more easily controlled arc. If 3/4-inch upper carbons are used, then the negatives (metal coated) for D. C. work should be of 13/16-inch diameter. We are always willing to advocate the use of the small metal-coated negative carbons, because they constitute a step in advance in arc-light operation, a claim which is certainly attested by the majority of users.

The roll of honor of Local 355 is a very creditable showing, and it is to be regretted that one of the members, Mr. George Allen, has been killed in action, according to our correspondent.

Wants More Light

Mr. J. B. Wicks, Waterloo, Iowa, writes as follows:

I am going to ask you to help me out of trouble if you will. I am running two new Simplex projectors and a Ft. Wayne Generator Set with a capacity of 50 amperes. I have been burning 5/8-inch cored carbons on top and 1/2-inch solid below and got good results, but I want more light so I put in 3/4-inch cored above and 5/16-inch Silvertip below and I get a much better light for a short time and then the light starts to flicker. I carry 35 amperes at the arc, and when it flickers it varies from 35 to 40 and keeps jumping. My generator won't stand over 35 amperes, so I don't know what to do. I always set my carbons the same and carry them the same distance apart. I keep the commutator cleaned and the brushes adjusted.

(Another one.) I have a mirror screen and some one spilled some oil on it and then tried to clean it with alcohol and left some large brown spots that show up bad in my picture. Do you know any way of removing the spots?

In Reply: To increase the light output of a projector arc it is first of all necessary to increase the amperage at the arc, and if the increased amperage overloads the carbons in use, then carbons of larger size should be used to take care of the increased amperage. Increasing the size of the carbons alone brings no increase in light, so the correspondent cannot expect increased screen illumination with the 3/4-inch and 5/16-inch carbon combination until he secures more amperes at the arc than the 35 which he says he is now getting.

If the correspondent's motor-generator is a 50 ampere machine, as he states it to be, he should be able to secure 50 amperes at the arc by proper manipulation of the field-rheostat, but if the outfit cannot be made to deliver 50 amperes the manufacturer's advice should be sought. It is just possible, however, that the outfit in question may be the 35 ampere Compensarc, in which event nothing greatly in excess of a 35 ampere output could be regularly expected of it.

The removal of oil spots from a mirror screen is not a pleasant task, and we have seen very few screens look as well after having been soiled and then cleansed as they did when new. The manufacturer, no doubt, could refinish them perfectly, but it is not very feasible to ship such a screen to the maker to have this done.

We suggest that inasmuch as alcohol did not prove capable of removing the oil spots, some benzene, or, better still, some carbon tetrachloride be tried, but the important feature of the process is that after the spots have been removed as thoroughly as possible, the entire screen should be just as thoroughly gone over with the cleaning compound. If this is not done the places where the oil spots were removed will still be prominent when pictures are projected upon the mirror screen.

A New Method of Obtaining Dye Toned Images by the Use of Copper Ferrocyanide as a Mordant

By J. I. Crabtree

Communication No. 72 from the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company

Practical Instructions

SINCE the following toning processes intensify the original image, it is necessary to commence toning with an image of the correct density and contrast. A "medium" positive, referred to below, is obtained by giving a slight over-exposure and a short time of development, but the exact degree of intensification which takes place in any particular case will be learned after a few trials.

In the case of lantern slides the best and most transparent tones are only produced on slides of fine grain such as the Eastman Standard Slow lantern plate.

Tone 1 Red Tone

Positive employed: Medium.

Tone the well washed positive in the following:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Copper sulphate	250 grains	16 grams
Ammonium citrate (neutral)	1 oz. 300 "	50 "
Potassium ferricyanide	240 "	16 "
Ammonium carbonate	120 "	8 "
Water to	1 gal.	4 liters

Dissolve each ingredient separately in as little water as possible, mix the filtered solutions so obtained in the order given, and dilute to the required volume. The solution obtained should be light green in color and perfectly clear. The ammonium carbonate should be almost transparent and free from white powder, and should be dissolved in cold water, while the ammonium citrate employed should be neutral. Most samples contain acid, which acid would neutralize the ammonium carbonate and affect the resulting tone. The free acid is usually citric acid, and should be neutralized with a solution of ammonia, using Litmus as indicator.

Somewhat warmer tones are obtained by adding 50 per cent more potassium ferricyanide to the formula.

Life of Bath: With use the bath precipitates a brown sludge of copper ferrocyanide and in consequence becomes weaker by the loss of copper.

Time and Temperature of Toning: 5 to 15 minutes at 70° F.

Time of Washing: 10 minutes.

It is important to keep the bath covered when not in use so as to exclude light since the bath is light sensitive, while no foreign metallic surface should be allowed to come into contact with the solution, otherwise the copper salt will deposit on the metal.

After washing, immerse in the following dye bath:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Safranine A (National Aniline & Chemical Co., Inc.)	60 grains	4 grams
Acetic Acid (Glacial)	2/3 oz.	20 cc.
Water to	1 gal.	4 liters

Time of Dyeing: Five to 10 minutes, according to depth of tone desired.

Time of Washing after Dyeing: Usually only a slight rinse in water is necessary.

If the highlights are stained, the positive should be washed for five to ten minutes or until clear. Stained highlights are caused either by insufficient washing after toning, too strong a dye bath, or an incorrect amount of acid in the dye bath.

Tone 2. Orange Tone

The instructions are exactly as for Tone 1, substituting the following dye bath:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Chrysoidin 3R (National Aniline & Chemical Co., Inc.)	24 grains	1.6 grams
Acetic Acid (Glacial)	2/3 oz.	20 cc.
Water to	1 gal.	4 liters

Tone 3. Violet

The instructions are exactly as for Tone 1, substituting the following dye bath:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Methyl Violet (National Aniline & Chemical Co., Inc.)	24 grains	1.6 grams
Acetic Acid (Glacial)	2/3 oz.	20 cc.
Water to	1 gal.	4 liters

Intermediate Dye Tones

The depth of the dye tone is determined by the time of immersion both in the copper toning bath and in the dye bath. Pale tones may therefore be obtained either by giving a short bath in the copper solution and fully dyeing, or by toning for a longer time and giving a short immersion in the dye bath.

By mixing the dye baths, 1, 2 and 3 intermediate colors may be obtained.

Tone 4. Pale Red

Positive Employed: Normal.

Tone for one to two minutes in the copper bath, wash for ten minutes, and then immerse in the following dye bath:

Dye solution for Tone 1, 1 volume.

Dye solution for Tone 2, 1 volume.

When the desired tone is obtained rinse until the highlights are clear.

Compound Tones

Tone 5—Copper, Iron, Dye Tone.

By first partially toning the black and white positive (medium) in the copper bath, so that the half-tones are completely toned but the shadows only partially, washing for ten minutes and then completing the toning process in a blue toning solution, the residual silver in the shadows is toned blue. In this way a double tone is obtained, the shadows appearing dark blue and the half-tones reddish brown.

By immersing the positive toned in this manner in the Chrysoidin dye bath as given under Tone 2, the dye is mordanted to the half-tones which contain copper ferrocyanide, producing a striking double tone effect.

A suitable blue toning bath formula is as follows:

	Avoirdupois.		Metric.
Potassium Bichromate	1½ grains		0.1 gram
Ferric Alum (Ferric ammonium sulphate)	75	"	5	"
Oxalic Acid	180	"	12	"
Potassium Ferricyanide	60	"	4	"
Ammonium Alum	300	"	20	"
Hydrochloric Acid 10 per cent	65	minims	4	cc.
Water to	1	gal.	4	liters

The method of compounding this bath is very important. Each of the solid chemicals should be dissolved separately in a small quantity of warm water, the solutions allowed to cool, filtered, mixed strictly in the order given, and the whole diluted to the required volume. If these instructions are followed, the bath will be a pale yellow color, perfectly clear, and will remain so for a considerable period.

Troubles in Dye Toning

A. Stained highlights are due either to insufficient washing after toning in the copper bath, too strong a dye bath, or an incorrect amount of acid in the dye bath.

B. Weak highlights. If the highlights do not absorb the dye proportionally this is due to the use of an exhausted copper bath or of one that was not mixed correctly.

Summary

Lantern slides and motion picture positive film may be toned by replacing more or less of the silver image by a compound of copper, particularly copper ferrocyanide, washing, and then immersing the toned image in an acid solution of a basic dye. The copper salt present in the image acts as a mordant to the dye and a toned image is thus produced of a color intermediate between that of the dye and the copper compound, depending on the relative proportion of each. The amount of the copper salt necessary to mordant the dye is usually so small that the resultant tone differs but slightly from that of the dye itself.

By employing a mixture of dyes intermediate tones may be obtained, while by commencing with a black and white image of fine grain, very transparent toned images are produced.

The author is indebted to Mr. S. Tulpan for assistance in carrying out the various experiments.

Kodak Co. to Undertake Production of Chemical Intermediates

THE Eastman Kodak Company is to establish a chemical research department at Rochester, N. Y., to aid in the production of new dyes and similar chemical materials which prior to the great war came from Germany. Added interest is given the new venture in that most of the experimental work will be done by women chemists, working under the direction of Dr. H. T. Clarke, who has been appointed by the Government to have general charge. It is expected that with the great resources of the Eastman Company at their disposal, the chemists will be able to turn out a quality of dyes and other chemical products that will be equal to the best hitherto imported.

One of the great advantages possessed by German research chemists before the war was the possession of a ready source of the chemicals from which their work could be started, the production of those chemical intermediates, as they are called, many of them very rare, being in the hands of a few German firms. At the beginning of the war, when the German supply was cut off, it was necessary to establish in this country new plants for the manufacture of materials to take the place of that supply, and it devolved upon chemists or our industrial plants, who were assisted to some extent by the universities, to devise methods and processes for making the products.

Chemical research is fundamentally necessary for the production of such materials, and the Eastman laboratory, where photographic and moving picture film experimentation is carried on to a large degree, is considered ideally adapted for the purpose.

Argus Brings Suit Against Patent Infringer

THE Argus Lamp & Appliance Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, has begun suit against The Nu-Movie-Lite Co. of Peoria, Ill., for infringement of patent on the Adapter now being manufactured by the Argus Lamp & Appliance Co. for changing present types of motion picture machines to use Mazda Projector Lamps.

The Argus Lamp & Appliance Co. is the owner of five distinct letters patent on their appliances and the company announced itself to have been the pioneer in the Mazda branch of motion picture projection.

Mr. H. H. Cudmore, general manager of the Argus Lamp & Appliance Co. while in New York this week, said: "Our policy is to prosecute most vigorously all infringements of our letters patent. We can prove unquestionably our priority in the Adapter field. Our present Adapter represents an evolution extending over a period of several years. Now that Mazda projection is rapidly replacing Carbon Arcs in all parts of the country, we are sure to encounter a certain amount of competition. This we are prepared to combat, but we do not propose to be hampered by competition which is predicated on our own patents and we have instructed our attorneys to instantly begin proceedings against such manufacturers as are at present, or may in the future, put on the market an adapter which encroaches upon our rights."

"Bearding the Musical Lion in His Den"

IT is sometimes possible in seeking interviews with busy men connected with the industry to beard the lion in his den, and this the NEWS representative accomplished when Alfred R. Moulton, musical director at Shea's Hippodrome, was caught in his room in the theatre, during an interval in the evening program. So interesting are the music programs at Shea's Hippodrome that Mr. Moulton's ideas on picture accompaniment are of interest to exhibitors.

"What is the secret of giving the photoplay a good musical setting?" Mr. Moulton was asked.

"Experience," was the prompt reply. "One must have experience, indeed, in all the various branches of the profession of music. If an orchestra director has produced operas, musical comedies, etc., if he has at one time in his career been a church organist, a teacher, an accompanist, a pianist, a singer, a composer—all these will stand him in good stead when he accepts a position such as I now hold.

"For the comedies he must have a keen sense of the ridiculous—also he must enter fully into the spirit of the cartoons. He must be prepared to put aside many of his pet theories on classical music. He must become broad, liberal in all his ideas and ready to take to his musical soul all music—cabaret jazz rubbish included.

"By willingly allowing that there is some hidden merit in such music in its relation to the screen, he will thereby show enough good showmanship by seeking to understand the taste of the public."

"In a way," we suggested, "you must be a real doctor of music."

"Indeed, yes, and one must give his patients not what he thinks would be best for them, but what they take the most readily. He must be a successful screener."

"Do you musically screen all that is shown in the Hippodrome?"

"Everything except the News Weekly, which usually arrives too late, but I have the subject matter from Mr. Franklin, with any suggestions he may think of. The management first screens everything booked; my musical screening comes afterward."

"Which pictures are the most interesting to screen?"

"The big features, without a doubt. They are the real photo-music plays. The comedies come as a kind of relaxation, but are, none the less, important."

"What are some of your screening secrets?"

"One of the most vital things in a big feature is to divide your picture artistically and dramatically, with a view always to the various climaxes. And this must be done as you go along in the screening. Carefully write down cues and time every scene. This will enable you to avoid too much repetition of any one musical number. To get a smooth performance it is expedient also to avoid any continual changing of music."

"Do you screen at the same rate that the picture is run in the house?"

"A little faster for the pictorial views and the like, but for the features I take my time."

"You spoke of dividing the picture—"

"Yes; that is choosing the divisional insert, title or change of scene. Sometimes a film will suggest its own natural divisions, but at times the plot will become very intricate with flashbacks and visions of past events and what not. Then one must be careful to musically retain the continuity of the story. I make it a rule to always digest the plot of the story, from data sent to my office, before I go into the screening room."

"Do you decide on the music for each division or scene as you screen?"

"No, this I do afterwards in the library."

"I suppose at times a musical number will at once suggest itself at the screening."

"Yes, this is so, but one frequently alters a number before being finally satisfied. Even after the picture is shown on the screen for the patrons we make changes.

"Two heads are better than one, and Mr. Franklin, the manager, and I have long talks over certain scenes. He usually joins me in the screening room if not too busy, and remember this will be his second or third screening. This will give you an idea of the vast amount of work he accomplishes. Mr. Shea also will come down to us at times, although he is a very busy man."

"I suppose a picture thus reeled off in the silence is a very different proposition to its presentation to the public with full effects?"

"Indeed it is. Music literally makes the photoplay. That's why I prefer to call it the Photo Music Play.

"I was never so impressed with the power of music until an incident in Atlanta, Ga. I was conducting for Mr. Griffith, and the mayor and city authorities insisted upon seeing 'The Birth of a Nation' before the public was permitted to view it. It was a very solemn affair. The city officials sat there in silence as reel after reel rushed by. Without music these exciting scenes of the famous Klu Klux Klan were absurdly tame and there was no punch at all. But they were satisfied that it was a harmless film. When the same night these same officials came and saw the production with its musical setting, including the old Southern airs, the pathos, the grandeur of it all—well, they were most thankful to us and would not have missed it for a great deal. Music had asserted its power over photography. Its dramatic appeal had been enhanced a thousand-fold, and they were carried away with the realism of it all."

"You hold then that music makes the picture?"

"Absolutely, but it should be an accompaniment rather. As a rule it is wise not to let your music preponderate or dominate the screen."

"What about big scenes, fires, duels, fights, etc.?"

"These, of course, are the exceptions which prove the wisdom of the rule. Even in these cases your music need not be too heavy, for your drummer is working from your prepared plot, as well as your stage manager, and you can get all the agitation you want. For the photoplay it should be a case of music and melody in preference to mere noise."

"How do you get music to suit each character so well?"

"In the features I treat the characters as if I were accompanying them in an opera. You see by the time I have read up the plot and taken a private screening I am sufficiently well versed in the various scenes and characters to—shall I say—follow their dialogue."

"I suppose you have many tricks which the audience, being taken up too much with the picture, scarcely notice?"

"Yes, such as suddenly accelerating the music or retarding it, using very soft muted effects, making pauses or holds in the music when an actor shows indecision, etc."

"Are these changes marked in the music?"

"No, the musicians follow the various changes. When I first took up this work at the Hippodrome the men had not been used to such nervous restlessness and rather rebelled. However, they have now become used to it and tell me that their performances become more interesting.

"This talk has landed us close to the steps of Interpretation, which, I need not tell you, is an art in itself. For instance, the brass section may have a passage marked loud and you want it soft. One must take many liberties with the score if you really want to play the picture. And you must do it with a free and bold hand, no matter how much you love any particular composer.

"In choosing music for the pictures the title or name of a piece of music counts for little. A funeral march at accelerated speed will serve an entirely different purpose. It may fit a lively situation. In a church scene which suddenly pops up in a comedy we are now showing we are using a fox-trot. I slow down considerably and the effect is quite passable for a small country choir. Then, as the action changes to a rube farmer outside, all I have to do is to brighten up to regular tempo, and that has saved me putting in a religious number, which is out of place in a comedy anyway.

"A conductor must read his ideas into his score. Also he must compose quickly short pieces for the pictures which you cannot find suitable in your library. We are adding continually to our music collection, and each feature we show contains some really new publications. This makes it easier for the men, too.

"The great thing for pictures is to work up to all the climaxes of scenes. You must be in touch with the exigencies of the stage, so to speak.

"Are you a believer in the continual use of a repeated theme for the principal character?"

"This has become a custom, but I think it is frequently overdone, and this in a spirit of laziness or false economy. In some cue sheets sent to us a certain theme is down for at least six playings. Of course, I know this is very pleasing to a publisher, but it wearies an audience. I have found it of advantage to use two or even three melodies in order to prevent monotony. In this connection it is a good idea, if the characterization be strong enough, to introduce each principal character with a distinct and pronounced music motif, which motifs can be repeated without fear of becoming boresome. Apropos of this, one can pick out strongly marked phrases and they will instantly stamp the villain, lover, heroine, etc.

"As I have met many of the screen stars personally, I have had a chance to study their personality for future work, and it is most reproductive. Pauline Frederick is easy to be suited. Hart is another who gives us no trouble; Mary Pickford, there is so much music for her pretty mannerisms; Fairbanks is a more difficult subject, restless and quick, but with care one can give his features an excellent music setting, but one must spend time on him. And so on down the line of movie stars.

"Some pictures seem to want music, others could, in part, be looked at in silence. There are times when in a tense moment it is good to let the screen speak for itself, and then one must be careful to creep in gently again so as not to disturb the interest. An audience will become absorbed and silent, just as in a tense drama on the stage. Here it is easy to bring your forces down to what Berlioz was so fond of naming 'almost nothing.'

"In the photoplay one must have plenty of contrast, even if the film lacks just that. Contrast, color, novelty of musical treatment are essential. These are the things that count and score. I use banjos, mandolins, guitars, saxophones; the first for Southern atmosphere, the second for romance, the guitar for love songs and the saxophone will lend to a cabaret or bar scene. Sometimes I turn my whole orchestra into a big banjo, cutting out all other than strings. It is very effective to employ the brass instruments very softly for church scenes. Then for beautiful scenery and romantic situations it is easy to, musically speaking, paint the film with a melody for harp and strings only. It is all a kind of kaleidoscopic tone painting, and most fascinating as a serious and constant melody.

"The work of conductor of a large orchestra in a big, modern motion picture house is not the easiest in the world, but here we have an assistant conductor for such times as I am screening. I receive many letters from the public, some offering excellent suggestions, and, last but not least, Mr. Franklin takes a live interest in all that I do and offers at all times good suggestions."

"Do you see ahead any great musical changes in the photoplay?"

"Yes, orchestras are becoming larger and I expect features will soon be cut to three reels instead of five. They will retain all that is best and the plots will not suffer. Houses will always be filled with those who love orchestral music for its own sake. Then we have those who come for the comedy. They want a good laugh, while others want a good feature. To these 'the play's the thing.'

"The chief charm of the theatre lies in the fact that, while the eye is pleased and fascinated, it is the ear that really conveys the strong dramatic appeal. We musicians work upon the feelings of the audience more than you might think, so great is the power of orchestra music to us all."

At this moment there was a hurried ringing of electric bells, a signal for the twenty-eight-piece orchestra to appear in its pit before the big Hippodrome screen, and as the NEWS representative heard the first strains of Saint Saen's "Spinning Wheel" he contemplated that Mr. Moulton was right when he spoke of "the power of orchestral music wedded to the photoplay."

Auditorium Lobby

On the left is the interior of the New Mecca theatre, at Dayton, Ohio, showing the arrangements of the seats. Closer to the screen the auditorium widens, and gives room to several more people than the cut shows. On the right is the exterior of the Mecca, taken on an angle. This gives some idea of the size of the electric sign

Front view of the new Mecca theatre, at Dayton, Ohio, showing the artistic design of the entire front. The theatre is also unique, which adds attractiveness

Mecca Dayton's Latest Theatre

THE Mecca Motion Picture theatre, of which exterior and interior views are herewith shown, is the latest, newest and largest motion picture theatre in Dayton to open its doors to the public, and more especially to the residents of Miami City and Dayton View. The Mecca is located on the north side of Third street, just west of Broadway, and was built and will be operated by Julius Leopold, a well known and prosperous real-estate dealer.

Gustave A. Niehus is the architect who designed and superintended the construction of the Mecca theatre, which has a seating capacity of 550. The front of the building is 40 feet wide on Third street and 167 feet long. It has eight exit doors leading out to Third street, and others leading to the side and rear open passageways and alley, and is constructed of fireproof materials in strict accordance wth the requirements of the Ohio State Building Code. The architectural design is of the Rennaissance period with modern adaptations suitable to a successful motion picture theatre. The decoration of the auditorium and the interior of the building throughout is carried out in white and green, with ivory white ceilings, tan colored walls and Spanish leather wainscot, making the prettiest and most pleasing auditorium in Dayton.

A special feature of this theatre is the heating and ventilation system, which is of the famous Sturtevant Blower fan system, supplying, under pressure of 1¼ ounces, 1,200 cubic feet of fresh, cold air to each and every person every hour and forcing the vitiated air in the building out through vent shafts. The fresh air is brought into the building from above the roof through a shaft to the fan, then blown into auditorium. In the winter season this same system supplies warm air in the same manner. The entire quantity of air in the building is changed every fifteen minutes, both in summer and winter, which will make this one of the vest ventilated theatres in the city.

A new and original feature is the side exits leading to Third street, which have a covered vestibule outside the main building, providing protection against the weather and avoiding any cold draughts entering the auditorium and inconveniencing the audience.

The motion picture machine booth is lined on the inside with a heavy sheet steel covering and ventilated through the roof by a fireproof shaft, and all openings are self-closing, making a thoroughly fireproof booth. The picture projecting machines are of the latest and most approved type "Exhibition Machines" selected from the best machines exhibited at Motion Picture Convention held recently at Memorial Hall.

At the front of the theatre is a large stage fully equipped with curtains and scenery and a Gold Fiber picture screen.

The pictures will be shown on the screen in a black velvet shadow box, in the construction of which 150 yards of special velvet will be used. The front row of seats will be as comfortable and pleasant to see the pictures from as the rear or center seats, as the picture will be 23 feet distant from the first row of seats. Music will be furnished by a specially constructed hand-played Seeburg orchestra piano, which is a new feature for theatre music in Dayton.

At the entrance to theatre large and spacious lobbies are provided leading to the main auditorium. There are also provided in the lobbies men and women's toilet rooms, and drinking fountains are placed along the lobbies.

The lighting of the interior of the theatre is most satisfactorily accomplished by large indirect lighting fixtures and shaded side wall brackets, causing the auditorium to be well lighted even during the time the pictures are on the screen. On the exterior of building there is an abundance of light furnished by two Boulevard lighting posts of the same style as those used on the Boulevard lighting system of the city, and two large electric signs, a large sphere pendant in the main lobby and 30 small ornamental lamps.

The theatre and its equipment embody the most modern ideas in motion picture theatres, and is the finest theatre building in Dayton and vicinity.

New Auditorium in Dayton, Ohio

THE New Auditorium theatre in Dayton, O., which was destroyed by fire last year will rebuild at once according to statements made by Gil Burrows, the manager, and officials of the Auditorium Amusement Co., who will control the theatre.

All plans have been drawn up by Architects Pretzinger & Musselman who will cover every detail. The Bedford Stone and Construction Co. have contracted for the building, and Mr. E. C. Strathman, the representative of the firm, promises to have the theatre ready for occupancy around Christmas time.

The Auditorium will be the last word in theatre construction for Ohio, as many features predominate in this theatre as in no other theatre in Ohio. According to plans the unusual construction will command the attention and admiration of every one.

It will be unique in several ways, first, it will be fireproof as nothing will be able to burn but the carpets on the floor. As to the ventilaton it will be perfect.

The Auditorium will resemble no other in the State, but will be more like the Majestic in Detroit. The general shape of the house will be that of a saucer. There will be no balcony as no steps will be in the theatre. One will approach the cheaper seats by means of inclines. These inclines are so gradual that one is hardly sensible to the fact that they are ascending them.

The boxes which will number sixteen will be reached by special box foyers. They will be elegantly decorated and closets will be provided for the wraps. Instead of the usual proscenium of the oval shape, the stage will be square and a large orchestra pit will be included.

The playhouse will also have a large and beautiful palm room which will be the place to meet friends, and a general lounge for the fatigued. The color scheme has not been decided upon as yet, but we all expect something grand so as to correspond with the rest.

The theatre will be so constructed as to accommodate legitimate attractions as well as pictures.

New Adelphi Theatre

THE new Adelphi theatre in Rogers Parks, Chicago, is a good example of the new type of luxurious playhouse.

It is very large—seats 1,500 people all on one floor and has a high grade orchestra of ten soloists, which, with the pipe organ, gives concerts during the intermissions.

The interior is decorated in a light neutral gray which allows the maximum of artistic effect to be obtained from the lighting system in use.

There are no fixtures apparent and the casual visitor can't help wondering where the light comes from. It is no mystery, however, and it is only one of the many novel effects to be obtained in theatre lighting by the use of X-Ray mirror reflectors.

The ceiling is beamed and curves down to meet the walls. A large cove extending around the room at the base of this curve contains these powerful mirrowed reflectors.

They not only eliminate heavy, ordinary fixtures and provide a new unusual form of illumination, but actually give the maximum of lighting effect.

The photograph reproduced here was taken by the artificial lighting in the theahre with no flashlight or other aid and it has not been retouched. The clear, even illumination throughout the theatre shows its efficiency.

This Exhibit Was Maintained by Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company During the National Tractor Demonstration Which Was Held at Salina, Kan., from July 29 to August 3. The Rothacker Establishment Was Represented by Sumter Calvert, George Swanson and a Camera Crew Under Frank Kirchner

About Release No. 1:

"THE ISLE OF CUBA"

This is a travel impression of the "feature" class in every sense of the word—being as Mr. Rothapfel says —"so interesting as to hold my attention to the last scene." Not mere photographs, but unique scenes of interesting and uncommon things, peculiar to this Caribbean Isle.

Mr. Rothapfel paid good money for this film, and as he has the world's productions that come to New York at his command, it's a pretty good guarantee of screen value.

For Review, see previous issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, page 1113.

On account of the low price we are asking, prints cannot be sent for approval, although private screening will be gladly given to your representative in New York.

NOTE—The release and postal date from New York is THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19th.

Projectionist Ray Says:

"It's Power's Cameragraph for mine every time.

"The success of your projection depends more on the Intermittent Movement than on any other thing; and the Power's movement is the best on earth. It's like this:

"In the projection of a film subject each individual picture must remain stationary upon the screen for a period of time. The longer this period the better the eye can get the detail.

"The Power's movement holds each picture on the screen nearly 7% longer than any other movement; and believe me I've used 'em all.

"That's why you get better definition with a Power's; that's why, as I say of the Cameragraph,

"It Puts the Picture on the Screen"

High Priced Pictures Score in Fond du Lac

DOES it pay to put on a high priced picture for a return engagement at popular prices? It does in the event the experience of the Bijou theatre with "Tarzan of the Apes" may be taken as a criterion. "Tarzan of the Apes" was shown at the Henry Boyle some weeks ago at high prices and it drew good audiences. Manager Smith of the Bijou had an opportunity to book it for a return engagement at popular prices. As a result it filled the theatre at each performance Tuesday and Wednesday, Aug 6 and 7, notwithstanding. Fond du Lac was hit by the hottest wave of the year on those days, the temperature going to 102 (government record).

The Bijou presented an unusually interesting war picture, "Missing," on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 8, 9 and 10, and Fond du Lac with its two thousand men in service and four hundred in the big drive is strong for war pictures.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Send Representative East

RUMOR has it that the Milwaukee Exhibitores club has bought a downtown theatre. Nothing seems to be definite as yet.

Alfred Tanzer, manager of the Milwaukee Exhibitars club, will take a trip to New York the early part of September and will make arrangements for the buying for the members of his circuit, big features that have never been shown in Milwaukee, and that otherwise would not have reached the Cream City.

Detroit Operators Want More Salary

THE present agreement of the Detroit Union Motion Picture Operators with theatres expires on August 31. Effective September 1 the union will demand increased wages. The new scale divides the operators into about 10 classes, depending on the size, location and hours of the theatres where they work. The increase will average about 16 per cent over the present wage scale. In other words, an operator now getting, say, $30 per week will get about $35 under the new agreement.

Springfield Theatres Feel Heat

BLAZING heat since last Sunday, August 4, has cut down the attendance at all the Springfield, Ill., theatres to a great degree. It has been about 106 here for the past week, and folks will not venture out unless they have to. Theatre managers are imploring the weather-man to announce, or predict, a break in the weather.

Reviews Hit the Spot!

EVERY manager in Springfield is reading P. S. Harrison's reviews in Motion Picture News, and say they just "about hit the nail on the head."

Leon D. Netter, Manager of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, Who Has Gone to War

Mothers of Soldiers Free in Dubuque

MOTHERS of Dubuque boys in active service in France will be admitted free and given the best seats in the Majestic theatre from now on, according to an announcement made Thursday, August 1, by Manager Jake Rosenthal. "We want the mothers of these fighting men to be our honored guests and we will extend them every courtesy," Mr. Rosenthal said. 'It will only be necessary for a mother to show the theatre doorman a letter written by her son in France.

Metro Detroit Exchange Moves

THE Metro exchange in Detroit has moved to No. 51 East Elizabeth street, in the new film building, where it occupies space on the ground floor. The new quarters are a big improvement over the old quarters on Broadway, and Manager Hatch takes great pride in being the first exchange to be on the first floor where there are no elevators to climb and where he is handy to all callers.

Look Fellows!

"Wid" Says:

"Many shows are opening and closing with short subjects—one reelers—and I want to impress upon you the importance of selecting your short subjects with as much care as you would your features. It is poor showmanship, indeed, to send your patrons away with a bad taste in their mouth, just as it is a mark of poor showmanship to start your show off with a 'Time-Killer' that gets on one's nerves. Get the idea that your whole entertainment is worth while and that your single reels are not 'Time-Killers,' but real entertainment. The market to-day affords a selection of feature one reelers, and you don't have to depend upon program stuff to complete your bill."

Mentions from Milwaukee

JOE ZINKELE who is at present the manager of the Park theatre will shortly take over the management of the Murray theatre.

THE Milkaukee Exhibitors club announces that "Redemption" has been most successful and they expect a great deal from "Raffles," which they have bought for bookings in the southern part of Wisconsin.

"THE UNBELIEVER" had a three-day run at the Climax theatre which is one of Milwaukee's up town theatres. It is the first time in the history of this theatre that a picture has been given a three-day run. The picture ran Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and despite the fact that Tuesday was the hottest day that Milwaukee has seen in a number of years, the house was packed at all performances.

"BLUE BLOOD" will be reviewed by the local board of censors. If fate does not intend it to be thrown into the discard, it will go out to twenty bookings thus far.

OWING to the success of "The Unbeliever" which had a three-day run at his theatre, Manager Perlevitz, manager of the Climax, will run larger features in the near future.

THE Greenfield theatre broke all of its records with a variety program which included three serials. He held them out at all shows despite the hot weather. This goes to show that the hot weather will not affect theatres showing the right kind of films.

"THE BRASS BULLET," the new Universal serial, is almost ready for release and thus far there has been twenty bookings arranged for. This film will be of special interest to Milwaukee theatre-goers, as Ashton Dearholt, the featured star, is a Milwaukee boy and has a large circle of friends here.

EDWARD JOHNSON, manager of the theatre at Rib Lake, Wisconsin, paid a visit to the Universal exchange the other day. Johnson is now a private in the army but he still finds time to attend to his theatre. He arranged bookings for all of the Bluebird features.

ALL of the Jewel productions have been put into the houses of the Motion Picture Exhibitors club.

MANY of the uptown houses are experimenting in community singing. As a general rule, there is one night a week set aside as "community night." On other nights, the audiences take it upon themselves to have a little singing of their own and sing the songs that the musician plays during the intermissions.

THE sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes" will soon be released and all exhibitors who showed Tarzan will show the sequel.

MR. LESERMAN, manager of the Chicago Universal office, spent three days in the city last week. Manager Roderick of the local exchange showed him around the city.

THE Butterfly theatre is running "Viviette," featuring Vivian Martin. It announces for Sunday, Constance Talmadge in "Silk Stockings" and as an added attraction, the Fourth of July in Paris with the American troops marching back to the city for a well earned rest.

"THE CLAWS OF THE HUN" was the current attraction at the Alhambra theatre the fore part of this week.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" continues to draw large crowds at the Davidson theatre. It is expected that the engagement will be extended at least a week to accommodate the crowds.

THE Strand theatre is drawing large houses with the "First Law." The picture is accompanied by a special musical score that makes it doubly interesting.

BETTY BLYTHE and Harry Morey are at the Merrill theatre in "All Man." On Sunday, "Fiddler's Green," the story that was filmed from a story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post will occupy the screen for three days.

THE Palace theatre, which is a vaudeville house, is expected to run the "Brass Bullet" running one installment each week.

Fond du Lac News Notes

MANAGER F. R. SMITH of the Bijou, Fond du Lac, has taken a cottage at Green Lake, where his family is spending the month of August.

THE hot weather cut down the attendance at most of the moving picture houses in Fond du Lac during the week of August 4 to 10. The Orpheum, which has prided itself in overcoming handicaps of almost every variety, suffered at the hands of the weather man, Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie," August 7, 8 and 9, drawing a fair patronage only.

THE ORPHEUM presented an unusually strong program for the week beginning August 12. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, August 12, 13 and 14, Billy Burke in "Eve's Daughter" was the attraction, while during the last three days of the week a strong appeal was made to Young America by presenting Jack Pickford in "Huck and Tom."

MANAGER W. E. AINSWORTH of the Orpheum is taking his vacation the latter part of August and will spend the time in Detroit, his former home, where he will gather new ideas on how to put across the big stuff.

THE scenes were all set for the opening of the new season here on August 11. The Chatterton has "Hearts of the World" for an eight day run, with two performances daily. Great interest was aroused in the Griffith spectacle, and from the way it looks "The Birth of a Nation" record for attendance will be shattered.

"THE GREAT LOVE," Griffith's latest play, came to the Gaiety on August 11 for a five days' run. This will make the second Griffith attraction in the city, and as the cast is almost the same as the one in "Hearts of the World," Springfield folk and fair visitors will have some new screen favorites when they go home.

THE MAJESTIC announces the booking of the Gaumont Weekly and Pathe's Official War Review. The Princess has been using the latter for some time. The Majestic opened on August 11.

THE LYRIC is still going along nicely. The Lees, Jane and Katherine, were here on August 4 and 5 in "Doing Their Bit"; Bushman and Bayne followed on the 6 and 7 in "Special Quicksands," one of the best pictures they have ever done; Alice Brady in "The Whirlpool" was the offering on August 8, 9 and 10. The Lyric also uses Christie comedies, Mutt and Jeff comedies, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedies and Universal Weekly.

HARRY LOPER, manager of the Lyric, and Mrs. Loper, are still enjoying a vacation. Have been in Chicago and made a trip to Ohio.

THE CAPITOL management says business is far better than at this time last year. Ed Maisel has been showing some truly fine pictures, and they have been getting the money. W. S. Hart did nicely in "The Gunfighter" on Saturday, August 3. Another big production that did big on Washington street was "My Own United States," which was shown at the Capitol on Thursday, August 8.

THE PRINCESS has a new travel picture, booked in conjunction with one of the local dailies.

"JOAN OF PLATTSBURG," Mabel Normand's Goldwyn picture, was the State Fair attraction at the Vaudette on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, August 11, 12 and 13. The last half of the week was given to Vivian Martin in "The Sunset Trail," one of her best Paramount plays.

SMILING BENNY ROVIN exudes prosperity from within the portals of the Amuse-U. Ben is a hard worker, and no one begrudges him all the coin of the realm that he can corner.

ELSIE FERGUSON has had four fair days at the Gaiety in "The Danger Mark." Should the Chambers story have arrived later in the season, it is a safe bet that the theatre would have doubled its receipts. "Saved by Wireless," one of the Keystone re-issues, was on the same bill. "The Service Star," Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn play, and "A Tight Squeeze," a Fox Sunshine comedy, were the attractions at the Gaiety on August 8, 9 and 10.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS played three days at the Vaudette in "A Soul For Sale," August 4, 5 and 6. William Desmond in "Beyond the Shadows," a Triangle play, was the offering on August 7, while Wallace Reid followed on the 8, 9 and 10 in "Nan of Music Mountain."

THE PRINCESS has been doing pretty well despite the heat. "Just a Woman," a special feature with Charlotte Walker, was the attraction on August 4, 5 and 6. Violet Palmer, Johnnie Hines and Madge Evans came on August 7 and 8 in "Neighbors," a World picture. "Blue Blood," a Selexart offering, is announced as a near future attraction at the Princess.

GUS KERASOTES, manager of the Royal, has been running the past two weeks to increased admission prices. The following pictures were booked at the theatre for the week of August 4-10: Sunday, "The Business of Life," with Alice Joyce; Monday, "The Girl and Justice," with Olive Tell; Tuesday, Carlyle Blackwell in "The Marriage Market," and a comedy, "Three Times and Out"; Wednesday, Kitty Gordon in "Diamonds and Pearls"; Thursday, Earle Williams in "The Soul Master"; Friday, Virginia Pearson in "A Daughter of France" and the Fox comedy, "Shadows of Her Pest"; Saturday, Henry B. Walthall in "Humdrum Brown."

THE SAVOY, unmindful of the heat, continues to do big business daily. Attractions booked for the week of August 4-10 disclosed the fact that Louie Kerasotes is showing a very exceptional bill. The shows run as follows: Sunday, Mignon Anderson in "The Shooting Party," "Choo Choo Love" with Alice Howell and a Universal Weekly; Monday, Bryant Washburn in "Skinner's Baby" and Broncho Billy in "His Fatal Joke"; Tuesday, Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman in "Sunlight's Last Raid"; Wednesday, "The Woman in the Web," chapter 14, and Universal Weekly; Thursday, Little Zoe Ray and True Boardman in "Danger Within"; Friday, Marie Walcamp in "The Lion's Claws" and Neal Hart in a new picture; Saturday, a new Jewel production.

MISS BESSIE WARE will again be cashier at the Majestic for the coming season.

W. W. WATTS has installed new Simplexes in the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres, and the machines are working nicely. "Bill" is always giving his patrons the best.

GLADYS BROCKWELL came to the Lyric on August 11 and 12 in "The Bird of Prey"; Emmy Wehlen on Tuesday

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER" goes into the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, for a week and may remain indefinitely. General Manager Gleickman is going to bill the town heavy and use big newspaper space and publicity to put it over.

THE employes of the Detroit Universal exchange have presented Ray Branch with a wrist watch, very essential to the boys serving Uncle Sam. Ray is at Camp Custer.

JOHN MIEVES of the Dawn theatre, Detroit, toured to Cleveland and back last week. He formerly lived in the Cuyahoga City.

WE find many exhibitors throughout the state making Saturday their "Comedy Night." On this night they show either all comedies or a comedy-drama feature and a two-reel comedy. Lipp and Cross in Battle Creek are having big success with comedy night; the Clay theatre in Detroit also is doing it successfully.

CHARLES H. POWELL has resigned his position with Fox as salesman to devote all his time to the Lincoln theatre, Sebewaing, which he recently took over.

PHIL GLEICHMAN of the Broadway-Strand theatre left for New York last Friday. He expects to announce some next year's bookings on his return.

"GOLDWYN looks good for the coming year" is a common expression among exhibitors as a result of their announcement of their new policy.

THE Strand and Maxine theatres, Detroit, have booked all of the Chaplin and Arbuckle comedies controlled for Michigan by the Strand Features.

ED KIRCHNER, manager of the Family theatre, Detroit, has now fully recovered from his long illness. We are mighty glad to see him back on the job with his old-time vigor.

"MABEL AND FATTY ADRIFT," which recently played an entire week at the Washington, Detroit, has been booked by the Garden, Globe, Rex, Strand, Coliseum, Gladwin Park and Russell theatres, Detroit; the Lyric, in Kalamazoo, and the Oakland, Pontiac and the Majestic, Jackson. This is a Mack Sennett comedy with Arbuckle and Mabel Normand owned by the Strand Features.

THE last day of July was a record one for the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company. Bert Weddige, proprietor, says he took orders for National carbons exceeding 50,000. The Woodward Theatre Company alone placed a single order for nearly 25,000 carbons.

MESSRS. RYDER AND SMITH of the State Film Company, Detroit, have disposed of the business to Samuel Ludwig, who owns the Victor Film Company. Mr. Ludwig took possession of the State exchange at 302 Film Building on Tuesday, Aug. 6. Messrs. Ryder and Smith have not announced their future connections. Mr. Ludwig came to Michigan originally from Milwaukee. Bert Deiner will continue as manager of the Victor and State exchanges.

HUSTLING JOE HORWITZ is kept very busy these days answering letters of inquiries about his two big specials "The Mad Lover" and "Today." Joe says they will positively be among the big box-office attractions this fall and winter. They will not be released before September.

JOE SNITZER, one of the Universal special representatives, was a Detroit visitor last week.

TOM EALAND, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Detroit, is back from a two weeks' vacation.

NOW that M. W. McGee, manager of the Majestic theatre, Detroit, is back from a motor trip, he will immediately get busy with bookings for the coming season. The theatre is being completely renovated and will be more beautiful than ever when it reopens the latter part of August.

Elgin Items of Interest

THE Orpheum had the good luck to have Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne booked for the week end of August 3 just following newspaper reports of their recent marriage. Result—decided impetus to patronage.

DALLAS SCHULTZ and Eddie Funk, two popular Elgin boys skilled on the ukelele and possessed of skill and voice in the singing of popular ditties, are augmenting the orchestra at the Temple, Elgin, this summer. They sing words of the illustrated songs recently introduced into Temple programs, the one appearing afternoons, the other, evenings. Schultz is a nephew of the new proprietor, William Fay.

ENCOURAGED by the week of coolness beginning with August, Elgin managers booked big attractions for the next week. Although the weather rather upset their plans by turning hot again, the pictures were drawing well in early week.

THE Grand led off the week with showing of "Over the Top." "War" pictures go good in Elgin and the fans were liking it at early reports. The picture played Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. For Friday and Saturday Manager Newman offered one of the town's prime favorites Mae Marsh, in "All Woman."

THE Star began the week with the offering of a double feature program Monday. The pictures were Fatty Arbuckle in "O Doctor," and Mary Anderson and Antonio Moreno in "By Right of Possession." Tuesday Manager Crocker, at request of many patrons, brought back at popular prices "The Whip," shown last spring at the Grand. His policy of returning these big pictures at popular prices has proved a most successful one.

OTHER offerings at the Star in the week beginning August 4 included Virginia Pearson in "The Firebrand," "Dunces and Danger," Harrry Morey in "The Golden Goal," Harold Lloyd in "City Slickers," Tom Mix in "Western Blood," "Smothered Love," "Belles of Liberty," "Are Waitresses Safe?" Pearl White in "The House of Hate," June Caprice in "Blue-Eyed Mary," Harold Lloyd in "Are Crooks Dishonest?" and Jewel Carmen in "The Bride of Fear."

IN addition to the Bushman-Bayne picture, "Social Quicksands," the Orpheum showed the week of August 4 June Elvidge and John Bowers in "The Oldest Law," Baby Marie Osborne in "A Daughter of the West," Alice Brady in "A Woman Alone" and Kitty Gordan and Irving Cummings in "The Interlopers."

Douglas Goes to New York to Wind Up Affairs

HAVING arranged business affairs at the studio preparatory to entering the army service in the Tank Division, W. A. S. Douglas left for New York this week to wind up his affairs with the Pathe organization and to dispose of several other subjects the Diando Film Corporation have produced. Mr. Douglas took East with his three one-reel comedies featuring Little Sunshine Sammy, the colored boy seen in a number of Baby Marie Osborne subjects, and two other comedies featuring Gale Henry, as well as a six-reel Western subject produced under the direction of Stuart Paton featuring Betty Compson and George Larkin which has been titled "The Coming of the Law." Mr. Douglas plans to be back in Los Angeles by the end of the third week and will remain here for a few days before entering the service on the first of September.

Jack Halloway, who has been director of publicity at the Diando, and Walter MacNamara, who has written comedy scenarios and directed the making of comedies, have also enlisted in the Tank Service and will leave the Diando Company at the same time as does Douglas.

Arrangements made by Mr. Douglas provide that Leon T. Osborne, secretary and treasurer of the Diando, and Frank Beresford, manager of production, shall take charge of the Diando affairs.

Plans for the future of the Diando have not been made known by the officers of the company, but it is generally understood the feature company headed by Baby Marie Osborne is to continue, and there is a probability the company under the direction of Stuart Paton making Western subjects will do likewise. Besides Miss Compson and Larkin, Billy Quinn, Fred Malateste, Horace Carpenter and Claire DuBrey appear in the Western subjects, and Mildred Reardon is featured in the Sunshine Sammy Comedies which are entitled "Buttons," "The Black Cupid" and "The Lucky Horseshoe."

Garrick in Los Angeles Reduces Prices

REDUCTION of prices in Los Angeles due to hot weather conditions has caused the policy of reducing prices to become more or less epidemic. The most recent theatre to announce a change in price schedule is the Garrick, owned by a company headed by Harry P. Caulfield. The new schedule provides the prices shall be ten, fifteen and twenty cents plus war tax, instead of fifteen, twenty and thirty cents plus war tax.

This is the third Los Angeles downtown theatre to reduce its prices. First Miller's announced the increase of the number of low-priced seats and reduced the prices from fifteen, twenty and thirty to ten, twenty and thirty. Following this the Symphony dropped from fifteen, twenty and thirty cents to ten and fifteen cents.

All of the houses referred to above have a seating capacity of about 800. It is reported business of the houses of this size in the downtown district has been materially decreased since the opening of the two larger houses, the Kinema and Grauman's. The prices at these theatres are fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five, except loge seats at the Kinema, which are fifty cents.

Los Angeles Reduces Theatre License Tax

LOS ANGELES exhibitors were given a most pleasing surprise this week when they learned the City Council of Los Angeles in making up schedule for city license tax had slightly reduced the license for motion picture treatres. The rates, according to the new schedule, will be three dollars per month for each hundred seats in theatres where the maximum admission price is twenty cents or more. The rate for houses having an admission fee of less than twenty cents is one dollar and sixty-five cents per hundred seats or fraction of one hundred. This is a reduction of approximately ten per cent.

Hampton Leases Willis-Inglis Studios

JESSE D. HAMPTON, making pictures starring J. Warren Kerrigan for Hodkinson, has leased the Willis and Inglis studio in Hollywood, and the company is moving to that place this week from the Ince studios in Edendale. This change was made upon the completion of "Prisoners of the Pines," a Canadian Northwest picture directed by Ernest Warde. Practically all of the exteriors were made in the big Bear Valley, while interiors and dance hall settings were built at the studio. This cast includes Lois Wilson as leading woman, with the principal parts being taken by Walter Perry and Claire DuBrey.

The next subject to be made starring Kerrigan is titled "Three X Gordon," a comedy drama laid in New York and New Jersey. For this Mr. Hampton has practically monopolized the juvenile market, there being nine actors of this type in the picture. Lois Wilson will continue as Kerrigan's leading woman, and the principal juvenile parts will be taken by John Gilbert, Jay Belasco and Chester Wheatcroft. Charles French takes the important character role.

Many stories have been current in Los Angeles relative to Mr. Hampton's proposed activities in which the newspapers have linked the names of Herbert Rawlinson and Anita Stewart. No definite arrangements have been made by Mr. Hampton for either of these stars to appear in subjects made under his supervision. John Blackwood, representing Mr. Hampton, is now in New York negotiating for stars to appear in subjects that will be made for the Hodkinson program.

Los Angeles Theatres Miss Electric Lights

LOS ANGELES' bright way flickered out last week for the first time since the fuel conservation movement in this country became effective. Recent order of the Fuel Commissioner provides that no display sign or unnecessary lights shall burn on streets or in windows until further notice. This conservation of light has affected the theatres of Los Angeles, more so perhaps than any other institutions, inasmuch as theatres are practically the only place open in Los Angeles after half-past five, and in view of the fact that almost all light and electric power used in Los Angeles is generated by water power theatremen are making an appeal to the Fuel Commissioner petitioning that they be permitted to use electricity generated by water power. By the exhibitors it is pointed out that all of the electricity of one company is generated by water power and a very large proportion of the only other company in Southern California by the same method. At the same time it is shown that an unnecessary amount of light is used in display windows during the day which if conserved would more than make up for the lighting saved by turning off the lights on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Theatres Changing Hands

CALIFORNIA

C. H. Dunlap has purchased the motion picture theatre at Lakeview and will conduct same in conjunction with his other theatres at Alturas.

Mrs. J. Hartman has purchased the Liberty theatre, formerly the Maud M., from Van Deveere and Tucker.

WASHINGTON

A. W. Clark has succeeded E. P. Coffy as assistant manager of the Stilwell theatre, Spokane.

The Class A theatre of Hillyard, located on Diamond avenue near Market street, has been sold to J. Newton of Spirit Lake. Mrs. Clara Holmes, who has been its manager for several years, will depart for Kentucky to join her father.

Grauman's Picks Up In Receipts With "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

THE week ending August 3 was the third biggest from the standpoint of box-office receipts since the opening of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, February 1. The attraction was Marguerite Clark's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The first four days' showing of this picture made new records for the box-office, but hot weather on the last three days of the engagement caused a material decrease in the attendance. The film had very unusual competition, inasmuch as there were two parades late at night and the Government war trophy exposition took thousands of people who otherwise would have been theatre patrons.

Russell Takes Eighty Cowboys to Location

WILLIAM RUSSELL almost cornered the market for cowboys this week when he engaged eighty and took to the woods or mountains with them on Monday for the filming of "When a Man Rides Alone" by Stephen Fox. Russell will have a new leading woman in this subject, having engaged Olga Grey, a very attractive actress, who has played in Fine Arts, Triangle and other subjects.

Universal Patrons Keep Things Lively

A STRING OF PATRONS of the Universal picture service from outside towns of the State kept things humming at the local office the past few days. They included George Lindsay, manager of the Star theatre at Eureka; Clifton Pierce, manager of the Star theatre at Springville; J. R. Baxter, manager of the Lyceum at Spring City; Victor Foote, manager of the Venice at Nephi and George Dene, manager of the Gaiety at Payson.

Goldman Exchanges Do Well

MARK GOLDMAN, western representative of the Bee Hive Exchange, which is booking the famous Billy West Comedies, has remarked that all the agencies he has opened are doing good business. What Seattle Exhibitors Say

E. A. ZABEL of the Ray was on Film Row for a few weeks.

MANAGER ARNOLD, of the Star, was a recent visitor to the Seattle film exchanges during the past week.

THE VICTOR, which recently opened in Seattle near the corner of Third and Pike, is under the proprietorship of Sam and Joe Gargano. The first pictures shown by them were "The Submarine Parrott" and "The Love Brokers." These are four-reel Triangle comedies and attracted more attention than the managers expected. They have started in to advertise and have begun to see the results. The intention of the Gargano boys is to show up-to-date clean pictures. Their price at present is 10 cents for adults, but it is expected that when they get their more expensive pictures they will raise this price.

GUY NAVARRE, one of Paramount's king salesmen in this district, has just returned from Spokane and east of the mountains with a flock of contracts. He always does something like that.

In and Around Denver

R. J. CHURCHILL has resigned his position as local manager for the Fox Film Corporation, and has been succeeded by Charles H. Muehlman, until recently special representative for Fox, with headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Churchill's resignation is due to a call to the colors from Hastings, Nebraska, his former home. He has not yet been assigned to any designated training camp, but will probably leave Denver within ten days or two weeks. He is very popular in local film circles and with all exhibitors in this territory.

SAM BAXTER of the Denver Isis, has booked a return engagement of "Cleopatra" for the week beginning Sunday, August 11.

WARD E. SCOTT, new manager for Pathe, is visiting exhibitors in the key cities of Denver territory. The local Pathe office is busy booking the western serial, "Hands Up" and also their new serial, "Fourth of July in France." The latter picture is now being shown in Denver at the Isis in connection with "To Hell With the Kaiser."

EDWARD ARMSTRONG has returned from Salt Lake City and Butte, where he was very successful in booking "For Husbands Only," "The Geezer of Berlin" and "The Lusitania." He announces the appointment of George Bourke, former Denver salesman, as new manager for Universal at Butte. Ray Hudson, former manager of the Butte office, has been named as special salesman for Universal in Denver territory.

J. I. ZIMMERMAN, who owns the two Lyric theatres at Bayard and Bridgeport, Neb., has recently added new equipment, including Simplex machines.

C. G. EPPERSON, who recently resigned as manager of Pathe's Denver headquarters to enter training with the radio class at Colorado College, was a recent Denver visitor. Epperson says he likes it fine and has taken on eight pounds since he left here three weeks ago.

J. B. TOWNSEND, who recently came here from Los Angeles as manager for Sherry Service, has taken his departure for the East, after holding down the job three days. The Denver altitude was too high for Mrs. Townsend and they were obliged to leave hurriedly for a lower location. No successor to Mr. Townsend has yet been named.

F. G. BUNTE was a recent visitor on Film Row. He will re-open his Gem theatre at Yuma, Colo., which has been closed all summer, on August 12. While here he placed several contracts for Mutual specials.

W. A. RICKARD, owner of the Ford theatre at Leadville, was in Denver last week arranging fall bookings.

THE STRAND, the leading picture house on Curtis street, has arranged with Manager Cassidy of Mutual, for the Sessue Hayakawa specials. Cassidy says contracts are coming in fine on the first release, "His Birthright," which is scheduled for September 8 in Denver territory.

UNLESS the American Railway Company gets on the job and hands out something approaching fair service, they may wake up some fine morning to learn that every exchange in Denver has decided to transact all their business by parcel post. It would be next to impossible for the latter to be any worse than the service now being given by the consolidation to Denver exchanges.

MRS. A. L. HEWETT of the Dreamland theatre, Rapid City, S. D., has arranged for a booking on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" for Labor Day. Three prints of "The Kaiser" are still booking out of Denver Universal, although the wonderful production is now in its sixth month. Open dates are scarce.

THE AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL at Hesperus, Colo., has booked Universal service, including scenics, news weeklies and clean, short-length dramatic subjects. An important deal is pending for the early transfer of a leading Curtis street house to new owners. Details are withheld until the sale is consummated.

Los Angeles Short News

MISS FREDA RUBENSTEIN, assistant manager of the All Star Feature Distributors with headquarters at the San Francisco Exchange, has returned to San Francisco after spending several weeks at the Los Angeles branch where she introduced new bookkeeping and booking systems which has been inaugurated at San Francisco. Later Miss Rubenstein will go to Seattle to install the same system for the De Luxe Feature Films, Inc.

POPULARITY OF PATRIOTIC PICTURES continues very strong in the Southern California territory, as is shown by the bookings made for the Metro subject, "To Hell With the Kaiser." Three prints for this subject are in constant use, and bookings are solid until Sept. 15. New records for attendance were made in the El Monterey theatre at San Louis Obispo where this Metro subject was recently shown. Ed. N. Kaiser, manager of the El Monterey, writes the Los Angeles Exchange the business was the greatest in the history of the house. He carried far more than the usual amount of advertising, and the fact that his name was the same as the Hun ruler, gave opportunity to apply the title locally.

PLANS FOR A FOURTEEN HUNDRED SEAT THEATRE, to be built on the corner of Eighth and Broadway at San Deigo, are now being prepared by Albert C. Martin, Los Angeles architect, whose most recent theatrical work was that of architect and construction engineer of Grauman's in Los Angeles. It is planned by Edward H. Post, builder of the new San Diego theatre, that the house shall be named the California. Present plans provide the new theatre, which will be built in a remodeled building now on the site, will be ready for opening about Dec. 1.

Salt Lake News and Views

E. R. BARNET of New York, auditor for the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, is in Salt Lake for his first visit here. He found time enough free from business to go to Utah lake last week on a fishing trip with Louis Marcus, district manager, and L. Levine, booker for the corporation, returning much delighted that he hooked the biggest bass caught on the trip.

CONTRACT for the 1918-1919 "Star Series" of the Paramount-Artcraft pictures has been closed by H. E. Skinner, manager of the Alhambra theatre at Ogden.

GEORGE E. CARPENTER, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, has announced the seven D. W. Griffith productions to be released this year under the Artcraft trademark. The first, "The Great Love," is booked for exhibition at the Paramount-Empress Sept. 15 to 18, inclusive.

MANAGER JOHN B. ASHTON of the Columbia theatre at Provo was in town the other day with a gleeful story of a triple increase of 10 per cent in receipts with the succession of the pictures, "The Claws of the Hun," "How Could You Jean?" and "The Bravest Way."

JAMES GEORGE, manager of the American theatre at Idaho Falls, was in Salt Lake the other day contracting for increased service of Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

THIRTY-FIVE OUT OF 96 members of the Exhibitors' Booking Association resident in Utah and Idaho were in attendance at the association convention held in Salt Lake Monday and Tuesday last week. Announcement of the association's arrangement to handle the pictures of the Four-Square Corporation in Utah has been made by A. L. Stallings, vice-president and general manager.

A. B. KNOX has succeeded George L. Mayne as manager of the Salt Lake branch office of the First National Exhibitors' circuit. Mr. Mayne's time is entirely occupied with the management of the American and Strand theatres of the Swanson circuit. Mr. Knox comes from Denver, where he has been in the service of the same company, recently having made a field trip from there that included a tour of New Mexico. He talks about Los Angeles whenever permitted to do so, giving the impression that he must have lived there once.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" are taking Utah by storm as swiftly as they took the Marne Salient, according to A. B. Knox, local manager for the First National Exhibitors' circuit. The picture is going better than was even anticipated, says Mr. Knox.

A BEATIFIC LOOK of satisfaction rested on the features of M. H. Kuhn, manager for the Western Triangle distributing corporation, the other morning when he was interrupted in perusal of the "Moovie" page of a local newspaper. It held advertisements of Triangle productions on show in four Salt Lake theatres, the American, the Broadway, the Pantages and the Rialto.

THE PICKWICK has been showing "Carmen of the Klondike" to big houses, and the management claims it is better than "The Spoilers."

FEATURING MACISTE, the Italian giant, who afterwards proved himself a hero at the front, the Plaza's showing of "The Warrior" drew good crowds for a week.

MRS. ABBA G. BUSH, mother of G. A. Bush, and grandmother of Kent G. Bush, both of the Broadway Amusement company, died in this city on August 4 in her 79th year. She was born in New York.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Bound in Morocco," and a Mack Sennett comedy, "She Loved Him Plenty," made a strong double bill at the Cabrillo, the house which advertises that it furnishes 30,000 cubic feet of fresh air every minute.

THE BROADWAY found a good drawing card in "Sandy," the Alice Hegan Rice story, featuring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff. At the Superba a Mable Normand picture, "Back to the Woods," met with popular approval, the Capitol comedy, "The Widow's Might," with Billy Parsons, also being shown.

ENID MARKEY, well-known motion picture actress, who has been playing for several months in stock at the Strand theatre, with the Virginia Brissac Players, has gone East for a rest, having temporarily lost her voice, following a severe cold. Miss Markey will spend part of her vacation in New York City.

MOTION PICTURE STARS have been numerous among the week's visitors. Roscoe Arbuckle, accompanied by Lou Guernsey and Lou Anger, were at the U. S. Grant hotel for a day or two. Lottie Pickford and Mrs. Willie Hope also spent several days at the Grant. "Bill" Hart, his sister, Miss Mary Hart, and Miss Wanda Hawley were among the guests at a dinner at the Grant, given by Col. and Mrs. L. M. Farrell of the 159th infantry in honor of the star.

BESSIE BARRISCALE is to occupy a box at the Isis theatre upon the occasion of a combined minstrel and vaudeville show to be given for the benefit of the section naval base here. Miss Barriscale has joined the long list of "god-mothers" to Camp Kearny or other military or naval groups, taking the naval base boys under her protection.

MARY PICKFORD wanted to see the colonel of "her regiment" at Camp Kearny the other night, but got there after the camp was closed to visitors. The magic of her name, however, when conveyed to the regimental commander, whom she wished to see, secured for her the desired special pass.

HELEN WOLCOTT, formerly playing before the camera with the Lubin Western company, received a welcome from her San Diego friends during her visit with the Morosco comedy, "Lombardi, Ltd.", at the Isis theatre.

THE PLAZA THEATRE, following up a big advance campaign in the newspapers, put out thousands of hand-bills advertising "Pershing's Crusaders," and showed the patriotic films to big houses for a week. The use of a naval band, playing about the streets and in front of the Plaza, helped draw the crowds.

THE NEW LIBERTY theatre at Camp Kearny has been completed at an estimated cost of $50,000, and opened with "The Squaw Man," put on by a group of volunteer players who are lending their talents to the entertainment of the men in khaki. Some of the best motion picture men and women on the Coast have been assisting in giving the Liberty a good start-off.

THE PICKWICK is putting on the "Toys of Fate," featuring Nazimova, for a week's run. The Savoy (Pantages), in its vaudeville bill, is showing the serial, "The Fight for Millions," with William Duncan featured.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

THE SUNSET FILM CORPORATION has a new manager for its Los Angeles branch in the person of John C. Moore, formerly manager of the Universal Exchange at Phoenix, Arizona, and more recently associated with the San Francisco Universal Exchange. Mr. Moore has had a number of years' experience in the film exchange business, and succeeded Edward H. Watson as manager of the Sunset.

B. E. LOPER, manager of the Select Los Angeles branch, covered Southern California territory during the past week, spending a portion of the time at San Diego.

W. H. CREE, who until very recently served as special representative in the Coast States for the General Film Company, who recently resigned, has enlisted in the Naval Reserve and on Aug. 10 entered the service at San Pedro Training station. Mr. Cree has been succeeded in his General position by Walter Rand, formerly of the Denver Goldwyn Exchange.

LOS ANGELES FILM ROW has a new face this week, as C. H. Coyle, formerly manager of the Columbia theatre at Phoenix, Arizona, has been engaged by Manager Walsh of the Los Angeles Fox Exchange, as salesman for Southern California and Arizona. Mr. Coyle is a former film exchangeman having been identified with a number of independent or state rights exchanges prior to his work as manager of the Columbia theatre at Phoenix, which is owned by George Mauk.

THE AMERICAN RELEASES through the Pathe Exchange in Los Angeles, will be handled by J. C. Crowley, former salesman of the Los Angeles Fox Exchange. Mr. Crowley has already taken up this new work, and will by the date of the first release, Sept. 1, have made a trip over the entire territory.

MEMBERS OF THE PATHE Los Angeles branch contend they have made remarkable bookings for the Pathe Official War Reviews in this territory and especially in that of Arizona. In that State there are forty-eight towns that have theatres, many of which only run a few nights each week. Of the forty-eight Arizona theatre towns, forty-two managers in as many towns have contracted for these films.

J. B. MASON, owner of the Dream theatre at San Diego, spent a portion of the past week in Los Angeles making bookings for his theatre.

QUINN'S RIALTO THEATRE had such a successful business on "Baree, Son of Kazan," during the first week's showing of this film, that the management held it over for the second week. This, in view of the fact that Los Angeles has experienced the hottest weather of the year during these weeks, point out the subject was an unusual drawing card.

FOR THE FIRST TIME since taking the office of Assistant General Manager of Vitagraph, A. W. Goff this week paid a visit to the Los Angeles Exchange, and the producing plant of the Vitagraph at Hollywood. He was met at Kansas City by H. D. Naugle, Vitagraph representative for the western half of the country, who accompanied him to Los Angeles, and will accompany him to the other exchange cities in the western section of the country.

SEVERAL WEEKS AGO the Los Angeles Times condemned Lois Weber's picture, "Scandal," recently reissued, stating it was on the riske order, and should be censored. When this film was shown during the week of July 28 to Aug. 3, inclusive, at the Garrick theatre, Manager H. P. Gaulfield introduced a voting contest and asked the patrons by returning votes to indicate their opinion. During the showing more than four thousand votes were returned to the box office and there was not one person who upheld the Los Angeles newspaper by their vote.

AN INTEREST in the New California theatre now being built in Los Angeles has been sold by Messrs. Fred Miller and Harry Leonhart to Seattle men represented by A. Aaronson, J. H. Davis and Bart Birtleson. The new owners will make very little difference in the management of the theatre, Fred Miller and Harry Leonhart continuing in that capacity, assisted by Mr. Birtelson. Roy Miller will be in charge of advertising and publicity matter.

MESSRS. M. H. LEWIS AND HARRY BALLANCE have returned from spending several days at San Diego in the interest of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation where three contracts were made with first run houses for the showing of Paramount and Artcraft subjects. The Cabrillo theatre, managed by R. E. Hicks, during the next year will show subjects of this distributing organization forty-eight weeks. W. W. Whitson of the Plaza theatre has contracted for forty-seven weeks, and G. A. Bush of the Broadway has thirty-five weeks. The prices charged at San Diego at all of these houses are twenty, thirty and fifty cents plus war tax.

CONTRACTS HAVE BEEN MADE in Los Angeles for first run showings of Paramount and Artcraft at Grauman's, Clune's Broadway and Auditorium, the Kinema and the New California which will open about Sept. 15. In addition to this the Palace theatre on Seventh street near Broadway, has a contract for the first second run choice, and maintains the same price as the first run houses.

D. TENENT, owner of the Exchange theatre at Goldfield, Nevada, is spending a month in Los Angeles, and advises he has closed his theatre for the remainder of the summer owing to the hot weather in that section.

BROADWAY AMUSEMENT COMPANY of Tucson, Arizona, have selected Sept. 1 for the opening day of their new theatre built on the site of the one which was destroyed by fire early this year. The Tucson Opera House, as the theatre is known, will be slightly larger than the former building, containing as it will about 1,000 seats. This house is owned by Drackman and Goldstein, who successfully conducted the theatre prior to the fire.

ALLIED NATIONS OFFICIAL WAR REVIEWS, booked in the California territory by the All Star Feature Distributors, are being shown at three principal theatres in Los Angeles: Orpheum Vaudeville, Clune's Broadway and Miller's Alhambra. These films have solid booking for about six weeks from release date.

CONTRACT HAS BEEN LET for the erection of a 50 by 150 foot Class A construction storage building for the American Photoplay Slide Company. The new structure will be used as a storage place for films and slides made by this company. Pozzo Construction Company will be the builders.

If Your Box Office Business isn't Satisfactory

They are good salesmen.
They work without bluster or shouting.
They sell tickets by appealing to the eye.
(And the eye is the pathway to the purse.)

Nervous pictures repel. Simplex projection attracts. Which pays the best?

You are not giving your negatives, your exchanges or your exhibitors a square deal if you place your printing and developing contract with any laboratory which has not amply prepared to "Carry On" while complying with both the spirit and letter of Government orders concerning fuel, labor and material.

Last Winter, while fuel famine and express congestion were playing havoc in the East, we at Chicago, the natural distributing center, sufficiently and efficiently served our customers.

This Winter will find us again prepared, for we have stored on our premises—Right Now—enough coal to "Carry On" until Spring. We have stocked up with other essentials and, while twenty-two of our men are with the Colors, our organization is strong and determined in spirit and able to cope with the situation.

And—Mark You!—for efficient general distribution of a National Release, Chicago's the place.

Focusing America's Attention on the "Better Motion Pictures"

IN thousands of theatres in the week of September 1st, nothing but Paramount and Artcraft Pictures will be shown.

It will be a week of showing America just what the motion picture is today—the national amusement, a vital part of America's seething life.

It will be a week of building good will, a week in which the theatres will show the whole country just what "better motion pictures" are.

Such a week would be worthless unless the theatres of America showed, first: pictures bearing trade marks so well known that the crowds always come to see them; second, pictures so good that they can stand the test of this concentrated demonstration.

The only company in the industry that has the producing and distributing organizations to furnish the quality of motion pictures necessary for such an important test of the worthwhileness of the industry is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The only pictures that the exhibitor implicitly can trust always to make good to the public are Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

And so if you are not already booked solid, get in on it quick!

You, at your theatre, for your profit, for the National Week, for the industry of which you are a part—now and for the years to come.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Here → NEXT WEEK IS Paramount

It is just as important to project the right sort of pictures "over here" as to fire the right sort of cartridges "over there."

More than a year after the United States entered the War, America's motion picture industry finds itself stronger, more favored, more necessary than ever before.

The motion picture's mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home—it is the national amusement, filling an urgent human need.

The organization behind Paramount and Artcraft pictures is dedicated to two purposes—to help keep up the spirit of America and to perpetuate and refine the art of the motion picture.

Twenty million photo-play lovers and many thousands of theatres demand Paramount and Artcraft pictures every week because they are better pictures.

This coming week, you can go to any of the better theatres, anywhere, any day, or every day, and be sure of a good, clean, wholesome, heartening show all through, every minute. Drama, adventure, comedy, travel—the program will be made up of Paramount and Artcraft features, and very little else besides. In many cases nothing else. Such programs as that right here in front of your eyes—that one is typical

We named that theatre Alhambra merely as an example. It might just as well be Strand, Rialto, Palace, Rivoli, Empire, Crescent, Globe, Cascade, Court, or the name of the theatre nearest you.

After this coming week is over you will know it is Paramount and Artcraft that have made "better motion pictures" familiar to you: —"Foremost stars, superbly directed, in clean motion pictures."

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

ON the evening of Thursday, August 29th, in the best homes in your town, the folks are going to be reading, in the Saturday Evening Post, the double page advertisement, a small reproduction of which is shown above.

The banker, the station agent, the druggist, the grocer, the mayor and their wives and children will be reading it.

and Artcraft WEEK

Everybody who is anybody in your town reads The Saturday Evening Post. You know that.

And after they've read it they'll have new respect for the industry of which you are a part, and they'll say, each of them: "Isn't that a fine idea! Wonder where we'll find these Paramount and Artcraft Pictures this week?"

Is the answer going to be the name of your theatre—or the other fellow's?

Story Written by A FAMOUS AUTHOR

(Use this as Program Copy)

ON the floor of his room—the doors bolted, windows locked from the inside—lay the body of a man—murdered! And circumstance so spun its web that it entangled the destinies of many.

For Robert Ashton, the slain man, had carried a mysterious green god that he had stolen from a Chinese temple. And because Major Temple was determined to possess the little emerald effigy, Ashton had offered it for the hand of Muriel, Temple's daughter. And in the midst of it all appeared Owen Morgan, who offered his love and protection, his life if need be, to the woman whose father would bargain her off.

Yet who had entered through sealed doors to slay Ashton? Was it Morgan, to save the woman he loved? Was it Muriel, forced to any lengths to escape Ashton's sensuous covetousness? Was it Temple, impelled by his passion for the idol Ashton possessed? Or Li Min, the Chinese servant, with vengeance in his heart for the heretic who would desecrate the temple of his gods? Or was it the hand of Fate itself?

VITAGRAPH

I can very truthfully say that "A Fight For Millions" is far ahead of any serial run in this town in a long time, not excepting your "The Fighting Trail," and "Vengeance—and the Woman." It has doubled my box office receipts from the start and is doing better all the time.

WILLIAM SEAL, Manager
Yale Theatre, Vinita, Okla,

Saturday (August 6th) was a hot one, but the heat did not keep "A Fight For Millions" from getting a flying start. In fact, we played to the biggest business Saturday since I took the management of the house. We played to more than 800 men, women and children Saturday matinee and at 2:00 p. m. all traffic was stopped in front of the theatre. At night, we did a "stand out" business and you know that is going some for this town.

I consider "A Fight For Millions" the best serial buy on the market today, especially if "The Fighting Trail" was run previously to the Millions.

Scenes from

REX BEACH PICTURES

A LOT of my friends, and I include among them many exhibitors, are wondering why after having but one Rex Beach picture a year for four years I have suddenly decided to have Goldwyn produce and release six in one year.

I am going to tell you why.

I have waited four years because I knew that production was constantly improving in quality and in power.

Because the longer I waited, with the producers growing in skill, the better my Rex Beach Productions would be.

My six Star Series productions this year are going to be the best-made Rex Beach Pictures you have ever had. I have seen the first one, "Laughing Bill Hyde" and it is a whale of a picture.

THE next production will be "The Crimson Gardenia" and the other four are "The Net," "The Iron Trail," "Going Some" and The Silver Horde." As fine as my previous pictures were, I now tell you these six will be still stronger.

And now another thing:

I always wanted my pictures to be as universally and splendidly distributed as my stories and books have been by my publishers.

That was another reason I waited. And I am glad I did, because Goldwyn has the best organized nation-wide distribution I have ever seen. My six new pictures are packed full of box-office value.

¶ The best thing about the new Gaumont photo-serial is its appeal to all classes of picture-goers---the young, the old, and the middle-aged.

¶ It's hard to describe this amazing drama, it differs so from ordinary serials.

¶ Which means a red-blooded feature with no let-up in the interest from beginning to the end.

Hodkinson Service is a factor in the industry today because it is selected to meet the needs of every exhibitor.

The Hodkinson Corporation is in effect a separator. Its sole function is to pick and choose the quality product and eliminate the bad. Unlike producer-dominated organizations it has no need to force any and all product on the market, irrespective of quality and merit

Exhibitors the country over are realizing with clearer understanding every day, the importance of the Hodkinson organization to them, in that, it, with absolute independence and backed by consolidated exhibitor buying power, can do for them what they have always wanted to do, but lacked power to accomplish—the proper selection of profitable product.

The ever-increasing number of exhibitors rallying to the support of the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan, but increases this power to select and secure the "right" product.

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS CIRCUIT

We have secured good advertisers to talk to YOU. Listen to them!

Speaking as one exhibitor to another.

About this year and next—

CHAPLIN'S comedies included—we have already in sight eighteen money-making attractions and expect to release twenty-four during the coming year.

THE new Anita Stewart productions will all be adaptations from famous and successful plays and novels. Miss Stewart's popularity, the lavish scale of production, and the standing of their director, Mr. George Loane Tucker, are guarantees of their quality.

We shall continue our successful policy of dealing in big open market productions which, as heretofore, will be selected after screen examination. The pooled purchasing power of our members has enabled us to secure some of the biggest attractions of the current year which have made money for exhibitors generally. With past experience to guide us in our selections we anticipate even better future results.

Forthcoming First National attractions will prove to be money-makers; the sort we and you depend upon to make the exhibiting business profitable enough to stay in. As heretofore, there will be no strings on First National attractions. Exhibitors may book one or all as their individual circumstances warrant.

We are, first of all, Exhibitors.

WE advise exhibitors to hold open sufficient time for these super-attractions which will be put out under the First National brand, as there is not the slightest doubt that they will prove far more profitable than ordinary program releases.

A word of warning to exhibitors:

SOME of the producing companies are making strenuous efforts to induce exhibitors to book their programs solid. The exhibitor who stakes the future of his house upon the success of one brand of pictures is placing his future in the hands of the producer who may at any time take from him the line of goods he has spent his time and money in establishing. When the producer's advertised brand becomes dominant the exhibitor is completely at the mercy of the producer. Many a merchandising store handling a nationally advertised line of goods has learned to its sorrow the error of tying up its future with a brand it could not control. Therefore, as exhibitors as well as distributors, we say to our fellow exhibitors—" Do not jeopardize your future by placing yourself at the mercy of any one producer; in the open market lies safety and independence for you and us."

BURLINGHAM TRAVEL PICTURES

We have just secured for release, beginning September 1, a first series of 30 extraordinary travel adventures taken by Mr. Frederick Burlingham, the American explorer, famous for his descent 1200 feet down inside the crater of Vesuvius while active, and for his perilous exploits on top of the Alps.

These films are not so-called "educational" pictures—although the London school authorities have said every school child in Great Britain should see them—but perilous exploits on the Matterhorn, in unknown Switzerland, where peasants don't know there is a war in heroic France, Italy and wildest Wales. Each one is a feature film, full of movement, hazard, excitement, pep and punch. The first of the series to be released September 1 will be where the whole expedition, by the breaking of an ice cornice on the summit, escaped death by a hair's breadth. The miraculous escape is recorded on the screen. Live exhibitors will look out for this first one.

1919 Edition Motion Picture Studio Directory

THE 1919 MOTION PICTURE STUDIO DIRECTORY is going to be the most complete and comprehensive edition of this reference book yet issued. Its value to the industry is unquestioned as is shown by letters which are received continually from active members of the industry in every branch.

THE NEWSPAPER EDITOR writes: "The directory is the one accurate guide which I continually have before me in the preparation of my photoplay department. With the aid of the biographies and advertising I am enabled to prepare items of the greatest interest to the Motion Picture Theatregoers." This means publicity to those whose biographies appear which could not possibly be obtained in any other way. These stories reach several millions of people who see pictures each day. The fact that it is the "Newspaperman's Handbook" proves its publicity value to those represented in its pages.

THE CASTING DIRECTOR when he wants some certain type to take specific part in any given film refers to the Directory. Here he locates those who are best suited to his needs and makes his choice. The Directory is commonly known as the "Casting Director's Bible."

A prominent FILM EXECUTIVE writes: "Some one has walked off with my Studio Directory. I should like another copy sent to me at your earliest convenience as I am continually in need of it and like to have it on my desk." This is the reason we refer to it as "The Film Executor's Reference Book." A copy is sent to every film executive and from past experience we find that there are few of them who will allow it to be taken from their offices.

THE PUBLICITY MEN and the PRESS AGENTS are all wise and are dependent upon few for information, yet not many of them could get along without the Studio Directory. It is their Encyclopedia—Reference Book and Guide.

THE EXHIBITOR himself says he cannot do without it—one writes: "Every time I run a picture with any particularly spectacular part I prepare a special story for the local newspaper. In doing this I depend on the Motion Picture Studio Directory, therefore please enter my order for the new edition when it is published." The Directory is the "Exhibitor's Guide"—he must have it as he needs the intimate details which it contains concerning every player listed.

The Studio Directory is the only manual published in our industry; it is the only reference book which is issued and compiled with the idea of being of actual service to the STAR—FILM EXECUTIVE—PRESS AGENT — PUBLICITY MAN — NEWSPAPER EDITOR and EXHIBITOR alike.

The New Edition for 1919 will be even more complete than those which have gone before. We want every actor, actress, director and camera man who has done anything toward promoting pictures to be represented. We want all intimate details concerning their careers at once so as to correct old biographies or prepare new ones. You should see that this information is sent in at once. Haste is necessary.

ON THE OPPOSITE PAGE

is an example showing one method of using the Studio Directory. The Biographies have been taken bodily from the Directory. These are chosen each week by the editor covering pictures to be shown in the theatres or covering the actor or actress particularly popular in the territory.

Also you will see that the page contains newsy items about the films to be shown in the local houses and those taking part in them. These items have been prepared in the main with the aid of the Directory. This is going on daily in hundreds of papers throughout the country making thousands of fans more conversant with the players.

THE DIRECTORY IS RESPONSIBLE FOR MORE FIRST CLASS ACTOR PUBLICITY THAN NINETY PER CENT OF THE PRESS AGENTS EVER DREAMED OF PUTTING OVER.

Another service feature of the Directory is that we carry on, in connection with it, a service department through which we forward letters at any and all times to actors and actresses anywhere. This merely necessitates keeping your address always up to date on our cards. If this is done all that is necessary is your name, care of Motion Picture Studio Directory, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

If you have not already filled in a Biography Blank let us know and we will mail one to you at once.

BESSIE BARRISCALE AT THE LIBERTY TODAY

"Patriotism" Is the Feature; Many Fine Films Booked By New Playhouse

Liberty Theatre is establishing an enviable reputation for the presentation of uniformly high-class photoplay productions, one after another of its pictures having proven of the utmost satisfaction to the rapidly growing patronage. The future holds promise for the Liberty as it is claimed that especially attractive photoplays have been booked for several weeks in advance.

Beginning Sunday, one of the old favorites of the former Triangle Thespians will make her bow at the Liberty. This is Bessie Barriscale, who will appear in "Patriotism", her latest picture. It will be shown Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, and for the last half of the week a super-special production of Kipling's "The Naulahka" will be the feature. The romance of our own rugged west is combined with the weird mysticism of the east (India) in this magnificent play.

Bessie Barriscale's drama is the production of a story having a direct bearing on the war but with scenes laid far from the battle front. There are no scenes of martial strife, no trenches in her manor on the coast of Scotland, a young girl whose father and brother are at the front establishes a hospital for convalescent soldiers who have been invalided home. A ship is torpedoed nearby and among the rescued is a young American who is taken to her home. Subsequently it is suspected that the German U-boats have a base on the coast, and the American sees a Scot, his rival for the affections of the girl, signalling seaward. An encounter follows. Later the Scot accuses the American of collusion with the enemy. The girl disbelieves the accusation and sets upon proving his innocence, in doing which she discovers the submarines' base. This situation leads to an exciting climax which offers Miss Barriscale the most exceptional opportunities she had for interpreting a tensely dramatic situation. It is a blending of lovely femininism, romantic moments and dramatic climaxes of smashing force—just where Bessie Barriscale so wonderfully shines. Charles Gunn, Herschall Mayall, Arthur Allardt, Joseph Dowling and Ida Lewis, all known to patrons of the Liberty, will be seen in the supporting cast. Raymond West, director of some of the biggest successes in which Louise Glaum, Bessie Barriscale, Dorothy Dalton and H. B. Warner appeared at Triangle Theatre, is the director of "Patriotism".

Harold Lloyd will be featured in a farce comedy entitled "Taking the Germ Out of Germany", a single reel comedy, and there will be also the latest release of the Hearst-Pathe News.

Last half of week, beginning Wednesday, "The Naulahka," a wonder play

Caruso's Leading Lady To Be Carolina White

Famous Beauty Won Distinction on Operatic and Concert Stage

Caruso, greatest of tenors, who was endured by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear in motion pictures, will make his first picture with the silent drama accompanied by Carolina White as leading lady. Miss White is a Boston girl who has won distinction on both operatic and concert stage, not merely for a fine voice, but for histrionic ability of a high order and unusual beauty. The latter qualifications won her the presidential interment, for singers who appear on the screen have little use for voices.

Miss White made her operatic debut at the San Carlos opera house in Naples in 1910. Later she was a member of the Chicago Opera Company for six years, during which time she created the role of "Minnie", in "The Girl of the Golden West". Afterward she created roles in the musical presentations of "The Secret of Suzanne," and "The Jewels of the Madonna" at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City.

BRILLIANT ARRAY of STARS in BIG FEATURE PLAYS

THEDA BARA IN "DU BARRY" AT CRESCENT

Vaudeville Numbers Up To Usual High Standard of Marcus Lowe

Five acts of feature vaudeville and Theda Bara in "DuBarry", the story of the greatest adventuress in the history of France are the chief attractions at Loew's Crescent for the first half of the week commencing with the matinee Sunday.

The story of Mme Du Barry, born of the common people, but through capitalization of her physical charms ruled a king of France and dominated his reign for several years, is one of the choicest bits of mediaeval history. This, coupled with the fact that it is an ideal production for the distinctive talents of Thuda Bara caused William Fox to give a most lavish setting. How Madame Du Barry thrilled, not only with the affections of King Louis XV, but with the members of his royal family, at the same time lavishing her real affections on a Captain of the King's Guards, is vividly portrayed in the film version of this historic incident in the history of Europe. The scenic investitures and the costuming are historically correct, no detail being overlooked. Miss Bara even donning a blonde wig.

The vaudeville numbers run almost entirely to comedy. The offering of Ward, Wilson and Ward, styled "The comedy yap and his dancing girls" comedian and the Ward girls possess both beauty and talent as dancers. "The Rehearsal" in the title of the singing and dancing number offered by Murray and Dean. It is a novel setting for the introduction of original songs and bright comedy.

The Morton Brothers are peppermologists and harmonica experts. Their feats of vigorous caper into grotesque shapes in a pleasing novelty and their play of the harmonicas has given this entertainment a distinctly clever twist. Miss Donahue is expected to find much pleasure in the offering of is one of vaudeville's standard laugh producers. Mr. Wilson is a talented Nora and Sidney Kellogg. The Alvin Brothers are versatile and skilled equilibrists.

The vaudeville for the latter half of the week has Arthur Stone, famous blind pianist and Jack Boyle, Irish tenor as the principal feature, with Constance Talmadge topping the picture program.

Mr. Stone has achieved no little fame on the two a day vaudeville circuit and is regarded by many as the premier pianist of vaudeville. Mr. Boyle has equally as enviable a reputation and the two provide one of the most enjoyable musical acts of the year.

Frear, Baggot and Frear are skilled jugglers, with a keen sense of humor, and an inside knowledge of baseball, as their burlesque of the national game is a comedy classic. Sylvester is a comedian and a magician, the combination making one of the most interesting acts of the bill. Del Des and Imo offer an electrical and athletic novelty.

Constance Talmadge is the latest acquisition to the growing list of Lowe stars. Her initial vehicle "Good Night Paul" is an adaptation of the raciest comedy success of that name.

The screen version is even funnier than that of the stage and it and Miss Talmadge squashes even her own high standard of achievement in the field of screen comedy drama.

G. M. Anderson Stages "Come Back" on Screen

Under the direction of Jesse J. Robbins, the G. M. Anderson Company is rapidly approaching the completion of their first release a five reel Western production entitled "The Son-of-a-Gun," featuring Mr. Anderson in the title role.

The story written in collaboration by the star and Director Robbins, is said to be full to overflowing with thrilling action and the genuine heart interest characteristic of the original "Broncho Billy" pictures with whose fame the name of G. M. Anderson is indissolubly associated in the minds of film fans throughout the country.

Joy Lewis appears in the leading feminine role, with Frederick Church as heavy, Harry Todd and A. E. Whiting in character parts, and Paul Willis in the role of Juvenile.

No definite date has as yet been set for the release of "The Son-of-a-Gun," but it is generally understood that it will be some time in September.

"Today" At the Tudor a Wonderful Story

Florence Reid Stars in Picture of Modern Life

Put out boldly as a warning to wives that are not content to live upon their husband's incomes, the play, "To-Day," shows how one married woman sold the favors that she might clothe herself in fine raiment. The punch arriving when the lady keeps an appointment with a strange gentleman and finds herself face to face with her own husband.

One of the most remarkable tributes to the big and wonderful feature "To-day" is the following letter from Ada Patterson of the New York American:

"I regard 'To-day' as the vindication of the motion picture. No critic nor enemy of the new art can stand against it for it shows how much better a picture may be than the play.

"Your cast is an inspired one. If you had searched the country you could not have found a more splendid quartette of players than Florence Reed, Frank Mills, Alice Gale and Lee Wenberg.

"The fact that the tribute of Miss Patterson is well deserved was proven by the reception given the picture at the Tudor Friday and Saturday—a reception that will hold the picture for today and tomorrow.

ELSIE FERGUSON AT GLOBE IN DANDY PLAY

"The Danger Mark" Is Difficult Role—But Star Handles It Fine

When the admirers of beautiful Elsie Ferguson, the famous Artcraft star, see her in her newest photoplay, "The Danger Mark," a picturization of Robert W. Chambers' celebrated novel, at the Globe theater today they will see some charming Florence Nightingale, nearly every scene in the picture having been photographed in that state.

One of the scenes of "The Danger Mark" is a garden party, and when this was being photographed in the garden of a splendid mansion at Mayport, Fla., scores of society folks prominent in New York society and elsewhere took part therein. The costumes worn in this picture represent a fortune.

Miss Ferguson is seen in this picture as Geraldine Seagrave, a charming young society woman who has inherited an inordinate desire to drink from a dissipated ancestor. She is wealthy and much courted, and when her guardian discovers that the girl secretly indulges her craving by eating sugar steeped in cologne, she is shocked and terrified. At a Louis XVI garden fete Geraldine drinks champagne to excess, but she escapes consequent disgrace when the man who loves her carries her to her room, the other guests being quite unaware of their young host's predicament.

Miss Ferguson portrays this difficult role with discretion, taste and skill. Her emotional scenes are more artistic and they lend much charm and interest to a most captivating story. The love interest is exceptionally strong and this is perhaps the chief charm of the photoplay. Miss Ferguson is capably supported by an excellent company.

Thanks for the Trouble on "Triple Trouble"

To Whom It May Concern:

Essanay feels that it owes a debt of gratitude to its competitors for spreading broadcast statements in regard to our NEW Charlie Chaplin picture, "TRIPLE TROUBLE."

Knowing the motive for these statements, the interest of exhibitors all over the country has been aroused.

They have looked for, and found, our irrefutable arguments.

But what is more vital, they have learned what other exhibitors, who have run "TRIPLE TROUBLE," have done in the way of box office returns.

Particularly, they have learned what M. J. Weil, manager of the Castle Theatre, a first run Chicago house, did.

Mr. Weil said: "'TRIPLE TROUBLE' played to the biggest business ever done at the Castle Theatre, and I broke a rule of the house and ran the picture a second week, because my patrons demanded it."

The exhibitor knows that what one theatre has done, his can do; what one audience likes, another will.

He knows the opinion of another exhibitor is unbiased, because he has nothing to gain by making it.

Interest has been aroused to such a pitch, exhibitors have thronged the George Kleine exchanges, at our invitation, to see the picture for themselves. You can count on the exhibitor knowing what he wants when he sees it. The result is, bookings have been coming in faster than we dreamed of.

We knew the picture would go big, because we had a GOOD Chaplin comedy and a NEW one. But we could not have advertised it so extensively and done so much in so short a time had it not been for this unintentional cooperation. We thank you.

Thoughts on This and That

Delivering the Goods

A MAN came to our office from a considerable distance the other day to tell us something.

He's an exhibitor; and he said that but for the practical showmanship help of our Exhibitors' Service Bureau he would have failed in business.

Which, in itself, is a sufficient good to have accomplished; but we know full well that many another exhibitor has profited through this excellent department, if not to so great a degree.

This issue of Motion Picture News marks the anniversary of this Service Bureau.

It has an interesting record.

Service has been given for service's sake only.

No picture has been given service unless it merited special exploitation—for the plain reason that no picture ever found its way into this department unless the exhibitors had first given it such exploitation.

No untried, amateurish suggestions have ever been offered. We have only printed the actual service aids originated by exhibitors and used successfully by them. This is an advertising showman's department.

No picture has ever bought its way into this department. Merit only—the picture's merit and the proven merit of the advertising used—has been the open sesame.

As a consequence, every later run house has been given the benefit of the earlier theatres' practical experience with the picture and the advertising methods used.

A fine record and one which will be sturdily continued.

The Picture Over There

A NEW and big university has just come into being. Its students number nearly 1,500,000 and soon there will be 3,000,000.

They comprise our soldier boys in France.

Study their faces as you see them in the daily papers and note how they have quickly aged—not through hardship, anxiety, fear—not that, but simply because these young Americans are learning fast and thinking hard.

Millionaire's son and workingman's son, American and European, conservative and ultra-radicalist, boys of all creeds, beliefs and educations, are talking, fighting, grubbing side by side.

They are thinking new thoughts, seeing new things, weighing the present, puzzling out the future of the world. How they think and how they conclude will have much to do with the future of this country and civilization.

Motion pictures will help them think right if the pictures themselves are right-minded.

Pictures are needed over there in the battle front theatres—many pictures, but most importantly the right kind of pictures, pictures that elevate and construct, pictures that uphold American ideals of life and our whole social and economic order.

It's a great university; it will never be assembled again, and outside of the war itself, the picture, as the leading, almost the only teacher in its curriculum, has a very grave responsibility.

Collections and Drives

WE are pleased to announce that while motion pictures will be largely used in the Y. M. C. A. war drive no collection of funds will be made either in or outside the picture theatres at the time the pictures are being shown or at any other time.

This is right.

The motion picture, in other words, will be used just like the newspaper—to tell the public, in an interesting way, what the Y. M. C. A. is doing to win the war and why its considerable appeal for funds is necessary.

The pressure of fund raising keeps people away from theatres; it is analagous to asking a subscription along with the sale of a newspaper or magazine; it serves to defeat the true power and purpose of the picture in these war times, namely, that of telling the public as no other medium can why and how the war must be won.

We are sure that exhibitors will welcome this sensible decision and in turn do their utmost to make the screen the powerful force it can be made in support of the war work of the United States.

Chicago's "Stirring" Convention

LOOKS like that Chicago convention—September 3-7—would stir things up in this stirring industry.

A strong appeal, backed by the Chicago Chamber of Commerce, has been sent out to 5,000 Middle Western exhibitors.

Chicago never misses fire on exhibitor conventions and this one bids fair to sound the loudest report of all.

There will be no electioneering politics for three days, during which time the leaders of all branches of the business will be permitted to tell their side of the industry's story right and loud in school. Press agents are barred.

Besides, there seems to be little doubt of the amalgamation of the two leagues, perhaps even the formation of a brand new and national organization of exhibitors to do things for Uncle Sam and themselves.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

THAT Perpetual Pest—the fellow who asks you every twenty-four hours, "Is the State Rights market dead?" always brings three names to our mind. They are Sol Lesser, Louis Mayer and Vanderwalker of the Doll-Van organization in Chicago.

The State Rights market may be dead, the independent may be a forgotten factor in the film world—but these three men don't know it. They just keep on their merry way—a step ahead of the game no matter what twists and changes it may make from year to year.

Louis Mayer probably doesn't get much chance to think of State Rights propositions now—between his First National interests in partnership with Gordon and his producing activities exploiting Anita Stewart. But he is still none the less an independent.

And Sol Lesser is also expanding. A story on page 1363 of this issue tells of his opening a Chicago office to handle "Hearts of the World" in the west of the Mississippi territory he controls. And it contains the hint that this is but the first step in a new chain of exchanges covering the country—and open to other productions.

Which is interesting—because this man Lesser has a knack of getting the last possible cent for exhibitor and himself out of any picture he handles. He doesn't like to "book a picture;" he wants to "put over a show."

THIS Chicago gathering of the A. E. A. is a funny proposition. When first broached some months ago the average film man would say to you:

"Oh, yes. The A. E. A. Convention. Well, I suppose they'll have a fair turn-out for a young organization. Me? No, I'm afraid I won't be able to attend it. Pretty busy, yes ——."

Had you mentioned it a few weeks ago just after the Boston affair the reply would probably have been something like this:

"Looks as though they'll have a pretty good turn-out in Chicago. Quite a lot of talk about it in Boston. Me? No, I won't be there. One convention a year is enough. Life is too short for two joy parties a season."

But now!

Gosh, we think the Chicago session is going to make Boston look like a side-show. More and more people tell you, "Yes, I guess I'll probably be there."

And all because the outlook promises a real business convention with an opportunity to discuss all problems of the industry in "town meeting" fashion.

THAT'S an interesting note from the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. Roper, in reviewing the income tax returns, recommends an investigation of the alarming discrepancy between the salaries of the photoplayers as certified to by themselves and as previously published by their press-agents.

Mr. Roper is evidently not a theatrical man.

As an example of motion picture arithmetic we suggest the following true story:

A film man who talked only in millions was finally called to a turn by a peevish listener.

"Say," said the caller, "do you know how much a million dollars is?"

"Yes, I do," replied the film man stoutly, "it's one hundred thousand dollars."

You can safely divide by ten, Mr. Roper.

WE get so much joy out of kidding the National Association now and then that the opportunity is welcome to say something in the way of congratulation.

The chance arrives with the National Association's drafting of Theodore O. Eltonhead from the trade paper field.

We are among those who have often said in print that the N. A. would benefit by having in its ranks someone with the all around training in political wire-pulling and publicity promotion that a good daily newspaper man gets.

And since our acquaintance with "Ted" Eltonhead dates from the day he left the New York World staff to enter this "fillum" game we can guarantee that he fits the niche.

Good luck, Ted; Congratulations, Mr. Elliott.

THE UNIVERSAL FILM COMPANY has one on us.

Our last week's issue which carried an editorial appeal for the making of different war pictures, pictures for instance on war labor and the Y. M. C. A., carried also an advertising announcement of the first Y. M. C. A. picture, entitled "Around the Clock with the Rookie."

So in one breath we apologize, render thanks for this somewhat unusual response to editorial suggestion and recommend the picture as one of interest to the American home with a boy in the service.

NEWS that another Stanley Booking Corporation case has come to an end is not of particular interest in itself but the story on the opposite page does claim attention because the indications are that this will be the last Stanley case.

"We are not doing anything wrong, but we won't do it again," might sum up the attitude of the Stanley Corporation as the word "finis" is written.

Which is an artful way of putting it for the Stanley Company and a not unsuccessful one in saving to some extent the Stanley face.

All of which doesn't bother the independents much because when the Trade Commission issues its summing up they will probably be able to point gleefully to its order and say—

"Yes, and you won't dare do anything wrong again."

SAW P. A. Powers, Marcus Loew, Harold Edel and Sydney Cohen gathered about a Hotel Claridge table yesterday.

Asked a by-stander what it meant.

"Oh, it's the Fool-er-Fuel Committee," he said.

Which reminds us that there are so many committees of one sort or another around here just now that it puts your head in a whirl keeping track of them.

They're all doing a good work too, but the thought occurs to us that we'd hate to be one of these film men acting on 'steen odd committees.

With the days still only twenty-four hours long the average committee member can't possibly get much time for the particular business that buys his bread and butter.

Stanley Suit Ends Abruptly

"We May Have Been Bad Boys Once, But We Are Not Now" Sums Up the Result—Victory for Independents

HEARINGS by the Federal Trade Commission in the case of the independent Philadelphia exhibitors against the Stanley Booking Corporation ended abruptly on Wednesday with a result that is chalked up as a victory for the independents.

It is expected that an order will be issued by the Commission directing the Stanley Corporation not to discriminate against the picture houses in the Philadelphia territory which are not members of its booking organization.

This result came about after Special Examiner Roberts and the opposing attorneys agreed to the preparation of a statement of facts which in effect declared that the conditions complained of by the independents existed in the past but that the complaint had no reference to the Stanley Corporation's present methods of doing business.

This neat bit of finesse enables the Stanley Corporation to come forth from the mill with a whole hide, while at the same time it gives to the independents a victory in what is probably the closing incident of the long internal strife in Philadelphia.

The independents will have the order from the Commission to display as their part of the spoils and to hold over the head of the Stanley Corporation. On the other hand, Jules Mastbaum, in a statement issued following the close of the hearings declared, "Such an order will be entirely satisfactory to us, for we have not, as evidenced by the recent conduct of our business, been interested in anything but the prosperity of our clients."

Rumors now current are to the effect that a combination between Nirdlinger and others of the independent and the Stanley Corporation would not be an impossibility. Most film men scoff at the likelihood of this happening but the rumor persists.

War Service Gives First Big Fund-Raising

The first important fund-raising event by the Motion Picture War Service Association was a mask ball at Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles on August 17, which proved to be highly successful. It is estimated that the net receipts will total $18,000, and this amount will be added to the general fund, from which all expenditures for building a home for aged people will come. The home will also be used as a vocational training institution for blinded and maimed soldiers.

Boxes at the ball were occupied by D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Fred Stone, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Charles Chaplin, Theda Bara, Bryant Washburn, William S. Hart, Cecil B. De Mille, Margarita Fisher and Mary Miles Minter.

Franchise Holders to Meet

CLEVELAND.—The First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio is getting ready to hold a big meeting of its franchise holders in Cleveland the early part of September. There are over a hundred holders of franchises in the State.

Los Angeles Floats to Be Used in Chicago

As a compliment to the forcefulness of expression and beauty of the floats which appeared in the pageant of the Motion Picture War Service Association which ushered in the Allied War Exposition in Los Angeles, the War Department telegraphed its wish to use them in a great parade which will be held in Chicago soon. In addition, George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, telegraphed his congratulations to D. W. Griffith for the work of the Motion Picture War Service Association. The fifteen floats representing the Allied nations will be shipped to Chicago and will probably be shown in other cities in the East.

Four of the floats in the pageant, of which Douglas Fairbanks was grand marshal, were contributed by the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and allied organizations. The Lasky studio's float depicted the spirit of the United States and was designed by Wilfred Buckland of the studio staff. The Thomas H. Ince float, representing Japan, was drawn by eight white horses and was one of the most striking displays in the parade. The Griffith float carried a figure of Victory, with an American soldier by her side. Serbia was portrayed on the float from the William S. Hart studio.

It was announced this week that Harry Reichenbach, who has been representative in New York of the National Film Corporation of America has withdrawn that position with the intention of leaving shortly for Europe, where he is going on Government work in a civilian capacity. Mr. Reichenbach has been with National about a year.

Newsy Reports From All Sections

Maryland Passes Fox Feature

"Salome" Escapes with Loss of Seven Subtitles and Biblical Quotations — Baltimore Engagement to Open at Ford's

BALTIMORE, MD.—Contrary to general expectations the Maryland Board of Censors did not slash the Fox eight-reel Theda Bara production, "Salome," to any great extent. In fact, after the type of advertising that has been used to herald the photoplay which is at Ford's theatre in Baltimore this week, the number of eliminations ordered were surprisingly few.

The film is 8,000 feet in length and while it was impossible to learn the number of feet that were stricken out, it was pointed out by the censors that they were very few. All Biblical quotations were ordered eliminated as well as seven other subtitles. Captions such as "Let us breath into your frozen veins," "You were made for love," "Wanton," "It is not your hair I love," and "I will kiss your lips, I will kiss your lips, I will kiss your lips," were not to the liking of the censors and they were sacrificed.

The scene where Salome attempts to seduce Jokanaan was shortened to a flash, while at the end of reel seven where men and women are shown on couches at the feast, which was called "suggestive" by the board, was eliminated entirely. Only the drinking of Herod's health will be shown. The episode of Salome throwing herself on the edge of the cistern and close-ups of her face while waiting to receive the head of John the Baptist, of her crawling toward the salver where the head is laid, together with the scene where she is stabbed were also stricken out.

Ford's theatre where the picture will be shown, is one of the largest play houses in the city, where most of the first-class productions coming to Baltimore are shown. It was there that the "Birth of a Nation" had its record-breaking run of four weeks several years ago, and only lately "To Hell with the Kaiser," was shown.

The posters announcing "Salome" describe it to be "sense staggering in its sumptuousness," and declares that "it dwarfs a circus." The first thing that takes the eye, however, is that which caused movie fans to tremble for its fate at the hands of the censors—the one line in large type announcing that "Seven Veils Fell from Her—and Yet She Danced."

Philadelphia Sees Many Film Changes

PHILADELPHIA.—Lew Sablosky has been appointed general manager of the Stanley Booking Corporation, and has just completed a tour of the houses securing attractions through his office.

The Broadway theatre, Broad and Snyder avenue, will reopen on Labor Day for the new season. A great amount of money has been spent on improvements, which will make this the best equipped theatre in South Philadelphia. It is one of the Sablosky and McGuirk circuit and will play vaudeville and pictures.

Maurice L. Meyers has resigned as publicity manager of the Metro office and is vacationing before taking up his new duties in the same line in New York.

The new Sam S. Shubert Memorial theatre will open on August 26. It is located next to the Academy of Music on South Broad street.

The Allegheny opened on August 26 with "To Hell with the Kaiser." It is one of the largest theatres in Philadelphia and will be under the direction of Joseph Cohen.

Safron in Mutual's Albany Office

Jerome Safron, who has been connected with the Mutual office in Philadelphia for the past three years as traveling salesman, is now branch manager of the Albany office. Mr. Safron carries the good wishes of many Philadelphia friends to his new post.

Theatre Man on Way from India

LOS ANGELES (Special).—Jehangir Pearson, an amusement promoter of India, has arrived in Los Angeles on his way to New York.

Mr. Pearson expects to spend about ten days in the film-producing colony before journeying East. He is showing an unusual interest in the methods of picture making and is even contemplating having some subjects made for his own use in India. The plan is to have these subjects, suitable to the exact needs of his territory, made while he is traveling and ready for his return to India.

On his arrival in New York, Mr. Pearson expects to make arrangements for the purchase or lease of subjects for the southern Asia territory.

Cleveland Combats Operators' Demand

CLEVELAND, O.—Motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland have taken action to prevent the operators from getting the 17½ cents increase that they are demanding. Just what has been done will be announced at a special meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League later in the week. All exhibitors, whether connected with any motion picture organization or not, will be invited to attend this meeting, when some interesting denouements are promised.

Shifts in Exchanges in Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS (Special).—R. K. Evans, former manager of the Jewel and General exchanges here and previously manager of the Pathe exchange at St. Louis, has succeeded Edward S. Flynn as manager of the Fox Film Corporation offices here. Mr. Evans resigned his position with the Jewel exchange August 10 and assumed charge of the Fox office on the following day. Mr. Flynn has not announced his future plans and it is not known just yet what changes Mr. Evans will make in the personnel of the exchange.

Dan B. Lederman, district manager for Universal, arrived in Minneapolis, August 11, to install a new booking system in the Minneapolis exchange. Mr. Lederman expects to be in the Mill City for about two weeks. Hal Dickenson, formerly of the Pathe sales force, and Frank Woskie, formerly connected with the Minneapolis Select exchange, have been added to the Universal road staff.

Ohio Passes "Salome" with But One Change

CLEVELAND.—"Salome" has been returned to the Cleveland office of the Fox Film Corporation from Columbus, where it was viewed by the Ohio Board of Censors. The Board made practically no eliminations in the print. The only part of the picture that came in for any criticism was in the eighth reel, and there one pose was struck out, and three subtitles were blue penciled. Otherwise, the film was returned in its entirety, with these comments:

"The accompanying eliminations in the eighth reel of 'Salome' are, in the opinion of the censors, necessary in order to remove, as far as possible, the insult 'Salome' offers to the sacred person of John, both in life and death. His exalted character, his divine mission and the peculiar reverence in which he is held by the Christian world, all forbid that he be made the object of 'Salome's' debasing intrigue."

(Signed) MAUDE MURRAY MILLER,
Chairman, Ohio Board of Censors.

Wedding Bells for Hays of Minneapolis

ST. PAUL (Special).—Theodore L. Hays, one of the first motion picture exhibitors in the United States and interested in Twin City theatrical business for thirty years, was married August 15 to Miss Evelyn Sullivan of Minneapolis. Mr. Hays and his bride spent a short honeymoon in Duluth and enjoyed a boat trip down Lake Superior to Isle Royale and return. Mr. and Mrs. Hays will take up residence in St. Paul upon their return. At present, in addition to being manager of the New Garrick theatre of St. Paul, Mr. Hays is a member of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS' Exhibitors' Advisory Board.

Gathered By Our Special Correspondents

Branch Managers Laud Goldwyn for Stand

As further evidence of appreciation throughout the industry of its stand in delclining, at the demand of the Los Angeles Exhibitors' Association, to remove its branch manager in that city, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has received the following letter, addressed to F. B. Warren, a vice-president of the company:

We, the undersigned, branch managers of the City of Los Angeles, desire to express our approval and appreciation of the stand which your corporation took in connection with the request of the Theatre Owners' Association of this city asking for the removal of the manager of your exchange. Had you conceded to their demands the result would have injured the relationship between exhibitors and the exchange managers of all branches of this city, giving them the impression that any time they had an imaginary grievance they could ask for the removal of that particular manager.

Assuring you again that your decisive reply is most gratifying, we are,

Very truly yours,

A copy of a letter written to Goldwyn's Los Angeles manager by W. B. Walker, owner of the Liberty theatre at Needles, Cal., has been sent to Mr. Warren by Mr. Walker. It reads:

I have found out through other sources about the trouble between you and a certain exhibitor in your territory regarding contracts with him and that they have tried to depose you as manager of that branch. I truly admire your stand in this case and also admire the stand of the home office. Let me in the name of the Liberty Amusement Association congratulate you on the stand you took in this case and also for standing up for the rights of your company, of which I am a great admirer. Please give me particulars regarding the new year policy, or have a representative call on me, as I want all the pictures put out by Goldwyn.

Empey Applies for Enlistment as Private

Arthur Guy Empey, hero of Vitagraph's special production, "Over the Top," and author of the book from which it was adapted, is going over the top for Uncle Sam, according to stories published in the New York dailies and other newspapers. He has applied for enlistment in the tank corps and no doubt soon will don the khaki as a private, with the chance of winning a commission in an officers' training camp, the same as thousands of other young Americans are doing.

"Denny from Ireland" Is Here

CLEVELAND, O.—"Denny from Ireland," the first Shorty Hamilton to reach Manager Joseph Diener of the Sterling Film Service, will be shown privately for local exhibitors some time next week.

Buffalo Houses Cut Orchestras

September 2 Sees Theatres of City Going Back to Organ or Piano—Exhibitors Blame Musicians for Change

(Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS)

BUFFALO, N. Y.—A motion picture theatre today of any size usually boasts of an orchestra of about fifteen to thirty men. But in Buffalo, commencing September 2, the orchestra of the largest and the smallest houses will have a personnel of just ONE, and that one an organist or pianist.

And this is the reason: The musicians want more money. The exhibitors are willing to pay half the amount of the raise asked. The musicians have refused to accept any modification. September 2 the contracts between the local Musicians' Association and the Exhibitors' organization expire. According to leading exhibitors, when that date arrives, if the musicians still insist on keeping their new prices in force, the managers of the theatres represented in the exhibitors' organization will pay the amount asked, but they will pay it to one man only. Large orchestras will be dispensed with. At Shea's Hippodrome, about twenty-five men will be let out. At the Strand nine men will have to look for other work. The New Victoria and the Elmwood, where large orchestras are engaged, will get along with a pianist.

If the proposition comes to a show down the exhibitors have determined to remain adamantine in their stand. They declare that the musicians are now getting excellent pay for their services and that with the size of the orchestras now engaged it will be impossible to meet the advance. It will be interesting to note also just how audiences accustomed to listen to thirty-piece orchestras will act when a piano solo is pulled and "kept pulling" during the showing of the entire program. The Buffalo managers, now that they are organized, can stand together on a proposition such as the present one, and their firmness will have some effect. The outcome of the battle is being watched with interest. The new price scale which Local No. 43, A. F. of M., will put into effect September 2 follows:

"Shoulder Arms" Problem in Twin City Houses

MINNEAPOLIS (Special).—"What theatre is the best to play Charlie Chaplin's 'Shoulder Arms?'" That is the question Messrs. Ruben and Finkelstein have been turning over and over in their minds the past few weeks. Due to the length of the second Chaplin million-dollar comedy the film will not be played in the New Garrick, Minneapolis, as was "A Dog's Life" and it is too long for the New Palace, which shows vaudeville, and as Chaplin has never been played at the Strand it is not known just how big the comedy will go over in that theatre. Ruben and Finkelstein have sixteen Twin City theatres in which they can play their first run on "Shoulder Arms," but just what theatres will show the comedy in St. Paul and Minneapolis they have not been able to definitely decide as yet.

"Geezer" for One Week

MINNEAPOLIS (Special).—Ruben & Finkelstein have booked "The Geezer of Berlin" for one week showings at their New Palace theatres of St. Paul and Minneapolis, beginning Monday, August 26. Both presentations are being preceded with lavish newspaper advertising campaigns. "The Geezer" will also be shown at the Strand theatre, Superior, and the New Palace theatre, Superior, the succeeding week.

Hart Appoints Dennis Sullivan

Takes Place Vacated by Berst on Division of Films—"America's Answer to Hun" Shown in London

DENNIS J. SULLIVAN, recently assistant general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed by Chas. S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, to the position of Manager of Domestic Distribution, to succeed J. A. Berst.

As assistant general manager of the Mutual, Mr. Sullivan was in close touch with the distribution for that concern, and he introduced many innovations in the way of business methods that were subsequently adopted by other corporations.

In a statement, following his appointment, Mr. Sullivan said: "I think the human element in the film business is the biggest thing in it. It avails nothing to have a good product unless you have sincere men handling it. This is truer of the film than of any other line of merchandise. I have come to appreciate, too, the peculiar requirements of service in the film trade. Every man in it must have some of the peculiar requirements of showmanship, some of the deftness of a press-agent, some of the substantial brass-tack characteristics of a certified accountant, and a whole lot of sand.

"I feel highly honored that I have been called into the Government's service by Director Chas. S. Hart, of the Division of Films. It will be my purpose, throughout all activities, to work in close harmony with the exhibitors of the country, to the end that the greatest possible showing under the most advantageous conditions may be accorded the exceptional productions which are now being put out under the title of United States Official War Films."

"America's Answer to the Hun," which is the foreign title of "America's Answer," the United States Official War Picture, was given a private view in London prior to its presentation to the public. The audience included many well-known dignitaries.

The private exhibition in London was given August 2, at the Palace theatre, under the auspices of the United States Committee on Public Information and the British Ministry of Information. Among those present were Ambassador and Mrs. Page, the French and Japanese Ambassadors, the United States Consul General, Admiral Sims, Herbert Hoover, Lord Beresford, General Smuts and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In Paris the first public presentation of "America's Answer to the Hun" was given at the Gaumont Palace, which was draped with American flags. There, as in London, a distinguished company was gathered to see the picturization of America in the World War.

Edith Cavell Story is Filmed

"The Woman the Germans Shot" Scheduled as Super-Feature Release September 16—Under Direction of Adolfi

THE most recent announcement concerning a motion picture feature which is based on the war or attendant occurrences, is that this week from Frank J. Carroll and Joseph L. Plunkett in regard to "The Woman the Germans Shot." The picture, which is now in the course of production, is based on the execution of Edith Cavell, a British nurse, who was shot by the Germans as a spy. Messrs. Carroll and Plunkett are producing the picture, which is expected to reach the screen about September 16 as a super-feature.

In their statement this week, Messrs. Carroll and Plunkett gave the first intimation the film world has had that the feature had been in preparation and production for many months.

"Eminent critics on the progress of the war," said the producers, "contend that if there is any one incident to which the autocracy of the Central Powers, now fast crumbling, can attribute more than another its ultimate defeat, it is destined to be the summary execution of Nurse Cavell, who, after a life of consistent sacrifice, was lead out into a stone-paved court-yard, in the gray of the dawn, and riddled with German bullets because she dared to encourage wounded and heart-sick countrymen of hers to escape the hell-hole prisons of the pitiless Hun."

Anthony Paul Kelly wrote the story.

The direction of the picture is being handled by John G. Adolfi, who needs no introduction. He is known as a past master of the super-feature, and from the present indications the production will exceed anything he has so far produced for the screen.

The producers and Mr. Adolfi have carefully gathered together a cast of players particularly suited to the characters in the story, and it is one of the strongest ever assembled for a super-feature.

John Taylor, general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Company in London, is in New York on special business for his organization, it was learned this week. Mr. Taylor is making his headquarters at the offices of Inter-Ocean Film Company in Forty-second street.

When seen by a representative of Motion Picture News, Mr. Taylor said his present visit to the states is for the express purpose of concluding arrangements to bring English films to the American market. Inter-Ocean believes the time is now ripe for putting the latest English films before the American public. Mr. Taylor declared that the films he proposes to introduce to America will be as complete in quality as the films being made here.

In regard to conditions in England, Mr. Taylor said the market is flooded, or rather choked, with productions unloaded upon it by three American producers, who insist upon booking their output too far ahead. Mr. Taylor said he considered this bad for the whole industry.

Garson Signs Marshall Neilan

Marshall Neilan, the well-known director, has signed a long-term contract with Harry Garson as supervising director of all the productions to be made under Mr. Garson's management.

Mr. Neilan will supervise the direction of both Miss Young and Miss Sweet's productions, having entire charge. In addition to this Mr. Neilan will personally direct Miss Sweet in her next picture, "The Unpardonable Sin," by Rupert Hughes, a story which recently ran as a serial in the Red Book Magazine and which has just been published in book form by Harper Bros., and is having a tremendous sale. Miss Sweet leaves for California this week to begin work on this picture.

Honor Roll

John Harry Lutjen, who was assistant to C. C. Ryan, purchasing agent for Select Pictures Corporation, has camouflaged himself with a sea-going "roll" and the uniform of Uncle Sam's Navy. A week ago Mr. Lutjen started on his annual two weeks' vacation, but two days later he returned to the office and announced that he had become a United States sailor, as he would rather join hands in the fight against the Hun than spend his two weeks at the "ol' swimmin' hole." Seaman Lutjen is a member of the regular navy and will soon see service on board of a real battleship.

Joseph Reichenbach, brother of Harry L. Reichenbach, arrived in France recently with his regiment, it is reported. Reichenbach was manager of the Eldee Film Corporation before enlisting. He is with the Fifty-first Pioneer Infantry and is a top sergeant.

Mr. Daniells was made a sergeant a few weeks after he volunteered and is now a lieutenant six months after his arrival in France.

Clear Skies are Seen in Chicago

Schaefer, Rembusch and Frank Talk Things Over and Exhibitor Amalgamation Seems Certain in September

CHICAGO (Special).—"All's well along the shores of Lake Michigan." Harmony is in the air; amalgamation is the keynote. The birds are singing merrily.

It's all because Frank Rembusch and Louis Frank called on Peter Schaefer, president of the M. P. E. L., last week, found a "Welcome" on the mat, and left with cheerful smiles. Then a stenographer was called and the following statement issued from the offices of the American Exhibitors' Association, which is humming busily with preparations for that organization's convention here in September:

"Louis Frank and Frank Rembusch called upon Peter Schaefer to invite the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to attend the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association which will be held in Chicago September 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. Mr. Schaefer stated that it was the consensus of opinion of the M. P. E. L. convention in Boston that there should be an amalgamation of both the national organizations.

"Messrs. Rembusch and Frank stated that there was nothing in the way now to bar amalgamation and the A. E. A. would welcome such action. Mr. Schaefer agreed to call a meeting at once of the Executive Committee of the league to take whatever action is necessary to bring about harmony between all concerned.

"All concerned agreed that a new organization and by-laws would be necessary and that both organizations would receive equal representation in the new body. It was the unanimous opinion that all side issues such as trade shows, expositions, booking circuits, etc., should have no place in a national organization; that the purpose of the new organization should be to protect the industry from adverse legislation, censorship, unjust taxation and to work for constructive objectives that affect the entire industry and especially the exhibitor."

Aside from the prospects for harmony, the outlook for the A. E. A. gathering is also in all other respects of a rosy hue. Charles S. Hart, chariman of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has wired the committee that he will be present and address the convention; S. L. Rothapfel and Walter W. Irwin have done likewise. William A. Brady's presence is assured.

The Bureau of Conventions of the Chicago Association of Commerce and the city's organization of "Four Minute Men" are also aiding. Thousands of stickers, invitations and programs have been mailed from the headquarters.

Hardy Manages Parex Detroit Office

LeRoy A. Hardy has been appointed resident manager of the Detroit Parex Exchange, which has been made a tribuary to the Cleveland office, under the direct management of Walter R. Liebmann. Mr. Hardy has had some experience in the film business as salesman for the World Film Corporation, but he has had a lot of experience in efficiency work, and Manager Liebmann has been complimented upon his good judgment upon selecting a man of Hardy's calibre to take charge of the Parex interest in Detroit.

George Lightman, who was in Detroit getting the office in shape preparatory to the appointment of a new local manager, is again on the road for Mr. Liebmann, and sent in encouraging reports of business throughout Ohio accompanied by many contracts for "The Romance of the Underworld."

Coast Beckons the Producers

Many Prepare to Desert East in Cold Weather, While Others Declare They Will Stick Near the Hudson River

THE West Coast, backed up by its sunshine and fair weather, is primping up at this time of year to practice a little "vamp" act that is aimed to win each and every producer away from Gotham and dark Broadway. On the surface it would seem the task would not be so difficult, as California can promise a reasonable temperature through the winter without an undue amount of coal, which in New York and vicinity is a doubtful quantity, while the cold is not.

Still, there are those producers who declare they will not forsake the Hudson River and its ice floes. Among these none are more emphatic than World Film in denying that California's charms have put in their good work. And World Film is ready with its reason why it will not move to the Coast. In a statement to Motion Picture News, World Film said:

"First, the World Company cannot see any advantage in dismantling their production plant at Fort Lee and moving three thousand or more miles away. The environs of New York are more accessible to three-fifths of the area of the motion picture activity of the world and seven-eighths of the population of the United States. As regards the economy of California and New York, the preponderant saving is in favor of the latter location, not alone as regards the cost of making pictures, but also in the saving of time as it applies to the exhibition of the product.

"It has been proven time over that even when the studio end of the industry is satisfied with the result of its labors it often becomes necessary to make some retakes or changes in the picture, and this necessitates sending the negative and prints back to the studio. With California studios, time lost in transit is one big item, and then there is the danger in the interim the actors have strayed to other fields. In the East the changes necessary to make the picture perfect can be noted so quickly that it is a matter of only a day or two to make them, and the actors can be secured without difficulty. Time, these days, is a big item. Delays in express delivery are of so common occurrence that no certainty of delivery is assured, and so dangerous is the situation that one can easily count on a month as the length of time for a print to go to California and return. Taking the interest charge on the amount of money spent in making the picture, it is seen that this alone adds a big expense during the year for an organization turning out one or more pictures a week from California studios. And the added expense must be paid for by the exhibitors."

If the other large producing companies are figuring along the above lines they are keeping such views secret, as it is known several are making arrangements to do at least two-thirds of their production work on the Coast this winter. When asked what proportion of its work would be done on the Coast, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation stated that it was not definitely known yet what would be done this winter. Goldwyn, however, is understood to have a weather eye out for a studio in Los Angeles that can handle about all the productions it desires to make during the winter season. It is expected that should the company move most of its stars and directors West in the fall, spring would see them back again at Fort Lee.

Among the other producers who aim to do a great part of their work in Hollywood and vicinity this winter are Fox, Metro, Pathe and Famous Players. These organizations are already well established on the Coast, and quite frequently send their companies from one side of the country to the other for the various pictures.

Experts within the motion picture industry were venturing this week that the fall and winter of 1918-19 would see as much producing work going on in and around New York as usual, and that the West Coast would experience its usual season of activity. War times, it was cited, have cut into the transportation question considerably, and companies to avoid the constant drain upon the purse in that direction would have to remove to the Coast permanently.

A producer favoring the Coast is Lester Park, who stated to Motion Picture News this week: "It is not a matter of expediency and a duty owed to the Government to assist in the conservation of coal, but it is equally a duty owed exhibitors by producers.

"Pictures cannot be made as effectively or as economically in the East as on the Coast," Mr. Park said. "A recent rainy day cost a producer whom I know $3,000. This is not an unusual experience. Somebody has to pay for such waste, and that is usually.

"I hope the day will come when not only all the producing companies will be located in California, but their headquarters as well. We have been scattering money in traveling expenses to and from the Coast as if it were water.

"If the time ever does arrive when all the moving picture activities are centered on the Coast, exhibitors are going to find a big difference in their film bills and likewise in the quality of their pictures."

Walraven Goes to the Coast

J. Hesser Walraven, who has been handling the publicity of Paralta Plays, Inc., resigned from that company August 14, to leave for the West Coast. In San Francisco Mr. Walraven is to take over the management of the Rivoli theatre, it is said, and will also control a chain connected with that house.

Smalley in East

Los Angeles (Special).—Phillips Smalley left for the East last week, having been called there by the frail condition of his mother. He will probably remain in the East for several weeks.

Harry Rapf Supplies Posters for Loan

Harry Rapf is to send special half sheets to the exhibitors throughout the country on behalf of the Liberty Loan drive with Capt. Robert Warwick's appeal for the Liberty Loan. These will no doubt have a far reaching effect with the public, as there are thousands who step in the lobbies and look at the displays and it is certain that all the exhibitors will display these half sheets in the lobby as it contains a fac-simile cut of Robert Warwick in his uniform as captain in the United States Army, and as Warwick has thousands of admirers who have missed him in his many screen productions and are not aware that he is now serving his country.

Mr. Rapf is of the opinion that these half sheets will attract a great deal of attention among the film fans. These half sheets have been gotten up in a very fancy manner and will be sent out during the drive and in conjunction all prints of the Accidental Honeymoon which Mr. Rapf has released, he is showing Mr. Warwick in uniform with an explanatory title showing that Mr. Warwick is at the front.

Mr. Warwick has gone back to France after bringing over for General Pershing the Government film, "America's Answer."

Distributors Urged to Supply Films

All distributors, both program and independent, should come forth with the offer of supplying motion pictures to the Liberty theatres of the country at the same rental accepted by those distributors named in Motion Picture News of August 17, is the opinion of Edward Hyman, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, operating the Liberty theatres.

The distributors now furnishing the films to these theatres at such a minimum cost as will barely cover rewinding and shipping include Paramount, Artcraft, Fox, Goldwyn, Metro, Mutual, Triangle, Pathe, Select and the First National Exhibitors. It will be noted that these distributors are known as "program" companies, supplying a fixed number of releases to exhibitors. No independent exchanges or companies are named, although it is admitted that numerous of their productions would be as welcomely received at the camps as those already being shown there.

It is expected that the Liberty theatre Honor Roll of distributors will grow considerably to embrace many more than the ten already named.

Stebbins Goes to Brevoort in Brooklyn

Announcement has been made that S. J. Stebbins has resigned his post as manager for William Fox's Academy of Music, a position he has held since the house has been running pictures, to take over the direction of the Brevoort, in Brooklyn.

Mr. Stebbins is probably one of the best known managers in New York. He has been with the Fox enterprise almost since its inception.

Industry Raises Fund for Mitchel Memorial

The motion picture industry is represented upon the Finance Committee of the Mitchel Memorial Fund, according to an announcement made by Cleveland H. Dodge, General Chairman of the Permanent Organization Committee.

William A. Brady, President of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and Marcus Loew, of the Marcus Loew theatres, who is actively identified with the committee work of the National Association, are members of the Finance Committee.

At a recent meeting held at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, the following subscriptions were pledged: William Fox, Fox Film Corporation, $250; Gabriel Hess, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, $250; William A. Brady, William A. Brady Picture Plays, Inc. (personal), $100; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films (personal), $100; W. R. Sheehan, Fox Film Corporation (personal), $100; Frank A. Tichenor, General Film Company (personal), $100; Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, $50; A. B. Harrick, Hearst-Pathe News (personal), $10; Charles O'Reilly for his three theatres—69th Street Playhouse, $10, Rex theatre, $10, Parkside theatre, $10.

President Brady and Marcus Loew are planning a campaign to secure funds from all those desiring to contribute, and in this work the local organizations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League will be instrumental.

Film Stars Help Open Liberty Theatre

The Liberty theatre at Camp Kearney, California, will open this week with a big variety show given by the leading motion picture stars. Among those who will be on the program are William and Dustin Farnum, Gladys Brockwell and Dorothy Davenport. The Farnum brothers will give a scene from "Les Miserables," accompanied by Herbert Hayes and Al Fremont, with Miss Gladys Brockwell and Dorothy Davenport. A comic sketch entitled "Kick In" will be played. Other performers on the bill will be Mme. Aldrich, operatic prima donna; Fred Stone, Mary McKee and the Fox string cornet.

This, the thirty-second Liberty theatre of the War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, was completed last week. Connected with the stage are twelve large dressing rooms, all modern and up to date, orchestra pit, auditorium, electrical appliances all standard and complete. There is a seating capacity of 3,500.

Herz Closes Deal for Ford Weekly

CHICAGO.—Lee Herz, president of the Silee Film Company has just returned from Detroit, after closing a deal for the Ford Educational Weekly for the State of Iowa, which now gives his company five states, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky and Wisconsin. Sol Lesser Enters the Mid-West

Opens Chicago Offices for "Hearts of the World"—Expects to Expand Exchanges and Get Other Features

CHICAGO (Special)—Sol Lesser has broken into the Central States territory with the opening of offices to handle "Hearts of the World" in the territory recently acquired in connection with George Davis. Coincident with the opening of the Chicago office comes the hint that this step is probably the beginning of a move for the establishment of a complete chain of film exchanges extending from coast to coast.

It is understood that the Chicago office is to be a permanent branch of the Lesser activity, and that in addition to "Hearts of the World" other feature productions will be later acquired for this territory.

In addition to being associated with Mr. Davis in the Mid West "Hearts of the World" company, Mr. Lesser is President and General Manager of the All Star Features Distributors, with offices in San Francisco. The All Star Features Distributors has its offices in all the Pacific Coast cities of importance and distributes state right productions in all states west of the Rockies.

Mr. Lesser first attracted attention by paying a high price for "The Spoilers," and his handling of that production was one of the causes of its tremendous popularity in the far west. Since that time Mr. Lesser's firm has booked many of the big film productions, including D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance," and now his latest great romance of the war, "Hearts of the World."

West of the Mississippi there will be twenty-five companies touring with "Hearts of the World"; fifteen from Chicago and ten from San Francisco. Each company will be equipped with all the essentials for the pretentious exhibition of the production. An orchestra will accompany each show.

On May 18th, Mr. Lesser startled his friends by announcing the purchase of "Hearts of the World" for eleven Western States for $200,000, and the success of the production under his management was so gratifying that when the opportunity came to purchase the remaining eleven states west of the Mississippi, he eagerly acquired it. Its record so far in the West was made in Los Angeles, where its receipts are said to have exceeded those of "The Clansman" or "Birth of a Nation" by $23,000.00 in the thirteen weeks of its engagement. It is now in its tenth week at the Alcazar in San Francisco, where it has broken all records.

The length of its engagement in other cities follows: Five weeks, Seattle; four weeks, Portland; three weeks, Spokane; four weeks, Oakland; four weeks, Denver; three weeks, Salt Lake City; and three weeks, Milwaukee, where it is scheduled for a seven weeks stay.

The Chicago offices are located in the City Hall Square Building, and are under the management of George Davis.

Peace in Sight for Cleveland Operators

The second phase of the Cleveland operators' demand for a 38 per cent increase of wages was reached at midnight August 12, when a committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was present at a general meeting of the operators' union. The principal object of the meeting was to obtain from the operators their official recognition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League as a body, and after that, to secure their co-operation toward an amicable settlement of the present wage contention. Both of these objects were gained by the League members, and at a day to be announced the end of the week, the executive committee of the League will meet the executive committee of the operators' union, and will arbitrate the demands as set forth by the operators sent to the exhibitors last week.

The League members appointed to act on this committee are Henry H. Lustig, Sam Bullock, W. J. Slimm, Sam Barck, Max Schachtel and Ernest Schwartz.

Henderson Back with McClure

Daniel Henderson, formerly of the Advertising Department of the McClure organization, is back with that company, following a brief excursion into the advertising agency field. Mr. Henderson has resumed charge of the McClure advertising.

Teck in Buffalo Presents Fox's "Salome"

Commencing Sunday matinee, August 25, the Teck theatre, the big legitimate house, will present Theda Bara in "Salome." Last season this theatre did a capacity business for a week with "Cleopatra," and then played it for a return engagement of a week. Edgar Healy is in town as advance man for William Fox.

Harry Marsey, former manager of the Family theatre, is now operating the Allendale and Arcadia, both neighborhood houses.

Clarence Group, former assistant manager of Shea's Hippodrome, has entered the naval service as yeoman, and is stationed for the present at the local Curtiss aeroplane plant.

James Bailey, who has been assistant manager at the Academy theatre for about 12 years, and who has been absent for several weeks on account of ill-health, has returned to his post fully recovered. Charles Bowe, who has been taking his place, will return as manager of the Lyric theatre when that house opens Labor Day.

Canada Asks for Liberty Films

Recognizes Great Good Industry Has Accomplished by Making Short Subjects — Association Gets Telegram from Provinces

THE enthusiastic response of the motion picture industry to the request of the Treasury Department to make short, three hundred foot pictures in aid of the Fourth Liberty Loan has made such a tremendous impression on the officials of the Canadian Government that they have requested the use of the pictures in furtherance of the Fifth Canadian Victory Loan.

The request was received by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, in the form of the following telegram:

"Your commendable and patriotic co-operation with the United States Government and your offer to make films that will help put the Fourth Liberty Loan over the top has made a tremendous impression on all members of the Dominion Government and we have been asked to secure your co-operation for Canada's Fifth Victory Loan, which closely follows your drive in the States.

"We submit that while you are producing your film for America's Liberty Loan that you re-take such scenes as will apply only to the United States, using Canadian locale, uniforms and flags in such scenes so that the negatives can be re-arranged and used by us in making the forthcoming Canadian loan a tremendous success.

"Not having any Canadian producers, we are dependent upon you for these films, and this is your opportunity to help Canada during her hour of greatest need at a minimum of expense to yourselves, as the greatest portion of your negative could be used by both countries.

"The effect here will not only be to pronounce the film industry as a war essential in Canada, but will bring your regular releases closer to the interests of the powers that be and for your eventual protection and profit, and will in large measure offset tendency towards discrimination against American films on account of their dominating the Canadian market.

"This is a splendid opportunity to accentuate the remarkable work you have done personally in your official capacity for the United States Government by extending those activities to the Dominion.

(Signed) JULE and J. J. ALLEN,
Canadian Fifth Victory Loan Committee."

A copy of this telegram was sent immediately to Adolph Zukor, chairman of the committee of the National Association appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department and which has charge of all the motion picture work in connection with the Fourth Liberty Loan. A copy was likewise sent to all of the companies who are making Liberty Loan pictures.

As these Liberty Loan pictures are being made at the direct request of the Treasury Department and when completed will be under the control of the Federal Reserve Banks, it is very probable that the matter of using these pictures for the Canadian Fifth Victory Loan will first have to be taken up with officials of the Treasury Department and their permission obtained before the request can be acceded to. The committee has taken the matter under advisement.

Arline Pretty Comes Back to the Screen

Arline Pretty, formerly with Vitagraph and Artcraft, is to be presented in a series of eight special pictures, in which she is to be featured alone, according to an announcement this week by E. Lanning Masters, under whose management Miss Pretty will appear.

Fully recovered from illness, which caused her retirement from the screen for the past year, Miss Pretty will leave next week for the Coast to begin the first of the series to be submitted for release on the co-operative plan. Announcement of the producing affiliation will be made in a few days, it is expected.

The cast, direction and stories for Miss Pretty's first three productions have already been approved. The first story to be filmed by this new producing unit, it is understood, is one for which a great deal of rivalry has existed between prominent companies, $10,000 having been offered for it, it is said, by the largest and best known of these organizations shortly before it was acquired for Miss Pretty.

The foreign rights for the productions have already been contracted for by Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brockless Company.

Ford Party Takes Universal Cameraman

Harry Levey, head of Universal's industrial department, dispatched a cameraman this week to accompany Thomas A. Edison, H. S. Fireston and Henry Ford on their vacation. The trio of notable men will pass several weeks camping in the woods on Mr. Firestone's estate in Ohio.

When announcement was made of their plan to get together in this fashion, word gained circulation that the real purpose of the campers was to work, not rest, and to combine their particular genius in devising some new war invention.

Mr. Firestone, as head of the Firestone Rubber Company, has been a leading producer of materials for the Government. Mr. Edison is credited with having invented several sensational instruments of land and sea warfare. Mr. Ford's efforts have encroached a half dozen divisions of war service. His plant has turned out thousands of conveyances for the Government, and he has helped greatly to put over Liberty Loan and other war fund drives.

Their friends suspect that the three are mapping out new service for the country that will be of history-making character. The films taken by their camera companion may prove a store of information.

Fuel Committee Meets with Garfield

The Fuel Conservation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held a conference with Fuel Administrator Garfield and other officials of the national fuel administration in Washington Tuesday, August 20, at which important plans were made for an intimate co-operation between the Fuel Administration and the National Association.

The subject was discussed from two angles. One was a national campaign to be instituted throughout the motion picture theatres of the country, seeking toward a general conservation in the use of all electric machinery which receives its initial power from coal. This campaign will seek to educate the public in the conservation of all electric current used in motors, generators, lights and all electric household cooking utensils.

The other campaign will seek to bring about the conservation of coal and to educate the public into the reasons for coal conservation in those sections of the country where there is a shortage. These campaigns will be local in extent and will only be used in such places where an acute shortage exists. Conferences were held with the Director of Publicity for the Fuel Administration and arrangements made for the most intimate co-operation. It was decided that President William A. Brady should appoint an additional committee of five to handle the details of this work.

Philadelphia Sells Out on War Film

The method of disposing of the house en bloc, which has proved so successful during the engagement of "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War Film at the George M. Cohan theatre, in New York, has been duplicated for the showing of this patriotic picture at the Forrest theatre in Philadelphia, and the Majestic theatre in Boston. The season at these houses opened August 12, after an intensive campaign by special representatives of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, under the direction of Ryerson Ritchie, chief of the Community Section.

Philadelphia sprung a novelty at the opening. Instead of that night being largely given up to invited guests, according to custom, John Wanamaker bought the house for the employes of the big Wanamaker store, and had the honor of inaugurating the engagement.

The disposal of the house to business concerns in Philadelphia and Boston ensures the success of the engagements in these cities, but the response of the public on the intermediate nights has been gratifyingly large.

Jolivet Company Moves

In a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the Rita Jolivet Film Corporation announces its removal from the Candler Building, New York, to the Longacre Building, Times Square. In that building it is located with the Metro organization on the 11th floor.

From the Current "Gold-Winner"

GOLDWYN'S "intimate house organ," The Gold-Winner, in its current issue contains an editorial from the pen of F. B. Warren, vice-president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, that points its moral in a simple and direct manner. After asking—"Have You Ever Heard the Story of the Exhibitor in Fools' Gulch, Idaho?" it goes on to say:

Some of the maps of the United States do not show the name and location of FOOLS' GULCH, IDAHO. But it is there, and the town contains a motion picture theatre and a motion picture exhibitor.

This article tells about him.

There are not many diversions in Fools' Gulch. There are five saloons, the railroad station, the postoffice and the picture palace.

Tiring of these unexciting institutions, the people of Fools' Gulch read every scrap of paper that comes into town, including the family story papers, the matrimonial weeklies and the patent medicine song books. In every cabin and shack in the town there are pasted on the walls pictures from the magazines—pictures known and recognized throughout the nation.

Fools' Gulch gets the movie magazines filled with news and portraits of the stars; magazines containing the advertising of the few producing companies that advertise.

If the exhibitor of Fools' Gulch put an advertisement in the little weekly four-page paper of his town that next Thursday he was going to show a Goldwyn Picture, every man, woman and child in Fools' Gulch would know that they would see either Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore or a Rex Beach story.

This would be because Fools' Gulch reads and REMEMBERS WHAT IT READS. But some fool in Fools' Gulch has told this exhibitor that if he advertises the brand name on his pictures that the maker of the pictures will raise his rental and he, poor devil, believes what he has been told.

If this exhibitor was running a drug-store he couldn't sell Father John's Medicine without calling it FATHER JOHN'S MEDICINE. His patrons wouldn't trust him if he tried to hand them a bottle of Father John's without a label.

If he was running a grocery and he handed out an unlabeled box of gelatine his woman customer would speak up and say: "No, I want Knox's gelatine."

If he offered an unbranded package of safety razor blades his buyer would say: "What do you think I am taking, an unknown blade? I want GILLETT'S."

And it is the same way with motion pictures, BUT THE POOR NUT DOESN'T KNOW IT. He has let SOME DARNEDER FOOL THAN HIMSELF put a strangle-hold on his profits and h's income.

Natural horse-sense would, in ten minutes, make him a fairly sensible merchant or druggist, but somehow in pictures he has lost his horse-sense and is, therefore, a PUNK exhibitor.

Such a man couldn't get by in any other business, but it is wonderful that he continues to get by as a picture showman.

FINAL SHOT: If there is another exhibitor like the one in Fools' Gulch we recommend that he read this just before he gets on his knees to say his prayers for the night. And then, after he has blown out the light, we further suggest that he lie on his back in the dark and think this over instead of counting sheep to make him sleep.

Newman Returns with Tales and Pictures

E. M. Newman, globe trotter, motion picture director and lecturer, was voicing thrilling tales of Europe last week in the offices of Educational Films Corporation, New York, following his return from "the other side" with some new war films. Later Mr. Newman took the films to Washington to place them before the Committee on Public Information.

Mr. Newman's material includes all the work of the American forces, from the building of miles of railroads to the enormous bakeries. He still suffers from the effect of a gas attack, which laid him up for several weeks and robbed him of his voice.

Hamish McLaurin Joins Red Cross Bureau

Hamish McLaurin, who has been publicity director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel, has resigned his position to enter the service of the Red Cross, in the publicity bureau.

Mr. Rothapfel, in a statement last week, expressed his regret at losing the efficient services of Mr. McLaurin, and announced that Mr. Geffen would look after the publicity of the two Broadway motion picture theatres.

Fairbanks Gets Offers

It was announced this week from the West Coast that many offers have been made Douglas Fairbanks for his future films following the expiration of his contract with Artcraft, which agreement, it is understood, is nearing its end. Although none of the offers made have been made public, it is said they were for his next eight productions.

War Board "Calls" Exporters

Declares to National Association That Large Number Take Advantage of Regulations to Canada—Twenty-four Deny

IN a recent communication to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Vance McCormack, chairman of the War Trade Board, called attention to the fact that a number of concerns in the export motion picture business were attempting to take advantage of the customs regulations relative to the unrestricted export of motion picture films to Canada.

These concerns were attempting to re-export their pictures to the restricted countries after they crossed the Canadian boundary line and were therefore beyond the authority of the War Trade Board.

As a result of this complaint on the part of the War Trade Board, Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the Association, sent out the following letter to all of the distributor and export members of the association:

"I am transmitting herewith copy of a letter received from Mr. Vance McCormack, chairman War Trade Board, and direct your particular attention to the third paragraph as follows:

"'In regard to exports to Canada and Newfoundland without license, I regret to state that reports reach us that certain members of your industry are attempting to evade deliberately the purpose of our regulation by taking advantage of the unrestricted export to Canada, planning to export thence to outside countries. Steps are now being taken to bar such a possibility, in addition to which any such deliberate attempt to evade the provisions of the law will gravely compromise the prospects of the persons responsible securing favorable consideration for further licenses.'

"Kindly favor us with an acknowledgment containing a statement to the effect that no one identified with your organization can be charged with any action referred to and further, your assurance through the National Association to the War Trade Board, that under no circumstances will there be any evasion of the rules or regulations as promulgated by that body.

"All letters received from our members will be filed with the War Trade Board and your early compliance will be appreciated. It is obvious that such action upon your part will create a favorable impression at Washington, insofar as the companies which are represented in the membership of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are concerned."

Up to the present time twenty-four replies have been received, each one strenuously denying that any one connected with any of the following concerns had made any attempt to evade the regulations, and each one contained a pledge to the effect that no individual connected with any company would even attempt to evade in any way whatsoever the rules or regulations promulgated by the War Trade Board: Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Frohman Amusement Corporation, Norma Talmadge Pictures Corporation, Cosmofotofilm Company, The Bray Studios, Kalem Company, Wharton Releasing Corporation, Vitagraph Company of American, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Baumer Films, Inc., Pathe Exchange, Inc., Metro Pictures Corporation, Reginald Warde, Inc., Interocean Forwarding Company, Thanhouser Film Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, First National Exhibitors Circuit, the Crystal Film Company, World Film Corporation, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, International Film Service Company, Goldwyn Distributting Corporation, Eclipse Film Laboratories and The Gaumont Company.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

[These reviews, by P. S. Harrison, are based solely on the entertaining qualities of the picture. All other factors are considered of secondary importance.]

"The Clutch of Circumstances"

Corinne Griffith in an Entertaining Offering

(Vitagraph—Aug. 26. Directed by Henry Houry)

FAIRLY swift physical action, suspense, some situations with heart interest, pretty clothes and fine interior scenes make this offering entertaining.

The story, by Leighton Graves Osman, is not new, but is well handled. It shows how the heroine left the country and went to the city seeking employment to earn money enough to take care of her husband, who had lost his memory in an accident, and his mother. She became an actress. Shortly afterwards she was enabled to send her husband to a hospital and have his memory restored to him by an operation.

After his complete recovery he was shocked to find out that his wife had become an actress. He refused to have anything to do with her and applied for a divorce. Seeing his ingratitude, she did not contest the divorce, but returned to the show manager, the man who had brought fame to her, and who asked her to become his wife.

The photography is of the usual Vitagraph standard, excellent.

"The White Lie"

Complications Aplenty in Bessie Barriscale's Latest

(Paralta-Hodkinson—Sept. 2. Directed by Howard

YOU could hardly be deceived in a clever and more legitimate way while attempting to guess the nature of a subject in advance. You are dead sure it is going to be a suggestive picture. Why? Doesn't the heroine tell in the presence of the audience—by a subtitle of course—that she deceived her husband as to the real father of her child? Isn't that plain enough? What more do you want? She is guilty. Hang her.

But you have another guess coming, as the picture is as clean as you wish to show in your theatre. Here is how William Parker, the author, accomplishes the trick:

After an absence to Belgium for over a year, taking care of orphaned children, the husband returns. His wife presents him with an addition to the family he knew nothing about, a year-old baby daughter.

She doesn't exactly look like her blond mother, being rather dark, but that doesn't matter, love explains all. Baby's eyes are blue. Mother's also blue. Baby's complexion dark, but daddy's own mother's was also dark. They are both fond of children—that settles it.

During a convention in another city, the hotel being full, he is given temporarily the room of a friend of his. He is surprised to discover there the picture of his wife and baby. After hard thinking he makes up his mind his wife is unfaithful to him.

Upon his return he invites the man to dinner, seeking to discover the truth. She is all nervous and passes a note to the visitor, telling him she must see him that night without fail.

After the man's departure, the heroine follows. Discovering the absence of his wife and becoming suspicious, the hero drives to the man's apartments. In entering the room he finds the dead body of the man. He is arrested by detectives for murder and, thinking his wife had committed it to hide her guilt, takes the blame upon himself.

The heroine now arrives and finds the dead body. Thinking her husband killed him out of jealousy, she tries to hide the body. She is arrested, however, and to save her husband confesses to the murder.

Thinking there is something wrong in the case the heroine, is forced by the detectives to confess to the truth. During her husband's absence, she said, a burglar entered the house. She was shocked to discover that it was none other but her school mate. He gave poverty and inability to care for his sick wife and child as the reason. (The husband, in the next room, is hearing the story all the while.) She visited his dying wife, who begged her to take care of her baby. She promised to adopt it. When her husband returned from Belgium, out of her great love for children, she told him falsely the baby was their own.

Just as she gets to that point in the story a policeman enters and states that a burglar was shot, and in his dying confession stated that it was he that killed the man, a former confederate, because he thought he squealed on him. Husband and wife are again made happy.

The idea in the story is somewhat original. The author deserves credit for the way he worked out the different situations. The direction is also creditable.

It is an all around good picture that will suit any audience.

"High Tide"

Harry Mestayer Coughs His Way Almost to a Coffin

(Triangle—August 18. Directed by Gilbert Hamilton)

HE—the refined villain—is a fiction writer of fame, but spends half of his time with wine and wild women. His constitution is not able to stand it and he contracts tuberculosis.

A young lady of romantic disposition, aspiring to become a writer, starts correspondence with him. Later she comes to New York. She meets him by chance at Greenwich Village (he coughs). His "flame" gets jealous at this new diversion of his love and chides him (he coughs).

The girl returns to her home town, her head full of love for him. He follows her there (he coughs). After a while he returns to New York, visits his doctor and asks him what he should do in regard to this new but sincere love (he coughs). The doctor tells him had he taken his advice and kept away from high life he would not be in such condition now. To leave the girl alone would be the best thing he could do.

He goes to his "flame" and tells her what ails him (he coughs). She answers, as they are both derelicts, she will be glad to take him in, and unites her fate to his. (Oh, joy! He coughs.) Fortified with this promise, he goes back to the girl (he now stops coughing for a while) and notifies her he doesn't love her any more. As such conduct is commendable and shows a great spirit of sacrifice on his part, he now becomes a hero, from the villain he was. She cries a little (he coughs), but is consoled when told of his real sacrifice. He goes back to his "flame" and the story ends.

Can you beat this for a story? For the love of Mike! Who ever said that the building of a plot almost exclusively on a consumptive is entertaining? It is enough that we cannot avoid such pitiful sights in real life; shall we have them furnished to us in a platter even when we get a notion to go to a picture theatre to amuse ourselves?

"Heart of the Wilds"

Elsie Ferguson Gets Her Best Vehicle

(Artcraft—Sept. 1. Directed by Marshall Neilan)

MORE action and situations with heart interest and good suspense are contained in this picture than in any one in which Miss Ferguson has ever appeared. It grips you from the very beginning and holds you to the end.

Though it might be considered too strong by some of you for your particular audiences—there is some point blank shooting done in it—the fact that it is a play of the Canadian woods may absolve it in the minds of your patrons, as shooting and killing is to be expected in plays of this nature.

The story is based on Edgar Selwin's play, "Pierre of the Plains," which in turn is Mr. Selwin's dramatic version of Sir Gilbert Parker's "Pierre and His People," it is also based partly on "Jen of the Triple Chevron," by the same author.

The heroine is introduced as the daughter of a tavern keeper in Canada, near the American border. Her father is suspected of selling liquor to the Indians. As he is informed that one of them, to whom he has just sold a bottle of whiskey, is acting as a stool he sends his son and another cowboy to take it away from him. The Indian would give it up only on condition he give him his sister as a wife. Thus insulted, the brother shoots and kills the Indian.

The commander of the Mounted Police gives the hero sealed orders to be delivered at the post so that all avenues of the murderer's escape be cut off. He stops at the heroine's, whom he loved and had once saved from the hands of an Indian, for something to eat.

Upon learning of his mission, the father, in order to give his son time to escape, puts a few drops of laudanum in his coffee and puts him to sleep.

Unaware that it concerned the life of her brother, and to save the hero from disgrace, the heroine delivers the orders herself. On her return she is informed of the fact by her father.

The hero now awakes and in order to prevent him from closing the only avenue of escape she begs him to remain. Replying that honor is above love, he starts to go, but the heroine's revolver is accidentally discharged and he is hit and felled.

The cowboy now comes in and finding the heroine alone attacks her. Her brother enters and angered decides to shoot him. He stated he would spare him on condition he take the blame for the death of the Indian upon himself. He gives himself up to the officers who had just entered. She nurses the hero back to life and they marry.

There are some very beautiful camera shots of rough mountain country in this picture. They are fairly long shots, with the players close to the camera. The effect is most artistic.

A humorous subtitle now and then in the beginning of the picture, and the comical acting of some of the players, add to the entertaining values.

The picture is clean and should get by with the biggest majority of the audiences.

"The Liar"

Virginia Pearson in a Weird Melodramatic Concoction

(Fox—August 18. Directed by Edmund Lawrence)

THE basic idea in this offering is the villain's forging of a marriage certificate in an attempt to prove that the heroine has nigger blood in her veins, because he loves her and can't make her marry him by any other means. This is a new and somewhat unpleasant way of making love to a woman.

The scenario has been contributed by Katherine Kavanaugh. The picture opens somewhere in a Latin-American country, showing a planter beating a negro and crippling him for life. The planter induces him to remain silent with the promise that he will be well taken care of the rest of his life. The negro calls on him daily and receives his allotment.

The heroine, who lives in Boston, pays a visit to her father, the planter. His secretary, struck by her beauty, falls in love with her, but she does not encourage him.

Her father dies from heart failure. She again returns to Boston and marries the man she loves.

Crazed from infatuation, the secretary steals the page that contained the record of the marriage of the heroine's parents, substitutes a mulatto's name for that of her mother, then comes to Boston and tells her that unless she marries him he will tell her husband she has negro blood in her veins. She is about to become a mother and the fear that the child might be born black drives her to distraction. She scorns him. Angered, he tells her husband that his wife is a quadroon. A fight ensues.

The heroine grabs a revolver, goes into the next room and fires. Thinking that she has shot herself and that he is the cause of her death, the villain comes to his senses and confesses, then shoots himself. While he is dying the heroine enters, unharmed, and tells him she knew he was lying and is glad she proved it. Husband and wife are again made happy.

The first part of the story is based on a very weak foundation. The crippling of the negro, causing the secret dealings, is not strong enough a cause, especially to an American audience, for all the mystery in the story. As to the situation where the heroine shudders at the thought that her baby might be born black, it will undoubtedly prove too strong for the average picturegoer, especially the women folks.

"Our Mrs. McChesney"

Ethel Barrymore Pleases in Adaptation of Her Stage Hit

(Metro—September 9. Directed by Ralph Ince)

THE element of heart appeal abounds in this comedy-drama. It will surely touch the heart strings. It starts with a lively, high speed comedy and ends in a dramatic way.

The scenario is based on the story of the same name by Edna Ferber, later seen on the stage with Miss Barrymore in the lead. It introduces the heroine as a saleswoman, who, tiring of traveling, resigns her position in order to settle down and make a home for herself and son. She is offered a better position with another firm to remain in the store, but rejects it when she finds out her son had married secretly.

The head of the concern from which she had resigned begs her to remain. She does so, but shortly afterward he discloses to her the fact that the firm is bankrupt. She does not get discouraged, but sits down and thinks hard. She invents a new style gown, makes a success of it, and in the end marries the boss, but not before she makes a man out of her boy and a good housewife out of her daughter-in-law.

The action is swift all the way through. The comedy element depends mostly on the subtitles, which are clever, and partly on the characters.

It is a clean and wholesome attraction suitable for any kind of an audience.

"Her Only Way"

Norma Talmadge in An Entertaining Offering

(Select—August. Directed by Sidney Franklin)

THE development of the plot in this picture takes place almost wholly in a dream. Owing to this fact more latitude is allowed in its construction, particularly in one or two of the situations, which might be considered a little too strong were the story a straight melodrama.

On the whole, this offering is entertaining. It contains many tensely dramatic situations that will hold the interest almost nailed to the end.

The story, by George Scarborough, presents the heroine as an impoverished young girl. She is sought in marriage by two young men, Paul Belmont, wealthy, and Joseph Marshall, of poor circumstances.

Fearing he is about to be turned down for Paul, Marshall denounces the heroine for her love of money. Angered, she dismisses him.

She now dreams of having accepted Belmont, and that after the marriage her husband turns to his old "flame" again.

Later he obtains a divorce by accusing her falsely and compromising her with Marshall, thus ruining the latter's career.

After the divorce she returns home and, drawing a revolver, kills her husband and herself.

She now wakes up to find it all was a dream. Paul and Marshall enter and she accepts the latter as her husband.

The picture is clean and ought to please any kind of an audience.

"The Cruise of the Make-Believe"

Lila Lee Gives Good Promise in Screen Debut

(Paramount—September 8. Directed by George Melford)

CONSIDERING this is her first screen appearance, one can congratulate the star. It seems she is going to fully justify the hopes confided in her. She has a pretty face, and with a little more training she will undoubtedly be able to express emotion with ease. At any rate, the future will tell.

"The Cruise of the Make-Believe" is a sort of an imaginary, romantic drama of the light type. It is not big and it doesn't pretend to be, but will furnish your patrons satisfactory entertainment. They will leave your theatre with a happy feeling.

Tom Gallon, the author, has the heroine, a young girl of dreamy nature, living in the slums. She builds an imitation ship with tables, stoves, tents, a carriage wheel and other paraphernalia and goes cruising, in her mind, once in a while.

The hero, a wealthy young man, takes an interest in her. She falls in love with him. Desiring to make her happy, he bargains with her father (who drinks quite a little), and sends her for a month to his country place. She is told the place has been rented by the father. He instructs the servants to take orders from the visitors unquestionably.

After the month is over the father finds things so nice he doesn't want to move. Eventually he is compelled to disclose to the heroine the fact that they were invited there only for a month. They leave, but the hero follows them to the slums. She tells him how deeply he has established himself in her heart and they embrace each other, happy in their thought of future union.

Raymond Hatton, as the father, is wonderful. He reminds one of Dickens' Micawber.

This picture is suitable for any kind of an audience.

In advertising this picture try to excite the curiosity of the public. Tell them this star is a new find and ask them to come and see for themselves and pass their opinion on the matter.

"Wild Life"

William Desmond in An Average Dime Novel Western

(Triangle—August 25. Directed by Henry Otto)

THIS is an ordinary program picture of the dime novel type, in which the villain is more or less immune until towards the end when he meets his just desserts.

The hero is introduced as a Western bad man from force of circumstances.

Thinking she is coming to the Blue Bell Dance Hall to get a job as a musician, the heroine finds out she is wanted as a dance girl. Realizing that she is made a victim of misrepresentation, she is taken in charge by a kind girl, who is one of the dancers.

In an attempt to kiss the heroine the villain is beaten by the hero. He vows vengeance. When the villain later holds up the stage, killing some people, he tries to fasten the crime upon the hero. A posse attempts to lynch the latter, but it becomes known that the villain is the guilty one. Therefore he is shot and killed. The hero and the heroine are united.

The evidence furnished by the villain in trying to fasten the crime upon the hero is too flimsy (a neckerchief with the hero's initial). It is not logical that the accusation should be accepted without corroborative evidence. Furthermore, it is unreasonable that the villain should have acted so unconcernedly, knowing the truth was liable to become known any minute.

This picture may get by with an audience that is not discriminating, but will not please a critical one.

"His Birthright"

Will Please Star's Following Immensely

(Haworth-Mutual—Aug. 25. Directed by William Worthington)

THIS is the first picture of Sessue Hayakawa's series since he severed his connections with the Lasky Company, but it runs almost along the same lines as those released in the Paramount program. The same care as to details, atmosphere, directing and photography mark this production as the best one in which he ever appeared. It will undoubtedly please his followers.

The story has been written by Mr. Hayakawa himself in collaboration with Mr. Dennison Cliff. The subject avoids showing the star in an anti-sympathetic, villainous role as was the case with many of his pictures in the past. It has been constructed very thoughtfully and with the object of attracting to the hero the sympathy of the spectator.

As introduced on the screen, the hero, a Japanese with white blood in his veins, being the son of an American naval officer, now an Admiral, comes to the United States to wreak vengeance upon his father for abandoning his mother. While in America, he is made the unwilling tool of some German spies. He is made to steal from the Admiral a certain envelope containing government orders. When he realizes his mistake he fights the spies off and secures the envelope again just as the Admiral, followed by the police, enters the place and arrests the Germans. Father and son are now reconciliated. The latter offers his service in the naval service.

Although the hero is shown as the illegitimate son, this situation has been handled very delicately and is free from suggestiveness. Therefore, the picture should prove suitable for any kind of an audience.

"The Pursuit of Polly"

Billie Burke Makes This a Winner

(Paramount—Aug. 19. Directed by Chester Withey)

LIGHT but interesting story, fast action, and a little comedy, coupled up with Miss Burke's charms, make this a pleasing offering. Your feelings are held in suspense throughout the picture as you cannot guess the action in advance. There are lots of clever twists in it and worked out in a convincing way.

The story is a joint contribution of Izola Forester and Mann Page.

The heroine is wooed by too many suitors, owing to her beauty. Father tells her she must choose one. She gets an inspiration from a book she reads and decides to put it in execution. There is going to be a race, she to be given a fifteen-minute handicap. The first man who will catch her will be the fortunate husband.

She starts, and after exchanging the automobile with a racing boat and then another automobile, she is stalled on account of engine trouble. The hero, a government secret service man, is on his way to Mountain-View Inn, to watch a German spy. He offers to take her there. She accepts.

Great complications arise on account of her mysterious actions. As there is a woman connected with the German spy, the hero thinks the heroine is surely the one.

The suitors, having been informed of her whereabouts, get to the Inn. In order to escape them she enters a room. It happened to be that of the German spy. Thinking it is his confederate he takes her to a lonely cabin in the mountain where there are more German spies and a wireless outfit. Not being able to identify herself she is about to be done away with, when the hero, who has been following them, enters the room and arrests the spies. The suitors, who were hot on her trail, get there. So does the father, who has been informed of his daughter's disappearance and that she was seen in the company of a stranger. Eventually the mystery is explained. But when each of the suitors claims her as his own she tells them the first one to catch her was the hero, the secret service man. They become engaged.

This picture is clean and will offer your patrons a wholesome entertainment. It is suitable for any kind of an audience, especially for the high class ones.

"Fires of Youth"

Ruth Clifford Scores with Julian's Help

(Bluebird—Aug. 26. Directed by Rupert Julian)

AFTER seeing this picture you would feel as you would want to extend your arm across the continent and shake hands with Mr. Julian.

Dramatically and as an artistic production it compares with the best the speaking drama can offer along the same line. The most deeply hidden emotions are reached, not with a strong plot, which is a very simple one indeed, but with real artistic acting and directing.

The story introduces the heroine, a young and pretty girl, just out of her 'teens, married to an old wealthy gentleman. Her heart is hungry for love. He devotes his time in his business affairs. She grows melancholy. He advises her to keep company with a young fellow, their acquaintance and a good boy. The inevitable happens. A love springs in their heart between the two.

The old man, now that it is somewhat late, commences to place restrictions on her. He orders the young man from the house as he is about to take a short trip. The young man, intoxicated by love returns after his leave and begs her to elope with him. She agrees, but before they leave the garden he realizes it is wrong to take her that way and abandons the idea.

In returning to the house she finds her husband's desk burglarized and certain securities stolen.

Upon the husband's return in the morning, the suspicion is cast on the young man. He sends detectives to his house and enter just after the real burglar sold him the securities under the threat to expose what happened the night before.

Fearing to tell the truth least he compromise the heroine, he states that he did steal the securities. The heroine, however, confesses to the whole affair, and points to the husband, that he did not understand youth and that it was his conduct that brought this love affair about.

She secures a divorce and a year later marries the hero. They are thus made happy.

For That's the Only Way They'll Ever Get Motion Picture News — There's None in the Papers

WHEN the general subject of advertising was taken up in this department, one of the first recommendations that we made to exhibitors generally was to advertise every day. Under the rates charged and the failure on the part of some newspapers to take advantage of the opportunity to print "directory" advertising, this is impossible for the neighborhood houses and smaller cities.

This reminds us that we are going to show you within a few weeks what we would regard as the ideal co-operation between exhibitors and newspapers.

Exhibitors should make every effort to advertise each day in the year. It is the hundred per cent policy of doing business. For the neighborhood houses and for the small theatre that cannot get the proper arrangement with the newspapers the only way that they can cover the week's attractions is by doing it in the Sunday issue. But, as we have said, it would be much more preferable could they arrange to divide this space up and give the attractions daily.

But the larger house has no excuse for failing to advertise every day. There are some of the large cities where the theatres seem to be content with making a big splurge on Sundays and then forgetting all about the newspapers for the remainder of the week. As so far as our investigation goes every city where such custom obtains has the reputation of being a poor motion picture town. There is nothing of coincidence in this. Your Sunday advertising is valuable, but you need to call attention of the public continually to your attraction.

Now take the case of a week's run. The patron sees your advertisement in the Sunday newspaper. Most of them will then determine to see the picture at a certain time, but there is, first, a percentage that passes over the advertisement in the Sunday issue. There is another percentage that forgets the attraction at your theatre. Your Sunday advertisement may have put over the appeal all right, but appeals do not last always and he needs a reminder. There is another larger percentage that starts out in the evening to "go to a motion picture show," and a great majority of these are going to be guided by the advertising in the day's paper. If necessary we would prefer to cut down the Sunday space in order to be represented every day, but the theatre that is now advertising only on Sunday will find that the increased cost of the daily advertising will much more than pay for itself without making any cut in the Sunday appropriation. For the theatre that changes its bill twice a week we have recommended a large advertisement on the new attraction the afternoon before the change of bill and the morning of the day that the new show goes on. We will not here again go into the point covered in one article concerning the proper way to distribute advertising over the different days to make up the appeal, but we will also recall that when we come to show you the ideal co-operation.

But there is no reason why every theatre in cities where there are dailies should not advertise every day.

All of this is preliminary to learning what the newspapers should do every day. We are going to illustrate it with the San Francisco situation. Last week we took up the case of the Saturday and Sunday papers and showed you how all the representation given consisted of reading notices and pictures in the layout, since the "co-operation" there is strictly on the dollars and cents basis.

Now let us look at what the San Francisco papers and theatres do during the week, because they mainly show what not to do. On Monday the Call prints reading notices for the various advertising theatres and a four-column layout representing the attractions at the Tivoli, Imperial, Strand and Rialto. The theatres advertise strongly in this paper on Monday—those that do advertise regularly. Rialto has three inches double column, the Tivoli five inches, single, and the Strand, California and Portola two inches, single.

Let us say here for the California. We have been told that this theatre was a poor advertiser, and it is true that it does not use the big space in the Saturday and Sunday issues as do some of the other papers, but so far as we have seen this is the only theatre that keeps it two inches in ALL the newspapers EVERY day, which counts a great deal by having the name of and the attraction before the public all the time.

On Tuesday there is no reading matter about the motion pictures with the advertising about the same except that the Imperial is represented with one by three inches. On Wednesday there is a three-column layout of the stars of the Rialto, Imperial, Tivoli, California and Strand, with the advertising slightly less and then on Thursday there is again no motion picture matter with the Tivoli using three inches, single, and the Rialto, California and Strand two each. Friday the Rialto gets a two-column cut on the first page of the second section about next week's attraction, and has a two-inch ad, as have the California and Strand, while the Tivoli goes them a half inch better.

You will observe that daily and Sunday there is not a line of motion picture news in the Call.

On Mondays the Bulletin runs a four-column heading on "Feature in Filmland," and then reviews of the attractions at the advertising houses, four of which are represented in the longer reviews and one in a shorter one. Strand, Portola and California with two inches each are the only advertising theatres. Tuesday it has no motion picture matter and has the same three theatres with the Rialto added for the same amount of space.

Now on Monday the legitimate houses are separated in the Bulletin from the motion pictures, and the former are carried under the heading, "Around the Show Shops." But by Wednesday of the week the Bulletin seems ready to concede that the motion picture theatre may be a "show shop" and allows the notices there, though they are buried below those of the legitimate houses. Strand and California, with two inches each, are the only advertisers, and this continues to be the case Friday, when there is no motion picture matter.

According to the advice that we have from Los Angeles, while its total circulation does not compare with that of the Call or the Bulletin, the Daily News is said to have about the same circulation in the city of San Francisco as either of the other afternoon papers. That and because its rate is so much lower explains, evidently, why it carries more motion picture advertising than any other paper, though it does not print a line of motion picture matter during the week, so far as we have been able to see.

We are reproducing the Monday page to show the advertising, for, we repeat, there is no motion picture matter to be shown. Strand uses five inches double column, while Rialto and California have their usual two inches, and the Mission also comes in for two inches. Tuesday it has the Rialto for three inches double, the Tivoli for five single, the Imperial for four single, and the California and Mission for two inches each. Wednesday is its big day when the Strand is there with five double, the Tivoli with five single, the Imperial three and one-half single, and the Rialto, Mission, Grand and California two single each, and the Wigwam, a combination house, uses six inches single to advertise its motion pictures. Thursday it dwindles down to two-inch ads. for five theatres.

Now we'll turn to the morning field. We've already observed

Rothapfel Tells of Advance of Weeklies

By S. L. Rothapfel

This is the third article by Mr. Rothapfel on the handling of patriotic pictures, with special reference to the news weeklies. In this article Lieut. Rothapfel cites the opportunity for putting punch into the "animated pictorials" and "animated magazines." How he edits these is of interest to every exhibitor.

WE have had a great deal of success in our two theatres here in the compilation of our so-called News Weeklies, but they are no longer just simply news weeklies—they are today a very important factor in the development of the motion picture entertainment as is exemplified at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

In the Rialto we call it the "ANIMATED MAGAZINE," and it is a counterpart, in motion, of the national magazines which one can buy at any newsstand. They are watched very closely from week to week, and we are guided by them, in a great measure, in the selection of material by what they themselves choose. There are two reasons for this, first; we are gaining the advice of these papers who have had years of experience, and second; the public who see these still pictures in the magazines later see them in motion pictures and they have a great advertising value.

In the Rivoli we call it the "ANIMATED PICTORIAL." Both names are originated here and both are responsible for a great amount of business in each of the respective theatres.

Punch is a word often misused, but there is more punch and more opportunity for it in one reel of the so-called news weeklies than in any five-reel feature I have ever seen.

Now I am going to tell you how I go about the assembling and presenting of these units in our program. The first thing that we do on Friday evening is to gather whatever available material may be at hand. We, of course, try to procure new and fresh stuff all the time and often times we lay away certain subjects of interest and wait for developments thereof that might later figure in the day's news. We have access to the libraries (and we have our own library) of important people, important units, ships, and other news. These subjects are all carefully tabulated so that we can place our hands on it whenever necessary.

Now I am going to let you in on the inside and show you exactly how we do it. On the average we approximate from 6,000 to 8,000 feet of film from which we select about 2,500 to 3,000 feet. First the subjects are selected, the selection being absolutely unbiased regardless of company or producer, and no favoritism is shown. They are selected purely for their merit. After these subjects have been taken out of their respective issues they are placed on a new assembling sheet and then are reassembled according to their psychological order. For instance, we may start the Magazine with marching troops or some subject that will immediately enthuse the audience and then follow in sequence, such as the troops arriving at camp, their embarkation on transports, their arrival in France, then intimate scenes showing them in their billets or on the front line. You see this gives you a sequel and will hold the interest of the audience for about ten or fifteen minutes. These subjects are connected by title or otherwise and shows the activities of these troops from the time they get to camp until they arrive "Over There." Then we start another sequel—it might be concerning activities at home, such as conservation, war activities, etc. This, of course, has a relation to the first unit, then we continue with war work, women's activities, such as the Red Cross, war charities, etc. After that comes the foreign element which of course includes all our Allies. Then to subside a bit from so much war stuff we get topics of interest that have happened during the week and we cull this out first, because of their timely interest, and second, because of their pictorial effect. Last of all we generally wait for the Punch. This can be done in several different ways. There is no specific way of doing it except to use your head and take the most attractive subject in the Magazine and use it as the last unit.

Now, regarding the music for these subjects. Remember that first we have the marching troops arriving in camp; the music to be used for this would be any good march, preferably one that is popular, as they leave on the transports a good, old chestnut can be used such as "Good Bye Broadway, Hello France." Everybody knows it and everybody will get into the spirit of it. Then there is perhaps a little naval stuff for which we use the "Jack Tar March," "Before the Mast," "Our Jackies" and several others. When they arrive "Over There" the title itself almost explains what music is necessary. It is always a good idea to start on the chorus of "Over There," especially when used in this way. Now we have the duties at home and what could be more appropriate than "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "It's Time for Every Boy to Be a Soldier," "What Kind of an American Are You," "There's a Million Heroes," "My Dough Boy" and many other little numbers that I can't just think of at this moment. Then we have the foreign pictures, and all exhibitors know that it is always appropriate to use the national anthem of the respective countries for state affairs, Presidents, Kings, etc. "Rule Britannia" is used for Great Britain, "The Marseillaise" for France, and, while the "Star Spangled Banner" of course to us is most dear, and is our national anthem, the "Marseillaise" is so universal in its appeal for liberty that it immediately ranks next in the hearts of every American. "Rule Britannia" unfortunately is not so well known. We have played it in our theatres time and time again and not a soul would rise, but the moment the strain of "Marseillaise" is played everybody would jump to their feet. Understand me, it is not good policy to make the people rise out of their seats during the performance by playing the national anthems, in fact it is to be avoided whenever possible, yet it would be undignified, bad taste and disrespectful if, for instance, the President of France was shown on the screen, or the King of Britain, and the national anthem was not being played. We would be criticized most severely for this and we would deserve it too. Now England's Navy is often in the news events and such marches as "Go to Sea," "Admirals All" and "Nautical Fantasies" counterpointed with their national anthem ("Rule Britannia") is always applicable. There are other fine marches that can be used for French pictures, which are inspiring such as "March Lorraine," "La Pere De La Victoire," "National Defile March," "Sombre Et Meuse," and then our own marches by Sousa, "Hands Across the Sea," "Invincible Eagle," and lots of others. Now for the news events of local interest; the music for these pictures can be secured according to their respective units and no definite rule can be used here but it is always good, if possible, to use a little Caprice, a Fox Trot or Waltz, or some music that will relieve the strain which allows a good chance for the final wallop. It is as the old saying goes, "the calm before the storm." Now for the climax. I will explain as an example what we are doing at the Rivoli this week and which has been very successful. The last shot in the issue of the War Review released by the Committee on Public Information shows the Defense of Rheims and the burning of the city, and then the title which reads, "In Spite of Kultur the Cathedral Still Stands." What we did was to get a piece of film from "Joan the Woman," which shows Jon of Arc leading her mignons to battle. We faded this picture in on an-

IF you missed reading the matter on various pages of the advertising section, turn back to them now. They tell you how one newspaper has used the STUDIO DIRECTORY to start a little department that will interest every fan.

Take this idea to your newspaper. Tell him that the paper in question got every line of this matter from the Directory and that there is an almost inexhaustible supply of this matter there. Exhibitors' Service Bureau Proves Worthy

Exhibitors Express Their Opinion of Its Service to the World of the Screen

LAST week we announced the beginning of the second year of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau and since then we have begun to receive letters telling us of the worth in which this department is held by leading exhibitors.

Without the co-operation that this department has had from live wires in all parts of the country the success that has been achieved would have been impossible. At the start of this bureau we invited their aid as our co-workers. We are told that it could not be done. It has been, and we are delighted to be able to print such expressions from leaders in exhibition.

Such letters are an inspiration for future work. It is only by hard work that we can succeed anywhere, and we never doubted from the first that when this department was showed to be honestly representative of the exhibitor the full confidence would be forthcoming.

E. V. Richards, Jr., General Manager Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans:

Congratulations on your birthday. The Exhibitors' Service Bureau has fulfilled every promise that it made at its start, and if it has not been of wonderful aid to every exhibitor, no matter how large or how small, it is his own fault. It has covered the field in a truly remarkable manner. There is a consensus of opinion assembled there that has never been obtainable before. Exhibitors are told what others are doing and it brings all of us closer together for our own benefit. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS deserves the greatest credit, and I want to be among the first to accord it.

H. M. Thomas, Manager of Strand and Rialto Theatres, Omaha:

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau is the first thing to which I turn in your valued publication. It has surely been a great step forward in trade paper publication, and I believe that you will find that a great deal of the popularity of the NEWS is due to this valued addition to your paper.

Mrs. Joseph Grossman, Standard Theatre, Cleveland, O.:

In new thoughts and real service to exhibitors, all may join in heartily and acclaim MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be in the lead. The department known as the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has now been in existence one year, and the NEWS has gained the confidence of both exhibitor and producer by giving genuine value, regardless of any influence whatever. That I consider THE greatest compliment any one can pay to any journal, for we realize that paid advertisements play the most essential part in these organizations.

As a result of the summary of opinions or "heart-to-heart" talks of the leading exhibitors of the country, great changes for the future are expected.

One asks what is the result? It has made one large family of producer, exhibitor and patron. All are in unison regarding honest, candid facts regarding features. It has shown the importance of method of appeal to the public, the use of proper display matter. It has shown that rentals must be governed by conditions and not by one set price, and, lastly, unless we have better, cleaner pictures and dispense with the camouflage (the great factor that has entailed the immense expense) this most wonderful industry will suffer greatly.

All this has been disclosed, therefore the MOTION PICTURE NEWS may honestly receive our congratulations and our wish to continue this service.

Harold B. Franklin, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo:

You are entitled to the congratulations and thanks of every exhibitor for the splendid manner in which the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been conducted. Although this department is but one year old, it has accomplished more in this short time than any other agency instituted in motion pictures.

This department has been the means of developing the best amongst exhibitors, both small and large. It has been an excellent channel through which ideas were given a chance to grow. There is hardly an exhibitor who has not or could not benefit from the splendid co-operation given here. It has proved to be the exhibitor's market place for good ideas.

Not content with establishing a bureau that was entirely new in conception, you have in this short space of time made astonishing bounds, and there appears to be no limit to the innovations possible, judging from the record of the Service Bureau to date.

The great interest shown by exhibitors in this department must be a conclusive source of pride to you that your efforts have borne fruit. May your second year be as resplendent as the first.

Sam W. B. Cohn, Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Wash.:

It may appear unbecoming in me, a member of your Advisory Board, to come to the front with a boost for the Exhibitor's Service Bureau department of the NEWS, but I cannot refrain from expressing my appreciation of this valuable and original departure. Without question the MOTION PICTURE NEWS was first of all motion picture trade journals to assist the exhibitors throughout the country in this manner.

To be brief, let me state that this department is unique because it eliminates all "bunk" literature—stuff which wastes valuable space and does no one any good, except, perhaps, the author. It may be trite to remark here that practical experience is the greatest teacher in any business, but, this being true, you have just cause to be proud of the columns devoted to your service department. Theory and imagination are all right within bounds, but when it comes to turning the crank—getting real projection, presenting a photoplay production, or to writing a "safe and sane" advertisement, give me a man with practical experience. This fact also applies to those persons who would advise others how to conduct their business.

One of the important features of your service department is that it is just as beneficial to the small-town exhibitor as it is to the manager of the larger city theatres.

Keep up the standard of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau and you will be doing more than "your bit" toward helping the exhibitor to help himself!

Thomas D. Soriero, Park Theatre, Boston, and Strand Theatre, Lowell:

What is the Exhibitor's Service Bureau?
What does it do?
What is its scope?
Who is affected by it?
What good is it to the exhibitor?
What is its service?

The moving picture industry has passed beyond the pioneer stage. It is no longer in its infancy. Ten million people daily, young and old, are entertained in moving picture theatres. Anything which helps the exhibitor provides better, cleaner, more interesting entertainment, is beneficial to the whole industry because it helps lift it upon a higher plane, and meets with more constant approval of the better thinking people, who no longer look upon the picture drama as means of appealing to the emotion of the children and the child mind.

It is these considerations which offer the best field for the Exhibitors' Service Bureau to confer upon the public and exhibitor last benefits by:

1. Bringing the thoughts, ideas and experiences of the moving picture world to a focus. Experiences of the exhibitors in the East exchanged with exhibitors in the West, North and South.

2. Exchange of ideas and experiences for the mutual benefit of all—public, exhibitor and producer.

3. Of especial benefit to the producer because he gains first-hand knowledge of individual problems of exhibition in widely separate fields and diversified interests. To gain this first-hand information in any other way would certainly entail immense expense and a tremendous amount of time.

4. By creating a better feeling of co-partnership between all concerned, from producer to patron, so that the patron will be provided with the right entertainment for himself and his family at the right prices, and permit a reasonable profit to the investors, the exhibitor and the producer.

Bureau Proves It's Worth

S. L. Rothapfel, Managing Director Rivoli and Rialto:

My opinion of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau as conducted by you is, I believe, to the interest of every first-class exhibitor in the United States. It is indispensable and a great help, and should be used on every occasion.

The interchanging of ideas and the council of successful men cannot be ignored by anyone, and the Motion Picture News deserves a great deal of credit for being a pioneer in this field and giving to the exhibiting bodies such splendid co-operation in the conduct of their respective theatres.

Edward L. Hyman, Director Picture Division, War Department, Liberty Theatres:

Allow me to extend to you congratulations on your initial birthday. This wonderful department has been a considerable assistance to me on topics most vital to a showman. From the inception of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau in the Motion Picture News I could foresee wonderful possibilities, but at the time of its first birthday cannot but truthfully state that it has surpassed my fondest expectations. All of the valued topics and subjects discussed have proved very helpful and beneficial to me. One of the chief features of this department is the wonderful personnel of the Advisory Board. To engage any of these showmen for assistance at your theatre would be well nigh impossible. However, through the Exhibitors' Service Bureau you receive this first-hand information. This department brings together the men who are running the theatres, and gives a fellow a feeling that we are all one big family devoting our efforts to the same cause. I anticipate even bigger things for this department during the next year. As long as there are theatres there will be problems to solve, and it can only be done through the concerted efforts of showmen through the columns of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. Again allow me to tender my congratulations to you at this time on the wonderful service received through this department and for its success.

Leo A. Landau, Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee:

Congratulations on your anniversary. The Exhibitors' Service Bureau brings to all exhibitors, large and small, an exchange of ideas that is invaluable. Without doubt, it is the most priceless service that any magazine of the present day gives its readers. The big fellow learns ideas from the little fellow—and the latter learns from the big. More real knowledge is absorbed by these voluntary expressions of opinion on vital topics than money could possibly buy.

Another angle: It gives the producer and distributor a straight-from-the-shoulder diagnosis of just what the public wants and expects, because the exhibitor is the fellow who is in a position to know, and he's the only fellow who does know. He hears what the public has to say and he sees what they like and dislike.

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau is the real thing.

E. J. Myrick, of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore.:

I take this opportunity of stating that it is a well-recognized fact that there has been an almost inconceivable advancement in the production and presentation of motion pictures, and I certainly have no hesitancy in saying that I attribute most of this advancement to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of Motion Picture News, because the combined opinion of the best exhibitors has been expressed numerous times in your columns, and I believe that any and all producers of motion pictures are doing their level best to co-operate with the exhibitors to the extent of making the subjects that the public desires. The only way a producer can feel the pulse of the public is through the exhibitor.

I know that the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been of inestimable value to me, and I feel reasonably sure that such is the case with the other gentlemen who are interested in motion pictures. I wish to take this opportunity of thanking you for your interest in my behalf the past year, and in closing allow me to congratulate you upon your service department and to wish you continued success.

Film Director for Liberty Theatres Tells How Motion Pictures Influence Soldiers

By Edward L. Hyman

Film Director for All Liberty Theatres in the U. S. Operated by the War Department Commission on Camp Activities

As manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, Mr. Hyman was one of the most successful of the younger managers in the country. However, his services were volunteered to the Government and he was sent to manage the Liberty theatre at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and later was sent to Camp Gordon, Ga., and there put in charge of booking the pictures for ten Liberty theatres. A few weeks ago he was given his present post and he will select all the films that the soldier boys see. Unquestionably the war is going to have a big effect in shaping the future of motion pictures and Mr. Hyman's article will be found valuable to manager and producer alike. This is the second article.

MAN shorn of home ties and sent forth upon a patriotic duty, without knowing it moulds new ideals.

Whether those ideals will serve him best in the war task confronting him, and in the life at home afterward, depend entirely upon how his moods are met, how his demands for amusement are handled.

The film industry of the United States, unwittingly perhaps, is one of the all-potent factors in developing the real fighting American, the man who goes forth with the proper incentive.

It is a mighty mean proposition in any institution to train a disgruntled man.

It is almost impossible to develop a man who has the right sort of diversion withheld from him.

That is where the film industry and the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, as well as other welfare organizations, are proving their worth in a time of need.

Perhaps the producer of motion pictures today does not realize it, but is true just the same, that his screen creation may have the effect of aiding morale in the Army and Navy, or of hindering the rightful process.

Edward L. Hyman, in the uniform of a Liberty Camp manager

The Liberty theatre of course comes in contact with the soldier to a greater degree than does the city or town exhibitor. However, it would not be unwise to make a mental reservation in the selection of pictures to pick them so that they would fit conditions as they exist today. The producer might also bear in mind the same proposition.

Send a man home to bed with a picture of family troubles as portrayed upon the screen lingering in his mind, and the mental picture will remain when he gets up in the morning, perhaps. He goes forth to drill in an improper frame of mind, is fretful and inclined to grouching. Morale is not being helped when such a state of mind is created.

But on the other hand, if you avoid the drama, the weird wild affair and show western pictures with plenty of action and smiles in them, you are bound to make the men forget their army trials and tribulations and will send them out ready to face actualities as they present themselves.

In a wide survey of camp theatres I have found that the new American, the soldier American, thrives on pictures of the Hart and Fairbanks type. I do not give these examples to advertise these stars for there are other players who entertain the soldiers as effectively.

The soldier works hard all day. He wants a wide diversion of amusement. Cartoons with grins in them he likes, as well as the snappy comedy. He has no room for the society drama, so beloved in civilian life. News weeklies, the latest ones, appeal to him, too.

These hints may be of no use to the producer, but it might not injure his success to bear a few of them in mind.

other machine over the burning city of Rheims (using the two projectors at the same time), then faded it out denoting of course that the spirit of France, as exemplified by Joan, could never be equalled; then we faded in again on the second machine the title, "The Steel Wall of France," and the huge body of French troops marching across the ruins. The music that we used for this subject was the "Allegro Movement" from Robespierre Overture, by Littolf, and as Joan appeared we raised our trumpets up high and started the chorus of the "Marseillaise" which took the people right out of their seats. The applause lasted fully a minute and a half after the picture had closed and didn't cease for a moment but instead grew louder and louder and held up our performance. You see the result is so apparent that no further explanation is necessary. Now every exhibitor in the United States owes it to himself, more than to the Government, to subscribe to the Official War Review, as it is an excellently edited picture and will create many patrons for his theatre.

There is no set rule for the final climax in making up the Weekly News Events, and the foregoing is merely explained as an example as I know that somebody will get something from it.

Your Idea and Ours

WE keep printing specimens of newspaper advertising which has been built on the producers advertising that has been used in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for a reason. We want to encourage the exhibitors who have the facilities to reproduce this matter to do so, and beyond that we want to see more of the producers devote their space in this paper to advertising that can be used by the exhibitor.

Now, in this case the Star theatre, Portland, Oregon, has taken bodily a page advertisement from Universal which appeared in the May 25 issue of the NEWS.

Simple isn't it. All you have to do is to have the cut reproduced. But how much better would it be if cuts or mats of this sort of advertising were available to the exhibitor.

"Price" may be used arbitrarily, but never "value."

WE keep repeating that one selling line will bring you more business than all of the superlatives and sensationalism in the world. Now look at this advertisement of the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn.

The cut is something unusual and will attract attention, but the real catch line is hidden. It is: "Fate Had Put Freedom in Her Fingertips." Now that should have been played as the selling argument. We would have omitted entirely the lines about the tensest photo-drama ever produced, which we doubt. We would have omitted the line "Your Sin Will Find You Out," and also we would have forgotten the line that stars "Talk About a Play with a Punch." Then we would have used the statement about the great Broadway success in 18 pt. italic type.

Now that looks like we are leaving out the most of the matter. Why? In the first place no one wants to see a picture that is based on crime, but they are interested in a case where a woman is concerned and where the mystery element is made dominant. When you play up the selling argument that we have suggested, you make mystery uppermost. The readers want to see what happened to the girl and why. They'll come to your theatre to find out.

When you go "over the top" be sure that you are going toward the enemy.

RECENTLY we printed some of the advertising used by S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, in exploiting "Pershing's Crusaders," but we overlooked this one which is the best piece of work in bringing the picture home to everyone in your locality that we have yet seen.

Note the way that a postcard from a boy "Somewhere in France" has been reproduced with the marching men coming through it. There are scores who will recognize relatives and friends in this picture and this was a great way of making that fact strong.

Just a simple touch like that is worth more than flaring announcements.

AN excellent use of rules has been made by the Opera House, Columbia, Pa. While the general display would have been better if the cut of Empey had been larger, this was about as big a one as could have been used in this arrangement of the display, nine inches by three columns. This arrangement is much stronger than had the cut been placed at one side, for the white space itself sets off the figure.

There is a good selling argument in this sentence: "This is the film that had hurt German propaganda in America more than any other cinema production." There may be a question about the correctness of that statement, but there is nothing dangerous in it.

But we started out about the border. The way it leads around the display and into the name of the theatre is good. And if you could see the other theatres' advertising on the same page you would appreciate how much this one stands out by contrast.

For instance, look at this from the Happy Hour. The display is 4½ inches, double column, and into this there has been crowded several hundred words of matter. In the first place, the writer has made the brand mark more prominent than the name of the theatre, and the name of the star is smaller than the title of the picture. It's all right to recommend a picture, but there is repetition with a vengeance. It is a mighty good rule to keep the obvious out of yonr advertising. For instance, one of these sentences: "We like to show pictures that we know you will recommend to your friends." You might as well say: "We like to make money." There is not a thing about this advertisement that will appeal to any one. In the first place, the display is as bad as it could be, and the content of the advertisement is worse.

We are saying these things not as an odious comparison, but because the manager of the Happy Hour will find his receipts growing if he will devote his space to attractive matter. The same space with a single-column cut of Ray, the name of the star and the production, a catchy phrase about the production, and then just a single line devoted to the attraction the next day, and there would have been an advertisement that would draw people to your theatre. It would be read by all, where the present one almost dares any one to read it.

There are even thorns in those beds of roses that you hear about.

J. M. WOOD, manager of the Weneeda theatre, Milton, Wis., writes: "I read your comments in each week's NEWS with great interest. They are a great help to the small town exhibitor." Then he enclosed some of the specimens of his latest advertising.

In a criticism of some previous advertising, we suggested that since he was in a small town (census population 833), and that he used the country weekly as a medium, he should try to tell something about the picture. And he does a great deal more in this case than a celebrated New York theatre did when this feature was advertised. He told that it was made from Mrs. Burnett's "Sarah Crewe." Just a point here. Please, please all of you avoid the superlative. It is unnecessary and leads you astray. "Sarah Crewe" is a wonderfully charming story, but we'll wager that twice as many people read the same author's "Little Lord Fauntleroy." What's the use making any statement that the reader will be inclined to refute.

A better selling line would have been: "A picture that will make you laugh away the tears." Or, "You'll sigh when Sarah loses her fortune, and you'll laugh and applaud when she gets it back again in the end."

We believe in using trademarks of advertised pictures in a degree, but we'd have used the place occupied by this trademark for the name of the theatre and the date, even if it is the only theatre in the town.

It's what you do before you "count up your cash" that counts the most.

STILL another case of using a portion of trade paper advertising is evidenced in this display where one of the Universal displays which appeared in the NEWS has been used as the main punch. But the most important point in this is the sales argument.

This display is the work of the Holman theatre, Montreal. Now Montreal is a big city, but it is part of Canada, and Canada is a big country of open places. And the spirit of the country permeates to the cities. It is a country that has been "made" within a comparatively short time, and for that reason we like the selling talk that is included in this ad. There's some repetition in it, and the big idea to have brought out is the flight between the pioneer and monopoly. We would have played this stronger than has been done here.

There's one line that we object to in this display and that reads: "Be sure to see 'Winner Takes All.'" Leave all of these admonitions out. Your work will be stronger as the result. Ninety per cent. of the advertisers waste space by such matter.

"Molly, Make Believe" would be a good name for some motion picture "Shows."

A Few Thrills, a Lot of Laughs and Lots of Romance

That's what makes this Bluebird feature worth seeing. It's an unusual story of a young fellow who breaks into the newspaper game and is assigned to run down a gang of counterfeiters. He trails them, rescues a beautiful girl, and then—but that's where the real laughs come in, in

TOMORROW—HARRY MOREY in "A GAME WITH FATE"

HERE is a mighty good general suggestion: Keep the suggestion of crime out of your illustrations in your displays. Now by crime we mean crime, something to be punished for. It is obvious that in a picture on a "Bill" Hart picture the figure of the star with a gun does not suggest crime. It may suggest killing, but it is with the result of putting over a deed for some one in distress or to right a wrong.

L. H. Barclay, who writes the advertising for the three theatres owned by the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., knows that and he shows that he knows it by the reading matter that he has put in this display, for he has gone ahead and has used as the first line of his selling argument "A Few Thrills, a LOT of Laughs and LOTS of romance." (We have capitalized the two words.) He had gone ahead and had tried to explain the romance of the picture, but he will never in a million years get by the handicap that the cut has made for him. The figure of the man with the vase in his hands is enough to convince every patron that it's a murder story and not a "comedy drama," no matter how much you explain it. Nine inches, double, is the size.

Striking Heralds Issued by Fox for "The Prussian Cur"

A POWERFUL drawing of the Kaiser, in one of his most sinister aspects, illustrates a herald which the Fox Film Corporation is issuing by the millions as an aid to exhibitors in advertising "The Prussian Cur," it is stated in an announcement from the Fox offices.

The picture shows the Kaiser, chin in hand, his hob-nailed boots outstretched and a sword across his lap, sitting on a ruined cathedral, contemplating the waste which his armies have wrought. Behind the Kaiser is a giant American cannon cracker, painted in red, and labelled "A. E. F." for the American Expeditionary Forces. The fuse of the cracker is burning, and it shows that within a very short time the Kaiser is going to be jolted out of his revery.

Besides the billing, "The Prussian Cur," the herald contains space for the name of the theatre exhibiting the picture.

On the reverse side is a picture of Capt. Horst von der Goltz, the Kaiser's spy, who appears in "The Prussian Cur," and several paragraphs describing von der Goltz's career and his work in the filming of "The Prussian Cur."

Harold B. Franklin Tells of Putting Personality Into the Theatre Lobby

FIRST impressions are important. The lobby of the theatre is your first introduction to the patron. The characteristics of your theatre are reflected here. It is your show window, your sales talk. The lobby of the high grade theatres should be dignified in character. It is possible to instill novelty and yet hold to dignity. Give your advertising announcements a proper setting. Make your lobby and entrance the most attractive spot on your street. It is a flying start towards bringing patrons to your theatre.

The lobby should be distinctive and rich in refinement and beauty. Well lighted and decorated, its motif should be a symphony of color.

It was about four years ago that the opening of the Strand in New York by Rothapfel created widespread attention. While the magnificent theatre and entertainment was highly commended, one of the big innovations for blase Broadway was the magnificent lobby, beautifully lighted, with photos from the picture plays framed in shadow boxes similar to oil paintings.

In planning the lobby display for Shea's Hippodrome we designed a frame that at a glance suggested the delightful characteristics of the building. The pillars of the frames are designed to conform with the architecture of the lobby, being exact replicas of the columns in the partitions. These frames are finished in rubbed down mahogany. They give the announcements and photos a rich setting and unconsciously suggest splendor to those looking at them. Posters for these frames are painted for each attraction, with spaces for the photographs, which results in a harmonious arrangement.

It is up to the exhibitor to decide whether his lobby should be "circusy" or confined to dignified advertising. While some exhibitors would find it profitable to apply the ballyhoo, others might find it decidedly improper. The ballyhoo lobby, depending on location and to the kind of clientele you may wish to appeal ot. It can be used effectively with a transient public. For neighborhood or first-class, centrally located theatres that play to discriminating audiences, the more conservative lobby, attractively arranged, is likely to have a more permanent appeal.

It is a splendid thing in advertising a feature to suggest the atmosphere or mood of the offering. Theatres that prepare their own lobby displays and who do not use lithos will find unlimited opportunities offered along these lines.

When we played Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star" we used a silk service flag, which was tied to the mat with red, white and blue ribbon. With appropriate lettering and several photos, it attracted many who otherwise might pass by. Originality never fails to attract attention.

Arrange your display so that people know what you are playing without any confusion. See that everything is spic and span. Shabby looking lobbies will keep patronage away.

Exhibitors will find it well worth while to have their lobby suggest the cheerfulness and quality of their theatres. Make it impossible for anyone to walk past your theatre without hesitating—he who hesitates is almost a customer.

Myrick Tries Out Stage Tableaux

Stage tableaux, or vaudeville prologues to photoplays, is the latest innovation of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., with Manager E. J. Myrick, the man behind the gun.

For "The Greatest Show on Earth," "Happy" Walker, hustling and raucous voiced member of the Liberty-Columbia advertising department, staged a regular side-show ballyhoo, proclaiming the merits of the side-show freaks—painted on regulation circus canvasses surrounding the spieling box. The innovation made a big hit.

Window display at Central Park theatre, Chicago, on "How Could You, Jean?"

Low Cost Striking Point in Business Building Displays at the Central Park

WE have just printed some of the window displays which have been made by Alexander Frank, the publicity manager for the handsome Central Park theatre, Chicago, and here is another one of them. Mr. Frank writes that this was done in a hurry, but certainly the photograph shows no evidence of that fact.

Here are some additional facts about the way that the displays are made: In the first place, the window is in the Central Park theatre building and right next to the entrance. It happened to be vacant during the summer, and this gave the idea for the original displays to be made week after week, during the summer season.

One thing of great importance is that none of these unusual displays has cost more than $20, and the expense of some is not more than $5. That shows that they are in reach of a large number of the exhibitors.

A great part of the material used comes from cut-outs of one- and three-sheets, and sometimes larger paper, but they are cleverly handled in the art rooms of the Central Park and there the lettering and coloring and the other decorations of the window are arranged.

Central Park theatre has come to the conclusion that the production must be merchandised, just the same as a clothier with his suits or a department store with general merchandise. The Central Park keeps telling the people that it has something to sell, something better, something more attractive—in short, something in a class by itself. It has been found that in lobby displays the number reached is largely confined to the patrons of the theatre, but with the window, everyone who passes along the street is attracted. In this case it is some 60,000 persons a day.

Here is the point of view that Mr. Frank takes in his displays:

"There is danger in this class of advertising. Never advertise a show as something extraordinary if it is just ordinary. Tell the truth; don't overdo it with adjectives. There is something in every feature that is of special interest—you must study the picture, the theme of the picture and then bring it out, and so you will have something different all the time.

"This means hard work as well as profit. We have broken all records at the Central Park in regards to attendance during the summer time. When others cut down expense on account of the summer, we increased our expense account—but not to our sorrow. If you hold the people out for six consecutive days during one week in the summer time, with just ordinary features, especially staged, appropriate music, etc., you are going some. Well, we accomplished this feat in July, and our seating capacity is 2,600."

What Mr. Frank says of the prosperity of Central Park we know to be true. This theatre, really a neighborhood house, but the finest motion picture theatre in Chicago, made good from the start, largely owing to the able management. It is located on the West Side of Chicago, but it soon began to attract attention from all parts of the city and lines of autos were soon familiar sights. When the summer dullness came along, everyone expected the Central Park would suffer with the rest, but the management did not let down for a moment and the result has been record business.

Now Balaban and Katz are about to open a second fine theatre, the Riviera, in which some new things are promised. This is located on the North Side of Chicago and was originally intended as a vaudeville or legitimate house, but it was taken over by the motion picture firm in time to adapt it to the needs of the programs that the firm intends to put on there. Chicago was long behind the other leading cities of the country in the quality of the motion picture entertainment supplied. Central Park theatre set a new mark when it jumped into the front rank of theatres everywhere, and the Riviera will go further.

Samuel Katz, one of the members of the first, has some very strong ideas of what the entertainment of the future is to be. Many of these ideas are original, but he has been spending a great deal of time visiting the leading houses, often dropping in without calling on the manager, to see for himself what those theatres are doing in the way of presentations and to endeavor to incorporate all of the good ideas into the Riviera.

Current Programs at the Rialto and Rivoli

THE principal feature at the Rivoli theatre the week of August 18, was "Heart of the Wilds," an Artcraft production starring Elsie Ferguson. About this picture, which is founded on Edgar Selwyn's "Pierre of the Plains," is built a program that is complete from overture to the organ solo at the finish.

The overture is "Finlandia," a tone-poem, conducted by Erno Rapee, which is followed by a Pathe-Post Travel Picture called, "A Sun Kissed Isle." This short scenic contains scenes in Grenada, British West Indies. Net comes a violin solo by Alberto Bachmann, concertmaster of the Rivoli orchestra. His selection is "Meditation on Bach's First Prelude," one of his own compositions. Accompanying this was an organ obligato by Professor Firmin Swinnen and harp accompaniment by Sepp Morscher.

The program here swings into the quick-timed Rivoli Animated Pictorial, which is personally edited by Mr. Rothapfel and which is growing stronger into favor each week. Included in this reel are the Creel Committee's official Allied War Review.

Then, preceding the featured picture, comes Josephine Garavelli, soprano, singing the waltz from "Mireille," by Charles Gounod. Selection from "The Mikado," played by the orchestra, comes after the Elsie Ferguson feature, and the program closes with a comedy.

The composition of the weekly is as follows: Screen Telegram—S. S. President Lincoln Sunk by Huns; Destroyer picks up survivors. Gaumont—Washington. Official Mission of Italian Journalists; Close up of Creel, Italian Ambassador, etc. Hearst-Pathe—New York; Brody Cup Race; Yachts. Hearst-Pathe—Shanghai China; Impressive Red Cross Parade. Hearst-Pathe—With the Allies in the Far East; Landing of Troops in Vladivostak. Screen Telegram—With the "Eyes of the Army" Over There; Balloons Ascending for Observation. Gaumont—Bakersfield, Cal.; Oil for Flying Machines; Planting Castor Beans for Oil. Telegram—Camp Vail, New Jersey; Preparing America's Soldiers of the Sky; Airplanes, etc. Official War Review.

The Rialto program opens with the overture, "If I Were King," and swings into Mexican scenes released by Educational Films Corporation, called, "Market Days and Festivals." Greek Evans sings "Waiting," and the Rialto Animated Magazine, edited by Mr. Rothapfel, adds pep to the bill. Following this is a song by Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy, soprano, "Barceuse," with violin obligato by Sascha Fidelman. The feature is "Her Only Way," with Norma Talmadge.

This atmospheric stage setting was used by Grauman's, Los Angeles, in connection with the presentation of Sessue Hayakawa in "The City of Dim Faces." First the title of the picture was projected and then the curtains were pulled back. Twenty Chinese took part in the action, which continued three minutes, ending with a Tom-Tom calling all to service in the center building their high rates for the Sunday displays.

The Chronicle, Monday, devotes a three-column head to motion pictures and gives out representation to three of the four theatres that advertise that day. The advertisers are the Strand, Portola and California, with two single each, and the Imperial with three single. Tuesday it has no motion picture matter, and Tivoli used five inches single, the Imperial three, and the Portola, California and Strand two each. Wednesday it has no room for the motion picture, but it devotes two two-column cuts in the news section of the paper to legitimate and vaudeville attractions.

Thursday it decides to make up for the oversight, and gives single-column cuts and news stories to the attractions at the Portola, California and Imperial the following Sunday. Now just an observation. This sort of stuff fools no one. The most ignorant layman knows that this is free matter given because the theatre advertises. Any reader knows that this is not the newspaper's statement about the production, but only something given the theatre on the dollars and cents basis. THERE IS NO NEWS IN IT. It's more of the business office policy that is blind to the desires of the motion picture fan.

On that day it carries two inches for the California, Strand, Portola and Royal, and a half inch more for the Imperial.

Friday the Chronicle remembers that it overlooked giving the Strand and Rialto a cut, and so comes across with them. Same advertisements as Thursday.

Now we don't withdraw what we said about the Sunday rate of the Examiner being outrageous, but we have to grant that it is the only one of the San Francisco papers that through the week INDICATES that it sees the value of motion picture as well as legitimate theatre matter. Every day it devotes a page that is headed. "New Offerings of the Stage and Screen." Let us say further that the Examiner is the only one of the San Francisco papers that shows a willingness to give the picture a place equal to the spoken drama. On the Monday page there is no trace of motion picture NEWS matter, and the only motion picture theatre advertising is California theatre, with its usual two inches, keeping eternally at advertising. It's the only one that uses the Examiner every day.

And let us add here that we would rather keep plugging away with the two inches than to be breaking out now and then.

Nearly every day the Examiner runs a group of short notices under the heading, "Filmland Flickers," but these are mainly about attractions at the local houses. Some day we are afraid that some one on the San Francisco papers will make a terrible mistake and let a piece of motion picture NEWS creep into the papers.

Now when we first looked at the page heading on the Examiner and saw that it was not a mere caption for the Monday notice stuff, but ran during the week every day we thought that we were going to discover a real motion picture department here. Our first conclusion was that the Examiner did not have the space on Sunday and had decided to even matters up to giving a refreshing page every day during the week. We said a few moments ago that the Examiner was the only paper that indicated a realization that there was interest in motion pictures. But "indication" is as far as it gets. It devotes enough space on that page, usually using a two-column cut. By-the-way, in the week that we examined the papers there was only one cut of a motion picture star and that was of Mme. Petrova, then in San Francisco on her tour.

What a chance for a newspaper in the Golden Gate city. With the exception of the Daily News they are all big papers, and there is plenty of space that they are now devoting to features that might spare a column a day to real motion picture matter. Without having any figures at hand we'll wager that the motion picture fan magazines have a big circulation there. They ought to, for the followers of the pictures will learn precious little about them if they have to depend on their home papers for it.

Not only on Sunday, but during the week people want motion picture news. They do not read the amount of it that would be expected on Sunday, but suppose we outline this arrangement: On Monday devote a column and a half or two to reviews of the local first-run attractions—real reviews of the motion picture editor and not press agents yarns. No manager is going to get peeved if you criticise his show, provided you do it in the proper spirit.

Then on Tuesday run a picture of a player, regardless of whether she is playing in that city, with some news story about her and a half column of news notes about the players and coming productions. If it is an afternoon paper it can give notices on Wednesdays to the changes in bill and similarly in the morning papers on Thursday, but on the day after, in either case it should give reviews of the new showings. The remainder of the days should be filled in along the Tuesday schedule. Just enough motion picture matter to appeal to the real fans—just enough to make your newspaper the all-around newspaper.

And no newspaper is a real newspaper until it prints ALL THE NEWS. And in a city like San Francisco, where the daily motion picture attendance is estimated at 40,000 there is certainly a demand for this sort of NEWS.

The California theatre is the only house that is advertising regularly every day in

Hood River Man Proves That Theatre Can Be An Institution in Town of 2,300

WHEN it is suggested to most of the exhibitors in the smaller cities that they can make their houses more attractive and get increased business, the reply is generally something like this: "It's all right to talk about Rothapfel, or Franklin, or Soriero doing that, but they have big cities to appeal to and all sorts of money to spend."

Here is proof that it does not require a big city or the expenditure of great sums of money to create a most attractive theatre with real atmosphere. The evidence comes from the Liberty theatre, Hood River, Oregon. Hood River is a town of 2,331 and the Liberty has a seating capacity of 450. But those limitations did not keep A. S. Kolstad from making it as attractive a theatre as there is anywhere in the country. For he has the get up and get about him, for he writes:

"Of course you must realize that this is a very small town, and while I would like to have a second Rialto or Rivoli here, I had to be content with an investment that I thought would be justified."

Mr. Kolstad, you have a second Rialto and Rivoli. It is not that you should have the finest theatre in the world, but you certainly have THE theatre of your community and one that is an unusual credit to you.

Just a few words of formal matter about the Liberty. It is of Mission design and the interior of the house is finished in fireproof material, with frescoed panellings and with water color painting in the center panels on either side. It has a forced ventilation system, is heated by steam and has the indirect lighting system. The music is furnished by a piano, organ drums and a compressed air outfit for special effects. The theatre was opened on March 7 and has been successful ever since.

Now take a look again at the pictures at the top of this page. Don't they suggest an atmosphere of refinement, of homeness, inviting, restful and appealing? On a small scale Mr. Kolstad has the things that the bigger houses have. He pays the same attention to the selection of his pictures, the same attention to the music, and just as much as the biggest theatres, he has certainly made his house an institution.

Look at the corner of the foyer. Just a pot of ferns placed there prevents the place from looking bare. It makes it look like some one "lived" in the theatre. And in the foyer there is a fireplace, just an added little touch. Although the theatre is heated by steam there is kept here in winter a mass of glowing coals that unconsciously instill the feeling of comfort into the patron. It is not fire at all, but is made with clinkers and small red lights, but the patron thinks that he is getting warm.

Now go up to the mezzanine floor and we find the same atmosphere of comfort with the easy chair, the lamp on the table and the couch. Turning to the stage we find the same attractive qualities. On either side of the screen is a pot of growing flowers—just a little touch, but one of those that make a theatre an institution.

Cleanliness is one of the mottos of the house. It is so constructed that the main floor can be flooded each night and this not only takes out the dirt, but it cools the house in summer. Courtesy is another one of the mottos of the theatre and another one of the reasons for the success. Another rule is to have everything of the best within the limits that he can afford.

Mr. Kolstad's Liberty is right in the front rank.

Think over what he has done here. Don't say that he has a big city and all the advantages. He has the latter, but he made them for himself. Think how many of these things you can do—little things to make your theatre the theatre of your section.

AND YOURS?

YOU have read here some of the things that Mr. Kolstad has done to make his theatre an institution. We feel very sure that in the smaller cities and towns there are other exhibitors that are doing things worth while.

It's your duty to let your fellow exhibitors know of them. Won't you write us? We will do the rest.

Two striking but inexpensive lobby displays created by A. J. Laurie at the Midway theatre, Montreal.

Strips of Real Film Prove a Novelty in Exploiting Mae Marsh in Toledo

HERE is an original idea that was worked by H. C. Horater, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O. It was worked so successful that Mr. Horater plans to repeat the stunt.

It consisted of presenting to each person who clipped a coupon in the paper a strip of film showing four poses of Mae Marsh during the week's run of "The Glorious Adventure" at the Alhambra. Thousands of persons presented the coupons which were contained in a quarter page ad that was in addition to the regular space used on the picture itself.

The strips were made in Toledo from the original film and showed actual views of Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure." Few, if any, of the "fans" had any conception of the appearance of the actual film from which motion pictures are made. Excellent newspaper publicity was given the stunt, in which emphasis was laid upon the fact that the film was not imitation, but was positive film from which motion pictures are projected. Several lengthy newspaper articles contained the following "teaser" leads: "Have you ever seen the actual film from which moving pictures are made? Did you ever hold this interesting ribbon in your hand and look at the miniature pictures, showing famous stars?" This was followed by a detailed explanation of the stunt, special attention being directed to the coupon which appeared in the Alhambra's newspaper advertisement.

Large copy was used for the display advertising. A full quarter-page ad. carried the headline: "Something New—Just Out—The Latest Thing in Filmdom—Be Sure You Get One!" The headline was followed by a coupon entitling the bearer to one strip of film showing poses of Miss Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure." Each film contained four different positions of the star. The cost for the strips was two cents each and Manager Horater stated that the results obtained more than justified this investment.

"It was interesting to see the people watch the screen to see Mae Marsh in just the poses that appeared on their section of film," said Mr. Horater. The plan went over in a much bigger way than I had anticipated and the novelty of the little ribbons certainly attracted attention to my house.

"The idea struck me suddenly. I was talking to my projection man and handling a portion of the film of 'The Glorious Adventure.' It occurred to me that very few people had any idea of what film looked like, so I resolved to show them. I had the strips made from the original film by an animated ad service company at a cost of two cents each. Believe me, the attention the stunt attracted and the extra hundreds it drew to my house well repaid me for that expenditure. My patrons are fond of Mae Marsh and I am very glad I chose that star for the first souvenir film. I intend to have more strip made of other stars."

.These Lobby Displays Cost Little and Brought Big Business

HERE are two of the striking lobby displays which have just been used by A. J. Laurie, publicity manager of the Midway theatre, Montreal, whose work has often been reproduced in these columns.

A monster ape was used to represent Divorce in advertising "The Blindness of Divorce," and shows the beast tearing husband and wife apart, throwing them in any direction it may care. In the center panel are the three little children, the innocent victims, seated on the stage of life with the flowers, emblematic of happiness, around them. It is from this scene that the husband and wife are being taken.

The stage for the display on "The House of Gold" was made of wood and cotton cloth with the exception of the draperies, which were cut-outs. All of the figures were taken from a 6-sheet and finished up where that was necessary to complete the figures. To get every figure in good view of the public the floor sloped up a foot toward the back of the display. A double border was used at the top so as to hide any of the rough construction work from the public.

A strong light was used between the borders and so the figures were made even more prominent. The stage floor was painted in red and the wings in brown. Bright colors were avoided, for this would have prevented the figures standing out. The background was also in dark colors.

The entire display was twelve feet high and ten feet wide and cost, says Mr. Laurie, "Next to nothing."

Float Boosts Business, Gets First Prize

Fred Walton, manager of the American theatre, Bellingham, Wash., not only got splendid advertising for "The Unbeliever" which he showed on the Fourth of July by placing a patriotic float representing the spirit of the marines in action in the Independence Day parade, but he also took first prize.

At the right drawing of the effect of a burning French home which was used at the New Garrick, St. Paul, and the New York sky line, with a battleship in front used with another bill

Hay's Success with Special Stage Sets Puts New Garrick in the Lead in St. Paul

DUE to the fact that all but one of St. Paul's photoplay theatres had no stage until the New Garrick was opened by Ruben and Finkelstein last fall, local photoplay presentations amounted to nothing more than running off the films on the screen accompanied by music varying from good to bad. As a result, St. Paul never became much of the moving picture city from a box-office standpoint.

With no desire to press agent the New Garrick or its management, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative must state in fairness to picture presentation that St. Paul never got on the film map until the New Garrick opened under the present management.

With the coming of R. and F. control, and a new arrangement of the New Garrick stage St. Paul was given a new idea of photoplays and it has taken to it. Manager Theodore L. Hays, since taking charge of the theatre, has made it a rule to change his stage setting twice a month and when possible once a week. The weekly changes cost the theatre a neat sum but results have justified it. The orchestra in the city under the direction of William Warvelle Nelson, composer, bandmaster and symphony violinist, comprises twelve pieces and a large splendid pipe organ and chimes. The average program at the theatre starts off with some orchestral number, follows with a scenic or educational reel, a comedy, news pictorial and the feature. During the overture various colored light effects play upon specially designed stage drops and sets.

Speaking of stage settings and their arrangement Manager Hays has only one rival in the Northwest, Manager Julius Johnson of the New Garrick, Minneapolis. Recently Mr. Hays has had special sets and drops that would compare more than favorably with the best the country over.

Showing "Tarzan of the Apes" Mr. Hays had a jungle setting with ferns, palms and vines draped on a back drop. Green, yellow, blue and red lights played upon the set at intervals, fading in and out, and tropical birds flew about the set while the orchestra played a special overture composed by Mr. Nelson.

Presenting "Prunella," Mr. Hays had a Harlequin and Columbine drop of dark blue which a big artificial moon played upon with artistic effect. This drop was harmonious with several used in the course of the film play.

The week of July 14, Mr. Hays's stage set, arranged especially for a presentation of "Brown of Harvard" and "Tempered Steel," showed a gigantic warship playing up and down the Hudson river with the Gotham skyscrapers partially illuminated forming a background. The light effect gave the set a night appearance and slowly moving clouds passed over the buildings before the moon. A sketch of this set accompanies this story.

For his presentation of the Hearst-Pathe Weekly and "Say, Young Fellow," Mr. Hays's stage set was made to be more in harmony with the war pictures than in keeping with the light-comedy feature. This set with its truly wonderful light effects made it stand out as one of the most remarkable yet displayed. A French stone house partially destroyed by German fire kept slowly blazing while volume of dark smoke rolled up from the structure. The building continued to blaze during the entire overture, smoke kept coming out of the building, and by cleverly handling the light effects the even-tide crept on until nothing save the blaze and the smoke could be discerned. A rough sketch of this stage setting is also reproduced herewith.

Due to his splendid photoplay presentations Mr. Hays is the only St. Paul theatre manager able to make his standard admission price twenty cents. All other theatres charge fifteen and ten cents admission for pictures exclusively.

all the papers. It does so for the value of the space it uses alone, and that is very evident to us. If any one of the larger papers starts a real motion picture department it's going to get the advertising.

We started this article by telling the exhibitors that they should advertise every day. And just as much the newspapers should give the motion picture representation EVERY DAY and see that the thousands of followers of the screen have their share of the sheet.

It's not only the fair thing to do, but the only thing that a newspaper can do if it wants the maximum business from the exhibitors and wants to give the maximum service to its subscribers.

SUMMER'S GONE

WITH tomorrow summer is officially at an end. People are beginning to think what they are going to do for the fall and winterseason. Let's all get busy on that idea.

A lot probably have been sitting around with the idea that they could not do business in summer, and therefore have failed to work out ideas that probably would have resulted in nicer balances in the bank.

But, anyhow, let's forget that and start in for the cold weather season. Look at the boys above standing in front of the Liberty theatre. They're in overcoats. It may be warm yet, but it's a reminder.

Every manager has to do more this year than he ever did before. Let us help.

Live News from the Producers

Evelyn Nesbit Signs With Fox

Will Appear in Five Pictures to Be Made from Stage Successes—First Production Started in New Jersey

WILLIAM FOX has signed Evelyn Nesbit, stage and screen actress, for a series of film productions which, it is declared, will exceed anything in the history of the industry in point of powerful drama, human appeal and lavishness of settings.

Miss Nesbit is to make five productions, all of which are to be adapted from Broadway stage successes, or well known novels by recognized authors. The intention, it is said, is to capitalize the opportunities to the utmost, linking star and story in a combination which will be irresistible from a box office standpoint. This is in direct line with the William Fox policy of getting stories or stage plays which already have established their worth, and it is predicted in a statement by the Fox Film Corporation that the combined factors of a star and big, well-known stories will put the five Evelyn Nesbit productions among the greatest series of pictures ever released.

The work of the new Fox star will be under the direction of Kenean Buel. The first productioon is now under way at a studio in New Jersey, and announcement is expected shortly of the details of cast and the name of the first picture.

By the contract which Miss Nesbit has signed with the Fox Film Corporation, she will devote all of the coming season to the five Fox productions. Plans which the Fox forces have made, call for plays which will outshine any that have hitherto been attempted on the screen. No expense will be spared in production, as the reputation of the novels and plays which Miss Nesbit will film, demands a lavish expenditure of money and great care in production, it is said.

Announcement will be made shortly, it is announced, of the names of the pictures Miss Nesbit will film, and their release dates. Announcement also will be made of the casts which will support the new Fox star. Considerable speculation has been aroused in the trade as to who will play the male role opposite her. The only information now available in reference to this is that one of the best known male leads now acting before the camera has been engaged for this part of the cast.

Goldwyn Production Work Is Well Along

WITH all but one completed of its first group of six Star Series productions, several of which already are being shown to exhibitors at branch offices throughout the country, Goldwyn is well advanced with the making of the succeeding group of its second releasing year.

While her first Goldwyn starring vehicle, "The Turn of the Wheel," is being shown privately in the company's exchanges Geraldine Farrar is completing at Cody, Wyoming, her second production for Star Series release, "The Hell Cat."

Will Rogers, cowboy wit of the "Follies," and a Goldwyn company, including Anna Lehr, John Sainpolis, Clarence Oliver and a dozen other notables, are completing at the studio and on nearby locations the screen version of Rex Beach's story, "Laughing Bill Hyde."

Madge Kennedy is in the midst of the production of "A Perfect Lady," from the Rose Stahl stage success by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, under the direction of Clarence G. Badger.

With "Peck's Bad Girl," her first broad comedy under the Goldwyn imprint, being shown at Goldwyn exchanges in the United States and Canada, Mabel Normand is ready to begin on her second screen play.

Tom Moore, Goldwyn's only man star, is hard at work on his second starring vehicle, "Thirty a Week," from the stage play by Thompson Buchanan, under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

Mae Marsh, having completed "Hidden Fires," written for her by J. Clarkson Miller, as the first of her Star Series releases, is well along in the production of another drama, the title of which has not yet been announced.

"Young America" Approaches Screen Stage

"Young America,' the new George K. Spoor feature taken from the Cohan and Harris stage play, written by Fred Ballard, has been completed as far as the taking of scenes, both interior and exterior. The assembling of the picture is rapidly being completed and it will be ready for release in a short time.

The play promises to be unusually striking in photography as well as strong in plot and action. It is said to be a timely picture, touching on the spirit of young American manhood in time of a crisis to the nation.

Charles Frohman Everett takes the leading role. He is supported by Madelyn Clare, Helen MacDonald, Howard I. Smith, William Wadsworth, Wilson Reynolds, Frances Raymond, and others well known in pictures.

Fox Pershing Film Opens St. Louis House

"Why America Will Win!" the William Fox patriotic picture based on the life of General Pershing, will open the new William Fox Liberty theatre, Grand and Delmar streets, St. Louis, September 29.

The Pershing picture will be shown for an indefinite engagement at the Liberty, which is undergoing extensive alterations preparatory to the opening.

A $12,000 organ has just been installed and the interior of the theatre has been greatly improved. One of the features of the new interior of the Liberty is the greater opportunity provided for a more elaborate stage set. The lobby, too, has been enlarged and fitted up until the William Fox Liberty theatre now has one of the most imposing fronts in the Middle West.

"Les Miserables" Vies with "Cleopatra"

An interesting race is reported from the Fox Film Corporation offices. It is that between "Les Miserables," the William Fox-William Farnum picturization of Victor Hugo's novel, and "Cleopatra," the Theda Bara super-production of the life and loves of the siren of the Nile.

Both these pictures were shown by William Fox as a special attraction, and only recently were put on an open booking basis, The prestige which the pictures established during their showing by Mr. Fox, gave them a great advantage when they were released, it is said, and both were snapped up by exhibitors everywhere.

Dorothy Gish in New Patriotic Subject

Dorothy Gish is working on her first Paramount, "Battling Jane," which is described as one of the most appealing patriotic stories of the period. In this she plays the role of a girl who wanders into a small town, and finally helps to put the Thrift Stamp campaign over. A homeless baby which she adopts plays an important part in the development of the unique plot.

"The Littlest Scrub Lady" is the present title of Vivian Martin's newest picture for Paramount, on which she is now engaged under direction of William C. De Mille. The story is filled with comedy of the most delectable character, it is said, and Miss Martin has one of those quaint nondescript roles that have proved her forte in previous offerings. The story is well under way and will soon be completed.

Work has begun under Walter Edwards on "The Gypsy Trail," starring Bryant Washburn, with Wanda Hawley as leading woman. There is every reason to believe, say the producers, that this will prove a remarkably effective picture for Mr. Washburn's Paramount debut. He will first be seen, however, in C. B. De Mille's Artcraft Special, "Till I Come Back to You," wherein he plays the lead, and which is now in the cutting room.

Fred Stone is almost through with his third and last Artcraft picture under Donald Crisp. This has a working title of "The Goat," and was written by Frances Marion.

Hodkinson Issues New Booklets

A new series of booklets are being issued to the exhibitor by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation dealing with the work already accomplished by that organization.

"Turning the First Corner" is the title of the first booklet, which outlines the progress made toward the goal they set out to reach. It enables the exhibitor to judge the strength and stability of the Hodkinson organization by its accomplishments, rather than its aims alone.

Fox Releases Eleven Films in September

AS an indication of the magnitude of its plans for the coming season, the Fox Film Corporation announces that it will release eleven big productions in September. This number includes three big, timely pictures which will be available for booking on an independent basis September 1; three Standard Pictures, two Victory Pictures, and three Excel Pictures. This number does not include the regular weekly Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons or the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy releases.

The three big, timely pictures which will be available for bookings September 1 on an independent basis are: "The Prussian Cur," R. A. Walsh's drama of the invisible embassy and the enemies at home, who have been working to hamstring America in the prosecution of the war; "Why America Will Win!" which is predicted will be the greatest patriotic picture ever released. This production is based on the life of General John J. Pershing, commander of the American Expeditionary Force, and gives in intimate detail the career of this soldier; "Queen of the Sea," will show Annette Kellerman as the star in a submarine phantasy. This picture, it is said, cost more than $1,000,000 to make. Scenes were taken in Bar Harbor, Me., Bermuda, Jamaica, Southern California and Mexico.

The Standard Pictures which are scheduled for release in September are as follows: William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage," Theda Bara in "When a Woman Sins," "The Caillaux Case." The two Victory Pictures are "Mr. Logan of the U. S. A., with Tom Mix, and "Kultur," with Gladys Brockwell.

Peggy Hyland in "Bonnie Annie Laurie," Virginia Pearson in the "The Queen of Hearts," and Jane and Katherine Lee in "Swat the Spy," are the Excel Picture releases scheduled for next month.

Short Western Drama Stars Marie Walcamp

MARIE WALCAMP has brought upon herself a prospect of big tasks and many of them, by the favor she won in "The Lion's Claws." The immediate result is that the Universal has arranged to release this star as soon as possible in a two-reel Western drama. The title of the latter film is "The Whirdwind Finish."

Miss Walcamp is said to have as many big chances for scoring in "The Whirlwind Finish" as she had in "The Lion's Claws," with a few additional ones. The action is rapid and full of effective situations, it is claimed.

"The Whirlwind Finish" is a story of the race track of the West. Marie Walcamp, as Elinor Ranney, is the daughter of Jim Ranney, a racing horse owner. Danny Schnell, her father's jockey, saves Elinor's life in childhood. Danny is later thrown in a race, and is pronounced an incurable invalid thereafter. He is sent to his California home. Years later Jim Ranney loses nearly his entire fortune. Only one horse is left of his once great stable, and that belongs to his daughter. Ranney's troubles have made an invalid of him. Elinor, now her father's mainstay, finds a physician named Dr. Schnell, who undertakes to cure Ranney. The physician's method works wonders and Ranney is cured in a few days. Meantime, Lovetie, Elinor's horse, suffers also a mysterious ailment. Dr. Schnell takes the animal's case, and works another remarkable cure. Lovetie is ready for the great Realization Handicap, and Dr. Schnell appears with his beard shaved off, as the erstwhile jockey.

Virginia Pearson Rests at Long Beach

Virginia Pearson, the William Fox star, has just completed "The Queen of Hearts," which will be her first release under the Excel Pictures brand, and has gone to Long Beach for a rest. Miss Pearson contemplates spending most of her time in the ocean, as she is very fond of swimming. On the conclusion of her vacation she will begin work on a new play, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence.

Vitagraph Stars Keep Active

Blue Ribbon Program for Fall and Winter Well Under Way in Studios — Feature Subjects in Majority

PRODUCTIONS which will be released during the fall and winter on the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon program are now under way at both the Eastern and Western studios of the company. Every one of the featured stars is engaged in the making of five-reel subjects, and some of them have almost completed their tasks.

For instance, at the Western studio Earle Williams is in the midst of a five-reel subject bearing the title of "My Country First." This is a story written by Bess Meredyth, and being produced under the direction of James Young.

Bessie Love, who will also produce at the Western studio for an indefinite period, has started work on "Sue," her first Blue Ribbon feature, which is scheduled to introduce her to Vitagraph's followers the first week in November.

At the company's Eastern studio, Alice Joyce this week will begin work in a play adapted from "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper," a romance by James Cooper. It is a seacoast story, with many opportunities for fine exterior scenes, and these will be made on the coast of Maine, the original setting of the story. Tom Terriss is directing Miss Joyce.

Harry T. Morey, supported by Betty Blythe and Jean Paige, is now engaged in the making of "Hoarded Assets," a story which ran in Scribner's. He is under the direction of Paul Scardon, who just recently completed "The King of Diamonds," with Mr. Morey as the star, supported by Miss Blythe and Miss Paige.

Corinne Griffith, under direction of Henry-Houry, begins scenes this week for "Miss Ambition," an original play by Rex Taylor, and will follow this, in all probability, with an adaptation of H. W. J. Dam's play, "Diamond Deane." Miss Griffith, in her new play will be supported by Florence Deshon, Denton Vane and others.

The next picture to be undertaken by little Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph's sunshine girl, probably will be called "The Jam Girl." It is by Frances Stewart. Miss Leslie completed "A Nymph of the Foothills" some time ago.

In connection with its statement of producing activities, Vitagraph announces that a vast number of play subjects are now under consideration for all of its stars, and that material is already under negotiation sufficient to provide all of them with vehicles for a year to come.

Screen Magazine Shows Soldier's Routine

A real film actor, picked up accidentally for the purpose, is the star of "Around the Clock with a Rookie," a special release for Universal's Screen Magazine. This picture, directed by H. E. Hancock of the Y. M. C. A. War Service Council, and photographed by George Coudert, reveals the adventures of an American soldier in work and play from reveille to taps, and traces his development from a rookie with two left feet to the status of crackerjack fighting man.

The picture was taken at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., with incidental scenes from other sources touching on the war subject.

Mr. Hancock, when he went among the rookies looking for a "type" for his head character, was after a regular rookie—one, if possible, who possessed the time-honored "nothing but thumbs" and left feet of the awkward squad. He found a "type" that answered all requirements. Then it developed that the "star' was really a young fellow who previously had served time as a player in the Lubin studios.

Fox Adds More Players

Two more players have been added to the cast supporting William Farnum in "The Man of Power," the drama written by Frank Lloyd, which Mr. Farnum has just begun at Hollywood, Cal. Louise Lovely will play the part of Helen Garfield, the oil king's daughter, and Leatric Joy will portray the role of Florence, Farnum's fiancee, in the first part of the drama.

Italian Picture Gets Good Publicity

Promotion plans said to be quite as extensive in scope and novel in execution as any that have been undertaken in months will signalize the release on August 26 of "Italy's Flaming Front" by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Special attention has been given the matter of providinig attractive and practical publicity aids to exhibitors booking the multiple-reel news drama, twenty-four "ready-to-print" stories; sixteen columns of prepared newspaper advertising, varying in sizes from one column, three inches, to seven columns, twenty-one inches in size, twelve coarse screen illustrations, in both cut and mat form; twenty photographic newspaper stills; one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters in threee colors, together with complete sets of window cards and lobby displays, giving the wide-awake exhibitor just the kind of common sense assistancee he should find most valuable in putting over the production in a way to enforce general attention.

Hart Works Seven Days on "Border Wireless"

In the course of his production of "The Border Wireless," William S. Hart, Artcraft star in the Thomas H. Ince galaxy, has been working seven days a week of late in order to finish on schedule time. The scenario, owing to the many big scenes included, will take longer than the average to film and thus, so as not to get behind, the star-director is making hay while the sun shines.

On the sixteen-acre ranch used as a location for many of Hart's exterior scenes, and which is a part of the plant, a hundred or more soldiers were employed in a big military scene. However, there are no actual battle moments in the picture, despite the fact that real U. S. cavalrymen also participate in several incidents. The latter were filmed at San Diego, and the picture, it is claimed, will be replete with exciting situations and the martial spirit.

Billboard Campaign Claims Wide Attention

The national billboard campaign now being conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is said to be attracting the attention of both public and exhibitors all over the country. Managers, it is said, have hailed the plan offered by the distributors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, with enthusiasm and many have already rented space on the stands leased by the Famous Players-Lasky organization. The opportunity of getting billboard space at a rate far below what they ordinarily have to pay as a result of the large contract with the billposting people taken over by Famous Players-Lasky is immediately appreciated by progressive managers.

Although the plan of renting billboard space to exhibitors calls for only a "fifty-fifty" expenditure on the total charge of the twenty-four sheet stands, exhibitors are being allowed to take two-thirds of the space on the boards for their own announcement, the balance of one-third of the space being taken up by the Paramount-Artcraft announcement. Thus the manager is given plenty of space to advertise the showing at his theatre of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, a space over the top of the stand also being allowed to fill in with the name of his theatre. As a result the entire twenty-four sheet stand appears as a direct advertisement to the theatre which the exhibitor gets at one-half the cost of the twenty-four sheet figured on a special low rate because of the large scope of the campaign.

Exhibitors are renting this billboard space from the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, just as if they were renting film.

Saratoga Races Feature of Picture

The Saratoga Special ,in which Hannibal, a two-year-old chestnut, won $9,000 in money and a gold loving cup valued at $10,000 for his owner, R. T. Wilson, president of the Saratoga Association, is one of the interesting features of Hale Hamilton's first Metro starring vehicle, "Five Thousand an Hour," by George Randolph Chester. Six races in all will be viewed by those who see the Metro picture when it is released, including the Saratoga Special, the North American Steeplechase and the Champlain Handicap.

Scott Becomes Pathe Denver Manager

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the appointment of Ward E. Scott as manager of the Denver branch office. Mr. Scott takes the place of C. E. Epperson, who has been acquired by Uncle Sam as a "first class fighting man."

Mr. Scott was in the wholesale stationery business for twelve years before getting into the film business. For five years he was with the Mutual Film Corp'n, the last three of which were spent as Denver manager.

Glenn Harper, Secretary of the Theatre Owners' Association, and Three Other California Exhibitors, H. J. Siler, J. S. Lustig and T. E. Hancock, Are Entertained at Metro's West Coast Studio. Nazimova Begins New Feature

Metro Star to Be Presented in "'Ception Shoals" from Stage Play—Charles Bryant Has Leading Male Role

"'CEPTION SHOALS," with Mme. Nazimova starring in the role she created on the New York dramatic stage, has been placed in production by Screen Classics, Inc., at the Metro studio under the direction of Albert Capellani. Mme. Nazimova appears in the opening scenes of the screen version in the character of Faith, the young mother of Eve, whose vitally dramatic experiences make up the major portion of the story.

A violent storm takes place at the opening of the picturization which Mr. Capellani and June Mathis have made of H. Austin Adams' powerful drama, and the star appears at the window, her figure alaernately illuminated and thrust in shadow as the lightning flashes. The entire interior of a quaint New England house, the home of Joe Coffin, the lighthouse keeper, has been built within the studio walls, so that the whole may be subjected to the lightning conditions incidental to this essentially dramatic picture.

Mme. Nazimova is confident that the picturization of "'Ception Shoals" will be even greater than the stage version. This special production de luxe will be issued as a Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature. It is being produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. Mme. Nazimova has enjoyed a complete rest at her home in Port Chester, N. Y., since completing "Eye for Eye," her next forthcoming production, and begins her work in "'Ception Shoals" in superb health. The part of Eve makes the greatest demands on the star's acting ability. The screen public will thereby be the gainer, since this remarkable woman is given an opportunity to rise to still loftier heights.

Charles Bryant has the part of Capt. Blake in "'Ception Shoals," the role in which he appeared in the stage production. He has played opposite Mme. Nazimova in "Toys of Fate," "Revelation," and the forthcoming "Eye for Eye," as well as in "War Brides" and in numerous of her stage productions beginning with "Bella Donna."

Henry Harmon has been cast as Joe Coffin, keeper of the lighthouse. Mr. Harmon played this role in the stage production in Mme. Nazimova's support, and is well known for his character portrayals on the dramatic stage.

Petrova Feature Again Changes Name

It has been found necessary to again change the title of the fifth special production in which Madame Olga Petrova will shortly be seen in theatres of the country. It was announced this week that the Petrova feature will positively be released under the new title of "The Panther Woman." The picture has been publicited for several weeks under the title of "The Tiger Woman." The latter name was a change of the original title of the production, which is a picturized version of the celebrated American novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times." This book, written by Gertrude Atherton, was purchased at what is said to be a record-breaking price, as a suitable subject for the talents of the Polish star and produced under the direction of Ralph Ince, also responsible for the current Petrova attraction, "Tempered Steel," which has been reported a success.

"My Four Years" Captures Small Towns

WITH more than two hundred persons waiting in line at ten o'clock at night for the last show to start, the small town of Medina, Ohio, established a record when it showed to 1,750 persons out of a total population of only 2,000 a few days ago, First National reported this week .

The attraction was "My Four Years in Germany," and Manager Branch of the Princess theatre utilized several publicity ideas of his own in addition to material furnished by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, distributors of the picture.

At the Tremont theatre, in Boston, Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" is in its twentieth week. One of the dailies recently declared that this picture has established itself as one of the greatest successes ever shown on the screen. Naval officials have been special guests of the theatre management, and have also asserted that this picture has been a big aid to recruiting throughout New England.

Showing to more than 100,000 persons in 168 performances broke the established new turnstile figures during a four weeks' run at the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati, Ohio. E. M. Franklin, publicity man for the Grand, stated that "My Four Years in Germany" was one of the most talked about pictures ever shown in Cincinnati. It played to a gross of $23,401.75. A special performance was given for the University of Cincinnati, and one night was utilized in co-operating with the local naval recruiting officers.

General Releases "Our Boys at Camp Dix"

VISUALIZING the intimate life of selective army men in the cantonments, the four-reel picture, "Our Boys at Camp Dix," was launched at several General Film exchanges last week and is reported to have met instant favor. While of direct appeal to the tens of thousands of relatives of the soldier lads, it appears that public interest in every phase of their career makes a double attraction of a subject like this.

"Our Boys at Camp Dix" is devoted to the big camp near Wrightstown, New Jersey. Produced by the Connecticut Film Company, which made the "Our Boys at Camp Devens" picture, it is handled in rather expert style, containing many heart interest bits and touches of humor while telling the more practical story of camp existence. Boys from New York City, New Jersey, Delaware, Boston, Rochester and Illinois are shown in their daily activities. Among the high spots in the film is a test of gas masks actually worn in a gas-filled chamber; General Scott and General McRhea in camp ceremonies, Mme. Schumann-Heink singing at an entertainment, flashes of a baseball game between the Athletics and Camp Dix, a stampede of unbroken horses, the details of loading pack-mules with their day's burden, a regimental review, and about everything that makes up a kaleidoscope of the business of war at home.

Snyder with Greiver

It was announced this week that Andrew C. Snyder, formerly general manager of the Dra-Ko Film Company, Inc., is looking after the interests of the Greiver Distributing Corporation's office in New York.

Metro Starts Barrymore Production

Ethel Barrymore's newest Metro subject, "Lady Frederick," by W. Somerset Maugham, has been placed in production at the Metro studio under the direction of Herbert Blache. Director Blache believes in starting at top speed, rather than in beginning a picture with the unimportant scenes, as is sometimes done, and on the first day the camera was focused he had his entire cast present, including the star.

P. Thad. Volkman is assisting Mr. Blache in directing "Lady Frederick." Mr. Volkman has been associated with numerous Metro stars and directors, most recently with Harry L. Franklin in the Emily Stevens feature, "Kildare of Storm."

Peggy Hyland to Film "A Stitch in Time"

The next picture which Peggy Hyland will make for the Fox Film Corporation will be "A Stitch in Time," taken from a magazine serial story written by Fred Jackson, the well-known author and playwright. Miss Hyland is now at work under the direction of Carl Harbaugh on "Marriages Are Made," a romance with a patriotic flavor.

"A Stitch in Time" will be done by Miss Hyland under the direction of Harry Millarde.

In its screen version, "A Stitch in Time," it is said, will require an unusually large cast in support of Miss Hyland and also will introduce several situations which have not yet been exploited in films.

"Hearts of World" Continues in New York

"Hearts of the World," the D. W. Griffith super-production, has entered upon its twenty-third week at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, establishing a record for length of engagement and patronage, and recalling the long and successful New York run of Mr. Griffith's former spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." That "Hearts of the World" undoubtedly will surpass the metropolitan engagement of this latter Griffith work seems imminent, since it now has passed its 300th performance at the Forty-fourth Street theatre without any apparent waning in interest.

Polo Match in Vitagraph Production

A polo match being arranged at Coronado Beach with Earle Williams as captain of one of the teams will do double service, providing a scene in the Vitagraph star's newest Blue Ribbon Feature, "My Country First," and adding to the Red Cross funds. Society summering at the fashionable California resort will be in the scene. It is helping Vitagraph with the arrangements. Among the participants in the polo match will be some of the best-known polo players in the country.

Nestor Promises Study in Psychology

Nestor's release for August 26 is said to be a study in psychology, as well as solid laugh. The farce elements, built around one of the soberest problems of science—the twists of the subconscious mind—are here carried to a high altitude of fun, it is said.

The story, entitled "When Paris Saw Red," concerns the adventure of a clergyman who goes to a strange town and loses his mind. The town is Paris Green. In his mental lapse, the clergyman, by a strange condition that psychologists talk learnedly about, passes into the personality of the town's roughest character. The things he does in this state and what happens are worth the price of admission. Neal Hart and Janet Eastman portray the leading characters to perfection.

"Over the Top" Plays on Wide Circle

Outdoor theatres and amusement parks in all parts of the country just at present are said to be playing hard on "Over the Top," Vitagraph's war picture, featuring Arthur Guy Empey. There is less danger of seating capacity being overtaxed, and greater opportunity to infuse a martial spirit into the performance by the presence of soldiers, often in drills and parades, semi-military organizations in uniform, Red Cross and other war workers, and Boy Scouts as ushers.

The Edon, Ohio, Commercial Club took full advantage of such opportunities, it would appear from a letter addressed to the manager of Vitagraph's Cleveland branch, and signed by the Rev. J. Denver Driskill, secretary.

Mutual Presents Goodrich in "Treason"

Edna Goodrich is the trusting young wife with a fixed idea of her own rights and a disinclination to let affairs of state interfere with her domestic regime, in the new Mutual production "Treason," a play by J. Clarkson Miller from the story by Harry R. Durant.

Those who have had a preview of this production declare it approaching perfection in photography.

"Mr. Logan, U. S. A. "First Fox Victory

TOM MIX in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," which is described as a play in which grim duty outweighs the call of love, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as the first picture to be released under the new William Fox Victory Pictures brand.

It is expected that "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," will be acclaimed by exhibitors everywhere as the most thrilling picture that has come out of the great West.

In this play Lynn Reynolds, who is responsible for both the story and the direction, has furnished Mix with the opportunity of putting the most thrills in the biggest scenes of any play that Mix has yet enacted.

"Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," is the story of an agent of the United States Secret Service who has been sent by the Government to uncover the work of enemy agitators in the great mining fields of the West. The scene of their operations is centered on a tungsten mine that is furnishing all-important supplies to various war industries.

The Fox Film Corporation declares that in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," it is particularly fortunate in being able to inaugurate the new Victory Pictures with the best example of those famous Western plays for which Tom Mix is celebrated and that the success this picture is sure to make will be a good omen for all the subsequent releases under this brand.

The cast of "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," besides Mix, includes Kathleen Connors, Dick Lareno, Charles Le Moyne, Jack Dill, Val Paul, Don Bailey, Jack Curtis, and Maude Emory.

Ince Completes Film for Metro Pictures

Under the special arrangement entered into between Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc. and Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger of Metro Pictures Corporation, Director Ralph Ince has completed his first production for the latter named organization. The Ince production, "Our Mrs. McChesney," from the play by George V. Hobart and Edna Ferber, had its initial New York presentation at the Strand theatre on Sunday, August 18.

The arrangement between Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin and the Petrova Corporation has been extended to permit of Ince directing a second picture starring Hale Hamilton. This production is now well under way and immediately it has been completed Ince will begin activities for the inauguration of the first picture bearing the brand name "Ralph Ince Film Attractions."

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have been quietly working for several weeks to perfect the working script of the initial Ince feature. It was stated this week from the offices of General Enterprises, Inc., that an important switch had been made relative to the selection of the story which will mark the beginning of the Ince-Sawyer-Lubin combination. Previous announcements had suggested that the type of special feature to be made was that of a big melodramatic production, but it was rumored this week that a surprise is in store for exhibitor and public alike when the idea of the first "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" is made public.

June Elvidge Rests After New Picture

June Elvidge, a World Picture star, is taking a vacation of three weeks, having just completed a five-reel photoplay by Clara S. Beranger under the direction of Travers Vale.

Miss Elvidge during the past year has completed "The Power and the Glory," "Joan of the Woods," "The Love Wraith," "The Appearance of Evil," "A Woman of Redemption," "The Oldest Law," "The Way Out," "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," "The Strong Way," "The Tenth Case,' "Shall We Forgive Her," "Rasputin the Black Monk," "The Marriage Market" and "The Guardian." And, in addition to her appearances in the above-named features, she was employed in the making of "Stolen Orders."

Minneapolis Experiences Goldwyn Week

Omaha and Minneapolis are running a neck-and-neck race in staging "Goldwyn Weeks." Several weeks ago the Strand and Rialto theatres of Omaha played Goldwyn pictures simultaneously for an entire week. Now comes a "Goldwyn Week" in Minneapolis and an equally successful engagement of two of Goldwyn's most popular stars. Starting August 6 the Strand theatre of Minneapolis played Madge Kennedy in her Goldwyn patriotic production, "The Service Star." Miss Kennedy played to large audiences during a four-day engagement. Following "The Service Star," the Strand featured another Goldwyn success, Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model," giving Goldwyn productions eleven straight days in one of the leading houses in Minneapolis.

Munition Plants See Metro "Kaiser" Film

In accordance with a government order, the Screen Classics, Inc., patriotic superfeature, "To Hell with the Kaiser," will be shown in all the munitions plants throughout the country. This is a tribute to the patriot-building powers of the feature screen drama, which was first introduced at the Broadway theatre, New York, in a run of several weeks.

"To Hell with the Kaiser" has also been recommended to be shown in Uncle Sam's Liberty theatres, as a graphic object-lesson to American soldiers of the brutality of the Hun. The picture has been officially recognized as increasing the loyalty and enthusiasm of the boys in khaki, making them realize their high privilege in being the defenders of democracy and world decency.

"Hands Up" Breaks Pathe Serial Records

CONTRACTS already closed on "Hands Up," the new Pathe serial, represent a larger business than has ever been done before on a Pathe serial up to the time of release. This fact is evidenced by a statement given out by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, this week.

"Figures talk," said Mr. Brunet. "We see in this most gratifying business ample evidence that not only do exhibitors appreciate the tremendous effort we have made to make 'Hands Up' a serial of true feature quality, but also the national advertising we are doing to help them sell the serial to the public. July was the biggest month in our history, despite the hot weather. August has already beaten our July record. 'Hands Up' has materially aided in putting August ahead of July."

Every Pathe branch office has done its share in making the enviable record which "Hands Up" has already made. The Atlanta office has, among others, sent in bookings from Birmingham showing that four houses in that city, among them the Odeon, will run the serial for two days or more a week. Bookings from this office show Nashville, Jacksonville, Atlanta and Tampa well represented.

Dallas reports that the Queen and Wigwam of San Antonio will each show the serial for three days a week. This office also is proud of the bookings in Houston, Fort Worth and Dallas.

Boston has many three-day bookings, among them the Fox of Springfield, Orpheum of New Bedford, Plaza of Worcester, Fox of New Britain, Bijou of Fall River and Orpheum of Malden. There are scores of two-day bookings shown on their sheets.

"Salome" Rounds Up Many Bookings

With contracts coming in daily, the Fox Film Corporation announces that more than 1,000 first-class dramtic theatres throughout the country have already sent in contracts for showings of "Salome," the Theda Bara super film production of the life and love of the daughter of Herodias.

Bookings are being made over twenty routes through the K. & E. and Shubert theatrical circuits, and high-class theatres in every large city and town in the country have either already booked this attraction or expect to get it soon. Several well-known theatrical agents are out in advance of the twenty road shows which William Fox has sent out on this play, and reports are being received daily at the Fox home office of more bookings on top price scale.

Big V Special Comedies Come September 16

Vitagraph's new series of two-reel feature comedies, the first of which will be released on September 16, will bear the brand name of "Big V Special Comedies," to distinguish them from the single-reel "Big V" comedies which the company has been issuing for more than two years past. Three of the comedies have been completed and are now being printed for shipment to the company's distributing branches, where they will soon be available for screening to exhibitors.

According to the Vitagraph announcement last week, the company will continue to release one-reel Big V comedies until the last week in September, and one of these, "Mutts and Motors," featuring Lawrence Semon, was featured on the program of the Rialto theatre, New York, last week. In addition to playing the leading role in the picture, Mr. Semon also wrote and directed it.

Vitagraph promises to give out a release list on the first group of two-reel "Big V Special" comedies within a short time.

Metro Casts Eileen Percy with Lytell

Eileen Percy has been engaged by Metro to play opposite Bert Lytell in "Making Good," the story of which was written by Mr. Lytell in collaboration with George D. Baker, manager of production of Metro's west coast studios.

Miss Percy's theatrical career dates back ten years. At that time she played child parts in road productions, traveling all over the country. That, by the way, was just after her arrival in America, with her parents from Dublin, Ireland.

Four years after her entrance into the drama, Miss Percy joined the "Ziegfeld Follies." It was while appearing in the "Follies" that she was induced to have a "test" picture made and she photographed so well that she was at once given a contract to play opposite Douglas Fairbanks in a series of his pictures.

Petrova Film Promises New Thrills

The latest Petrova production, "The Panther Woman," contains a series of realistic thrills heretofore lacking in the type of vehicle which characterizes Madame Petrova's screen appearances. The new offering is a picturized version of Gertrude Atherton's American novel, "Patience Sparhawk and Her Times," the title having recently been changed to "The Panther Woman." The story deals with the battle for life of a woman unjustly accused of murder. Tremendous court room scenes have been effectively introduced in the production, leading naturally up to the spectacular climax of the play, the scenes in the death house in Sing Sing.

Louise Glaum in "A Law Unto Herself"

In "A Law Unto Herself," a Paralta Play, Louise Glaum plays the role of a French girl forced into a marriage with a Prussian. They spend their honeymoon in Germany, where she learns that the German wife is entirely subservient to her husband's will.

"It is hard to be the wife of a German," the wife of her husband's cousin tells her, and she determines to be a law unto herself and defy her husband's Prussian will.

Her strong defiance of his wishes and his secret preparations for the day when Germany shall invade France make "A Law Unto Herself" a powerful drama, treating a subject of world interest today. It is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Pathe Announces New Toto Comedy

Pathe will release shortly another of the popular two-reel Toto comedies, "The Dippy Daughter."

Toto is the faithful family servant who always performs his duties in the wrong way and finds himself much abused because of his stupidity. The comedy is described as being one of the best of the Totos.

Chadwick Drama Comes September 15

In response to a demand expressed at several of the Pathe offices by requests from exhibitors, Pathe will release the week of September 15 a two-reel drama, with Helene Chadwick in the title role, under the name of "The Honest Thief."

"The Honest Thief" was produced by Astra under the direction of George B. Seitz, famous as Pearl White's serial director. That in itself insures that the picture has plenty of action, especially as Mr. Seitz is credited with the authorship of the story. Ed. Stanley plays the male lead.

The story is that of a girl, the cashier in a country bank, who disappears the night that the bank is robbed. Naturally she is accused of the crime. The way in which her innocence is proved is by a chain of dramatic events.

War Events Abound in Jewel Picture

Jewel Productions has inaugurated an original method of picture making in its handling of the seven-reel attraction, "Crashing Through to Berlin." The picture is a complete review of the war from its beginning four years ago to the present time, and as time unfolds new events in the world history they are added to the screen spectacle.

Cameramen all over the world are working unceasingly on this film, even while it is being shown in the theatres. As rapidly as the late news pictures are received Jewel Productions makes a place for them in the final episodes of "Crashing Through to Berlin."

Pathe Sets Release of Fannie Ward Film

On September 22 Pathe will release the first of the Extra Selected Star Photoplays—"A Japanese Nightingale," with Fannie Ward as the star. "A Japanese Nightingale" was produced by the Astra Company at its West Coast studios, with George Fitzmaurice as the director. William Young wrote the pla

Fred Palmer Forms Photoplay Corporation

Believing the story need of film companies can be benefited by showing those of ability how to prepare a story so that it is saleable, Fred Palmer, formerly identified with the Mack Sennett Keystone Scenario department, and later editor for Vogue Comedies, and writer of sixty for Universal, has organized the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, and recently opened offices in the I. W. Hellman Building, Los Angeles. This is in no sense a correspondence school according to Mr. Palmer, but really an institution to give writers of ability the fundamentals of writing for the screen so that they can prepare their stories in a form that will insure their attention when the stories reach the scenario department of the studios.

"There is a terrible need for stories at every studio," Mr. Palmer said, "and what we hope to do is to make it possible to reduce the percentage of stories received at the studios from being returned. At the present time less than two per cent of stories read are acceptable. Our plan has been endorsed by such well-known people of the industry as Cecil B. deMille, Thomas H. Ince, Frances Marion, scenario writer for Mary Pickford, and others of equal note."

Famous Players Sets Its National Week

The week of September 1, which marks the opening of the new year of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been scheduled as Paramount-Artcraft week throughout the country by that organization, according to Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution. During this week it is the aim of the company to control the screens of the country insofar as exhibitions are concerned. In an announcement from the company it is declared that exhibitors in every part of the country will show exclusively productions released under the Paramount-Artcraft trade-marks.

The plan is to nationalize the showing of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures for a solid week, backed up by an advertising campaign to be conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In the New York territory several weeks ago this plan was tried out.

Universal Strikes Out Gloom

Carl Laemmle Orders Dreary and Melancholy Themes Barred from Productions — Happiness to Predominate in Subjects

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal, issued orders this week to producing executives of that company, decreeing that hereafter it shall make only films in which happiness predominates. He stipulated that there must be no more productions based exclusively on dreary drama, or stories with dismal elements. The order is said to be ironclad, and will mean the doom, so far as Universal is concerned, of melancholy themes.

America's present state of mind is the foundation of Mr. Laemmle's decision. He reached it after long study of the reflexes in the spirit of theatre patrons produced by war conditions.

"The public faces too serious a reality in its every day life," said the producer, "to be served with serious thoughts in its theatres. When people go to the theatre nowadays, they want to get away from tragedy and trouble. They want to relax and forget their troubles."

"The general order includes a ban on the element of sex appeal, also. This will remove the vampire character, who never had a very strong footing in Universal programs, entirely from the productions of that company."

By natural effect, comedy films will gain much of the Universal's energies.

"Our chief aim must be," said Mr. Laemmle, "to send film patrons from our exhibitions with their minds refreshed and their hopes brightened. They come to us after a day of worry from scanning casualty lists and wondering how their loved ones are faring overseas. Our purpose will be to send the folks home contented and smiling.

"It is scant relief to them when a film is shown unfolding the tragic experience of imagined characters."

Dramas built on the war subject are likely to suffer more severely than those which dip into the past. However war films treating the news of America's part in the conflict and conveying necessary messages of public interest will be produced with free rein.

Paramount-Artcraft Lists "Hun Within"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release early in September a Paramount-Artcraft special entitled, "The Hun Within," a photoplay said to be of unusual excellence, presenting such screen players as Dorothy Gish, George Fawcett, Douglas MacLean and others. Daily revelations in the newspapers of the country of the subtle influences of German propaganda and the effect of enemy work within our own borders, which is being exposed by the Secret Service Department, is the subject of this production.

The production of "The Hun Within" has been carefully guarded for months in California, great secrecy was thrown around the cast and no information concerning it has appeared anywhere. Staged under the direction of Chet Withey, the well-known producer of many screen successes, the film is said to be one of exceptional merit.

The story tells of a young American boy who returns to this country after an education in Germany, where the influences of autocracy have completely unbalanced him. He falls an easy prey to the machinations of German agents in America and plots with them against his own country despite the protestations of his father, who is German born, but who is loyal to the Stars and Stripes.

Many thrilling scenes are promised in "The Hun Within," both of spectacular and dramatic nature. The production is expected to create unusual interest, and plans for its extensive exploitation are now under way. It is the first of the nine Paramount-Artcraft Specials to be released during the coming year, starting September 1.

Liberty Loan Film

Mae Murray has completed at Universal City under the direction of Robert Leonard a featurette, which will be used to aid the Fourth Liberty Loan. "The Taming of Kaiser Bill" is the title given the picture, made at the request of Secretary McAdoo, and Miss Murray is found in the role of a cowboy.

Goldwyn Bookings on Increase

Company Begins Second Releasing Season September 1 with Ready Takers for Whole Output—Strand in the List

ON September 1 Goldwyn Pictures Corporation inaugurates its second releasing season with an output doubled from twenty-six to in excess of fifty productions and with an increase of three new stars of world-wide fame and drawing power.

As a prelude to its first release, Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," Goldwyn's domestic and international organization has since June been waging a sales campaign of unprecedented vitality and scope, achieving through its men a tremendous success and drawing into continued business relations with the company the largest and most influential exhibitors of the nation.

Besides continuing in its second year in virtually every big theatre and every small theatre in which the first year Goldwyn productions were presented, Goldwyn, under its new sales policy of Star Series, has brought under its banner still other exhibitors whose requirements Goldwyn is now enabled to fill through the doubling of its annual output.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, takes pride in the fact that Goldwyn stars again will be seen this year at the Strand theatre, New York, under the managing direction of Harold Edel.

Of double importance also, both numerically and because of their prestige for fine showmanship and quality productions, he is proud of the entry of Goldwyn Pictures into the Rialto and Rivoli theatres under the direction of Samuel L. Rothapfel.

In Philadelphia Goldwyn Star Series productions are booked solid in the Stanley chain of theatres, controlled by Jules E. Mastbaum, with first run presentation in the Stanley and Palace theatres, Philadelphia.

In Boston for the coming year all Goldwyn productions are booked solid in the Jacob Lourie Modern and Beacon theatres.

Mabel Normand Is Peck's Bad Girl in Goldwyn's Picture of That Name

In Portland, Me., Keith's theatre will continue to be the first run home of Goldwyn.

The Worcester, Mass., first run will be at the Pleasant Street theatre. Other cities are too numerous to mention.

In Texas E. H. Hulsey has booked Goldwyn solid at his leading theatre in Dallas, Houston, Waco and Galveston and in Fort Worth P. C. Levy of the Hippodrome has signed for all Goldwyns, with a similar contract being made for San Antonio by W. J. Lytle of the Empire.

Goldwyn attains this expansion at the very outset of its second releasing year and thus makes good its own prophecy of a year ago that by the time the company was twelve months old it would be fully and permanently established as one of the greatest and most powerful factors of the industry.

Bookings Reported for Pathe Parade Film

Following upon the showing at the Rialto theatre, New York, during the week of August 4, Pathe announces that "The Fourth of July in France" is being extensively booked in all the various branches.

The San Francisco office has been particularly active in placing this two-reel picture. It reports having closed with the Cortelyou theatre in San Francisco for the full week of August 11. Other bookings with the Turner and Dahnken theatre in Oakland and with houses in Reno, Sacramento, San Jose, Berkley, Stockton, Richmond, Watsonville and Fresno have also been reported.

It is said at the Pathe offices that a record business for a two-reel picture is confidently expected and that the business now on the books justifies the optimism.

The picture was obtained from the French Pictorial Service and was photographed by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army.

World Begins Work on "Heart of Gold"

World Pictures has put in work Lucy Sarver's story, "Heart of Gold," which will be the third picture made with Louise Huff as the star. The continuity was made by Clara S. Beranger. Prominent in the cast are Johnny Hines, Robert Fisher, Tony Merlo, William Williams, Grace Barton and Marion Barney.

The theme of this photoplay has to do with dress conservation. The production has the support of the Federal Conservation Bureau. In order to add interest to the attraction one of the most famous dress ateliers in New York City has been secured for use in filming some of the interiors. In these scenes sixty mannequins will appear and display the latest style costumes. These scenes will be of value to the box office in drawing feminine patrons to the showings of this attraction.

Metro Chooses New Bushman-Bayne Story

"LITTLE MISS MONEYBAGS," a five-act screen romance by Elaine Sterne, has been accepted by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, and work on the new production will begin at once, following the arrival of the co-stars from their honeymoon at Bushmanor. This is the first production of the stars since their recent marriage.

A notable cast will support Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, it is said, under the direction of Charles J. Brabin, who was associated with the co-stars in the production of their latest release, "A Pair of Cupids." "Little Miss Moneybags," while said to be a genuine romance with plenty of dramatic incidents, will contain many comedy surprises of the type in which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have attracted attention in recent Metro pictures.

"Little Miss Moneybags" is being scenarioized by A. S. Le Vino, who recently returned from Metro's Western studios at Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Brabin will be assisted by Bernard J. Durning, who recently joined Metro's directorial staff. Mr. Durning has been an Edison director, among his best known pictures being "The Wall Invisible," "In the Fog," and a series of features starring Shirley Mason.

"Little Miss Moneybags" is said to contain some unusual features, and Director Brabin promises some genuine surprises in connection with it. The sceen is laid in and around New York City, though some of the characters are transplanted from the Far West. Surprising as it may appear, "Little Miss Moneybags" will introduce some phases of metropolitan life that are claimed to be new to the screen, and unrealized by those many miles from Broadway and Forty-second street.

Mr. Bushman will play the role of Van Tyne Carter, heir to the millions made by his father in Carter's soap.

Eight Fox Companies Grind Out Features

With announcement that William Farnum has begun work at Hollywood on "The Man of Power," the Fox Film Corporation points to eight companies which are now making pictures for William Fox.

Besides the Farnum picture, those being made in the West are "The She-Devil," which is nearing completion under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, and "The Two-Gun Man," which Tom Mix and his company are filming at Prescott, Ariz., under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. Gladys Brockwell has completed the filming of "The Strange Woman," the picture version of the famous stage play of the same name which was written by William J. Hurlbut.

In the East, George Walsh, under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh, has begun work at the Eclair Studio, Fort Lee, on "How Do You Get That Way?" a breezy, patriotic play. Director Richard Stanton has begun work on "Eyes of the Soul," a big all-star production, and another Fox company has started on another big picture. Peggy Hyland is progressing rapidly toward the completion of "Marriages Are Made," and Jane and Katherine Lee, under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom, a new Fox director, are at work at the Victor Studio on "Go Get 'Em." Virginia Pearson has finished "Queen of Hearts," under the direction of Edmund Lawrence.

Hayakawa Series Praised by Connery

W. J. Connery of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, who has just returned to New York from a visit to the Haworth Studios at Hollywood, California, speaks unthusiastically of progress being made on the third of the Hayakawa series of feature productions for Mutual release, entitled "Bonds of Honor."

"'This play is a strong dramatic story involving the honor of a Japanese youth of good family, who has been placed in a false light, but vindicates himself through tremendous personal sacrifices," said Mr. Connery. "I think it is a very satisfactory play for the star, who is at his best in characters that afford him a chance to set forth vivid contrasts between the habits of thought of the east and west."

Universal Names New Serial Episodes

The titles of three more episodes in Universal's serial, "The Brass Bullet," are announced this week. This brings the list up to seven. "The Brass Bullet," which was adapted from Frank R. Adams's novel, "Pleasure Island," bids fair to rank among the liveliest and brightest of Universal serial productions. Juanita Hansen and Jack Mulhall, who are starred in it, show up their talents to great advantage, it is said.

The schedule of titles up to date is as follows: 1—"The Flying Start"; 2—"The Muffled Man"; 3—"Locked in the Tower"; 4—"Smoked Out"; 5—"The Mock Bride"; 6—"A Dangerous Honeymoon"; 7—"The Depth Bomb."

Vitagraph Names Year's Plans

Promises That Announced Production Schedule Will Be Maintained Evenly—New Efficiency Basis Tried at Studios

CLOSE upon the heels of its announcement of a new Blue Ribbon feature booking plan, together with a complete schedule of release dates for the forthcoming year, Vitagraph this week is out with a complete exposition of its production plans for the forthcoming year. As mapped out these plans provide for the following product:

Fifty-two Blue Ribbon Features, to be released on a weekly basis, with Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Bessie Love, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith and Gladys Leslie as the stars, each star appearing at regular intervals of six weeks.

Fifty-two feature comedies of two reels each, with Lawrence Semon and the team of Montgomery and Rock as the featured players, alternating weekly. These two-reel humorous features will be released weekly.

Four serials of fifteen episodes each, in two of which William Duncan will be starred, supported by an all-star cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, while in the other two Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway will be featured.

Four special productions, to be made under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, the president of the Vitagraph Company.

A statement from Vitagraph declares that its production arrangements are so well in hand that maintaining the production schedule which has been decided upon is absolutely assured.

Another important part of the announcement is a statement from the head of the company to the effect that a reorganization of the studio methods, placing the production department on a thorough efficiency basis, has been effected, with the result that waste footage will be brought down to a minimum.

In regard to its productions, Vitagraph gives assurance that they will be builded from the best stories that our best authors can provide, that they will be everything that a good feature should be. To insure maintainance of their schedule, the Vitagraph Company is now engaged in enlarging its Western studio in Hollywood to a size sufficient to accommodate a dozen or more working companies, the same as its Eastern studio now does. It has already been officially announced by the president of the company that he intends to do the major portion of his winter production on the West Coast this year, in order to escape the delays and inconveniences which accompany the rigorous winters of the East.

"Untamed" on Triangle New List

The first Triangle production for the week of September 1 has been announced as "Untamed," featuring Roy Stewart. Kenneth B. Clark wrote the play and scenario.

Triangle's second release of the week is "The Mask," directed by Thomas H. Heffron. The story and scenario were written by E. Magnus Ingleton, and C. H. Wales handled the camera. Claire Anderson is featured in "The Mask," with a cast including Rae Godfrey, Lillian West, John Guilbert and Juan Dela Cruz.

Fox Boosts Sea Films

A special drive will be made the latter part of August, it is announced, by the Fox Film Corporation for bookings of "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellerman picture which has already been shown.

The Fox Corporation also will release early in September the Annette Kellerman submarine phantasy, "Queen of the Sea," which will be put out on an individual booking basis.

Metro Works on Loan Stories

Stars Plunge Into Propaganda Films with Desire to Make Them Invaluable to Country—Emily Stevens First

METRO and Screen Classics stars have hastened to cooperate with the Treasury Department in making special propaganda pictures to "boost" the Fourth Liberty Loan. Three of these pictures have already been completed, with Harold Lockwood, Emily Stevens and Edith Storey as the stars. Others who will appear before the camera, in connection with the part taken by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in the flotation of the fourth loan, are Mme. Alla Nazimova, and Ethel Barrymore.

Miss Stevens, having completed her work in Eleanor Mercein Kelly's "Kildare of Storm," under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, was the first Metro star to respond to the call for Liberty Loan propaganda. Miss Stevens at once obtained from June Mathias, of Metro's scenario department, a Liberty Loan story of the brief, pithy kind needed in the coming drive, and Mr. Franklin volunteered to direct it, with Arthur Martinelli at the camera. The title of Metro's first completed Liberty picture is "Building for Democracy."

Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, of Metro's scenario department, has provided Edith Storey with a Liberty Loan playlet, which he has named "Edith's Victory." "Edith's Victory" is a picture with an unexpected "twist" at the finish, which is expected to "put the punch' in work for the Fourth Liberty Loan. Miss Storey was one of the principal speakers for the Third Liberty Loan, addressing large crowds in front of the New York Public Library.

"Liberty Bond Jimmy" is the name of the picture contributed to the drive by Harold Lockwood. Mr. Lockwood wrote the story himself, in collaboration with his director, Edwin Carewe, and it bids fair to be one of the snappiest pictures in the entire list. "Jimmy" tells graphically just why each and every member of his family should buy Liberty bonds, and makes them do it. The story has spectacular features, and will contain, to the delight of Lockwood "fans," a genuine Lockwood fight.

Edith Storey, Whose Most Recent Metro Play is "The Silent Woman"

Associated with Director Franklin in the Edith Storey and Emily Stevens productions was Fred Warren ,a new member of Metro's directorial staff. Mr. Warren was until recently in vaudeville, a member of the well-known vaudeville team of Warren and Conley. He intends to learn every angle of the motion picture industry, and will be associated with Mr. Franklin in his next regular Metro feature.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are also making a propaganda picture for the coming drive.

Outing-Chesters Hailed as Educational

Albert Britt, editor of Outing, discussing the value of the Outing-Chester travel series as an educational and inspiration feast for lovers of the great outdoors, refers to them as affording sportsmen and lovers of camp life the most complete compendium of useful information ever assembled in any form.

"Nearly every man and nearly every woman in whom exists the spirit of adventure, loves to go camping," said Mr. Britt.

"In the Outing-Chester pictures there is shown at close range just what to do in every camp emergency and, better still, just how to do it. Many people believe that to build a camp-fire it is only necessary to drag a few sticks together, but actually camp-fire building is an art requiring experience. Any spectator of the Outing-Chester pictures who is a close observer may learn how to make camp, how to build a fire, how to cook, proper camp site, how to pack camp dunnage and generally speaking get an education in outdooring."

The forthcoming releases of Outing-Chesters include "Pines Up and Palms Down," an expedition into the wild pine and river country of the French-Canadian habitant—a land of camping and canoeing, of big moose and elk and wild game of all sorts, together with a contrasting journey through the palm fringed Everglades of Florida, with aligators in full view and close up, snapping their great jaws and swirling their muscular tails.

Triangle Produces Italian-American Film

"Tony America" is an Italian-American drama put in production by Triangle under the direction of T. N. Heffron this week. The photoplay will open with the Italian scenes, and later will be laid in the Italian slums of San Francisco. Francis McDonald is to play the featured role.

Selig Tells of Securing "Hoosier Romance"

Colonel W. N. Selig, who is responsible for the happy thought that resulted in dramatization of J. Whitcomb Riley's "Hoosier Romance," soon to be released by Mutual, tells in a Mutual announcement how he secured the picture rights to the poem.

"Of course Mr. Riley and I were old friends," said Colonel Selig. "I knew him for twenty years—from the time he wrote verses for little weekly papers round Greenfield, Ind., to the time when managers were fighting for his services on the lecture platform. I always considered 'A Hoosier Romance' his masterpiece. Riley didn't agree with me:

"It was after Mr. Riley had become famous—when he was a partner of Bobbs-Merrill & Co., of Indianapolis, that I went down to see him about picturing 'A Hoosier Romance.' Riley was dubious. He said he didn't see how the thing could be done. His idea was that the poem told too simple a story to permit its amplification for a five-reeler. I laughed. What I knew was that the poem contained the whole story of human life, and love and motive. At the time of this talk Mr. Riley was ill, and in fact he died before the picture was ready to show—a circumstance I profoundly regret. However, all the poet's surviving relatives have seen the picture half a dozen times and they are delighted with it."

"Pals First" Finished

With the taking of the final exterior scenes early this week Metro's production of "Pal's First," starring Harold Lockwood, was completed by Managing Director Edwin Carewe. The photoplay is a film version of the stage success

"America's Answer" Does Well in New York City

The unique method of exploiting "America's Answer," the second picture in the "Following the Flag to France" series which the United States Government has issued through the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has attracted a great deal of attention. Instead of opening the George M. Cohan theatre, in New York City, to the general public immediately after the official first showing, the house was sold out at the evening performances for two weeks to various business firms and organizations, leaving only the matinees open to ticket buyers. This, naturally, insured the financial success of the picture for the first two weeks, and at the same time created a small army of exploiters to advertise the merits of the films. Those who entertained their employes by buying out the house for their benefit, still further displayed their patriotic zeal by providing special programs, which were given in conjunction with the pictures. The "Star Spangled Banner" was sung by well known vocalists, and among the prominent speakers were A. J. Cattell, the official statistician of the city of Philadelphia, and Burr McIntosh, the actor, lecturer and traveler. Nine different firms and clubs bought the entire seating capacity of the theatre on different nights.

Well Known Players in Minter Cast

Mary Miles Minter, American Film Company star, is returning to the screen in the first of the new American subjects offered to the exhibitor, through personal representatives of Mr. Hutchinson stationed in each of the Pathe exchanges, with an all-star cast. Included in the galaxy of players are Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Alice Wilson, Ida De Villa and Carl Stockdale.

"The Eyes of Julia Deep," an adaptation of the novel of Kate L. McLaurin, is the subject which serves to reintroduce Miss Minter to the screen, and Lloyd Ingraham (who staged "Charity Castle," "Peggy Leads the Way" and "Her Country's Call," is again the man behind the megaphone. The story is a comedy-drama in five reels.

The first of the Paramount-Artcraft Specials to be presented next year will also be released in September and is entitled, "The Hun Within."

Each week in September there will be released three new productions and one Success Series re-issue. John Barrymore, Elsie Ferguson, Wallace Reid and Mary Pickford start the new year in September first releases. John Barrymore's initial Paramount picture since he last appeared under this trade-mark several years ago, is "On the Quiet," adapted from the popular play by Augustus Thomas, prepared for screening by Charles Whittaker and directed by Chet Withey. In the cast are popular players as Lois Meredith, Frank Losee, J. W. Johnston, Al. Hickman, Helen Greene, Frank Belcher, Nan Cristy, Dell Boone, Dan Mason, Frank Hilton, Otto Okuga and Louise Lee.

Elsie Ferguson's new Artcraft vehicle is "Heart of the Wilds," founded on Edgar Selwyn's famous "Pierre of the Plains," scenario by Charles Maigne, and directed by Marshall Neilan. Thomas Meighan appears opposite Miss Ferguson on this film, most of which was staged in Wyoming. Others in the cast are Matt Moore, Joseph Smiley, Escamilo Fernan and Sidney D'Albro. This is the first "western" in which Miss Ferguson has appeared on the screen and produced by Mr. Neilan, it promises to be a particularly suitable departure from her previous film efforts.

Wallace Reid's first Paramount offering for the new year, "The Source" is a drama by Monte M. Katterjohn.

Pickford Looks for Studio and a Writer

THE first definite and important statement made by Miss Mary Pickford concerning her future is that she will begin production of pictures at a Hollywood studio between September 1 and 15. Who will market this, and future made subjects is yet to be decided.

"I do not know any more now than I did the day of the expiration of my old contract with Mr. Zukor, except that I am going to begin work shortly," Miss Pickford said. "The First National, United and Affiliated have all made me generous offers, as have Mr. Sherry, the Metro and two other companies. Mr. Zukor has promised to meet the figures of any other bidders for my services, but I will not decide until after September 1, when all matters will be gone over by my attorney, Dennis F. O'Brien, who will come West shortly, and myself.

"Just now I am looking after the selection of a studio where my productions will be made. I have been out to see the Chaplin plant, and that is probably the cause of rumors that I am to work there. I have three directors in mind, but have not decided which one shall be engaged. My greatest problem is to find some one to write my stories now that Frances Marion has gone to Europe for Government work. I do not believe I can find any one who will replace her. We will have everything decided in a few days after the first of September."

Miss Pickford, with her mother and sister Lottie, have for the past six weeks been living at the beach, where she has attempted to take a vacation since the expiration of her contract with Artcraft in June, but this week is moving to Hollywood where she is to reside permanently. She had planned to remain at the beach until in September, but the many details necessary to beginning production, require that she be nearer the field of activity.

Constance Talmadge, in Select Pictures Star Series

Constance Talmadge Resumes Work on Coast

Constance Talmadge, Select Pictures Corporation's vivacious comedienne and star of a dozen productions, has once more taken up her task of providing entertainment for picture patrons. For the last month Miss Talmadge has been visiting her sister Norma at the latter's Bayside home, but she has left New York for California where, at a Hollywood studio she will at once begin filming pictures for her second Select Series, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick.

Miss Talmadge is still two pictures ahead of her schedule, and under the direction of Robert G. Vignola she expects to turn them out as efficiently in the future as in the past. Mr. Vignola will be remembered as Clara Kimball Young's director in "The Reason Why" and "The Claw," and as director for Alice Brady in "The Knife."

Shurtleff Reports Interest in Co-Partnership

C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has just returned from a trip to Washington and Baltimore and reports representative exhibitors in those cities are greatly interested in the Hodkinson co-partnership plan.

P. N. Brinch, having installed S. J. Stoughton as special representative of Hodkinson service in Chicago, and H. J. Bayley, recently manager of Goldwyn's Chicago branch in Minneapolis, has gone to Omaha, where Joe Levey has been appointed special representative.

John A. Stevenson, Hodkinson division manager in the South, has introduced Max Heine to the New Orleans territory as special representative, and Hoyt G. Morrow in the same capacity at Dallas.

Other appointments of special representatives are W. H. Bradley in Boston, C. E. Fielder in Cleveland, Robert F. Werth in St. Louis and George W. Christoffers in Buffalo, in addition to A. S. Abeles in New York and C. W. Perry in Detroit, as previously announced.

About New Pictures

Many opportunities for Tom Mix to display his riding ability are given in "The Two-Gun Man," which Mix and his company have begun at Prescott, Ariz. The picture is being made under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, and in the cast besides Mix are Val Paul, Charles LeMoyne, Jack Curtis and Jane Novak.

In the early scenes in "A Law Unto Herself," a Paralta-Hodkinson picture, Louise Glaum appears as a French girl of twenty years ago. In designing the costumes, a fashion book of 1894 was referred to, resulting in several gowns representing the height of fashion at that time.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox baby grands, combined film work and patriotism the other day when one of the scenes in their latest picture, temporarily titled "Go Get 'Em," was laid on the mimic battleship Recruit, in Union Square, New York.

Sacrifices made for love of parents have long been the theme of song and story. Strange to say, brother love, instances of which are not uncommon in real life, is seldom visualized on the screen or stage. It remained for "The Turn of the Wheel," starring Geraldine Farrar in her first Goldwyn picture, to depict the sacrifices a good man will make to save his brother in distress.

Jewel Productions boasts a veritable waiting list of exhibitors seeking bookings of "The Geezer of Berlin" and "The Sinking of the Lusitania." This company previously set a great pace with its super features entitled "A Soul For Sale" and "For Husbands Only." The demand for these two films is still running strong.

Charles Ray is still on location at Chatsworth Park, fifty miles from Los Angeles, filming exteriors for his big Western picture, soon to be released on the Paramount schedule. It will be one of the most notable of the Thomas H. Ince pictures starring the actor, is the report. Victor Schertzinger is directing and Chet Lyons doing the camera work.

Viola Dana, the Metro star, has begun work before the camera in "Oh, Annice!" her latest photoplay, at the Biograph studio, a portion of which Metro has been obliged to lease owing to the large number of companies working at the firm's Sixty-first street studio.

Mae Murray, one of Universal's stars, has begun work on another Special Attraction. It is entitled "The Scarlet Strain." The photoplay is taken from a novelette by Lorine Fontaine and Katherine Robbins, which appeared in the All-Story Magazine. Frank Elliott plays opposite her.

In "Triple Trouble," the new two-part Charlie Chaplin comedy produced by Essanay, the comic situations add almost as much to the fun of the production as the droll humor of Chaplin himself.

Miss Gail Kane is supported by a distinguished cast in her new Mutual production from the sensational novel of Maria Thompson Davies, "The Daredevil."

Lieutenant Lawrence Grossmith, of the Allied service, who has been detailed by the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission to play the role of Private Tommy Atkins in Commodore J. Stewart Blackton's production of "The Common Cause," makes his film debut in this special which is scheduled for release through Vitagraph.

Players notable for their achievements on stage and screen, surround Tom Moore in "Just for Tonight," the medium of his first appearance as a Goldwyn star. As his leading woman Tom Moore has Lucy Fox.

Managing Director Edwin Carewe, of the Yorke-Metro Company, announces that he has secured as a Metro starring subject for Harold Lockwood, an original photoplay story, as yet unnamed, by Finis Fox.

What Thomas H. Ince believes will be the most thrilling aeroplane scenes ever shown in motion pictures will, it is stated, be a feature of "Vive La France!" the new Paramount picture starring Dorothy Dalton. This story was written by H. H. Van Loan with the scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Bessie Barriscale's next Paralta Play, "The White Lie," is a drama written by William Parker and directed by Howard Hickman. The situation is built around three characters, who, outside of baby Mary Jane Irving, are practically the only people in the story.

Grauman Books First Lila Lee Feature

Sid Grauman, manager of Grauman's Million Dollar theatre in Los Angeles, saw the other day the first reel of "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," Lila Lee's first Paramount picture, and straightway booked for his temple of the cinema all the pictures in which the actress, formerly known in vaudeville as "Cuddles," is to be starred during the coming year. "That's enough for me," remarked Mr. Gerauman when the first 1,000 feet had been reeled off. "I'm satisfied."

"The Cruise of the Make-Believes" will have its Los Angeles premiere at Grauman's. The picture was directed by George Melford and includes a splendid cast in support of the young star, who is half way through her second Paramount—"Such a Little Pirate," with scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn. The first picture is from a story by Tom Gallon, and Edith Kennedy wrote the continuity.

Mutual Reports "The Planter" Going Strong

"The Planter" released by Mutual in November, 1917, starring Tyrone Power in a picturization of the novel of Mexican plantation life by Herman Whitaker, has made a remarkable record in bookings, Mutual declares.

Manager Jack Hicky, Jr., of the New London (Wis.) Grand Opera House writes Mutual: "My patrons were more than pleased with 'The Planter.' It was the first time I have had as many compliments on a picture in the history of my show experience. I watched the picture myself through twice, and must say it appealed to me more than any picture I have ever seen. Everything seemed perfect, the photography, the story, the acting; therefore, it had all the requirements to make one good picture. Any time you want any reference as to the merits of 'The Planter,' you can count on me boosting it to the limit, as I know that it will get money for any exhibitor.'

September 16—"By the World Forgot," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, directed by David Smith. Story by Cyrus Townsend Brady.

September 23—"The Girl of To-day," featuring Corinne Griffith, directed by John Robertson. Story by Robert W. Chambers.

September 30—"The Man from Brodney's," featuring Earle Williams, supported by Grace Darmond, directed by Jack Conway. From the novel of the same name by George Barr McCutcheon.

Artcraft Expects Stone Film to Score

"Under the Top," which will probably be released some time next month, is announced as all fun and cheerfulness, and as Fred Stone's first Artcraft picture it will undoubtedly prove a welcome diversion, for the eccentric comedian has hosts of friends who have long admired his work on the speaking stage and will welcome a chance to see him on the screen.

The story was written by John Emerson and Anita Loos, and to some extent it gives Fred Stone's own youthful experiences when he was a lad in a small Middle West town and had a longing to work with a circus. Gardner Hunting is said to have written a corking continuity for the picture.

Italian Picture in Six Reels

First National Releases "Italy's Flaming Front," August 26—Shows Events in Campaign Against Austrians

"ITALY'S FLAMING FRONT," latest and one of the most impressive of film productions to reach this country since the counterstroke against Austria was executed by the armies of General Diaz, will be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on Aug. 26, it was announced this week.

The production will be put out in six reels, having been carefully edited since its exhibition at the Rivoli theatre, New York, in weekly episodes, and in its revised form has been pronounced effective to the last degree by a committee which recently witnessed a screening of the spectacle at the Miles Projection Room.

Edited by a joint conclave made up of members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and representatives of the Italian military authorities in this country, "Italy's Flaming Front" in the form that it will be shown to the public, offers striking evidence of rare dramatic selection and good taste, it is claimed.

"In placing this film before our Allies in America," said Lieut. M. M. Prochet of the Sixth Italian Fortress Artillery, now representing his country's film interests in this country, "we have been guided by the desire to show the citizens of this great and friendly republic as many of the notable achievements of our military and naval forces as possible without forcing the unpleasant elements in the task of smashing the Hun into the foreground. This means that we want to place our cause before the greatest number of people possible, feeling that once Italy's aims and efforts are fully understood in America, there will be no force strong enough to break the handclasp of good-will and brotherhood now uniting the two countries. With this idea in mind, we have so arranged this picture that emphasis is given the dash and excitement of combat, and the thrill that is brought forth by the contemplation of notable engineering feats, without adding scenes of carnage and destruction likely to depress audiences unfamiliar with the stark actualities of the war against the Hun."

World Announces Five September Features

DURING September World Pictures will release five productions on the regular World program. Each of these pictures is said to be really a "special" and each of them possesses the magnetic drawing power that means money for the exhibitors showing them, according to the announcement.

First on the program for the month comes June Elvidge with Frank Mayo in "The Power and the Glory." This picture has been filmed from the novel of the same name by Grace MacGowan Cooke. Miss Elvidge appears in the role of Jonnie Consadine; Frank Mayo as Gray Stoddard, and other important members of the cast are as follows: Deanie, Madge Evans; Pros Passmore, Albert Hart; Shade Buckheath, Clay Clement; Hardwick, Jack Drumier; Charley Conroy, Johnny Hines.

An important picture scheduled by the World for release on September 9 is Louise Huff in "T'other Dear Charmer." This is Miss Huff's first picture for the World, and the story was written by Charles Sarver, scenario editor of the World. Miss Huff appears in this production in the role of Betty Hallowell. John Bowers appears as her leading man in the role of Tom Wentworth.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley will be seen in "By Hook or Crook," which will be released by the World on September 16. The story is said to be a particularly entertaining one and is light and pleasing.

"To Him that Hath" is the title of the production to be released on September 23 and it stars Montagu Love. The picture has been filmed from the novel of the same name by Leroy Scott. It tells of the manner in which a man takes another's blame for theft so that the guilty man's memory may be held in reverence by people of the mission which he has founded.

The final production for the month is said to be the best picture that Ethel Clayton ever made for the World. It is "A Soul Without Windows," and it is described as a tense, gripping and tremendously interesting drama of the present day. Frank Mayo appears in this production in support of Miss Clayton as her leading man.

Universal Rearranges New Bluebird List

The Universal has made a slight rearrangement of the Bluebird program, to the extent of releasing "Playthings" on August 12 in place of "That Devil Bateese." The latter was set down for August 19. The official announcement of these two releases is as follows:

August 12—Fritzi Brunette in "Playthings," with Mary Anderson and Lewis Cody. Story adapted from the dramatic stage play of the same name, by Sidney Toler, and directed by Douglas Gerrard.

August 19—"That Devil Bateese." Story by Bess Meredyth, scenario by Bernard McConville, produced by William Wolbert. The cast includes Adda Gleason, Lamar Johnstone, Lon Chaney and Andrew Robson.

Robert Harron Is the Male Lead in "The Great Love," Griffith-Artcraft, Which Has Scored a Hit

Pathe Lays Stress on September Bill

The Pathe program announced for release the week of Sept. 1 is unusually excellent, according to the statement of the Pathe Company, which has made a special endeavor to present a program of unusual interest at the beginning of the Fall months.

"The Phantom and the Girl' is the title of Episode No. 3 of the Pathe serial, "Hands Up," featuring Ruth Roland, supported by George Chesebro and an all-star cast.

Harold Lloyd will appear in his very latest farce comedy, entitled "Two Scrambled." Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard help him in the production.

"After 20 years—Porto Rico," is the title of the Post Travel Series No. 12. Scenes of old nooks and corners of Uncle Sam's island possessions are presented.

General Reports Success for Gloria Joy

Gloria Joy makes her fourth appearance in an Oakdale Production in "The Midnight Burglar." It presents the little star in perhaps the most sympathetic and appealing role in which she has yet appeared, and is expected by General Film to duplicate the success won by the earlier subjects. Neil Hardin, Ethel Ritchie, Ruth Lackaye, Charles Dudley, Daniel Gilfether, Frank Erlanger and other well-known players appear with Gloria Joy. Bert Ensminger directed.

Two more Oakdale Productions are promised, making a total of six to comprise the present series. For a newcomer to stardom, little Gloria Joy is reported to be making good beyond expectations.

"Smoked Out" Stormy

The fourth episode of "The Brass Bullet" serial is entitled "Smoked Out." In this period of adventure for Universal's daring players, the leading pair, Juanita Hansen and Jack Mulhall, have a stormy time, it is said.

Program Glances

"The Wooing of Riley" is the tenth film offering of Wolfville Tales by Alfred Henry Lewis, released this week by General Film Company. This is a story of the West with a stronger note of comedy than usual. It presents Kate Price and Otto Lederer in the leading roles.

The first Triangle release scheduled for the week of August 25 offers Pauline Starke in "Daughter Angele," a picture described as a melodrama with a pretty romance and a new war angle. It tells of the adventures encountered by Pauline Starke as Angele.

The trouble that sometimes ensues when a man past middle age weds a very young and beautiful girl is depicted in "Green Eyes," Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount picture. This is an Ince picture, directed by R. William Neill, and is scheduled for release August 26.

One of the coming releases of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons by William Fox is entitled "At the Front," and shows how Bud Fisher's two famous characters adopt novel means to vanquish the Germans.

Mabel Normand's eagerness to gratify the wishes of thousands of her admirers in every part of the globe is said to be responsible for her appearance in "Peck's Bad Girl," a play Goldwyn says is replete with situations like those she reveled in when she was first acclaimed one of America's screen comediennes.

"Our Mrs. McChesney" is the third recent Metro picture starring Ethel Barrymore to be introduced to the screen public by way of a Broadway production. The others were "The White Raven" and "The Call of Her People," the first an original story by Charles A. Logue, and the second a picturization of Edward Sheldon's play, "Egypt."

Billie Burke is said to have achieved the greatest triumph of her motion picture career in her newest Paramount picture, "In Pursuit of Polly," which is to be released August 19.

"Fires of Youth," the Bluebird release for August 26, is a story of the failure that often attends the attempt of a man in the autumn of his life to mate with a girl in the spring of life's cycle. The scenario is by Fred Myton. Rupert Julian produced the film. Ruth Clifford plays the leading role as Lucile Linforth.

"Triple Trouble," the two-part Charlie Chaplin comedy released by Essanay, has completed a two weeks' run at the Castle theatre, and a week at the Playhouse, two of Chicago's theatres, where it ran to good houses.

Although more than 5,000,000 persons already have seen "Cleopatra," the Theda Bara portrayal of the love of the siren of the Nile, the Fox Film Corporation states that more bookings for this drama are coming in daily. Several of these are for repeat dates.

Simultaneous with the starting of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's season of 1918-19 on September 1, John Barrymore makes his re-entrance into screen drama as a star of Paramount pictures. Mr. Barrymore's starring vehicle, released on that date, is "On the Quiet," Augustus Thomas' comedy in which William Collier appeared on the stage for years following its initial presentation.

Exhibitors who are booking "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" are making a success of the two days' run. The manager of the Empire theatre, Monroe, Utah, writes: "Played 'The Kaiser' two days to excellent business." J. Sig Davis, manager of the Star, Ashton, Idaho, is one of those who booked for two days.

It takes someone with a complexion colored by nature to appear in the Douglas Natural Color films, for distribution by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Ruth Roland was chosen to star in "Cupid Angling," the first release, her complexion being a harmonizing of auburn hair, blue eyes and fair skin.

A little theatre, done in a futuristic checkerboard effect of black and white, is one of the features of Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming Metro production, "His Bonded Wife," in process of completion at Metro's Sixty-first street studio, under the direction of Charles J. Brabin.

Elsie Ferguson's next Artcraft picture, "Heart of the Wilds," which is scheduled for release September 1, is destined to create considerable interest through the fact that the star will be seen in a role in which she once appeared with success on the stage.

Madge Kennedy's Current Starring Picture for Goldwyn Is Called "Friend Husband"

Fifteen Paramount Shorts in September

Fifteen Paramount short subjects have been scheduled for release in the month of September by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation—the largest number of two-reel releases for a single month in the history of the organization. These include two Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg comedies, one Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, two Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies, five Paramount-Burton Travelogues and five Paramount-Bray Pictographs.

The first comedy release of the month, scheduled for the 1st, is the Paramount-Flagg comedy, "Hick Manhattan," the initial offering in Mr. Flagg's new "Sweethearts and Wives" series.

The comedy for September 8 is the Paramount-Mack Sennett production, "His Wife's Friend." On the 15th "Fatty" Arbuckle will be seen in his latest rib-tickler, "The Cook," which was originally scheduled for the month of August, while another Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Sleuths," will be released the 22nd.

A Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue is set for release during each of the five weeks of the month. The subjects are a continuation of the interesting Far East series and are successively as follows: "With the Hairy Ainu," "The Hades of Hokkaido," "Sojourning in Sapporo," "Wee Ones of Japan" and "Sailing the South Seas to Fiji." The subjects of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, which will be released one each week will be announced at a later date.

Ned Finley Dramas Remain in Favor

Five two-reel Blue Ridge Dramas, featuring Ned Finley, have done an attractive business, according to a review of their reception at General Film exchanges. They proved to be of a virile, popular type and had the outdoor atmosphere appealingly utilized. Productions terminated owing to the illness of the star, but nevertheless the series is reported in continued favor.

"Mickey" Campaign to Continue

W. H. Productions Company Says Big Drive Has Just Begun—Many Helps Offered for Normand Picture

SEVERAL weeks ago an exchange man from one of the larger Western cities came to the offices of W. H. Productions Co. to inquire about "Mickey," the superfeature now being sold on the state rights market. They showed him their advertising campaign and the service they are planning to render the exchanges, and exhibitors and public in general on this production. He was said to be very enthusiastic over the quality and quantity of this campaign, and made a remark that W. H. says sums up the importance to exchanges and exhibitors of advertising and publicity for motion pictures.

"That's great," he said. "Some of these production companies don't know how much this all means to us exchange men and to the exhibitors. Why, I saw a fine picture this morning, and would have bought it, but they didn't have any advertising on it. I know what that means, because I know how much it cost me, not only in money but in time at the expense of my other productions and duties, to advertise that picture. I decided right then that I could not afford to buy any pictures, no matter how good, unless they had that much of their service to me complete. And I'm sorry too that I couldn't take that picture this morning—it was a dandy."

"If there are, therefore, any producers who have the least bit of doubt as to whether any production warrants an expenditure of a great sum for advertising," said an official of W. H. Productions Co., "such practical experiences illustrate the answer. The advertising and publicity expenditure is as necessary as the production cost—and is not heaped on the exchange man or the exhibitor, on the contrary, it is an economy on what it would cost the exchange man were he to prepare his own advertising campaign on such an elaborate scale. But this is only one phase of the many distribution problems that our advertising and publicity campaign on 'Mickey' has answered, through a most unusual and entirely new exploitation policy.

"The campaign on 'Mickey' has only begun. For about a year there has been a steady and consistent stream of advertising and publicity to the trade and to the public. Every one has been asking for 'Mickey,' consequently. Regularly, as buyers came into New York from all over the world, they would drop in and ask about 'Mickey'—when would it be released—how—and what would it cost. This for a whole year.

"This campaign was an entirely novel departure from the ordinary course of publicity for a big production. And the ordinary course of publicity for a big production is a rapid wave of publicity and advertising for several weeks, climaxed with the release of the picture—a sensational swirl, and the punch."

Detroit Exchanges Combine Forces

It has been announced that the State Film Corporation, of Detroit, and the Victor Film Exchange, of the same place, have been combined into one, but that for the present both names will be used. Later, it is said, only the name of the State Film Company will be used. The officers of the latter are John E. Ryder, president, and Peter L. Smith, secretary and treasurer. The Victor has been controlled by Samuel Ludwig.

This independent exchange has purchased new prints of "Civilization," "The Deemster" and "A Mormon Maid," and has purchased the Michigan rights to "The Frozen Warning," featuring Charlotte, the skater, who made quite a hit in the leading role of the picture.

Margaret Marsh, Who Has a Prominent Role in the Rolfe-Houdini Serial

Matt Moore in Blanche Sweet Picture

In the production of Harry Garson's screen version of Rupert Hughes' story, "The Unpardonable Sin," which ran as a serial in the Red Book Magazine and has appeared in book form published by Harper Brothers, Blanche Sweet will have as her leading man Matt Moore, who has been added to the personnel of the Garson forces.

Mr. Moore's experience has been gained both on the speaking stage and in a wide range of motion picture work. Before his entrance into the photoplay field, he spent six years on the stage in dramatic work.

"The Unpardonable Sin" will in all probability be followed by "Told in the Hills," the first of Marah Ellis Ryan's stories to be filmed.

Miss Sweet has practically completed the purchase of gowns and wardrobe and will return to the Coast within a week to start work on "The Unpardonable Sin." The picture will be made at the Sunset studio, which Mr. Garson has leased in Los Angeles.

Buyers Ask for Rights to Houdini Picture

The Export and Import Film Company which controls the rights to the Houdini serial, states that it is in receipt of many inquiries for the foreign rights to this serial. The buyers do not even ask to see the production, but are making offers for the territory without even knowing full particulars, the name Houdini being enough. The name Houdini is said to be as well known in all parts of the world as it is in America, and the fact that the king of self-liberators will appear in a photoplay is sufficient to cause an unprecedented demand from foreign countries for this picture, says Export and Import Company.

Sherry Service for the entire circuit of Marcus Loew theatres. The booking consists of fifty-five days, all of which will be played in the Loew theatres during the week of August 26. The newest International Film Service cartoon comedy, distributed by Educational Films Corporation, is called "The Latest in Underwear," and is said to be truly a black and white rumpus in 500 feet. Guissart with Tourneur

Rene Guissart, photographic artist, is now with Maurice Tourneur, it was announced this week. He was at work on William Brady's "Little Women" when an emergency call went forth from Tourneur, and the scenes of "Little Women" were hurried, it is said, to release Mr. Guissart.

The first picture has been finished under the title of "The Embarassment of Riches" in the East, but future productions will be made on the West Coast. It is expected the star and her organization will leave September 1 for the West, the executive offices also being removed there. E. Lanning Masters will remain here as representative.

Grossman Gets Reeve Stories

Rolfe Productions Aims to Picturize All "Craig Kennedy" Detective Stories—Have Had Wide Circulation in Print

ONE of the more important recent announcements is that of the signing of a contract between Harry Grossman, vice-president and general manager of Rolfe Productions, Inc., and Arthur B. Reeve, detective-story writer.

The contract is declared to be one of the biggest deals ever arranged between an author and a producer and involves the rights to all the Craig Kennedy detective stories that Mr. Reeve has ever written.

The Craig Kennedy detective stories have been published in every language, including the Scandinavian, and at the present time there is a shilling edition of which many million copies have been printed to be circulated among the British Tommies in the trenches. It will be remembered that this series ran for years in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and were afterward published in book form.

Ex-President Roosevelt during his convalescence at the hospital, said about Arthur B. Reeve Books: "I did a whole lot of reading. I particularly enjoyed half a dozen rattling good detective stories by Arthur B. Reeve—some of them were corkers."

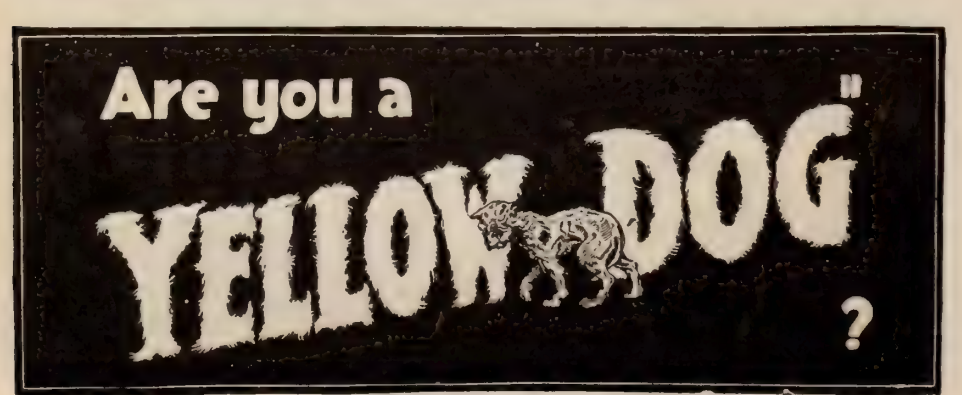
"The plans I have for releasing this are new and novel," continued Mr. Grossman, "and I think that the exhibitor will gain a great deal by having well-known stories of the higher type on his program. That is why we have paid Mr. Reeve so much to get these wonderful stories because they contain more mystery and screen values than any other material."

Arrow Corrects an Error About "Sunset Princess"

It was recently announced by Arrow Film Corporation that the production of "The Sunset Princess" was purchased for the territory of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and South Carolina through the Arrow Film Corporation, by the Quality Film Exchange of Atlanta. This was an error, the company states.

The production was sold to the Sipe Film Corporation of 66 Walton Street, Atlanta, Georgia, it is said.

Mr. Sipe, the head of that concern, was formerly manager of the J. A. Cressey interests of Atlanta.



"Ruling Passions" Set for Early Release

Abraham S. Schomer, director-general of the Schomer Photo-Play Producing Co., Inc., and in charge of the productions of that company, this week, announced the early release of "Ruling Passions," the latest photodrama from his pen and the direction of which he has about completed.

In his announcement, Mr. Schomer said: "To my mind, characterization is an element in the photoplay the importance of which has been but rarely appreciated, and if appreciated, seldom given the marked attention it deserves.

"I have been aided in my effort and aim by the heartiest co-operation of Julia Dean, Edwin Arden, Claire Whitney and Earl Schenk, who are the stars of my new production."

Immediately upon the completion of "Ruling Passions," Mr. Schomer will begin the direction of another original story, the writing of which he has already completed. "Ruling Passions" will be released upon a State Rights basis, the Schomer Photo-Play Producing Co., Inc., handling the New York territory through its own exchange at 1440 Broadway. A special publicity campaign will soon be inaugurated for it and the succeeding releases of the company.

Short War Film Released in Ohio

"How Stars Twinkle Away from the Studios," a one-reel film made with an all-star cast for the benefit of the Actors' War Fund Association, is going to be distributed in Ohio through the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Sincere Building, Cleveland. General Manager George P. Jacobs received notification to this effect from Sol Lesser last Monday. Lesser is distributing the picture all through the United States, as a philanthropic proposition. All receipts are to be turned over to the Actors' War Fund, which is being maintained for the support of actors wounded on the battle fields.

Little has been said of the picture other than that it contains a cast which reads like a directory of all the screen luminaries in the country. Some of them are Mary Pickford, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray, Fanny Ward, Mildred Harris, Tsura Okai, Douglas Fairbanks, Ralph Cleary, Charlie Chaplin, Bessie Barriscale, D. W. Griffith, Polly Moran, Dustin Farnum, Nat Goodwin, Mack Sennett, Eddie Polo, Sessue Hayakawa, Louise Glaum, Blanche Sweet, Juanita Hanson, Frank Keenan and Clara Kimball Young.

"Ashes of Love" Reaches the Screen

"Ashes of Love," the new production of the Graphic Film Corporation, written and directed by Ivan Abramson, has been completed and was shown in the projection room during the past week. Officials and employees of the company viewed the film, and it is said there were no criticisms made in regard to the production.

Success Film Moves Into Cleveland

The Success Film Productions has taken a large loft in the Sloan Building, covering numbers 419-421.

Cleveland exchangemen and exhibitors are watching the Success Film Productions with great interest. Less than three months ago Charles F. came here, selling "Nine Tenths of the Law" on the states rights basis. Since then he has added all of the releases of the United Booking Corporation to his stock of films, and is now on the market for some additional live wire features with lots of punch in them.

"Nine Tenths of the Law" has proved an unfailing money getter all over Ohio. Gradually Schwerin has been obliged to increase his number of prints until now he has five of them working constantly.

Success Film Productions occupied a prominent place in the list of features booked last week. The Gordon Square played "Nine Tenths of the Law" the first three days of the week, and "The Belgian" the rest of the week. Next week the Priscilla plays "Those Who Pay." "Nine Tenths of the Law" played this entire week at the Lubin, Cincinnati, with great success, and opens at the Liberty, Youngstown, for a week, beginning August 25.

Hoffman Supervises "Suspicion" from the Hospital

"Suspicion," the forthcoming M. H. Hoffman production, which has been in course of preparation for a considerable time, is said to be arousing great interest and curiosity in film circles just now. The circumstances under which the picture has been prepared for public presentation are declared strikingly dramatic. M. H. Hoffman has for weeks been fighting a malady in the Mount Sinai Hospital. From the hospital Mr. Hoffman supervised the preparation of "Suspicion" for the world's market. His own exchanges will handle the New York and New England rights.

Grace Davison is starred by Mr. Hoffman in "Suspicion," which is based upon a story by Thomas Bedding. The secret of this story has been well preserved and when the picture is seen it is believed that a surprise will be created. War inspires the main theme of "Suspicion"—it is a war-time drama, but there are said to be no battle scenes.

Anna Case Begins First Motion Picture

It was announced by International Film Service, Inc., last week that Anna Case, the soprano, has begun work upon her first motion picture, using the Norma Talmadge studio in Forty-eighth street.

The production while in work is called "The Golden Hope," under the direction of Junius Earl Henderson, personally supervised by Julius Steger, director general of International.

Charles Richman is taking the leading male role. Other members of the cast are Forrest Robinson, Grace Reals and John Charles.

Educational Lists New Indian Pictures

THE native Indian dramas scheduled for early release by the Educational Films Corporation include "An Indian Love Story," "A Raid on an Indian Village," "Tribal Ceremonies" and "War Dances." This is probably the first motion picture revelation of the Indian as he is—not as the "Wild Western" dramatists, scenarioists and directors have commonly portrayed him. There is said to be a thread of drama in each of the one-reelers, but the depictment is exclusively by native Indians. It is exact and authoritative to the last degree, Educational declares.

The accuracy was obtained by the Northwestern Film Corporation, maker of the pictures for the Educational. J. E. Maple, the president of the Northwestern, who is an old film man, decided to do things right. He secured the consent of the Commissioner for Indian Affairs, of Secretary Lane's Department, to use three hundred members of a tribe living largely under the old free conditions at and near Sheridan, Wyoming. The Indians were not taught to "act." They were asked merely to reproduce their own life and customs within the scope of exceedingly simple scenario.

For example, "War Dances" and "Tribal Ceremonies" required but the slightest vehicle of fiction story. "A Raid on an Indian Village" introduced the fighting motif, and "An Indian Love Story" showed the comely heroine in peril from an unacceptable suitor and the final winning of her by the man of her choice.

As ethnologists are aware, the Indian's life is guided by ritual and ceremony to an even greater extent than the life of the most devoted follower of a civilized religion. All the ceremonies are not only symbolic, but founded on a rationale.

Open Market Gains New Energy

W. E. Shallenberger Cites Its Ability to Hold Own Against Program—Short Lengths Plentiful to Open Buyers

"THE open or state rights market seems to have taken on added energy within the past sixty days," said W. E. Shallenberger last week to a representative of Motion Picture News. "The reason for this is evident," continued Mr. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Film Corporation, "in the fact that motion picture theatre proprietors have within that time been advised of all of the program offerings to be made for the 1918-1919 season, and having digested the advantages and disadvantages of tying up their houses for a long period of time to any particular program or programs, have now formulated their policy so as to leave open a substantial amount of time for state right or independent attractions, and, furthermore, experience seems to have taught them that short length productions can be procured from state right exchanges, of equal merit and sometimes superior merit to the short length attractions offered by program houses, partly as a wedge for the booking of their feature attractions.

"Superior state right productions are now being made and the theatre proprietor will find no difficulty in filling his open dates. Furthermore, it appears that most of the re-issued attractions which have proven so successful are procurable only through state right exchanges.

"It is but natural to assume that where an exhibitor has the privilege of picking his productions at a price mutually satisfactory to himself and the exchange he will patronize the exchange affording him that opportunity, and the only exchange that consistently adheres to that policy is the state right distributor.

"And while I am on the subject of re-issues let me here say that I have always endeavored to keep a finger on the pulse of the market's demands, and my most optimistic expectations are more than realized. The various re-issues we have been offering are being rapidly disposed of and we are now preparing a series of other re-issues, being the pick of over 200 negatives of one and two reels.

"These, together with the larger independent and special attractions which are being offered by the Arrow Film Corporation, should place an independent exchange in an enviable position of being able to supply theatres with a substantial amount of their photoplays."

Kitty Gordon's Productions Go to United

IT was announced this week that Kitty Gordon's signature rests on the dotted line of a United Picture Theatres' contract. This means that Miss Gordon's forthcoming series of super-productions will be seen only in the theatres belonging to United's co-operative chain.

Following the announcement of the signing of the Dustin Farnum series of Western dramas for the same circuit, the acquisition of Miss Gordon's productions denotes much progress toward the ultimate goal of a programme of fifty-two features to be released by United during the first calendar year of its active operations. Mr. Farnum is to furnish seven pictures for this program while Miss Gordon's contribution for the coming twelve months will total six. The stories are to be devised by Wilson Mizner, whose dramas of the past are said to guarantee dramatic intensity, progressive and plentiful action and skillful craftmanship in Miss Gordon's future pictures.

Conditional on Miss Gordon's acceptance of United's terms was the retention of the group of photoplayers she had tentatively selected to head her supporting casts. Mahlon Hamilton, whose work as leading man for seevral other female stars has caused comment, will fill the leading masculine roles throughout the entire series of new pictures. Announcement of other engagements will be made as soon as contracts are signed, it is said.

Sydney L. Cohan will remain Miss Gordon's personal manager under the arrangement with United.

"Wild Honey" Chosen for Miss Kenyon

Doris Kenyon's third production at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will be "Wild Honey," picturized by Louis Joseph Vance, from the original story by Vingie E. Roe, which appeared early this summer in Pictorial Review.

Lillian Walker, the Dimpled Star, in a Moment in Her New Picture, "The Embarrassment of Riches"

Farnum-Sherman-United Film Nears Screen

"The Light of Western Stars," which is the first of the Dustin Farnum-Sherman Productions recently acquired by United Picture Theatres of America, and which is this week announced as the inaugural release over the United circuit, is now undergoing its final cutting and revision. Before this work was undertaken under the supervision of experts the picture was endorsed by a committee consisting of members of the United's advisory board of exhibitors and other exhibitors affiliated with the movement, and also had the approval of Zane Grey, the author.

Immediately after concluding his arrangement with United for handling of the Farnum super-productions, Harry Sherman left New York for Los Angeles to take in hand the second of the series, which is based upon Jackson Gregory's "Wolf Breed."

"Inspiration" Gets New Title from Arrow

The Arrow Film Corporation has determined the title under which the production "Inspiration" is to be re-issued, and has decided that the strongest title appropriate to the attraction is "The Perfect Model." This production has been re-edited and re-titled, it is said.

This title was chosen by F. N. Sanford of the Southwestern Film Co., Dallas, Texas, who saw the re-issued production in the projection rooms of the Arrow Film Corporation.

"Still Alarm" Claims Wildfire Record

That old melodrama, "The Still Alarm," which for many years gladdened the hearts of the gallery gods and thrilled the patrons of the orchestra seats in the popular-priced theatres, is said to be duplicating the success as a motion picture of red blood and virility. The week of August 8 this cinemated version of the old play of an earlier day played to good business at the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J.

A Letter That Tells Better Than Any "Ad" Why You Should Be In Chicago September 3-4-5-6-7 Read It!

Editor of the Motion Picture News:

¶ Your recent editorial, "Shake Hands," is all right and half wrong.

The spirit that prompted you is fine.

However, when you place most of the responsibility of Organizing the Exhibitor on Shaefer and Rembusch you are somewhat in error.

In mentioning Messrs. Rothapfel, Sorerio, Crandall, Tom Moore, Hulsey, Boehringer, Richards, Katz, Barrett McCormick, Marcus Loew, Seivers, Roth, Brauman, Clemner Von Herberg, Turner and Dahnken, Harold Franklin, Frank Newman, Landau, McGee, Perry, Carpenter, Parrington, you are hitting 1000%.

Organization needs the "bell-wether exhibitors." A few have worked faithfully, but as you say, most of them are too busy and lack the patience it takes and patience is so necessary.

You say, "Your country wants you." Your Organization wants you.

¶ Now here comes opportunity. The Chicago Meeting, Hotel Sherman, Sept. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, is not a one-man meeting. It is a meeting of the entire Industry.

It is a National Motion Picture Meeting in which every one in the picture business is invited to participate.

"If you are in the picture business, this is your meeting."

There can be no politics because the first three days are taken up with a set program open to the entire industry. We believe the way to get together is to get together and come together.

Not only exhibitors but every branch of the industry is asked to participate and the "bell-wethers" of all kinds are hereby drafted.

No regrets accepted.

Messrs. Brady, Zukor, Irwin, Fox, Laemmle, Elliott, Powers, Friend Brulator, Earle, Selznik, Sheldon, Brink, Edwards, Smith, Goldfish, Berst, Hodkinson, Lasky, Kleine, Rowland, Cochrane, Rothacker, Williams, Schwalbe, Lynch, Bill Wright, Brunet, Cromelin, Griffith, Sherill, Hallberg, Porter, Flynn and Gulick are asked to appear and give of their counsel and advice of how we may have a better motion picture and do our greatest to help win the war.

¶ The American Exhibitors' Association is not calling this meeting to sell pictures, trade journals, co-operative booking, or do panhandling. Our national directors want a business meeting and will do anything necessary to perfect an organization that will protect the industry as a whole. Our activities are confined to the best interests of all exhibitors. All who come to Chicago have an opportunity to amalgamate to their heart's content.

Personally, I am more interested in having a fine meeting than anything else. We want the best speakers, all the helpful entertainments it is possible to secure. If we have the right attendance and the right people come, everything will come out all right.

Mr. Rothacker caught the spirit of our meeting and has promised us a fine afternoon at his factory. Any one that has anything good to offer to make the program interesting, is invited to volunteer. It will be acceptable to the Committee.

The Committee will be glad to know who is coming so as to prepare. We like the idea of Mr. Rothacker of volunteering his services to our meeting. Who is next? Come on you "Bell-wethers." Take the lead and all the industry will follow. Our program is open to you.

FRANK REMBUSCH.

What Is the Physical Condition of the Film You Show?

WHEN we hear of an exchange manager actively engaged in doing all in his power to keep up the physical condition of the prints which he is booking we hasten to announce it. The usual method, though there are exceptions, is book-book-book without thought of anything except keeping every print on the move morning, noon and night. Co-operation is all right when there is time, but time is an unknown quantity to many exchanges, therefore the film seldom reaches the inspection room for absolute renovation.

One man brought in some film for me to see the other day. It had been released thirty days before, yet for all the world is looked like a hundred and twenty days' old stuff. The perforations were gone entirely in many places. Patches were put in so that they overlapped almost a quarter of an inch, and at intervals the film itself was actually torn almost half way across.

The operator who had the lengths said he had told the manager that the city department, if they could see the print, would never allow it to be run through the machine, for it was an actual menace to the patrons of the house, so apt was the film to catch fire. The exchange was called on the 'phone, and when complaint was made and conditions were related the statement was made to the effect that the film had not been in the local exchange long enough to be gone over and inspected, and that a new print would be delivered which was not done. This, of course, is ridiculous, as the money lost by sacrificing a day's booking occasionally would be easily made up in added bookings, due to an increased reputation on the part of the exchange for good film. The case referred to is doing the distributors no end of harm, as the operators are knocking every chance they get, and in this case every knock is not a boost. This experience will kill more business for the exchange manager than he can hope to build in the same or even greater length of time.

We have mentioned this condition before and pointed out those who were at the time co-operating. We also told of the great work being done by the National Anti-Misframe League, which is being increased every day as can be seen by the membership roll in the Projection Department. Even with this co-operation of League members and the help of other active operators who are not members of the League there is further room for improvement not only in theatre co-operation, but also in the exchange inspection.

We recently received a copy of telegram which is most interesting and shows the trend of the times, at least we hope this is a sign. If all exchanges will please copy we will soon have the physical condition of film beyond criticism. Yes, it is an expensive method, but things which are worth having are worth keeping in order.

Mr. Exhibitor:

"Report immediately any film you receive that is not in first-class condition.

"Report any film of which the sprocket holes are weakened or bad, preferably giving me the subtitles at each end of the bad section.

"Report any film that does not appear to have a complete ending.

"I am going ot put in new sections of film, replacing all weakened sections and completing each and every subject.

"Let's all pull together now for a perfect service.

"In reporting condition of film—simply make a note and put it in the film box addressed to me; when reporting on features be sure and give the part number.

"Thanking you for your kind co-operation,

"R. S. Ballantyne, Manager,
"Mutual Film Corporation,
"Omaha, Nebr."

This service costs money; it means added help in the inspection room, but it also insures Mr. Ballantyne of the backing and active booking of the exhibitors and operators who are using Mutual Pictures, for they know that every print they receive has the actual promise of having been properly inspected and made ready for showing.

Remember the better the physical condition of the film and the better the picture on the screen, providing the story is there, the more popular becomes the photoplay—the greater the attendance—the larger the profits—the more salary the manager can afford to pay the operator and the larger the rentals which can be handed over to the exchange. The industry works in a circle, for the prosperity of the one depends entirely upon the way the others do their work. It is another case of co-operation and working for each other's interests.

Illumination and Its Measurement

The Foot-Candle

LIGHT is a cause and illumination the effect or result. Both the lumen and the candle are used to measure the cause, these units applying to the light source itself and not to the point where the light is utilized. To measure the illumination on a newspaper, a desk or other working plane, we employ a unit called the foot-candle. A foot-candle represents an intensity of illumination equal to that produced at a point on a plane which is 1 foot distant from a source of 1 candle and which is perpendicular to the light rays at that point. In Fig. 4, if the source S gives an intensity of 1 candle along the line SA and if A is 1 foot distant from the source, the intensity of illumination on the place CD at the point A is 1 foot-candle. If instead of being perpendicular to the beam, the plane AB is tilted at an angle, as shown in Fig. 5, it will be seen that the light of this beam is spread over a greater area than if the plane is perpendicular, so that the intensity of the illumination on the plane is less in proportion to the ratio of the length of AB to the length of A'B', or to the cosine of the angle between a perpendicular to A'B' and the axis of the beam, which is the angle X. If with the plane in the position AB the illumination is 1 foot-candle and the cosine of the angle X is 0.7, the average illumination on the plane in position A'B' will be only 0.7 of a foot-candle. The intensity of illumination, measured in foot-candles, is the unit of measurement most intimately associated with our everyday use of light, and a measurement which the eye either consciously or unconsciously is making whenever the faculty of vision is being employed, for the number of foot-candles we have on the working plane, other things being equal, determines directly whether or not there is sufficient light. A working idea of a foot-candle of illumination can be obtained by considering the intensity on a newspaper being read by the light of a candle, the paper being held approximately one foot away from the candle. The foot-candle is a unit applying to a point on a surface; by averaging the foot-candles at a number of points on a plane we get the average intensity of illumination on that plane.

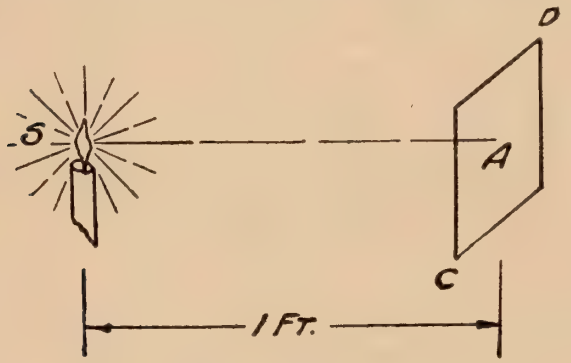

Fig. 4—The Illumination at A is 1 Foot-Candle

Care should be taken to avoid confusing the intensity of illumination on a surface as indicated by the foot-candles with the appearance as regards brightness of the surface. A grey surface lighted to an intensity of 1 foot-candle will not appear so bright as a white one, for a greater proportion of the light falling upon the plane is absorbed and lost. The brightness of an object depends upon both the intensity of illumination on it and the percentage of light that it reflects.

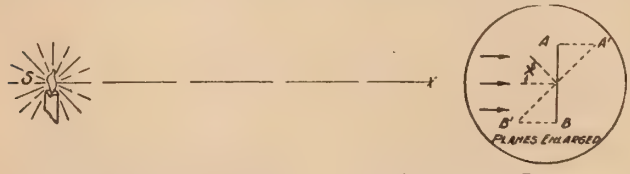

Fig. 5—The Illumination is Less on A'B' than on AB

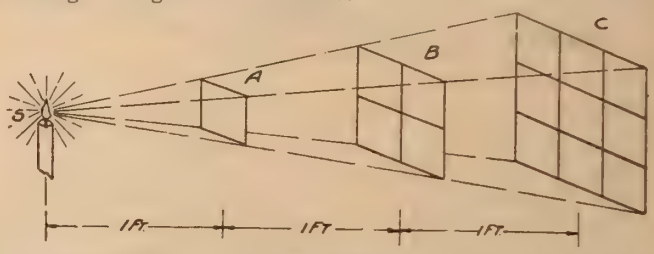

Fig. 6—The Illumination on a Surface Varies Inversely as the Square of the Distance from the Source to the Surface

Having defined the foot-candle as a unit of intensity of illumination, we are naturally interested in seeing how the intensity of illumination varies as the candle-power of the source varies, and also as the distance of the plane from the source varies. It is obvious that if in Fig. 4 instead of an intensity of 1 candle along the line SA we have an intensity of 2 candles, the illumination at A would be twice as great, and that if we have an intensity of 5 candles the illumination at A will be five times as great. Now, if we consider a source of 1 candle, as shown in Fig. 6, we know that the intensity of illumination on A, which is 1 foot distant, is 1 foot-candle. If, however, we remove the plane A and allow the same beam of light that formerly was intercepted by A to pass on to the plane B, 2 feet away, we find, as shown in the diagram, that this same beam of light would have to cover four times the area of A; and, inasmuch as we cannot get something for nothing, we would find that the average intensity on B, 2 feet away, would be only one-fourth as high as that on A, 1 foot away, or one-fourth of a foot-candle. In the same way if B also is removed and the same beam allowed to fall upon place C, 3 feet away from the source, it will be spread over an area nine times as great as A, and so on; at a distance of 5 feet we would have only one-twenty-fifth of a foot-candle. From this we deduce that the intensity of illumination falls off not in proportion to the distance, but in proportion to the square of the distance. This relation is commonly known as the inverse square law.

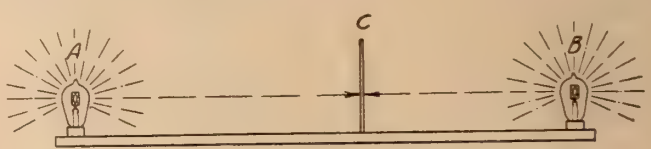

Fig. 7—Essential Parts of Horizontal Photometer

Photometry

Candle-Power and Light-Output Measurements.

Photometry is a specialized branch of the science of illumination, which in itself may be made the subject of an extended study. The man doing field work in illumination has no need for an intimate knowledge of all the details that enter into this branch of the art. In the following discussion photometers are treated in a broad, general way, and for more detailed description of these instruments the reader is referred to standard works on the subject of illumination and photometry.

A sketch of the most simple type of photometer is given in Fig. 7. The essential part of this photometer is a vertical paper screen between the lamps to be compared, at the center of which is a grease spot. When the illumination on one side of the screen is greater than that on the other the spot will on this side appear darker and on the other side lighter than the surrounding paper. By sliding the screen back and forth on the bar a position can be found where the outlines of the spot will vanish and the spot itself will disappear. When this condition obtains the illuminations on both sides of the screen are the same.

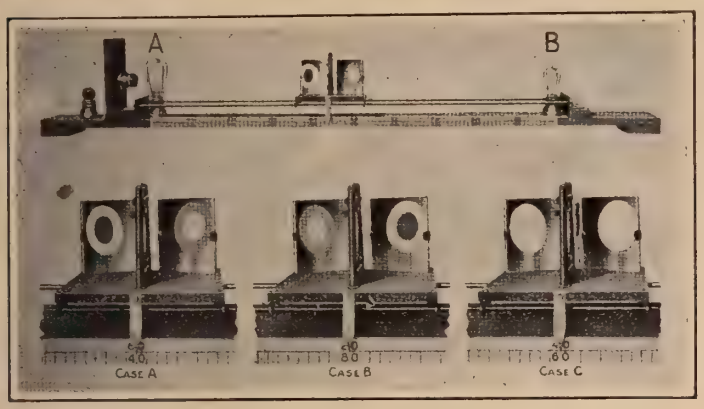

FIG. 8

In order that both sides of the screen may be seen simultaneously mirrors are mounted obliquely behind the screen. In Fig. 8, Case A, it will be noted that the spot as viewed in the left-hand mirror is darker than its surroundings and as viewed in the right-hand mirror is lighter than its surroundings, which indicates that the left-hand side of the screen is illuminated to a higher intensity than the right. In Case B of the same figure it will be noted that the conditions are reversed; therefore in this case the illumination on the right side of the screen is greater than that on the left. Somewhere between these two positions is a position at which the spot will cease to be visible, as shown in Case C of Fig. 8.

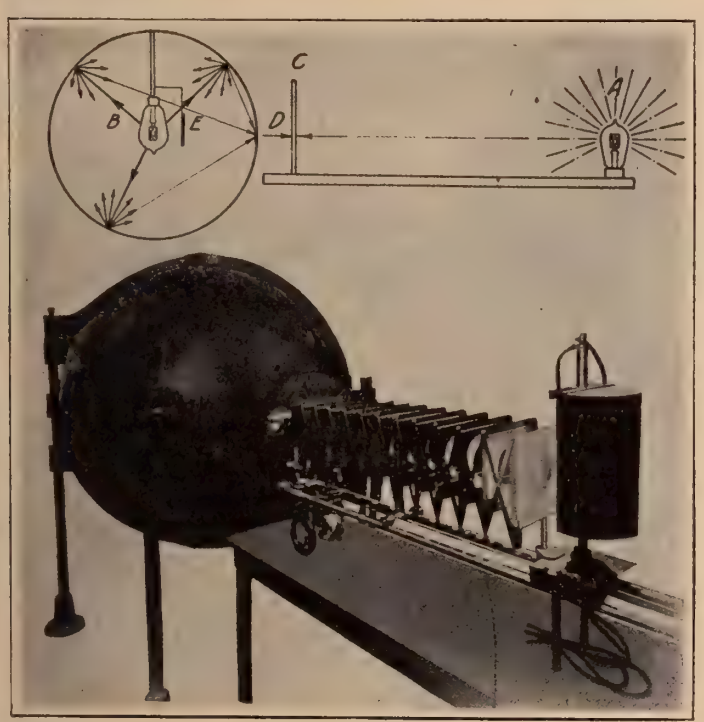

FIG. 9

From what has been said above, the intensities of illumination on both sides of the screen in Case C are equal. Now, since we have a relation between the intensities of illumination that the two lamps being compared are able to produce, we can reason back as to the relation between the candle-powers given, respectively, by lamps A and B (see Fig. 8). The scale of the photometer shows us that at a distance of 60 inches the lamp A produces an illumination equal to that which the lamp B can produce at a distance of 40 inches. At first thought we might say that A must give 3/2 as great a candle-power as B, but recalling the inverse square law, previously referred to, which states that the intensity of illumination varies inversely as the square of the distance, or what is the same thing, that the candle-power necessary to produce a given illumination varies as the square of the distance from the source to the plane, we see that the ratio of the candle-power of A to that of B, instead of being 3 to 2, is 3^2 to 2^2 or 9 to 4. The horizontal candle-power of A therefore is 2¼ times that of B. If B is a lamp of some known candle-power, the candle-power of A is determined by multiplying the candle-power of B by 2¼. The general rule, then, is that the candle-power of two lamps on a photometer are to each other as the squares of the distances from each to the screen are to each other. For accurate photometry the grease spot screen is no longer in use, but the newer and more accurate photometers are the same in principle.

The simple bar photometer measures candle-power in one direction only. If the lamp being measured is rotated about its vertical axis, its mean horizontal candle-power is obtained. In like manner, if the vertical axis of the lamp being measured is tipped and the lamp rotated on this axis, the average candle-power at any angle can be determined.

Another form of photometer, known as the sphere photometer or Ulbricht Sphere, is shown in Fig. 9. In this photometer the lamp, B, to be measured is placed at the center of a large sphere, the inside of which is painted flat white. In this sphere is a small window, D, of milk glass. The candle-power emitted by this window is compared with the candle-power of a standard lamp. The candle-power of the window computed as above is directly proportional to the mean spherical candle-power or the total lumen output of the lamp in the sphere, so that multiplying this candle-power by a constant factor which has been determined for this particular sphere gives the total lumen output direct. Thus at one reading the mean spherical candle-power or the total lumen output of a lamp can be determined.

A Penurious Employer

Mr. Percy Simser, Ottawa, Ont., writes as follows:

"Being a member of Local 257 of the I. A. T. S. E. and also a member of the National Anti-Misframe League, I take the liberty to write you these few lines to state that I was transferred from the Family theatre, where I was employed as operator, to another house by the name of Centre theatre. I was put in that house against my will, and I started there on July 29 on two Powers 6.B motor drive machines with a generator-set. I found things in very poor condition, also very poor projection, and the machines were very dirty; besides, you couldn't look through the condensers as they were so dirty. It took me all week to get cleaned up, and the pictures were everything but steady on the curtain, so I looked at the aperture plates on both machines and they were not fit for film to run on as they were worn very bad. I sent my assistant operator downstairs after the manager, so he came up and I asked him to get me two new aperture plates, but he looked at them and rubbed his finger over them and said I didn't need them. I told him the picture was everything but steady on his curtain, so he got sore and said the pictures didn't jump very much, and he said so long as the film wasn't buckling in and out the aperture plate was all right. When I couldn't make him understand anything, I went to work and took both aperture plates out and turned them around and used the other side of them. Of course, I know that this is a very poor policy, but I really couldn't stand to see the pictures jumping all over the screen. I also tightened my tension springs and by doing this I got my picture 100 per cent better, and the only trouble I have now is the picture has a little side motion on the screen, as it keeps working sideways on the screen. I would like to know how I can stop that, as it looks like the devil."

Comment: The type of "penny wise but pound foolish" manager of which our correspondent writes is fortunately becoming scarcer, and such instances of ignorance of the fundamentals of successful exhibiting, combined with miserly stinginess, do not come to light very often nowadays.

It is a downright misfortune for a capable and conscientious operator to have to work under a management which will not provide the wherewithal to put the picture properly on the screen, and if the operator is financially independent he will, of course, refuse to attempt to work under such conditions, as his reputation as a craftsman is at stake. Unfortunately, however, not all operators are so comfortably supplied with the world's goods that they can afford to select their jobs, which procedure entails periods of idleness between acceptable berths, so it happens that many an operator deserving of good working conditions is forced to "carry on"

in a manner which in no wise reflects his ambitions or his capabilities, or else face the alternative of idleness. It seems, however, that when a niggardly manager attempts to utilize machines which on account of worn parts are a menace to the condition of all films projected therewith, the operator could secure relief by calling the attention of the exchange to the existing conditions, and we would suggest that our correspondent do this, as his membership card in the National Anti-Misframe League will be a sufficient guarantee to any important exchange of his sincerity in making the complaint.

As the correspondent states, it is certainly not good practice to use the reverse side of an aperture-plate as a substitute for a new plate, and we can imagine that when his aperture-plate wears entirely through there will be some destruction of film, unless his employer "sees the light" ere then, and provides the new parts so urgently needed.

The correspondent does not state whether the side motion in his screen picture was apparent before the aperture plates were reversed or not, so we cannot state whether the side shift is caused by the new arrangement, but we recommend that the correspondent see if there is any sideways motion, or end play, in the intermittent sprocket spindle, which he may determine by grasping the intermittent sprocket and attempting to move it back and forth laterally. If there is some lost motion the bushings must be set in to remove this, and in carrying out the operation care must be taken not to get the spindle out of parallel with the cam shaft. . On the other hand, if there is lost motion between the cam and the cross, this may also be taken up while making the adjustment for the removal of the end play.

Noisy Intermittent

Mr. Robert F. Smith, Hospers, Iowa, inquires: "How can I silence the intermittent movements of my Simplex machines? Also what is the proper degree of tightness for the sprocket clamps?"

In Reply: It is the aim of all manufacturers of projecting machines to provide as silent running mechanisms as possible, and the Simplex projector is a very satisfactory machine in this respect, but unless the intermittent movement receives its share of attention ,it will soon become noisy in the case of any projector. If, for instance, the oil casing in which the Simplex intermittent operates has become dry, the movement will be more noisy in operation than when properly oiled, and as this is a common cause of noisy intermittents, it is recommended that the correspondent ascertain whether the oil-casing is supplied with oil. If the movement is found to be running dry the casing should be partially filled with oil, whereupon the noise will be decreased.

Lack of lubrication is not, however, the only cause of a noisy intermittent, for as soon as the movement becomes worn, or if it is out of adjustment, there will be considerable noise, and in order to decrease the noise the movement should be adjusted, i. e., the star set up closer to the cam if found too loose due to wear. This will temporarily lessen the noise somewhat, but in time (depending upon the amount of work performed by the machine) new intermittent parts will be necessary, and there should be no delay in securing and installing such parts, because the intermittent is the most important integral of a cine projector. It is advisable to have an extra intermittent, completely assembled, always on hand; then when it becomes time to replace parts the spare unit may be installed in the machine and the worn one sent to the manufacturer for expert adjustment and replacement of the worn parts. Although a movement which has been in use for some time may be so adjusted that there is no undue lost motion between the star and the cam, it may still be very noisy, due to the fact that the cam-pin is worn flat on one side. Only by the installation of a new pin, or preferably of a new cam, can noise be eliminated in such cases.

Another cause of noisy operation, which while due to the intermittent movement of the film, is not, strictly speaking, a noise coming from the movement itself, is the intermittent beating of the film against the stripper-plate, or lower guard, when the lower loop is made too large in threading the machine. This noise, in the case of the Simplex projector, is strictly under the control of the operator, and may be prevented by making the loop small enough so that it does not strike against the pocket in the mechanism casing.

Coming now to the idle-rollers which hold the film to the sprockets of the projector (wrongly termed sprocket clamps by the correspondent), it used to be the fashion for operators to let these down so that they bore as tightly as possible upon the sprockets. It is now generally known, however, that this is bad practice, and the most favorable passage of the film over the sprockets is secured when the parts of the idler-rollers that hold the film in place are separated from the surface of the sprocket by a slight distance about equal to twice the thickness of the film.

World Pictures Urges Operators to do Their Bit

IN view of the necessity for conserving raw film stock and releasing as many men as possible for war purposes, World Pictures calls the attention of the operators throughout the country to a manner in which they can do their bit toward winning the war.

It is estimated that fully 5,000,000 feet of film is destroyed each year through careless handling in the projection rooms of the country's theatres. This means that just that quantity of new prints must be made up, necessitating the employment of a large force of workers to turn it out, and making inroads on the supply of raw film stock and laboratory materials, not to speak of light, heat and power. All these make it necessary to draw heavily on coal stocks and labor that can be employed on other and essential work.

World Pictures suggests that all operators handle films with the greatest care, cleaning same of oil after using and making repairs neatly and doing everything to insure the utmost longevity to prints. Such organizations as the operators may be affiliated with should be approached and shown the advantage of a movement tending to promote the conservation of film.

SILVERTIP

THE STANDARD DIRECT CURRENT CARBON

Combines Satisfactorily the Features of Steady Arc and Maximum Brilliancy

The exhibitor who is progressive enough to realize the great importance of good projection, who aims to show on his screen a picture free from all defects, uses the Columbia-Silvertip combination. The high brilliancy of the light given by Silvertips permits of maximum definition and shows the picture on the screen with such reality and clearness as to meet the full approval of the audience.

The direct current arc of the Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a pure white light and flickerless illumination. The Silvertip is of small diameter and is heavily plated in order to enable it to carry the high currents which are necessary to obtain an intense white light. Its small diameter insures an absolutely steady light.

Note: Silvertips are for direct current only

FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT White A. C. Special Carbons give a pure white light of high intensity. No change of equipment necessary. Simply remove the old carbons and insert White A. C. Specials.

Notes on Metol

[Reprinted from an article by Mr. S. Wein in the Color Trade Journal, August, 1918.]

A CONSIDERABLE amount of research work was done of late by chemists in order to make the compound commercially known as "metol" and properly termed as mono-methyl-p-amido-phenol sulphate ($C_6H_4OHNH_2CH_3H_2SO_4$), which compound finds its application in photography as a developer, but it seems that they have had little if any success. As a matter of fact, metol was at one time made here in America, but owing to the fact that enough of it was not consumed to warrant its manufacture it was soon dropped by this concern. According to Norton, there were only 130,582 pounds imported for the fiscal year 1913-1914, and valued at $13,658.

Metol is supposed to be derived from p-amidophenol by substitution of one hydrogen atom of the amido (NH_2) group by a methyl (CH_2) group, and is supplied commercially in the form of a sulphate.

It was first introduced in 1891 by Dr. J. Hauff and shortly afterwards by Dr. Andresen. The patents granted to these investigators contain no reference as to the manufacture of the compound known as metol, but have special reference to its application as a photographic developer.

Eichengrun and Demeler (U. S. Pat. 696,020) obtain a compound that is almost identical with metol, it being made by dissolving 10 parts p-nitro-phenol in 8 parts of Chlor-methyl-alcohol. To this solution add 5 parts of Zinc chloride. The mixture immediately turns hot.

After twenty-four hours the new compound having the formula: C_6H_3 (CH_2Cl) $OHNO_2$ (chlor-methyl-p-nitro-phenol) is precipitated from the mixture, in the form of fine crystals or needles, its melting point being about 132°C. These needles are filtered from the solution and are purified by recrystalization from methyl-alcohol.

Subsequently a mixture prepared from the chlor-methylic-p-nitrophenol is thus obtained and the ten-fold quantity of water is heated for some time until a clear liquid or solution results. From the filtered solution the new product having the formula is precipitated on cooling in the shape of crystals, melting at about 128°C. In order to reduce the said body, 2 parts of tin are added to a mixture of 1 part methyl-p-nitrophenol and 10 parts of concentrated hydrochloric acid. The reaction goes on quietly and can be accelerated by heating. After cooling the double salt of tin of the new methyl-p-amido-phenol separates. It is dissolved in water and decomposed by a solution of sodium carbonate. The free methyl-p-amidophenol is dissolved in ether, and when the ether is extracted from this solution the salt is obtained in a solid state. The new salt has the following formula:

$$C_6H_3 (CH_2OH) OHNH_2,$$

and appears in the form of colorless needles or leaves, which are decomposed when in contact with warm air, soluble in hot water, alcohol, and in ether, melting at from 132°C. to 142°C. It forms salts with acids or alkalies, and it is therefore advisable to make a sulphate or hydrochloride of this compound in order to make the finished product more soluble in water and at the same time a stable compound.

Another interesting method of making metol (English Pat. 4,044, 1908,) is to mix 130 parts of p-chlorophenol with 270 parts of an aqueous solution of mono-methylamine (33 per cent strength) and 2 parts of copper sulphate. This mass is heated in a closed vessel to 135°C. for about 10 hours. The unaltered p-chlorophenol is then removed by steam distillation, sulphuric acid having previously been added to the mass to render it acid. From the residue in the still the mono-methyl-p-amidophenol may be separated in the form of its sulphate by concentrating the liquid; the sulphate is then isolated in the usual way.

Characteristics

Metol Comes in the Form of a Buff-Colored Acicular Crystal

Heated in a sublimation tube, it swells up and chars without fusion. It emits an objectionable nitrogenous odor (like burning bones) and whitish fumes. It gives a mixture of whitish and tarry sublimates, the free base melting at 87°C. The metol itself melts at 245° and 257°C.

It is very soluble in hot water, but insoluble (or very sparingly soluble) in alcohol, ether and chloroform. The free base is, however, soluble in organic solvents.

The solution boiled with some concentrated solution of caustic soda gives practically no coloration, but emits a nauseous odor (resembling that of phenylisonitrile). If the solution is made alkaline with caustic soda, the base is liberated, but remains in solution, unless the solution is very strong. On agitating with ether (the ether does not change the oxidation coloring matter) and evaporating the ether on a watch glass, the base remains as oily drops, which soon set to a mass of interlacing acicular or rosette-shaped crystals.

By adding some caustic soda to its aqueous solution and then dropping in some dilute sulphuric acid, while immersed in ice cold water, there is precipitated a mass of extremely fine felt-like needles. Note: This is a nitroso derivative of metol. The metol solution must not be too dilute, and the precipitate only appears after standing a few minutes, cooling and shaking.

Solution of chlorinated lime gives no precipitate, but the solution slowly becomes a fine purple-violet in color (distinction from p-phenylenediamine).

Ferrous sulphate gives no coloration. Very dilute ferric chloride gives very slowly a violet coloration; in excess it gives a deep brown (quinone) on warming (distinction from p-phenylenediamine).

The fact that metol yields a quinone shows that it is a derivative of phenol, and not of cresol, as stated by some authorities.

Ten c.c. of raw milk treated with 0.05 gram of metol and adding recently boiled and cooled water (distilled) and further adding one drop of hydrogen peroxide (20 volumes) gives a dark "café-au-lait" coloration. Boiled milk gives no coloration.

Applied Optics.

The Computation of Optical Systems
Being the
"Handbuch der Angewandten Optik"
of Dr. A. Steinheil and Dr. E. Voit.
Translated and Edited by
J. W. French, B. Sc.
Vol. I.
Publisher: Blackie & Son, Ltd.,
50 Old Bailey, London, England.
Price, 12 Shillings 6 Pence.

While the past three decades have seen the appearance of some notably important and valuable works on the theory of optical instruments, the practical side of optical engineering has not received so much consideration, but the republication of the useful treatise of Steinheil and Voit (originally published in 1891) goes a considerable way toward relieving this discrepancy, and will prove a valuable aid to the student, the designer and the amateur constructor of optical systems.

This work comprises the system of trigonometrical calculation devised by Dr. Adolph Steinheil, the noted Munich optician, and his scientific collaborator, Dr. E. Voit, and is founded upon the important researches of Prof. L. von Seidel, whose theory and equations for the elimination of the monochromatic aberrations have received attention in all modern works on optical theory. The fact that this system of calculation is employed by the Steinheil firm is a guarantee of its value and usefulness, as the objectives of that maker have an enviable reputation, and the reader of the work now being considered gains the benefit of the authors' years of research in their efforts to perfect a system which permits the computation of objectives with the greatest degree of accuracy combined with the least amount of labor.

In preparing the English translation the work has been rearranged by Mr. French, and has been considerably improved thereby. The complete work, of which Vol. I of the translation is only a part, takes up the computation of both single lenses and achromatic doublets of various forms, but Vol. I of the translation ends with the consideration of single lenses, and the portion on achromatic doublets will appear as Vol. II. Accordingly the initial chapters of the original work, which deal with the determination of refractive indices and the fundamentals of achromatism, have been transposed to Vol. II (where they will fit in competently), and Vol. I commences with the laws of the refraction of light, which are immediately followed up by the system of notation and sign convention employed throughout the work. This latter appeared as one of the appendices in the original (German) edition, and Mr. French, the translator, states that it will also be included, for convenience, in Vol. II of his translation.

A feature of the English translation is the elegant manner in which the diagrams have been reproduced, these being printed in two colors, and appearing as full page plates instead of being inserted in the text as in the original edition. Two of these plates are entirely new, and will give the student of the work a clear idea of the magnitudes, angles and directions represented by the various symbols and signs used in the formulæ, thus enabling him to grasp at once the application of the computational methods which follow.

Particularly valuable is the good exposition of the location and properties of the cardinal points of lenses (i. e., the Gauss points and the focal points), which are so seldom thoroughly explained in optical text-books of elementary or practical nature.

After this comes the study and comparison of various forms of lenses from the viewpoint of the influence of various aberrations upon their performance, and trigonometrical formulæ are then laid down for the tracing of rays through the various possible forms of single lenses, in order that their aberrations may be exactly ascertained.

Spherical aberration of axial and extra-axial points is considered, and numerous worked-out sample computations are supplied which make clear the application of the formulæ and the sequence of the calculations.

Wide fields and their inherent aberrations, such as astigmatism and distortion are not extensively dealt with in the work of Steinheil and Voit, which rather specializes in the treatment of narrow fields, such as those of telescopes, but it was the intention of the authors to publish other volumes, which, however, did not appear, due perhaps to the death of Dr. A. Steinheil many years ago.

The volume here reviewed will, however, always fill a respected place in optical literature, and Mr. French, the translator of the English edition, is to be thanked for having selected so useful a work as the vehicle for his efforts.

Volume II of the translation dealing with achromatic doublets, is of corresponding interest and value, and will be mentioned in these pages upon its appearance.

Musically Interpreting the Film

AN inquiry has just reached the editor of how and what one should play for comedy-drama and in the course of answering the correspondent, it seemed the best explanation given would be to advise the player to look at the film from a musical angle, or in other words, as the progress of the picture was developed on the screen, to classify every scene and subdivision into musical terms.

This is the system in use among all those who are engaged in musically interpreting pictures and is the only one which experience has shown to be at all times practical. In the old barnstorming days, when the heavy drama occupied the footlights, the struggle, burglary scene, the intensely pathetic or the heroic situation has its musical accompaniment.

"Nothing new under the sun" is firmly demonstrated by music for the film, because such music is a development of music with the spoken drama. Celluloid drama is but an opportunity to develop the music to a much greater extent, owing to the silence instead of the spoken voice.

As an example of how to subdivide the film in musical terms, the first essential is to select the situation for the THEME and then decide the character of the composition to be used. If the hero or heroine is experiencing all kinds of difficulties and troubles and is of a moody or pensive disposition, no great difficulty will be found in selecting a fitting and suitable composition. Be they in a bright, joyous, winsome, carefree or gay mood, readily the idea of a novelette, caprice or badinage suggests itself.

If the scene on the screen is of action leading to agitation, music of similar characteristic can easily be secured. Scenes of such character as mystery, gruesomeness, agitation, dramatic tension, heavy dramatic, emotional, pathetic and passion will frequently be depicted on the screen, and material of similar musical value is to-day available to the musician who realizes it is his task to musically portray what his audience is viewing.

The day of commencing a program of music similar to what is played in a hotel or restaurant, usually comprising an opening march, then a waltz, an overture, an operatic selection and a couple of popular numbers of the moment is completely past. There must be no deviation from the rule that only such music which appropriately interprets the screen action should be used.

However, there never was a rule whose value could not be proven by its exception, and the exception to the foregoing statements is the suggestions for neutral scenes. Here is where a musician can display his greatest judgment. To select a characteristic which is of a similar order as the screen action requires no great musical experience, ability or knowledge, but to balance the rest of the musical program for the picture in such a manner that the contrast is pleasing to the ear, harmonious and not at all distracting requires care and forethought. If the picture has need of a number of novelettes in a neutral scene, to continue further compositions of this kind is poor reasoning. In a neutral scene, there is an opportunity to perform contrasting tempos which will then help the following scene considerably.

By such methods as these players will find that film interpretation is not a problem but a very interesting pleasure, and if the above suggestions are diligently followed, they will not only give satisfaction to themselves, but also to their audiences.

New American Photoplayer Attachment

Announcement has been made by the American Photoplayer Company of the perfection of a new attachment for the American which makes possible the sustaining of the bass by the operator using his feet. This new attachment may be used on all previously manufactured instruments by this company, and will fulfill the want of organists who have been using the American.

Kansas City Liberty Is Under Way

THE new Liberty theatre in Kansas City, Mo., is under way, after experiencing its grand opening on July 11. The theatre, views of which are shown herewith, is on Main street, and seats 1,200 persons. It is said that the house could seat 200 more, but that number of chairs was left out to gain more room in the foyer. This leads to the plausible belief that the management, at the head of which is Samuel Harding, had the comfort of the patrons in mind when the chairs were installed. In fact, an announcement made at the opening of the theatre was somewhat as follows:

A visitor will puzzle as to whether the Liberty theatre is more aptly described as "the house comfortable" or as "the theatre beautiful." A combination of artists' skill with the most practical ideas of convenience and comfort, with good taste in every detail and appointment, will make the Liberty theatre from tomorrow on a show place in all senses—a place to which one's guests may be taken with a feeling of satisfaction and some pride.

The exterior design of the theatre is a modern adaptation of Italian renaissance style of architecture, and is executed in polychrome terra cotta of old ivory and soft browns.

The entrance lobby is paneled in madri vein and Cardiff green marbles. From the lobby is the main auditorium foyer, with passage ways to the auditorium proper and two marble staircases leading to the mezzanine floor and balcony.

The auditorium proper is divided into two sections with loge seats in the center. The arrangement of the mezzanine floor provides for a manager's office, ladies' rest room and gentlemen's smoking room. The beautiful mezzanine foyer is furnished in enamel wicker furniture, with cretonne upholstery.

Decorations throughout are in old ivory, soft browns and old gold. The side wall panels have a specially designed treatment in plaster relief ornaments of the Adams period. The draperies of the boxes and screen are of the Rose Du Barry shade of silk velour.

With the refinement of the motion picture art, music has become an increasingly important phase of the performance. The announcement of the music staff begins with two names that carry weight even in the most critical circles:

To be orchestra director: Frederick J. Curth, in 1912, 1913 and 1914 concert master of the Kansas City Symphony Orchestra.

To be organist: Elwyn Owen, formerly organist at the Willis Wood, brought back from Eastern engagements by the Liberty theatre managers.

Mr. Curth will direct an orchestra of fourteen to sixteen pieces. It goes without saying this will be an orchestra of superior capability, while Mr. Curth's talent as a violinist has earned him a reputation fully equal to the one he bears as a successful director.

The pipe organ is a splendid instrument, a beautiful Austin organ of special design, with echo organ. It will give Mr. Owen a worthy instrument of expression. Many feature numbers will be played by the orchestra and organ combined.

In obtaining the service of a widely recognized musical director, the Hardings establish the plane on which music will be maintained at the Liberty theatre.

Every six minutes air in the Liberty theatre will be entirely changed. Due to the height of the ceilings and a special ventilating system, it may be 105 outside and still comfortable within the playhouse. The ventilating system, including a large Sturtevant fan capable of changing the air throughout the building ten times an hour, was installed by the John J. Sherin Company, which also furnished and installed the plumbing and heating systems.

The copper canopy in front of the theatre, executed from the architect's plans by the Kornbrodt Kornice Kompany, is a superior example of such work.

Another feature quite in harmony with the theatre is the art glass windows, furnished and installed by the Associated Glass Workers. The motif of the mask on the exterior design is used in two of the windows. These windows were executed in imported Belgium glass made by mills since crushed beneath the foot of the invader.

Simplex Reports Additional Sales

Sales of Simplex projectors recently made on the Pacific Coast indicate that warm weather has in no way affected the picture business there. The demand for Simplex projectors has been greater than in previous corresponding seasons.

In the northwest a number of these machines have been installed by the Seattle Stage Lighting Company in various Government departments and training camps, including the United States Naval Training Station at the University of Washington, Seattle, and the Victory theatre and Depot Brigade, Camp Louis, American Lake, Seattle.

Among the Seattle theatres in which Simplex projectors have been installed are: the Flag, Classique, Oak, Rex, Colonial and the Rialto. Recent installations have been made by the Brock Photoplay Supply Company of San Francisco in Portland, Oregon, in the following theatres: Kohvolvi, Majestic, Star, Brooklyn and the Strand.

A number of machines have been placed in Los Angeles theatres by J. Slipper & Company, who recently became agents for projectors of this make.

"The Great Love"
(D. W. Griffith-Artcraft—Six Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE reviewer approached the Strand theatre last week with fear and trepidation. He had heard that D. W. Griffith's latest opus, "The Great Love," was not a credit to the leading picture producer of the land. Whisperings had reached his ears that the continuity was wandering, that the story was anything but effective and that the majority of the scenes were the remains of those in "Hearts of the World."

Such criticism, of course, is the heritage of the great.

The reviewer left the Strand theatre in an entirely different frame of mind. "The Great Love" is a great credit to the leading producer. The continuity—well, one must have a metallic heart to consider it, inasmuch as it carries such a sweet story. The story is simple, like all of Griffith's, and it is human and thrilling and beautifully pictured. And no leavings of "Hearts of the World" are recognizable.

Where lies Griffith's art? For "The Great Love" is yet another pulsating example of it. It lies in his wonderful knowledge of human nature—of life. That is its chief source. Of course, it has many complementary assets. His use of contrast, his eye for the artistic and appropriate in scenes and settings, the wonderful photographic results achieved by his cameraman. But Griffith knows human nature from A to Z. He can hold one spellbound over a simple little love scene because he has staged it with reality. His lovers are people that bring smiles and tears because they are so alive and human.

The love story of Jim Young of Youngstown, Pa., and Susie Broadplains, the little girl of an English village, is filled with delightful touches that make it fascinating. It would be quite as interesting, perhaps, without the spy-pacifist thread which is interwoven. This side of the action is called melodrama. But for what reason is not clear. Time was when all spies were melodramatic characters. Now, however, they are only too natural. And Griffith did not go altogether to his imagination for the spies. He tells us at the beginning of the picture that his only departure from reality with respect to these spies was that he caused them to kill themselves. History has it that they were shot in the Tower of London.

But this background of spies and their plotting against England proves a thrilling setting for the little love story, and leads up to a sweeping climax when Jim by a trick saves a munitions plant from the bombs of the Hun. Griffith has secured some wonderful effects, showing the air raid of Zeppelins and airplanes over the English village. How he secured the results is, as yet, an unexplained mystery.

Robert Harron is Jim Young, who enlists in the ranks of Canada's first army. He is the boy before his baptism of fire—the man afterwards. His performance from boy to man is our idea of perfect picture acting. He even has the fine air of swank that the young soldier is proud of. And Lillian Gish is Susie. She, too, passes from girlhood to womanhood in the course of the picture, and shows the transition with the same realistic ease as does Harron. Miss Gish is the center of some beautifully lighted close-ups, back-lighted and dimmed as with mist.

Henry Walthall comes back under Griffith's direction as the heavy. His work always rises measurably when working with his first picture director. He achieves results by a mere turn of the head—a gleam of the eyes or a nervous gesture of the hands. He is still, in our opinion, the greatest actor on the screen.

Gloria Hope, George Fawcett, Rosemary Theby and Maxfield Stanley are others who take prominent roles in the picture. Mr. Fawcett does some fine comedy work. The other three players are artists under the guidance of Griffith. George Siegman has a small part as a "pacifist."

Then there are the women of England's royal families, including the queen-mother, ex-Premier Asquith's daughter, Lady Diana Manners and many others who show the manner in which England's women are contributing their efforts to the reconstruction. There are a few scenes at the front, including one tragic scene of the death of Jim Young's pal, who "goes West" with a smile. There are shots of the munitions factories, one or two of marching troops. But it is the story that is always uppermost and of that it is the love story that gives the most pleasure.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jim Young (Robert Harron), of Youngstown, Pa., is off to Canada soon after the outbreak of the war to enlist. In England he is stationed at a training camp near Broadplains, and in time he meets Susie Broadplains (Lillian Gish), daughter of the Rev. Josephus (George Fawcett). Their youthful romance starts, but Fate intervenes. There is a certain Sir Roger (Henry Walthall), who holds lands supposedly in Italy, but in reality across the border in Austria. He is the man that a group of German spies of which Mademoiselle Corintee (Rosemary Theby) is a member, plan to win over to them. Sir Roger deserts Jessie Lovewell (Gloria Hope), and comes to Broadplains. When Susie inherits a sum of money, and the Broadplains family move into larger quarters he is interested. And Jim is peeved with the result that he sets out for the front, still at odds with her. On his return she is married to Sir Roger. But she has discovered his affair with Jessie, and will have nothing to do with him. Mademoiselle Corintee has Sir Roger in her power. Finally she receives instructions from Mr. Seymoure (George Siegmann), the chief of the band, to ride down a certain road toward a certain arsenal at a certain hour with a searchlight streaming skyward—to light the way for the enemy bombing fleet. The man who was to have driven was captured. Mademoiselle Corintee cannot drive so she easily persuades Sir Roger to take her out. And down the road they speed, searchlight blazing, while above the German airfleet follows. Jim is home, an officer, and it is he who gives chase, finally smashing the light on the machine with his cane, turning his own upward and leading the airfleet to an empty meadow where the bombs rain down harmlessly. As for Sir Roger, he takes his own life, and Susie goes in for hospital work, and so together she and Jim serve the cause of the Great Love.

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

THIS Bluebird feature may be said to carry its lesson—not a new one by any means—and in its flight gives Fritzi Brunette a rattling good chance to display her histrionic powers. Her execution, too, is really good for one of so small experience in starring roles, and much may yet be heard of her.

The story evolves around the hackneyed theme of a rich roue enticing a poor young girl to do things she never would do otherwise, than through an empty promise of marriage. There is plenty of philosophy in it, and it is fine in its unfolding. The continuity is good, but it is not until the last reel that it rises to any great dramatic height, and then the thrills and surprises come in a bunch making a finish that will long be remembered.

Chas. Gerrard as Trenwith is well cast, as also is Lewis Cody as John Hayward, and both do good work.

Douglas Gerrard directed and has made a decided success of what under other conditions might have developed a questionable picture, for although the facts are there, they are so neatly veiled as to offend none.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marjorie North (Fritzi Brunette) is a typical American girl, who worked in a big downtown department store, accepted the attentions of Gordon Trenwith (Chas. Gerrard), son of the owner of the store. He appeared to be a good man; utterly unlike the usual villain. But under his thick veneer of suave kindliness was a yellow soul. Marjorie realized this for the first time when her baby came into the world nameless. Claire Morgan (Myrtle Reeves), Marjorie's room-mate, marries Jerry Thompson, a young inventor. They live happily together and take Marjorie in.

John Hayward (Lewis Cody), a poor, but ambitious lawyer, asks Marjorie to marry him, but she cannot do so and sends him away. He loses track of her, but still hopes.

Three years later Majorie's baby is killed by falling from a window. Marjorie, alone and forsaken by her old friends, is teaching music in a dingy little side-street apartment.

Hayward, now a prosperous lawyer, is consulted by Thompson on an invention he has just perfected. As the two go over the matter of patents Hayward learns from Thompson that Marjorie is still unmarried and goes to her. She still refuses to marry him. From him, however, she learns that Hayward's sister is about to marry Trenwith.

Determined that Hayward's sister's life shall not be ruined by Trenwith, she confesses her shame to Hayward. In a terrific fight Trenwith is killed. The bullet that killed him was sent by his secretary, who availed himself of the scuffle between the two men to avenge an old score of his own, in which his wife was concerned.

Marjorie finds happiness with Hayward, who believes that one mistake on the part of a woman he loves is not beyond forgiveness.

"Green Eyes"

(Paramount-Ince—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

JUST what the Green-Eyed Monster, Jealousy, can do to a perfectly happy married couple is dramatically set forth in this Ince picture, which features the ever-refreshing Dorothy Dalton. From the standpoint of dramatic intensity, "Green Eyes" is quite the best of her Paramount subjects. The story, by Ella Stuart Carson, was handled expertly as a scenario and was produced with real skill by Director R. William Neill. The domestic havoc that petty jealousy is responsible for is considerable, and it is fashioned in a highly sustained and gripping story.

Miss Dalton receives sterling support from Jack Holt, who plays her husband; from Emory Johnson, as the husband's brother, and from Doris Lee, as the brother's tearful fiancee, who provides the comedy relief. Robert McKim is the villain, which is 'nuf said, while Clyde Benson in a character role completes the cast.

Credit must be given G. Harold Percival for the excellent settings he has provided for "Green Eyes" and to the cameraman, who has done a superlative job.

An animated figure of Jealousy in the subtitles adds much to the effectiveness of the production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Shirley (Dorothy Dalton), wife of Pearson Hunter (Jack Holt), is from the north. The traditions of her husband's south are dear to her, but she sees no harm in cultivating his acquaintances. Pearson discovers her one day in the company of Alexander Chapman (Robert McKim), an idler and waster. As a result, they quarrel, but it ends in Pearson's jealousy being calmed. Pearson's younger brother, Morgan (Emory Johnson), arrives home, and is warmly welcomed by his fiancee, Margery (Doris Lee). In her friendship toward Morgan, Shirley arouses the jealousy of Margery, who goes to Pearson with her troubles. He is furious. At a dance at the Hunter home, Chapman arrives half intoxicated. To prevent trouble, Morgan takes him out in the garden. Chapman drops some insulting remarks regarding Shirley and Morgan strikes him to the ground. He returns to the house. Jim Webb (Clyde Benson), a poor piece of "white trash," dying of consumption, strangles Chapman because he struck him down once when he asked for help. A servant discovers Chapman's dead body, and tells Morgan. The young man believes himself the murderer. In fear he seeks counsel from Shirley. While she is trying to calm him Pearson enters. Despite Shirley's efforts he discovers Morgan. Morgan would tell the story, but Shirley silences him. In utter despondency, Pearson leaves the room. He walks in the garden and discovers the dead body, and he also hears Webb's confession of the crime. The truth of the entire situation dawns on him, and he rushes back to beg Shirley's pardon, which she gladly grants.

"Riddle Gawne"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"RIDDLE GAWNE," by virtue of its virile action, the clever manner in which the author has sustained the suspense to the climax, the nature of the story and the typical Hart role that has been given the star to interpret, crowds its way right up in the front lines and retains its position as one of Hart's best. The one objection to its brutality may be sustained in the minds of some and overruled in the minds of others. Some of the shooting might have been eliminated, but a Hart picture without a six-shooter working on high, is hardly to be imagined.

William S. Hart is the star and also director. It is well to mention that from a directorial standpoint, this is the best that Director Hart has turned out. The story is an adaptation from Charles Alden Seltzer's "The Vengeance of Jefferson Gawne." The author's title is the appropriate of the two, and tells the purpose for its writing in the titled words. Joe August, who has done so much of Mr. Hart's photography, was at the camera when this was shot.

The star has one of those sympathetic roles in which he always shines. As Riddle Gawne he is revengeful, but the cause and effect as given by the author are equally balanced. After it is over, we all come to the conclusion that even though Riddle does live up to the name, he was perfectly justified. The love element has been brought out in the right proportions, and the contrast gives it the trend of a powerful dramatic subject. Katherine MacDonald is seen again opposite the star in the principal feminine role. Her work is finished. Lon Chaney has a prominent character role, and plays it up to the minute. Milton Ross has been given prominence. Gretchen Lederer, Gertrude Short, Leon Kent and E. B. Tilton are seen to good advantage.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Riddle Gawne (William S. Hart) lives with his niece on a Western ranch. He devotes his live to bringing to justice the man who had murdered his younger brother and ran away with his faithless wife. He is the enemy of Hame Bozzam (Lon Chaney), leader of a gang of cattle rustlers. Kathleen Harkless (Katherine MacDonald), an Eastern girl, comes into his life. Bozzam resolves to make Katherine his wife, and to facilitate matters orders Riddle Gawne's death. Riddle is shot and seriously wounded but recovers. Blanche Dillon (Gretchen Lederer), the plaything of Bozzam, nurses Riddle back to health. She contrives to poison Riddle's mind against Gawne.

When Riddle recovers, he plans a crusade against Bozzam's life. When Bozzam feels that he is the victor, he boldly states that it was he who murdered Riddle's younger brother. Riddle comes out victorious and wins the girl.

"Her Only Way"

(Select—Six Reels)

NORMA TALMADGE in a "dream" picture—not exactly what we would choose for Miss Talmadge because after it has run its course, that's all it is—a dream. The veneer is scratched by the events in the climax and beneath we see nothing that appeals to us as being real. The appealing strength of Miss Talmadge's efforts throughout three or four of the six reels, is lost by the sudden revelation that all has been a dream. But this fact affects nothing but the story. Miss Talmadge's work in the role of Lucille Westbrook is of the same finished brand that has characterized all her efforts before the camera-depth of feeling, strength of dramatic interpretation, perfect poise, balanced harmony between the two extremes—comedy and emotion and every glance from her eyes and every interpretive movement spelling the reality. All this is felt by an audience before the climax. When Lucille wakens and the "dream" picture comes to light, all the appealing force that the preceding episodes of the drama had put forth vanish and we are left with the thought—it's only a dream. The realism that it all has inspired vanishes and the wonderful performance that Miss Talmadge had given rises in smoke and dwindles away with the "dream."

The "dream" stuff has been done before. It has never made a success on the speaking stage or has it on the screen, although it can come nearer the reality via the screen than it can on the stage. For a "dream" picture it has been done with all possible care. Sidney Franklin, who directed, has worked to the climax in a clever manner and Mary Murillo made the screen adaptation from George Scarborough's work, with equal care. But despite this care in writing the continuity and in the production which it has been given by Director Franklin, "Her Only Way Out," is still a "dream" and we maintain that despite the ability of the artist, whether he be playwright, director or scenarioist or whether the star be of the unquestionable ability of a Norma Talmadge, this idea of the heroine or hero waking to find that it has all been a dream, will never make a drama, either on screen or stage, that will remain longer with an audience than the time it takes to reach the climax.

Director Franklin has opened with a true-to-life comedy touch that gives every assurance of something human and appealing to follow. And so it does until the climax for we will wager that there isn't a person who will see this picture, who will even surmise that the major portion of the action, happens in a dream.

A slight hint is given when Lucille drops to the couch after Paul Belmont leaves, but it is nothing unusual and might suggest, as it will to the majority, that Lucille is discouraged with the thought that she will be compelled to marry the man she does not love.

The court scene has been played up big by Director Franklin and may it be said that not a detail of the procedure in a court-room during a murder trial, was missed by him. The action was carried out in perfect similarity to the actuality with the one exception of allowing Lucille to rush to the judge's bench after the verdict had been rendered. Without exception every director who has ever staged a court-room scene, has had the heroine or the hero as the case might be, do this same thing. It's all wrong. In the first place, no one would get further than their seat in a court room before they would be in the hands of an attendant. They would never reach the judge's bench and it is hardly possible that they would get beyond the seat they occupy.

The interior sets used in this production are all that could be imagined. They have been builded with infinite care. The action moves swiftly and there is never a moment that an audience feels that this or that episode has been put in to make for a set number of reels. Mr. Scarborough's plot resembles in a good many respects, the plot of a certain Broadway success, during the past season.

Eugene O'Brien again appears opposite Miss Talmadge as leading man. His is the same careful, finished work that has been noticed in former pictures in which he has supported Miss Talmadge. In certain episodes of the picture Mr. O'Brien could have "overdone" things if he wasn't the actor that he is. Ramsey Wallace does a fine bit of work in the role of the semi-villain. Mr. Wallace, although not as well known as most actors on the screen, is entitled to place with the best. E. A. Warren has a minor role which he handles well. Jobyna Howland has a vampire role and is seen to fine advantage. Albert Moses and Ed Weynard were at the camera and they registered some pretty shots in the open and had their lights on the job in the studio.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lucille Westbrook (Norma Talmadge) comes home from boarding school and finds that her father has been ruined financially. She is confronted with the problem of marrying the man she does not love and retrive the losses that her father had lost, or lose everything and marry the man she loves. She is urged by her guardian (her father having died), to accept the proposal of Paul Belmont (Ramsey Wallace), a wealthy broker. Paul proposes and she tells him to return that night and she will give him her answer. In the meantime Joseph Marshall (Eugene O'Brien), a young lawyer, has learned that she is considering Belmont and he denounces her for selling herself for riches. Belmont leaves and Lucille falls on the couch to debate the matter. She dreams that she accepts Belmont and that soon after their marriage, her husband returns to an old love, Mrs. Randolph (Jobyna Howland). Marshall has been successful as a lawyer and is mentioned for District Attorney. Later Belmont disregards his wife's feelings, altogether, and spends most of his time with Mrs. Randolph. Lucille goes to her husband and tells him that she will not contest a divorce. The trial is had and Belmont is granted the divorce after Belmont has "framed" Marshall and Lucille. After the trial, Lucille returns home resolved to avenge the wrong. She sees Belmont pay his lawyer and learns that it all had been "framed." She surprises them and orders Belmont to advance. As he does so, she shoots him dead. She then turns the revolver on herself and falls lifeless. The door-bell rings and she wakes to find that Belmont has come for his answer. She says no without hesitating. Marshall arrives and the two are united.

JESSE L. LASKY followed a good "hunch" and incidentally demonstrated to the satisfaction of all, that he is a wizard at choosing winners, when he signed Lila (Cuddles) Lee, to star in Paramount pictures. Her first effort before the camera, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," written by Tom Gallon, scenarioized by Edith Kennedy and produced under the direction of George Melford, is prima facie evidence of this assertion, or opinion, whichever you will.

"Cuddles" is in a class all by herself. She is distinctive. There isn't even a near-replica of her style or type, now working before the camera. You may have in mind one or perhaps two, ingenue types seen in minor supporting roles, who are something like "Cuddles" but there are none in the world of stardom. "Cuddles" is distinctive; can tell a long story with those big, beautiful black eyes; can express true meaning, can display a wealth of glossy black hair that defies competition and can leave an impression that keeps pulling at your heart strings, calling for more of this little artist. She isn't an actress. She doesn't try to be. Unconsciously she enacts the part of Bessie Meggison, first of the tenements, and then for one beautiful month the little mistress of a palatial country home, prompted by an art that is given being, not in the mind of a director but in the mind of a latent spring, ready to gush, gurgle or flow placidly forth with the proper incentive. The incentive here was, first of all, an ideal role and a story that takes a little make-believe girl of the tenements to the land of her dreams. She feels her part. She does not leave the impression that regardless of events she will some day live in a palace. But from her introduction in the homely attire of the little tenement girl and her "excursions" on the good ship, "Make Believe," anchored in her back yard under the clothes-line, until we find her strolling with a care-free heart about the beautiful grounds of young Byfield's country home, she lives in hopes but never for an instant leaves the impression that—"well I am acting for the movies and if the script says so why of course I will be mistress of the land of my dreams." There is none of this feeling expressed. The part comes perfectly natural to her and from the initial flash of the little star until we find her returning, with heavy heart, to her old home in the tenements, she is Bessie Meggison and not Lila Lee.

"WE MUST HAVE NEW PLOTS"

By Frederick Palmer, President Palmer Photoplay Corporation, Los Angeles

PRODUCERS, directors and scenario editors face an actual shortage of good scenarios. Throughout the motion picture world is heard the cry for good material. Able writers, working at top speed, cannot keep up with present requirements. New scenarios must come from somewhere. And they must come now, and continuously. For the public's demand for entertainment must be supplied without intermission.

Frederick Palmer (Creator of the Palmer Plan)

Endless Material is at Hand

It is time for producers to draw upon America's hundred million brains. There lie the stories and ideas—in these hundred million human minds. Thousands of Americans have tried to write scenarios—but rejection slips have dampened their ardor. Rejection slips, unfortunately, have been sent to writers of many a worthy plot because the plots were not constructed according to studio practice. Many a worthy plot has gone back wholly unread; for directors and editors haven't time to wade through reams of amateurish "literature" not suitably written for the screen. And directors and editors cannot be expected to give up precious time telling even the most promising writers how to construct their plots. So here we are—the country's fifth industry—facing a disastrous shortage of material; and with thousands craving the opportunity to supply it.

Good Ideas Plus Good Training

The time has come to draft the ideas of the masses. But first, training must be given to the budding writers—training that will enable them to write acceptable scenarios. And training facilities are now available for the first time. Under my direction, the Palmer Photoplay Corporation is accepting enrollments of ambitious men and women who earnestly desire to learn how to put their scenario ideas into proper form for the screen.

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation hopes and expects to be successfully helpful to writers and producers. Advisory counsel and frank criticism are given under the Palmer Plan, which should not be confused with so-called schools or correspondence courses in scenario writing.

The Palmer Plan assures to producers an elimination bureau where the life of mediocre scenarios will be cut short. The Palmer stamp of approval will be given only to scenarios which merit the attention of a producer.

I cannot tell our whole story in this space, but my booklet, "The Secret of Successful Scenario Writing," relates our aims fully. This free book also contains many gratifying letters of indorsement from leaders in the motion picture world. The Palmer Plan is honest, sincere and thorough. Here are a few of our references:

is not to be a beginner longer than it takes "The Cruise of the Make-Believes" to make a round of the Paramount exchanges and the theatres of the country. The public is going to fall madly in love with "Cuddles," her kiddish ways, her big black eyes and her pictures. She isn't going to push all the other young stars in the background and be a big Ego, but she is going to take her place with the best of them, and if Paramount continues to furnish her the proper stories and not try to make of her anything but just a little girl, with black hair and eyes and a beautiful face, "Cuddles" is going to bear out the truth of this statement. Here's more power to you.

Harrison Ford is seen opposite "Cuddles" in the leading man's role and Mr. Ford should be given a permanent berth beside the little star. His work in her first picture is all that it could be. Raymond Hatton in the role of the father, gives one of his most finished character portrayals and adds not a little comedy to this offering. Parks Jones shouldn't wear his hat, and especially a silk hat, around a young lady's room, so persistently. We will give him credit for taking it off when he left after quite some stay. This oversight can be laid at the door of Director Melford. Spottiswoode Aitken is given a fairly prominent character role and he does credit to it. Our old friend, Bud Duncan, of "Ham and Bud" comedy fame, is seen in a comedy character role. Eunice Moore, Maym Kelso, Nina Byron, William McLaughlin, Jane Wolff and John McKinnon are seen in minor roles. Director Melford never failed to take advantage of the many opportunities offered by the script to get over some good human and comedy touches. When he takes Bessie on the "cruise of the make-believe" he is not a bit stingy with the class of country home or entertainment he has to offer. Some of the most beautiful exteriors that have been seen on the screen for some time are registered in this production. The photography, aided by excellent lighting and the California sun, is up-to-the-minute.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bessie Meggison (Lila Lee) lives with her father, Daniel Meggison (Raymond Hatton) in the tenement district. Bessie is of an imaginative frame of mind and lives with but one ambition, to go to the land of her dreams—beautiful clothes, a beautiful home and lots of fun. The father is a shiftless sort, always bragging of what he is going to do and how much money he is going to make. Bessie has the greatest confidence in her father and believes that some day he will make enough money to give her what her heart desires.

Gilbert Byfield (Harrison Ford), son of wealth and ambitious to become a writer, goes into the tenement district, to live while he writes a book on conditions in this district. He chooses a room next to that occupied by Bessie. In Bessie's back yard she has fixed up something resembling a ship and here she goes each day to take the "cruise of the make-believe." Gilbert meets her and there springs up a mutual love. He visits her father and promises to give him a certain sum of money and the right to use his country estate if he will take Bessie there and let her have a good time and realize her dreams. He buys new clothes for himself and Bessie and away they start for the country home. For a month, nothing is too good for Bessie, the father and the father's friends. They have a great old time until Gilbert intervenes and decides that it is time to tell Bessie that she must return to the old life. He also tells her that it is he and not her father who made the good time possible. With this disclosure she gets angry at Gilbert and she and her father return to the tenements. That night Gilbert visits her, the quarrel is patched up and the story ends with the two in each other's embrace.

(Paramount Success Series—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE first of Paramount's Success Series, "The Eagle's Mate," with Mary Pickford, starred, is offered the public once again after a lapse of about four years since its initial showing. We do not know of a better number that Adolph Zukor could offer as the first of this series, than Little Mary in this story of the Virginia feuds and her taming of the clan of Morne. James Kirkwood, now one of our most successful directors, is seen opposite Mary in the role of Lancer Morne. Mr. Kirkwood also directed. Mr. Kirkwood's absence from the list of leading men should be of some concern to the public as he was one of the best. Robert Broderick, another star character man of days gone-by, is also seen in this offering. And Jack Pickford is seen in the role of a young clansman. Only a flash of Jack is given but in that flash the real juvenile is evidenced. Russell Bassett who before his death, some weeks ago, is seen in the role of the Rev. Mr. Hotchkiss. Ida Waterman and Harry C. Browne are seen in minor roles.

"The Eagle's Mate" is a story of the mountainous country and its race of clanish Lancers and Mornes. With the exception of a few interior scenes, the action takes place in the open mountainous country and during this season a more fascinating bit of scenery could not be seen than that which Director Kirkwood has caught with his camera.

You will see the same Mary Pickford—perhaps a bit more reserved in her action but for all the world the Mary Pickford of today. She has been given a prominent role and one that is typically Pickford. She has not been given opportunity of impersonating the little girl that she has done of late. The part calls for more of the straight dramatic work that we would expect from a Norma Talmadge or any one of the screen leading stars, eliminating the vamps.

The story tells of how Anemone Breckenridge, a descendant of the family of Mornes, a lawless clan, living in the mountain fastness of Virginia, brings about a great change in the lives of the Mornes because of her influence over Lancer Morne (James Kirkwood), son of the leader of the clan.

"The Inn of the Blue Moon"

(De Luxe-Sherry Service—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

DORIS KENYON'S personality, her finished portrayal of Louis Joseph Vance's mental creations, Justine and Dorothy Druce, twin sisters, and the charm of grace and vivacious girlhood which she lends to her work, raises an ordinary bit of romantic drama above the line of demarcation, denoting good and above-the-average. It is certain that the work of Louis Joseph Vance, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," is not above the ordinary but on the contrary, considered as a whole and the theme which it offers, it is a story that any number of less known and gifted writers might turn out on the typewriter in three or four days. Something big, or at least, out of the ordinary, is expected from the pen of a writer as well known as Mr. Vance and perhaps this is the reason why we are disappointed with the story, which it is said, was written especially for Miss Kenyon, by him. The fact that it was especially written for Miss Kenyon is the only distinctive characteristic about it. It develops a theme that has been done and re-done countless times, and strange as it may seem, a good per cent better than this has been done. Because it is ordinary in theme is no reason why it should be ordinary in plot development. There is never a moment when the unexpected is flashed. As soon as the characters of Dorothy and Justine Druce are planted, one in the country and the other in the city, we know that before the end of the last reel they are going to meet and in just about the same fashion as they eventually do. The author has sustained little, if no suspense, apparently resting content with having his principal characters, old and tried actors, full to the brim with romance and unconcerned as to how they find it, so long as what they do find, carries them through six reels of pictures.

When Director John B. O'Brien opens with Justine Druce peeping over the garden wall surrounding an ideal natural setting for a farm house, and Justine jumps over the wall, attired in pantaloons, we are given an introduction of "The Inn of the Blue Moon," which promises much more than it develops in later reels. And when Justine dons her bathing suit for an early-morning plunge, it seems perfectly reasonable and the proper thing. But when we see her spending most of the day in said bathing suit, returning to her home after rescuing the hero from an automobile wreck, preparing something to eat for the stranger and returning for him, it seems just as reasonable and certainly more proper, that she should take a few minutes and change from her bathing suit to her gingham dress. But she doesn't. Perhaps it is because she had to swim back to "The Inn of the Blue Moon" (a cabin in the woods), that she continued to wear her bathing suit. But when an author is so careless and so obviously frank as to throw in such an episode, surely, Director O'Brien should have seen the error of his ways and have sustained the little suspense that was possible rather than to publicly announce the episode to come. All this is to be laid at the door of Director O'Brien—not attributed to Miss Kenyon.

Miss Kenyon could not have improved her characterizations of the dual role in a more finished manner. She does especially good in the role of Justine, the country twin. This role of the country girl recalls Miss Kenyon's excellent portrayal of the country girl, opposite Frank McIntyre in "The Traveling Salesman." This sort of role is Miss Kenyon's strong forte. She has a fine appreciation for clean, wholesome comedy, is sufficiently girlish and vivacious to affect the unsophisticated maid, and her facial beauty strikes a nice contrast to gingham dresses and curls. Miss Kenyon is entitled to a more substantial story than that given her by Mr.

Vance. Take away its romance and there is nothing left. Only a semblance of a plot is there, and the manner in which the author has worked to the climax is most ordinary and commonplace, and at times so far-fetched as to verge on the ridiculous.

Miss Kenyon is supported by two leading men in this offering. Harry C. Browne and Cranford Kent. Mr. Browne has the more prominent role. In reality he has the leading man's real job. He is not a finished actor, and falls below par when he is called upon to express emotions above the ordinary. In the scenes which show him affecting pain after his automobile accident, he overdoes. One minute he is fully recovered, the next he is in agony. His idea of expressing emotion is placing his hand on his forehead and stooping. His performance could have been greatly improved. Mr. Kent gave a more finished performance. William Walcott has the role of Dorothy's father, and he does very well. Harriet Ross gives an average performance in the role of the mother. Lyn Donaldson tried hard to affect the vamp stuff, but did not always register. John Hopkins, in a country boy's role, gives one of the best performances of the cast. The photography is fine, the lighting has been handled with care, and the sub-titles have been well chosen. This is Miss Kenyon's second release at the head of her own company, and it represents the better of the two. Her work in "The Inn of the Blue Moon" is the shining light of the production, and it goes a long ways toward lifting an ordinary romantic drama, above the average.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Justus Druce (William Walcott), wealthy business man of New York, and his wife (Harriet Ross), separate, the wife leaving with Justine (Doris Kenyon), one of twin sisters, to live in the country. Dorothy (also Doris Kenyon), remains in the city with her father and on reaching womanhood, becomes a belle in society. Mrs. Druce rears Justine in a simple rustic manner, keeping her from the outside world. Justine has established a cabin in the woods near her home, and called it "The Inn of the Blue Moon." While going for a morning swim, she meets Warde MacMahon, a camper in the woods near by, who has met with an automobile accident. She takes him to "The Inn of the Blue Moon" and there nurses him back to health. He leaves for the city.

In the city, Dorothy's father tells her that he has been financially ruined. She offers to pawn her jewels to help him. She gives her jewels to Charlton Sloane (Crauford Kent), her lover, to pawn. He does so and Dorothy leaves the money in a drawer of the table in her home. Adelaide (Lyn Donaldson), Dorothy's cousin, is jealous of Charlton, and takes the money. The police are notified and Charlton is taken before the magistrate on Adelaide's charge. Dorothy goes to see him and they escape in an automobile. They reach the place where Justine lives and Dorothy recognizes her as her sister. Later MacMahon establishes Sloane's innocence and he and Justice and Dorothy and Charlton are united, with their father and mother reconciled.

"Our Bridge of Ships"

(Government Film Released in Two Reels by General)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

IF you are interested—and every man, woman and child in these United States, its possessions and territories should be, intensely so—you should make it a point to spend a half or more of an hour at the theatre where Uncle Sam's "Our Bridge of Ships," is showing. The wonderful work that has been and is being done every minute of the working day, by our ship builders, is shown in detail in this Government offering. The Committee on Public Information, through General Film, is releasing the picture and it represents the best of its kind that has yet been shown. It deals with a distinct subject—ship building, the making of ships to carry on the war.

Formerly it took five months to build an 8,000-ton ship. "Our Bridge of Ships" shows you how Uncle Sam does it in 55 days and how preparations are being made so that our Uncle can do it in 27 days. In one instance this has been done and the ship that was built in this short length of time, is shown sliding down the ways. From the time that the giant trees are cut in the forest to the time that the finished ship is anchored, this picture shows the detailed work. The "General Pershing," first of the wooden ships to slide to the water, is shown. Hog Island, one of the largest ship-yards in the world, representing what Uncle Sam can do when backed by steady and efficient workmen. These workmen built 50 ways in six months' time. We are carried through the immense factories and foundries where the innumerable parts which go to make for the machinery of the ships, are made. E. N. Hurley, chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board, is shown visiting the yards and using the riveter. President Wilson and Secretary Daniels are shown speaking. The manner in which Uncle Sam has provided sanitary homes for his workers and the thousands who are employed at the ship-yards, are shown driving home the rivets that spell the Kaiser's ruin.

"The Power and the Glory"

(World—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

JUNE ELVIDGE'S late starring vehicle on the World program, "The Power and the Glory," is an adaptation from Grace MacGowan Cooke's novel of the same name, by Hamilton Smith and Harry O. Hoyt. It was produced under the direction of Lawrence C. Windom, with Max Schneider at the camera. We cannot give Miss Elvidge more than an average percentage on this offering. But it is through no fault of hers that it doesn't rise above the ordinary. The story isn't there. For no reason in the world, the author or scenario writers, have written in several melodramatic episodes that seem all out of place when contrasted with the more human, appealing episodes that precede this action. It doesn't ring true and all of Miss Elvidge's efforts to put over the action of the plot, are hampered by the unreality that is evidenced in the plot development and the general trend of the theme.

The action opens in the mountainous country of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Later the action shifts to the foot-hills in a factory town. Here the heroine attracts the attention of the mill owner and a gradual reformation is affected in the nature of the mountain girl. That is, according to all known laws of human reasoning, the reformation should be gradual, but isn't. And this is just where the story falls flat and falls because of this, to inspire where inspiration and appeal should be found.

An episode is introduced showing the interior of the mill and a small girl meeting with an accident. The little girl which Director Windom has cast for this part, is hardly able to toddle, still we are lead to believe that she is doing a day's work in a factory. The story doesn't ring true and despite the good efforts of the cast, there is a flat note continually ringing in the ears of those following its course on the screen.

Miss Elvidge is supported by Frank Mayo, as leading man, and the comedy element is supplied in Johnnie Hines's usual humorous way. Little Madge Evans is seen in a not too prominent role.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Johnnie Consadine (June Elvidge) lives with her mother (Ricca Allen) and young brothers and sisters (Madge Evans, Sheridan Tansey and Charley Jackson) in the Blue Ridge Mountains. She is obliged to go to the nearest town in the foot-hills and seek work in the factory. Pros Passmore (Albert Hart), her uncle, spends all his time in search of an imaginative silver mine. Johnnie gets a position in the factory, and soon arises to forewoman of the floor. The owner, Gray Stoddard Frank Mayo), takes an interest in her and introduces her to society. Pap Hines (Ned Burton), the owner of the boarding-house where Johnnie is stopping, learns that Pros Passmore has, at last, discovered his silver mine. With the aid of Shade Buckheath (Clay Clement), a loom fixer at the factory and an admirer of Johnnie, they take the specimens of silver away from Pros and silence him with their fists.

Because Johnnie's brothers and sisters have been placed at work in the factory by Pap Hines, who made haste to marry Johnnie's mother when he learned that Pros had discovered a silver mine. Stoddard loses interest in Johnnie, for he believes she has been instrumental in sending her kin to work. After a series of abventures with those who are trying to get the mine from Pros, the culprits are apprehended, Pros' rights restored, the truth about the children learned by Stoddard and a reconciliation is effected between Johnnie and Stoddard.

"A Fight for Millions"

(Vitagraph Serial—Seventh and Eighth Episodes)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"THE GORGE OF DESTRUCTION" and "In the Clutches," the seventh and eighth chapters of Vitagraph's serial, "The Fight for Millions," directed by William Duncan, and starring Mr. Duncan, with Joe Ryan and Edith Johnson, are in keeping with the actionable and thrilling drama that has gone before.

The big thrill of "The Gorge of Destruction" comes when Bob Hardy (William Duncan), with Iron Star (Willie Calles) and Jean Benton (Edith Johnson), cross a dismantled bridge, extended over a deep gorge, in an automobile. This episode moves with the swiftness of an express train and with every flash, there is new country, new thrills and daring feats by the principals.

"In the Clutches" will sure clutch your attention. Hardy, Iron Star and Jean have eluded their enemies and have telegraphed Bill Barry (S. E. Jennings), of the Royal Mounted Police, to come to their assistance. The telegraph is intercepted by Lawless (Joe Ryan) and his gang, and changed to read that Hardy is to meet Barry. In escaping from Lawless's stronghold on the lake, Hardy and Jean have an exciting boat chase. Both of these episodes furnish enough thrills to suffice for a five-reeler.

Schlessinger Publicity Gets Better Prices

A CONFERENCE between Leon Schlessinger, sales representative of The Manx Man Company, and the management of the Fuller theatre, of Madison, Wis., is said to have ended in a decision by the latter to raise the admission price to twenty-five cents for the term of the "Manx Man" engagement. The Fuller was formerly a legitimate house, but is now showing pictures and charging fifteen cents. The raise was decided on after Mr. Schlessinger had outlined the publicity opportunity presented by the chance to stimulate Anglo-American sentiment through the picture.

The campaign suggested by Mr. Schlessinger and found effective elsewhere is going to be exploited by the Fuller people in its entirety. Other current "Manx Man" bookings, reported by Mr. Schlessinger of the Goldwyn offices, who are distributing the film, are the Marquette, La Salle, Ill.; Crescent, Ottawa, Ill.; Majestic, Belvidere, Ill.; Biograph, Moline, Ill.; Bijou, Mt. Clemens, Mich.; Bijou, Bangor, Me. Sales Director Kempner expects shortly to have other special representatives follow Mr. Schlessinger on the road, as the feature has done good business whenever the special exploitation campaign was worked in its behalf. Exhibitors are well satisfied, it is said.

Rolfe Plans Campaign for Houdini Film

THE Houdini serial will have one of the greatest advertising campaigns ever coupled up with a serial, it is claimed. It is the plan of the Rolfe Productions, Inc., to launch an intensive campaign which will react directly on the theatre, and in an announcement, John W. Grey, advertising manager of the firm, said:

"It will be remembered that I left the picture bpsiness some months ago for what I thought would be forever, but when Mr. Rolfe approached me and mentioned the magic name of Houdini I could not stay away from the business any longer.

"It has never been my good fortune to supervise the promotion of a serial that has so many great possibilities as the Houdini serial," continued Mr. Grey, "and believe me, I have been associated with a great many of the most successful serials ever produced.

"From the advertising angle the Houdini serial offers the exhibitor greater possibilities than anything I have seen, and when one considers that Margaret Marsh and Ruth Stonehouse will play opposite Houdini the advertising value increases to a marked degree. Were I asked to classify the Houdini serial I would call it a novelty serial for the lack of a better name as it has more novelty and originality than anything placed on the market heretofore."

Keeney Promises Plans of Interest

Frank A. Keeney, head of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, promises to announce some interesting plans in the near future. Mr. Keeney has done very well with the pictures he has thus far released—"A Romance of the Underworld," by the late Paul Armstrong, and "Out of the Night," by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

The fourth of the Keeney pictures, "The Uphill Path," by Paul Armstrong, is now practically completed in respect to cutting and titling, but probably will not be released until the latter part of September, following the mid-September release of the third Keeney production, "Marriage," by Guy Bolton. All of the Keeney pictures thus far made star Catherine Calvert, and all were produced under the direction of James Kirkwood. The Keeney pictures are being distributed through the William L. Sherry Service.

"Five Nights" Gives Story in Five Episodes

Leaving a note in which she pleads with her husband not to try to find her and promising to return after a year's absence, the wife of Trevor Lonsdale, the artist hero of the motion picture version of the novel, "Five Nights," steals away and succeeds in keeping her hiding place a secret for the full twelve months. This is the event about which is constructed "The Black Night," one of the episodes in the production of "Five Nights" offered to State Rights buyers by the Classical Motion Picture Corporation.

At the end of the year his wife returns to find him a greatly changed man. He has learned his lesson and her year of self-denial has not been in vain. The wife's homecoming is also one of the events of "The White Night," an episode in the drama.

The real reason for her voluntary exile, added to the events of "The Gold Night" and "The Violet Night," which led to her marriage, make this what is said to be an unusual feature picture.

Film Market Gets Rights to "Suspicion"

During the past week, The Film Market, Inc., the new international film clearing house organized by Robert W. Priest, began its career by acquiring the world rights to M. H. Hoffman's six-part special feature, "Suspicion," starring Grace Davison.

The New York state rights have been sold by The Flm Market, Inc., to Hy Gainsborg, of the M. H. Hoffman Exchange, 729 7th Ave., and the New England rights to the Four Square Exchange, Boston.

The entire foreign-rights have been acquired by Robertson-Cole Company.

"Suspicion" is the first feature to be sold on the open market through this new selling organization. The Film Market, Inc., during the past week, also sold to The African Films Trust, twenty-two one-reel comedies of the Jaxon brand for South Africa and the rights to "Her Moment," starring Anne Luther, for the same territory.

Gloria Joy Stories Bring Good Results

Reports from the field are said to indicate that in Gloria Joy, the child star of the Oakdale Productions, General Film Company, has found one of the brightest attractions of recent years. Exhibitors are reporting exceptionally good business for all of her pictures shown to date. Bookings for the entire series of six Oakdale Productions have been unusually heavy, General Film says.

The current release of the series is "The Midnight Burglar,' in which suspense is carried out to a climax in the most approved manner, but in which the burglar is a thoroughly sympathetic individual.

Vitagraph News Bits

The first Vitagraph Bessie Love subject will be commenced within the next week, and the story is an adaptation from the novel "Sue." David Smith, who is to direct the new Vitagraph star, is now finishing a subject in which Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon appear, the exteriors of which have taken the company to Laguna Beach.

Earle Williams and a complete staff of Vitagraph players, are donating their work this week for the making of a propaganda subject for the Government, which will be used in connection with the next Liberty Loan. This film of a reel will be of a metaphorical nature, with Liberty, Belgium, the Kaiser and Uncle Sam personified.

Another Government picture is just being completed by William Duncan and another troop of Vitagraph people who are giving their time to the Government, and after this is finished Duncan will take up the filming of a five-reel subject, the name of which has not been decided upon.

Live Triangle Items

With President Harry E. Aitken of the Triangle Film Corporation producing plant and President P. G. Lynch of the Triangle Distributing Corporation expected within the next few days, it is hinted an announcement will be made shortly respecting the future policy of the Triangle. At the producing plant the secret is carefully guarded by the knowing ones, but it is generally understood that plans now made will become effective within the next few weeks.

The Triangle producing forces were increased this week by the addition of Harry Pollard as director. He will be remembered as a former American director of Margarita Fisher, who later made a series with this same star for Mutual. His first film for Triangle will be "The Nemesis," by Robert Hill, and Belle Bennett has been selected as star for this subject.

Jack Conway, who for two years has been directing pictures, has recently suffered a nervous collapse, but has been able to finish the Western picture he was making for Triangle, "The Desert Law." It is very probable Mr. Conway will not continue directing for some time, but will remain with the Triangle as an actor. Prior to his directorial activities Conway was starred in a number of subjects, including the Bosworth film "The Valley of the Moon."

The first Wellington Cross photoplay, "The Grey Parasol," in which Rae Godfrey plays the feminine lead, will be finished this week; and Christy Cabanne will have the first Taylor Holmes comedy-drama, "A Regular Fellow," ready for the film editor in a few days. This picture introduces a new leading woman for Triangle, Millicent Fisher. She has appeared in a number of subjects at this studio, but in this one she will play her first lead. The Cabanne-Holmes company is at San Diego working aboard a U. S. cruiser.

Paramount-Artcraft

At last a real romance in reeldom. "Here comes the Bride, etc."—R. William Neil, Ince director of Dorothy Dalton subjects for Paramount, is the blushing groom and Betty MacLagan is the coy bride. The romance has been in progress three months, it starting one morning when Neil telephoned to the studio instructions to Miss Dalton, and a sweet voice, new at the Ince studio switchboard, answered. A month passed before Neil could get acquainted with the operator, but this did not prevent him from telephoning the studio whenever absent from it. Then followed a whirlwind courtship of two months. The wedding was set for Wednesday morning, August 14, at the studios, and Thomas H. Ince planned it should be a genuine event of much moment. Neil, however, decided there was one scene that Thomas H. Ince should not supervise the direction of, and so the couple slipped away to Riverside, where they were wedded at Mission Inn.

Director Neil had just completed the filming of "Vive la France," starring Miss Dalton, and before it was known he was to become a benedict a vacation of a month was granted him. Where the couple will spend their honeymoon is a mystery to the studio people.

Following the policy recently inaugurated by Thomas H. Ince, providing that directors should alternate with the different stars, Victor Schirtzinger will next direct Dorothy Dalton, making three different stars for this director in as many months. The story for this photoplay was provided by John Lynch and picturized by John G. Hawks. It pertains to the experiences of the wife of a "baby" husband, with society melodramatic atmosphere.

The William S. Hart company is nearing the completion of the first subject for his second year's Artcraft program, and at present "The Border Wireless" is the title being used. The spacious exterior set lot in the foothills back of the Hart studio this week contains several big sets showing streets and mining buildings on a border town in Arizona, in one of which a wireless machine is secreted. A large number of extra people were used on this setting.

About Metro Players

The Western Metro scenario staff has added A. B. Kenyon, who has been affiliated with a number of West Coast studios as staff writer, and this engagement makes the complete reorganization of the department, which now includes Thomas Geraghty. The department is supervised by George D. Baker, manager of production, who devotes a greater portion of his time to the preparation of scripts.

Robert Thornby has been engaged by Metro and will direct May Allison. Her next subject will be "Kate of Kentucky," which is an original story by George D. Baker. Production of this will be started next week.

Bert Lytell, now working in "Making Good," from an original story by himself, has Eileen Percy as his leading woman. The other members for this cast have not been named by Casting Director Horace Williams, as the company is now busy making scenes which require the two principals with a number of extras. The story has two decided parts, one American and the other Mexican.

Universal Newsettes

Marie Walcamp is to be featured in Bluebird Productions, and the first will be made under the direction of Colin Campbell. This is to be an adaptation from the Bret Harte story "In the Carquinez Woods." Director Campbell and a company of twenty-five to be selected will leave the early part of next week for the vicinity of Santa Cruz where they will spend two or three weeks in the Redwood district, making exteriors on the locations described in the Bret Harte story. Al. Whitman, late Vitagraph leading man, has been engaged to play opposite Miss Walcamp, and others so far cast for this picture are Alfred Allen and Fred Star.

Jack Dillon is next to direct Priscilla Dean in "Dealing Daphne," which is an original story by Rex Taylor, scenarioized by Bernard McConville.

"One Bright Idea," adapted from the Edgar Franklin magazine story, is to be the vehicle for Carmel Meyer's next Universal subject. Paul Powell, who is just finishing the direction of "The Borrowed Duchess," will be the director.

"The Wrong Side of Paradise" is the title of a story written by George Hall, and scenarioized by H. Tipton Steck, is the next Mary MacLaren vehicle.

Mae Murray is to make another film for the Universal which is titled "Little Lady Bo-Peep." It is an original story and continuity by Harvey Thew. The story is laid on the Vermont-Canada border, and the exteriors for this will be made in the vicinity of Lake Tahoe. Miss Murray appears as a sheep herder's daughter. Ralph Graves, who has been leading man for Miss Murray in "The Scarlet Strain," just completed, will continue as such in this film.

There will be a slight change in the personnel of the producing companies, as it has been decided that Ruth Clifford shall next work under the direction of Douglas Gerrard. Gerrard has just completed the filming of "Vendetta's Daughter" which has Fritzie Brunette as star. Elsie Jane Wilson, who has been directing Miss Clifford, will next have Edith Roberts and company. Stories for Miss Clifford or Miss Roberts have not been selected. Rupert Julian is next to make a picture titled "The Prodigal Judge."

Here and There

Niles Welsh, accompanied by Mrs. Welsh (Dell Boone), arrived in Los Angeles during the past week, and he will shortly take up his first work at the Lasky studio where he will be featured in Paramount subjects.

Albert Paul Shirk of the Famous Players-Lasky publicity department, is the author of a patriotic propaganda film made for the government by Roscoe Arbuckle.

Wilfred Lucas, having completed the May Allison-Metro subject, has resumed his work at the National studio where, with Bess Meredyth as co-director, he is producing a Bill Parsons Capitol Comedy for Goldwyn. This is titled "A Pair of Pink Pajamas," and gives the rotund comedian a desirable role for hot weather, as he wears pink pajamas most of the time. Mary MacIvor is playing the feminine lead, and most of the action takes place in a combination pullman-observation and compartment car.

Work on the first Mme. Yorska subject is scheduled to be started by R. G. Matzene this week, and the play is from a story written especially for this actress by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt. Mme. Yorska is a protege of the noted French actress, and she has written a decidedly dramatic subject which will be crowded into six reels. The story by Mme. Bernhardt has been titled "The Net." W. Lawson Butt will, in all probability, be Mme. Yorska's leading man.

The Jesse D. Hampton producing organization making films starring J. Warren Kerrigan, is now located in the recently leased studio at 1425 Fleming street, Hollywood, and here the production work of "Three X Gordon," adapted from the Kenneth B. Clark story will be done. This story is spoken of as an up-to-the-minute western with a distinct patriotic flavor.

Current reports in film circles are to the effect that the Hampton organization has contracted with two other stars to play in productions that will be released through the Hodkinson organization, but at the producing plant no definite information is at hand. However, it is intimated by Jesse D. Hampton that ultimately three producing units will be at work under his supervision.

Al. E. Christie this week engaged a new leading woman, in the person of Claire Seymore, who is now playing opposite Bobby Vernon. This actress' only screen experience was with Lehrman Sunshine Comedies, where she had an engagement of three months. Miss Seymore is a decided brunette.

Ethel Lynne and Leota Lorraine will both continue as leading women, alternating in Christie Comedies.

The first two-reel Universal western featuring Helen Gibson, which was made by Harry Harvey, has been completed, and work has now been started on the second, which is to be known as "The Silent Sentinel."

Two Universal companies are absent from the studio this week. R. S. Sturgeon, with Monroe Salisbury, Marjorie Bennett and company, are still at Bear Lake Valley for "Hugan the Mighty" scenes, and "The Lure of the Circus" serial unit, directed by J. P. McGowan, is at Catalina Island.

GIRLS AS ADEPT PAPER-HANGERS

Universal Current Events No. 66 devotes many feet of film showing that girls make capable and rapid paperhangers, in addition to the many other branches they have so readily made themselves so proficient in these days of man labor scarcity. A dozen chorus girls from the "Rock-a-Bye-Baby" company received their instruction from a practical paperhanger, and when ready are turned loose, and to notice the speed they develop and the tact they display is remarkable to say the least. The distribution of war medals takes up some part of this reel, in which many close-ups of the officers pinning on the medals and the recipients are shown. The launching of a U-boat chaser—the McDermut—at Boston is pictured, and this craft is termed "a bear cat for speed"; this statement may be readily accepted as true, when her graceful form and lines are noted.

A very interesting shot shows the selection of eighteen babies—all of Irish parentage—as specimens of physical perfectness.

CONSTRUCTIVE SIDE OF WAR

A reel that carries an individual appeal to young and old alike is to be found in Mutual's Screen Telegram No. 46, for almost every youngster is interested in the pigeon, and here are shown a number of carrier pigeons at the front being dispatched to headquarters with important messages, which latter feature will surely interest those of maturer years. But the greater part of the reel is devoted to the constructive side of the war, and among others includes views of the launching of the first ship at Hog Island and the redeeming of coal from the river bed for war plants. Then, too, Bernhardt is shown at the Greek theatre, Los Angeles, as also is Walter Kramer, the once crack cyclist, in his attempt at a comeback. The rechristening of the old German building erected at the World's Fair Grounds, Chicago, to "The Liberty Building" is another picture of historic note.

Mutual on the Job

Screen Telegram's staff hung up a record for fast action on the launching of the Quistconck at the Hog Island ship yards August 5.

Two cameramen filmed the scenes attendant on the launching of the first ship from the Hog Island yards with President and Mrs. Wilson in attendance at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of August 5, and at 4 o'clock on the morning of August 6 Screen Telegram was printed and assembled at the studios, ready for shipment, with 200 feet of the Hog Island celebration included in the reel.

Al Richard, staff cameraman, and Arthur Jones, the Philadelphia correspondent, worked together on the job.

FARMING LESSONS FROM THE OLD WORLD

The transforming of an arid, rock-strewn waste into a flourishing vineyard in the short space of five years is surely a gigantic undertaking, when one takes into consideration the fact that this was done without the modern machinery and implements so common on our own farms today. This lesson comes from sunny Italy, where every member of the household bend their best efforts to this end. First, the rocks and stones are gathered, and these with what timber may be found constitute the material for a really presentable house. Not a yard of space is left untended, and between the rows of grapes, raspberries and other small fruits are raised. With a one-horse plough this whole feat is accomplished.

"The Treasures of a Great City" constitute the vellums, parchment and stones now in the vaults of the New York Public Library, and which are said to be the envy of the whole world. The pride of the collection, however, is the recording of certain public works inscribed by Nebuchadnezzar, some 600 years B. C. Then, too, is shown a copy of the Chaldean Flood Tablet, the original of which is in the British Museum. Other valuable specimens are fragments of the Koran inscribed on parchment; Siamese Book of Omens, an early example of wood-block printing, and the Bay Psalm book, the first book printed in English in the U. S., and valued at $10,000.

"Bobby Bumps on the Doughnut Trail," an amusing animated cartoon by Earl Hurd, completes the reel.

KILAUEA VOLCANO

An educational release of great interest, shown to the trade by the Greiver Distributing Company, is "Ford Weekly," No. 113, or Kilauea Volcano. A notable advance in the quality and entertaining ability of the "Ford Weeklies" has been noted, and it is evident these subjects are catching on throughout the country. Greiver Distributing Corporation, with offices at 51 East Forty-second street, New York, is handling the distribution of these films, which are donated by the Ford Motor Car Company, for the entire country, the exhibitors securing them from the various exchanges.

Kilauea Volcano is a complete scenic and educational reel, showing the volcano active and inactive, at night and in the daytime.

TRAINING MECHANICS FOR OUR ARMY

"Ford Weekly," No. 114, distributed by Greiver Distributing Corporation, shows the training of mechanics for our National Army. The reel has been carefully photographed and edited with the end in view of creating a subject that holds as much educational value as it does information concerning our nation's methods of developing the war machine. The subject shows the various stages and methods of training the mechanics, following them through a daily routine of work and play. In all the pictures destined to show what the nation is doing with its men, this subject should find a solid place both with the theatres and the public.

INTERESTING WAR FILMS

"We took this burg from Hindenburg"—so opens Screen Telegram No. 45, as a dilapidated, shell-wrecked, fire-swept town in France is shown, and a group of apparently happy American soldiers are on hand announcing the fact. Classed as a typical victory for the Huns is the spectacle of a woman nailed to a cross. Other incidents of the war referred to in interesting reel include the rushing of infantry mules into a spacious bath for their Saturday night ablutions; the adoption of a little French boy and his dog as mascots by a U. S. troop; members of U. S. troops receiving the Croix du guerre; girl students at Vassar—modern Maud Mullers—cultivating and harvesting crops; the baking of 20,000 large loaves of bread daily at Camp Hancock, Ga. It is substantially a war reel, but a very interesting and comprehensive one.

WORK IN MAKING CARTOONS

An idea of the amount of work involved in the production of animated cartoons is gained by the statement of John R. Bray, president of the Bray Studios, Inc., pioneer producers of cartoon comedies. Mr. Bray has found that his art staff has been required to make more than 1,600,000 separate and complete drawings in order to produce the 200 and odd releases put out so far by his company.

Statisticians might find it interesting to go further into this computation and determine how many millions of times said artists were obliged to dip their pens into the inkpot and how many thousands of gallons of ink were used up during the process. This would doubtless prove highly interesting to the lightning calculators.

Lila Lee's First Paramount Picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes"—"Cuddles"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Lila Lee's first Paramount picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," written by Tom Gallon, scenarioized by Edith Kennedy and produced by Paramount Pictures under the direction of George Melford, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Lee is the beautiful little brunette girl who appeared for several seasons on the vaudeville stage and was known to the public as "Cuddles." She is merely a youngster but her work in her first picture would indicate that she had been working before the camera all her life. First of all, little Miss Lee is a distinct type of beauty and a clever actress. She has been given a story written expressly for her and one that permits of her displaying all those distinctive characteristics that won for her thousands of admirers when she appeared on the vaudeville stage. Harrison Ford is her leading man in this production, and in other supporting roles appear Raymaym Kelso, Nina Byron, William McLaughlin, Jane Wolff and John McKinnon. Miss Lee has the role of Bessie Meggison, sixteen years old, pretty and full of fun, who lives with her father in the tenement district of New York. Gilbert Byfield, a wealthy young fellow, goes to the neighborhood to write a book and meets Bessie. He gives her father a sum of money and tells him to take Bessie to his (Gilbert's) summer home. Bessie believes that her father is the one who is giving her the vacation. And what a time Bessie has!

Catch-Line for Your Program—First appearance on the screen of Lila Lee, Paramount star and former favorite in vaudeville—The "Cuddles" of vaudeville fame.

Doris Kenyon in Second Picture by Own Company, "The Inn of the Blue Moon"

(DeLuxe-Sherry Six-Reel Production)

Louis Joseph Vance, one of America's most popular writers of fiction, has written, especially for Doris Kenyon, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," produced the star's own company under the direction of John B. O'Brien and distributed on the William L. Sherry Service. "The Inn of the Blue Moon" is in six reels and is the second independent production by Miss Kenyon's company, the first being "The Street of Seven Stars." Romance, in its most fascinating form, is revealed in Miss Kenyon's late picture. The star has a dual role, that of a country girl and her twin sister, daughter of wealth and refinement living in New York. The Inn of the Blue Moon is in reality a little hut in the woods, to which Justine Druce, a little country girl, goes to weave her dreams of romance. In New York lives her twin sister Dorothy. Their mother has been estranged from their father for years. Warde MacMahon, who loves Dorothy but is rejected for a more wealthy suitor, leaves on a fishing trip and meets Justine. He thinks her Dorothy. The wealthy suitor and Dorothy go in search of Dorothy's twin sister, Justine, and after a series of romantic adventures the twins are united with the ones they love and their father and mother are reconciled.

Catch-Line for Your Program—Doris Kenyon in drama by Louis Joseph Vance—Interprets dual role of twin sisters—romance, love and adventure.

First of Paramount Success Series, "The Eagle's Mate," with Mary Pickford Starred

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

The first of the Success Series, Paramount reissues, is the "Eagle's Mate," starring Mary Pickford. "The Eagle's Mate" is a story of the Virginia feud days and presents one of the most powerful dramatic subjects in which "the darling of the screen" has been seen. A noteworthy cast of players is in support of Mary in this offering. James Kirkwood, who is now one of our best directors, has the part of Lancer Morne, the leading male role; Ida Waterman, character woman; Robert Broderick, at that time, the screen's most popular character man; Harry C. Browne, Russell Bassett, who before his death a few weeks ago, was the "grand old man of the screen"; and Jack Pickford, who has the role of a young clansman. Most of the action transpires in the open and James Kirkwood, who also directed as well as interpreting the leading male role, has shown some of the most beautiful mountain views imaginable. Mary has the role of Anemone Breckenridge, of a family of Mornes who are notorious for their clanish instincts. She lives with her aunt. Lancer, son of the leader of the Mornes, has been sent to college by Anemone's aunt, but returns at the suggestion of his father to get revenge on the enemies of his family. He takes Anemone to the Eagle's Eyrie, the mountain retreat of the Mornes and tells her that he will not speak to her until she asks him.

Catch-Line for Your Program—First of Paramount Success Series, Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate"—James Kirkwood and Jack Pickford in support—Story of Virginia Clans.

Koppel Traces Career to Five-cent Days

J. B. KOPPEL, who has just been appointed the manager of Balaban & Katz's new Riviera theatre, Chicago, entered the managerial field back in the old days of five cent houses, and though a young man possesses the keen insight and quick action qualities that go to make the successful manager of the present day. Mr. Koppel presided over the destinies of Finn & Hyman's North Shore theatre, which was purchased by Mr. Fieckels of Universal, after which he took charge of the Stevens theatre, leaving that house to open the Calo for Ascher Bros. in 1915. Getting that house nicely on its feet, he opened the new Adelphi for the same firm, one of the most beautiful of their string of houses. Under Mr. Koppel's able management the business of the Adelphi has been phenomenal, located as it is in a brand new section of the city. Joe carries with him the best wishes of Ascher Bros. and their associate managers.

J. B. Koppel, Manager of the Riveria Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

W. C. Lamoreaux, Manager of the Rialto Theatre, Racine, Wis.

Lamoreaux Manages Rialto and Palace in Racine

W. C. LAMOREAUX, who has been associated with the Ascher Bros.' enterprises for several years as manager of their Lakeside theatre, is leaving the organization to take charge of the Rialto and Palace theatres at Racine, Wis.

The Rialto theatre, which is nearing completion, will seat 1,700 people, and will give Racine the distinction of having the finest picture house in the state of Wisconsin.

Through Mr. Lamoreaux's tireless energy and artistic production taste, the Lakeside theatre in Chicago has been brought to a plane of perfection envied by many, and Racine is to be congratulated upon acquiring a master-mind to direct the policy of the new house.

Malone Represents S. S. Hutchinson

IT has been announced from Chicago that George W. Malone has been appointed special representative for S. S. Hutchinson and his Russell, Minter and Fisher releases through Pathe, and in the future he will work out of the Minneapolis Pathe exchange. Mr. Malone is one of the best known film salesmen in the West. He has been interested in motion pictures for a score of years and has been a salesman in Minneapolis for three years. He had previously been connected with Pathe, Vitagraph, Bluebird and Mutual, acting as Twin City salesman at each exchange. He also served as local salesman at the Denver Pathe exchange about three years ago.

Milwaukee Exhibitor Uses Novelty in Lighting

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, inaugurated something new in the manner of projecting pictures. Around his silver sheet he has formed a margin and this is lighted by electricity, the colors changing according to the scene thrown on the screen. For instance, if a forest or garden scene is on, the margin is of green and so on. It adds materially to the "smoothness" of the vision, although one has difficulty in getting used to it the first time.

Brief Bits from Chicago

GEORGE BACKER, president of the Foursquare Pictures, Incorporated, and Holmes C. Walton, his personal representative, who have been visiting Chicago during the last few days, transferring the interests of the Foursquare Pictures, Incorporated, to the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, are returning to New York on the 16th inst.

DR. HARRY J. HAISELDEN, who was widely mentioned for his refusal to operate to save a deformed child, has been sued for $35,496.55 by the Hennepin Film Company, the bill alleging Haiselden sold the concern full rights to his "eugenic picture," called "The Black Stork," in which he appeared, and then sold similar rights to another concern.

C. E. IRVING of the Irving theatre, Bloomington, Ill., has been a visitor in Chicago the past week.

M. RUBIN of the Princess theatre, Joliet, Ill., has been in Chicago looking over the field for features, and resting a little bit.

D. W. GIFFITH'S "The Great Love" is showing at Orchestra Hall to capacity business. The run may be extended a week longer than at first figured on. Mr. Griffith has had orchestration scores prepared for this picture, which are being supplied to all exhibitors who have booked the production.

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, reports a splendid business on the "Claws of the Hun." Mr. Fischer used 5,000 tags advertising this picture, which he had tied on the steering wheels of all the automobiles parked about various parts of the city.

WHEISTFELDT, the wizard of lobby displays at the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, is in Chicago visiting.

LOUIS LAEMMLE, of the Universal Company Chicago office, is spending his vacation at Antioch, Ill.

A FINE of $50 was imposed on the management of the Howard theatre for putting on the film "A Neighbor's Keyhole," without the proper permit, and for allowing children to view the picture.

A WOMAN member of the movie censorship board obtained evidence on which the management of the World theatre was fined $100 by Judge Fry. Posters of nude women displayed in front of the theatre caught the lady's eye after viewing the film "Diana, the Huntress," which had been ordered cut by the board; the report followed that caused the trouble. The same theatre was also censored for running a picture called "Caught in a Cabaret" without a permit.

J. A. KEOUGH, formerly manager of Sach's Strand theatre, in Minneapolis, has been appointed manager of Lubliner & Trinz's new Pantheon theatre, which will open soon. Mr. Keough is now in Chicago arranging the details of the opening and has great expectations for the success of this beautiful house, which is located in one of Chicago's choice residential districts and will have a seating capacity of about 2,700.

LESTER CUNEO, formerly heavy man with Harold Lockwood, has been located—now Corporal, Co. "A" of 108th Military Police, 33rd Division, with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

C. W. SPANUTH, exchange manager for VOD-A-VIL Movies, reports that he just closed a year's contract with Balaban & Katz for their new Riviera theatre, and also the Central Park, to play Spanuth's original VOD-A-VIL Movies.

HARRY TEITEL has just been made a corporal at Camp Hancock, Georgia.

WILLIAM BUCKLY, director for the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, is taking a much needed rest in northern Wisconsin.

GEORGE KLEINE'S production, "Conquered Hearts," featuring Marguerite Marsh, is in its second week at the Playhouse, doing a good business in spite of the terrific heat.

THE Central Film Company have just made arrangements with A. Teitel to clean all their prints of "My Four Years in Germany."

HARRY SPANUTH, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has just closed a contract with the Allied Enterprise, Incorporated, for the complete output of his Original VOD-A-VIL Movies for a term of ten years.

DAVE TOPPLIN, formerly the owner and manager of the LeGrand theatre, has been appointed manager of Ascher Bros. Calo theatre.

ASCHER BROS. new Midway theatre, Rockford, has just booked the Original VOD-A-VIL Movies for that house.

FRED HARTMAN, owner of the Aristo theatre, has been made the manager of Ascher Bros. Adelphi theatre, succeeding J. B. Koppel, who has joined the Balaban & Katz forces.

JACK JACOBI, formerly with Flower & Mayer, is now with Schoenstalt Bros., managing their Archer theatre.

"Missing" Scores in Racine

"MISSING," produced by J. Stuart Blackton, proved the best war film of the month when shown at the Palace theatre, Racine, Wis. George Gordon appealed to the movie-goers. Douglas Fairbanks in "Bound in Morocco" drew a large crowd on one of the hottest days of the year. "The Kaiser's Shadow," Paramount, and Marguerite Clark in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" comprise the program for the coming week.

Fond du Lac News Notes

RITA JOLIVET in "Lest We Forget," one of the better war-time pictures, based on the sinking of the Lusitania, will be put on as benefit performance, sponsored by St. Joseph's Guild, at the Bijou, August 26, 27 and 28.

MANAGER SMITH of the Bijou has booked Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Hun" for county fair week. The picture will be shown September 19, 20 and 21.

MANAGER O. J. VOLLERT of the Henry Boyle theatre has booked the big new Griffith picture, "Hearts of the World," for a run in November or December, the dates depending on the completion of the Fox River Valley circuit.

THEDA BARA in "Salome" will be one of the early fall attractions at the Henry Boyle.

BILLY BURKE in "Eve's Daughter" did a splendid business at the Orpheum Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, August 12, 13 and 14, in spite of the excessively hot weather.

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum made a play for Young America's business Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 15, 16 and 17, by putting on Jack Pickford in "Huck and Tom" at a nickel admission, plus the war tax. The last time Ainsworth tried out this plan he confined it to a single day, and as a result was literally swamped by the kids and was forced to make it a continuous performance afternoon and evening. The last afternoon performance closed at 6:45, or just thirty minutes before the first evening performance was scheduled to begin. By spreading the engagement over three days this time he hoped to get a breathing spell between the afternoon and evening shows.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S picture, "The Great Love," has been booked for the Orpheum early in September. Manager Ainsworth has secured Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" for September 25, 26 and 27.

What Racine Is Doing

THE Bijou theatre has secured a number of Paralta pictures, including "Within the Cup" and "Maid o' the Storm," with Bessie Barriscale, "Alien Enemies," and others. Alice Joyce in Harold MacGrath's "Highest Bidder," Gail Kane in "Love's Law," and "Married in Name Only" have been booked for the Bijou.

CAL DeVOLL has prepared a number of parodies on such songs as "Yankee Doodle" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," which have taken remarkably well with the audiences during the community singing.

THREE excessively warm days resulted in the poorest business of the year at all Racine theatres. Several good pictures, including Henry Walthall's "Robe of Honor," were virtually killed as far as attendance went. Business picked up its normal gait the moment a cool breeze struck the city.

VINCENT ROBERTS of the Palace theatre, a lad of seventeen years, entered the United States Navy as a second class seaman, making five blue stars and one gold star in the service from the Palace. Wilfred Shepard was killed with our boys in France. Mason Roberts, the only brother of Vincent; Eugene Wheeler, Charles Corbett and Ben Silverman were all formerly connected with this theatre and now wear the uniform of Uncle Sam. Their places have been filled by women.

THE New Rialto theatre is nearing completion, and Manager Arthur Freidman announces that he will open to the public on September 1. Mr. Freidman has one of the most excellently equipped theatres in the state and is justly proud of his house.

A SPECIAL train arrived in Racine Wednesday placarded with "To Hell With the Kaiser." Investigation proved it was simply the advertising car for this picture, which Manager Owen McKivett expects to book within a week or so. McKivett has a number of strong patriotic plays coming that promise good, including "Berlin via America."

E. C. SULLIVAN has been secured as director of the New Rex orchestra. He has a number of musicians who will add to the appeal of the photoplays.

Elgin Items of Interest

WITH Elgin sizzling in August heat, picture managers are lying low and preserving pep until signs of what the fans want in the fall shall inspire a going after it. The summer has been a decidedly slow one, so far as picture patronage is concerned, but offerings in the four local playhouses have been kept up to the quality mark and every effort made to put over the best and newest things.

ELGIN playhouse managers got back of Hanover township the week end of August 10, and boosted with screen and lobby advertisements a mammoth benefit bazar held at the home of Charles E. Erbstein, Chicago lawyer, on the Villa street road southwest of Elgin. The benefit cleared some $3,000 for the Soldiers' and Sailors' recreation fund. The Jackie band from the Great Lakes training station was the big attraction.

MISS KAREN WEIBERG, former cashier at the Grand theatre, made a flying trip to Elgin in early August from Benton Harbor, Mich., where she and her sister are "farmeretting" on a fruit farm near that place. She was so enthusiastic over the life and work in the open, a la overall and khaki costume, that she tempted screen men to shut up shop and hie to the region where the farmerettes flouirsh.

SLIDES from the State Council for Defense are aiding the Elgin Woman's Committee in recruiting its share of the 15,000 nurses wanted for the student reserve training courses by the Government.

CRITICAL Elgin expressed itself in Empey's "Over the Top"—but they went in droves to see it, despite rival attraction in a carnival. It is the one "war" picture which energized apathetic fans of this town into enthusiasm, as demonstrated in applause and real cheering and other approbative action. The picture came at the outset of the heat wave the first week in August, an act which interfered to some extent with patronage, which was, on the whole, however, good. The picture crowded the Crystal theatre, Dundee, the week following for two evenings.

The Grand first showed the Allies' official war review on its Wednesday, August 12, bill. It went capitally, the management receiving many expressions of favor of it. The Grand will show it every Wednesday and Thursday in place of the Burton Holmes travelogs, which have been shown there for the past many months.

MAE MARSH in "All Woman" made her usual hit at the Grand August 10. Mae Marsh closely rivals Mary Pickford in Elgin's rating of the stars, and her visit is always attended with enthusiasm by the young girls and women, particularly. The bill for the remainder of the week included Vivian Martin in "A Petticoat Pilot" and Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs." The week ended with showing of "Over There."

THE TEMPLE led off the second August week with "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," and Mary Miles Minter scoring a great hit. It showed after Roy Stewart in "By Proxy," the comedies "Kids" and "By Fowl Means," Eddie Polo in the second episode of "The Bull's Eye," "The Lost Lie," another Judge Brown story, a repeated popular feature, Harry Carey in "Hell Bent," Zoe Ray in the illustrated song, "Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight," Carmel Myers in "The Dream Lady," Vod-a-Vil motion pictures, Joe Bennett and Peggy Pearce in "Golden Fleece," and the comedy, "Just Like Dad."

BECAUSE James Morrison, playing the part of the coward in "Over the Top," had so recently been in town, The Star, from advance comment, anticipated a hit with the picture, "The Sins of Ambition," starring Morrison, Leah Baird and Barbara Castleton, and shown there August 15.

JUNE CAPRICE in "Blue-Eyed Mary," made popular opening of the week at the Star. Harold Lloyd in the laugh, "Are Crooks Dishonest?" was shown with her picture. Others of the week were Jewel Carmen in "The Bride of Fear," the comic, "Flirts and Fakirs"; Toto, the clown, in "Furniture Movers"; Alice Howell in "In Dutch"; the comedy, "That Night"; Pearl White in "The House of Hate," and Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road."

The Orpheum began its August 12 week bill with showing of Emmy Wehlen in "The House of Gold," and the comedies, "Slippery Slim" and "The Fortune Teller." Other days of the week brought forth Baby Marie Osborne in "A Daughter of the West," Ethel Clayton and Arthur Ashley in "The Hidden Scar," and Carlyle Blackwell in "The Cabaret." There was a miscellany of comedy.

Dubuque Children Get to See Films Again

ON Sunday, August 11, the ban which prevented all Dubuque children under twelve years of age from entering theatres for the past month or more, due to the recent infantile paralysis epidemic, was lifted by City Attorney Matt Czizek and the city health board. Children will be allowed to attend theatres from this time on, the same as before the quarantine was established.

In Springfield Theatres

THE VAUDETTE had three days of Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," Goldwyn's patriotic picture. Pictures of the star in armor displayed in the lobby did not draw. The public here does not want pictures of this type. Pauline Starke followed on August 15 in "Alias Mary Brown." The last three days of the week went to Vivian Martin in "The Sunset Trail."

THE GAIETY had Gloria Swanson in "Shifting Sands" on Friday and Saturday, August 16 and 17. Douglas Fairbanks came on the 18th for four days in "Bound in Morocco." Madge Kennedy came on Thursday, August 22, in "Friend Husband." Miss Kennedy is fast becoming a great favorite in this city.

CHARLES RAY in "A Nine O'Clock Town," and Pauline Frederick in "Fedora" were the attractions at the Vaudette for the week of August 18-24.

WALT GALE, formerly at the Vaudette, is now employed at the Majestic.

THE Capitol theatre has been doing very nicely all along. Triangle, Select, Metro, Pathe and special features are being used by Manager Maisel with excellent results. Sunday, August 18, will see the first chapter of "Hands Up," Pathe's new serial. A new chapter will be shown each Sunday thereafter. Rita Jolivet in "Lest We Forget" will be seen shortly at the Washington street playhouse.

THE new season opened here on August 11 with a clash between the Griffith productions. "Hearts of the World" come to the Chatterton for eight days' run, opening on Sunday night. The Gaiety booked "The Great Love," Griffith's newest picture, for the same week. Both theatres put on heavy advertising campaigns, and Griffith's name was lauded to the skies by both houses. The Gaiety had a fine day Sunday at 25 cents top, while the Chatterton, a poor Sunday night house, opened to about $400. The weather was hot.

NEXT day the manager of the Chatterton picture wired Al Grey, Griffith's New York representative, of affairs here. In the meantime the Gaiety continued to advertise "The Great Love" as the latest Griffith picture, with the same cast as "The Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World," and played to big business.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" played to fair business on Monday and Tuesday, the receipts getting bigger each day. With cooler weather on Wednesday, business got real good, and now it looks as though the engagement will be a money-maker. Everyone who saw "Hearts of the World" said it is even better than "The Birth of a Nation," while those who saw "The Great Love" stated it was well worth the money.

THE LYRIC had Virginia Pearson in "The Liar" for Sunday and Monday, August 18 and 19; "A Man's World," with Emily Stevens, came on Tuseday and Wednesday; Thursday, Friday and Saturday will see Marion Davies in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," a Select drama.

THE CHATTERTON announces that Griffith's "Hearts of the World" will be brought back to this city later in the season. Folks are just realizing what a good play it is, and will be in better humor to see it when the weather gets good for shows.

Gathered in Green Bay

"A MODERN LORELEI," a Westcott film, is considered by Henry Goldman, owner of the Colonial theatre, to be as fine a picture as he has produced this season. It played to good business August 12-13.

THE Paramount picture, "The Firefly of France," proved one of the best offerings of the summer at the Orpheum theatre. It was given August 9-10, and drew large audiences. Wallace Reid was in the leading role.

"SANDY," a Paramount offering featuring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, was shown August 2-3 at the Orpheum theatre.

JUNE ELVIDGE and Arthur Ashley played in "Shall We Forgive Her?" a World film, at the Royal theatre, August 12.

"VENUS MODEL," a Goldwyn picture, in which Mabel Normand starred, was presented at the Colonial theatre August 2-3.

THE Artcraft production, "The Silent Man," starring William S. Hart, was shown at the Orpheum August 7-8.

NELL SHIPMAN, a Vitagraph star, was seen at the Colonial theatre August 11 in "Wild Strain."

"SHACKLED," a Paralta production, pleased audiences at the Colonial theatre August 7-8. Louise Glaum, in the leading part, made her second appearance of the week, and increased her popularity.

William S. Hart played at the Grand theatre, August 11, 12, 13, 14, in "Draw Gagan."

THE entertaining Goldwyn picture, "Back to the Woods," with Mabel Normand starring, was screened at the Colonial theatre August 9-10. The plot dragged at times, but Miss Normand's presence redeemed it in the eyes of the fans.

"SOCIAL AMBITION," a Goldwyn film, was presented at the Orpheum theatre August 4 with Howard Hickman and Rhea Mitchell co-starring.

"TROUBLE BUSTER," a Paramount picture starring Vivian Martin, was shown at the Orpheum theatre August 12-13, but it failed to please as much as Miss Martin's former pictures.

ETHEL CLAYTON played in the World film, "Journey's End," at the Royal theatre, August 9.

"A SUCCESSFUL ADVENTURE," a Metro, with May Allison in the leading part, took well at the Colonial theatre, August 5-6.

WILLIAM FARNUM, a Fox star, played in "True Blue," August 10, at the Orpheum theatre. He pleased his audiences.

THE Chester-Outing pictures, released by the Mutual Company, are proving a drawing card at the Colonial theatre since their institution two weeks ago. Owner Henry Goldman believes there are no better scenic productions offered.

"OVER THE TOP," the war film with the author, Guy Empey, taking part, was booked for August 19, 20, 21, by Henry Goldman to be presented at the Grand theatre.

"THE DESIRED WOMAN," a Vitagraph film, was presented at the Colonial August 11. Harry Morey played the lead.

MONROE SALISBURY starred in "Winner Takes All," a Bluebird film, at the Royal theatre, August 10.

Chicago Hears of Essanay Colony on Coast

ACCORDING to news received from Bryant Washburn, who is working on his first Paramount picture, "The Gypsy Trail," out in California, there is a regular colony there of old Essanay people, including Henry Walthall, Taylor Holmes, Fred Wright, Nell Craig and Harry Steck.

"JUST SPLENDID" is all that can be said about "One More American," with George Beban. At least that was the opinion of Manager Billos and the Princess fans, after seeing the picture Sunday, August 11.

GEORGE WALSH made a fine showing in "Brave and Bold" at the Liberty theatre on Sunday, August 11. He drew so well that people were compelled to wait until the last show at 9:30 p. m., in order to get a seat. Manager Harry Wilbur made himself a very popular man by distributing fans to all his waiting patrons.

ANOTHER first-run picture, "Other Men's Daughters," with Peggy Hyland, was presented at the Dreamland Sunday and Monday, August 11 and 12. Manager Boyle reported a good house.

"PANTHEA," with Norma Talmadge, is a picture that will never grow old or tiresome—at least in Dubuque. This picture was first exhibited at the Majestic theatre over a year ago, then at the Princess, and on Tuesday, August 13, it was shown at the Family theatre, where, notwithstanding the fact that it was a third run picture, it drew surprisingly well, and with the thermometer at 96. This was the first time Miss Talmadge has been seen at the Family, and North End fans will see to it that her pictures will continue to be shown there.

MANAGER BOYLE of the Dreamland theatre had scheduled "Will You Marry Me?" for his Saturday, August 10, program, but at the last moment cancelled it and substituted "Her Fighting Chance," with Jane Grey.

GEORGE M. COHAN appeared at the Family theatre last Saturday in his well-known Broadway success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." As usual, George was very humorous and very pleasing.

"THE MARK OF CAIN," with Irene Castle, was the attraction at the Majestic theatre for three days, August 8, 9 and 10. Mrs. Castle was presented at the Liberty on Saturday, August 10, in "Convict 993."

"HANDS UP," with Ruth Roland, will be the Grand's next serial.

WILLIAM FARNUM as the hero in "The Bondman," adapted from Hall Caine's novel, was pronounced "simply great" by his loyal train of followers, who had the pleasure of seeing him for three days at the Majestic, August 11, 12 and 13.

"Within the Cup," last Monday and Tuesday. This splendid picture can truly be called her masterpiece; her characterization of the heroine is the greatest thing she has done, and it qualifies her to take her place among the screen's leading emotional actresses.

ABOUT six months ago Dubuque theatregoers witnessed the first Elsie Ferguson picture, "Barbary Sheep," and from that day Miss Ferguson took her place in the ranks of our favorite screen actresses. "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" added to her popularity, and her latest offering, "The Rose of the World," shown at the Princess Friday and Saturday, August 9 and 10, firmly established her reputation as one of the most entertaining and profitable players in Artcraft's galaxy of stars.

"STELLA MARIS," with Mary Pickford, will be shown at the Princess theatre, Friday and Saturday, August 29 and 30.

PATHE pictures draw well, according to Manager Rosenthal of the Majestic. Since the reopening of his theatre he has shown several of this company's productions, and with the exception of "The Ghost of the Rancho," with Bryant Washburn, every one met with approval. Bryant Washburn was not to blame for the failure of the picture, for he made the most of his possibilities, but the public like him better in plays a bit more plausible, such as "Kidder & Co." and "The Fibbers."

FRANCIS BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne were the stars presented at the Family theatre on Thursday, August 8. Their play, "The Voice of Conscience," was well liked.

LOVABLE Bessie Love came to the Dreamland on last Thursday in one of her most entertaining photoplays, "A Little Sister of Everybody." Manager Boyle says he likes to have Bessie Love at his theatre, for his patrons always leave in a happy frame of mind.

"MORGAN'S RAIDERS," with Violet Mersereau, was the Family's Friday program. Miss Mersereau is very good in plays of this kind.

WILLIAM HART played at the Grand on Thursday, August 8, to capacity houses. Charlotte Walker in "Men" was Friday's star.

"JOAN OF PLATTSBURG," with Mabel Normand, was the bill at the Princess for two days, Wednesday and Thursday, August 7 and 8.

THE following plays are scheduled to appear at the Princess theatre during the latter half of August: "Within the Law," with Alice Joyce; "The Fair Pretender," with Madge Kennedy; "The Eternal Temptress," with Lina Cavalieri; "The House of Silence," with Wallace Reid; "The Mercy of Men," with Alice Brady; "The Forbidden Path," with Theda Bara; "Stella Maris," with Mary Pickford; "Hidden Pearls," with Sessue Hayakawa; "The Bar Sinister," with Hedda Nova.

"THE CROSS BEARER," story of the invasion of Belgium, was shown at the Cozy theatre at Bellevue, Ia., Sunday and Monday, August 11 and 12. Montague Love and Jeanne Eagles, the leading players, received much favorable mention.

"THE GIFT OF GAB," with Jack Gardner, was to appear at the Cozy theatre at Bellevue, Ia., Saturday, August 3, but the film did not arrive. However, so that Cozy fans might not be disappointed, the manager secured the picture for the Saturday, August 10, program.

THE Princess theatre at Monticello, Ia., had Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" for two days, August 13 and 14. This most interesting picture of Mary's drew fine crowds as usual.

THE program for the week of August 11 at the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., was as follows: "The Little Princess," with Mary Pickford; "American Buds," with Jane and Katherine Lee; "Moonshine," with Fatty Arbuckle; "The Ghost of Rose Taylor," with Mary Miles Minter; "A Fool There Was," with Theda Bara; "Joan of Plattsburg," with Mabel Normand, and "Seven Keys to Baldpate," with George M. Cohan. On next Thursday Elsie Ferguson will play in "Barbary Sheep." "Over There," with Charles Richman, is scheduled for August 25 and 26.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS starred in "Broadway Love" at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., Thursday, August 8. "The Lone Wolf" was the program for Friday and Saturday.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" is coming to the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., Monday and Tuesday, August 19 and 20.

THE Grand Opera House at Anamosa, Ia., had a fine program for Saturday, August 10. The feature of the day was "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," with Julian Eltinge, while "A Country Hero," with Fatty Arbuckle, and the Hearst-Pathe News formed the balance of the entertainment.

THE Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., presented four great stars from August 9 to 15. On Friday and Saturday, August 9 and 10, Madge Kennedy was seen in "The Service Star"; Sunday and Monday, Elsie Ferguson appeared in "The Song of Songs"; Tuesday and Wednesday, Baby Marie Osborne was starred in "The Voice of Destiny," and on Thursday Charles Ray was presented in "The Family Skeleton."

"OVER THE TOP," with Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, is coming to the Auditorium at Cuba City, Friday and Saturday, August 30-31. The feature is being extensively advertised.

Additional Milwaukee News

THE BUTTERFLY THEATRE is running a series of war films that have been taken in the fighting zone "over there." They show our Yankee lads in action, at play and at rest. It is reported that one Milwaukee woman saw her son in one of these films, since she sees all of the pictures at the Butterfly which in any way deal with the war problem.

MARY McLaren came to the Princess theatre for a three-day stay in "The Model's Confession."

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," Griffith's latest masterpiece, is still drawing crowds at the Davidson theatre. In the near future it will revert to legitimate again, after a most successful season of cinema.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG will return to the Butterfly screen after a long absence in "The Savage Woman." Her stay will be from Sunday to Wednesray.

"THE GLORIOUS ADVENTURE," with Mae Marsh, is at the Strand theatre for the balance of the week. As an added attraction Bud McIntyre, of "Vanity Fair" fame, is singing "My Golden Star."

CARLYLE BLACKWELL and Evelyn Greeley were at the Merrill theatre in "The Beloved Blackmailer."

"THE BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH" is the current attraction at the Butterfly theatre. The star, Enid Bennett, will do a great deal in filling the coffers of the Butterfly.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS is a great crowd-drawer at the Alhambra. His latest picture, "Bound in Morocco," is being held a whole week, and each day the crowd grows instead of diminishes.

Innovations Planned for New Strand on Coast

SOME startling innovations have been pleanned for the new Strand theatre now in construction by Messrs. Jo Richards and Harry L. Nace, the owners, of Phoenix, Arizona. Plans for this new theatre were completed this week when Mr. Richards spent several days with the architects, Rae and Gorstang in Los Angeles.

This theatre occupies but a ground space of 52 x 138 feet, and will have a seating capacity of nearly 1,400, together with a large lobby 17 x 25 feet and a foyer 30 x 52 feet. In addition, is a stage of sufficient depth for atmospheric settings and vaudeville acts. At the same time the seating will not be of a cramped nature, each chair having almost its width in front of it so that egress to the seats from the aisle will not be uncomfortable for the parties seated or those going to the seats. The house is laid out in four sections, and entrances to the three lower sections is made by runways from the foyer to a separate landing for each section. This system makes it impossible for a patron to get in the wrong section his ticket provides. The front of the house will have fourteen rows of seats which will sell for twenty cents. Back of this on three levels will be three rows of boxes selling for fifty cents per seat. From the boxes, the incline is more steep, that part of the house is divided into two sections, one of sixteen rows that sells for thirty cents per seat, and the top of the house in twelve rows which will be fifteen cents per seat. The bleecher style of seats, each row being several inches highr than the one in front, makes possible the big foyer under practically two-thirds of the seating sections of the house. In the foyer will be seats about the walls ample for accommodations of 100 patrons waiting for seats in the theatre. The rest rooms, telephones, and other accommodations for patrons may be entered from any of the tunnels or runways that lead from the foyer to the different sections, with the exception of the one at the top of the house which can be reached only by one runway. The heating and ventilating of the house require the Typhoon system, and the lighting will be indirect throughout. All chairs will be leather upholstered and will be furnished by the C. F. Weber Company of Los Angeles.

Perhaps the most striking innovation of the theatre is that respecting the location of the projecting booth which is suspended from the ceiling about midway between the back of the house and the screen. This will be 10 x 15 feet inside with an eight foot ceiling, and to the audience will have the appearance of an inverted dome. The lens will be approximately seventy feet from the screen, but will require some tilting of the silver sheet for the best results possible.

This is the third house for the firm of Richards and Nace in Phoenix, and they now plan it will be ready for opening some time in December.

Bellman Visits Studios and Coast Film People

GEORGE BELLMAN, advertising manager and editor of the photoplay department of the Seattle "Times," has spent two weeks in Los Angeles visiting studios and getting acquainted with film people, conditions and future releases, that he may be of greater service to the advertising patrons—the exhibitors—of his department. The Seattle "Times" for several years has carried perhaps the most important film section of any paper in the country, due to the successful management and earnest work of Bellman, and his visit to Los Angeles is the fourth annual pilgrimage he has made to the film mart for the paper he represents. The owner of the Seattle "Times" has found it very beneficial for the head of the photoplay department to be thoroughly familiar with all phases of the photoplay world and production. While in Los Angeles Bellman always collects material and photos that may be used throughout the year when important subjects made at the west coast studios are being shown at the theatres. This is but one of the co-operative methods he has found of benefit to the exhibitor, and is one of the important features which all advertisers of the section generally appreciate. In Seattle and the Northwest territory Bellman is considered an authority on matters pertaining to motion pictures, and he conducts a Question and Answer Department, by aid of Motion Picture News Studio Directory, which brings a flood of letters to the "Times" office from the film fans each week.

The importance of the Seattle "Times" photoplay department is best illustrated by the number of large down-town theatres in Seattle and the small number of houses in the suburban district—the "Times" department having centered the attention of the people on the attractions of the down-town houses, making it almost impossible for the small suburban theatres to exist. The theatre men attribute the condition to advertising and text matter carried in the "Times."

Letters Cite Worth of Film-Men Soldiers

THAT former members of the motion picture industry are doing more than their "bit" is emphasized by letters received almost daily at the studios, theatres and exchanges in California. A number from here formerly employed in one or another departments of the film world are now on the firing line in France. James Hommel, formerly General Film Company's salesman out of Los Angeles, in writing to Harry Hicks, manager of the Select, at San Francisco, says he has made good his promise to "get a few Huns." Here are a few paragraphs from his letter, dated July 15:

"We are about 75 kilometers out of the big city on one of the hottest fronts in France and there is going to be big doings here before very long. It is already in the air.

"Harry I got your Huns for you as I promised I would. I picked out a bunch and named them for you the other day. I was out in the Observation Post and saw a bunch of about 20 Huns crossing the fields. I fired the machine guns and we left several on the ground.

"We do most of our firing here at night as all of the moving is done at night and we try to catch them on the go. We begin at 9 P. M. and all night long until 7 in the morning. Once in a while we fire both day and night.

"We have been very fortunate here, as we have lost but one man from our battery, although several have been wounded. I do not know how long my luck will keep up, as this is sure a hot front we are on now. We are out in the woods without any dug-out and the Boches have been getting 'some' pretty close."

On August 12 Hommel cabled Mr. Hicks he was in Paris on a few days furlough and "went through the big drive without a scratch."

Studio Gossip and Activities

IT is now admitted at the Hollywood Lasky studio that C. B. DeMille's next picture will be a revival of "The Squaw Man," which was made several years ago by the Lasky Company and starring Robert Edson. Elliott Dexter is the only player cast for this, and he will take the star role.

FRED STONE has completed work in the three Artcraft subjects, the last scenes being made for the subject now known as "The Goat" during the past week. Supporting Stone in this are Rhea Mitchell, Winifred Greenwood and Raymond Hatton. All of the three Stone plays which include "Under the Top" and "Johnnie Get Your Gun," were made by Donald Crisp.

GEORGE MELFORD has completed the filming of the second Lila Lee picture, and the definite title for this will be "Such a Little Pirate."

"THE GYPSY TRAIL" is the name of the first Bryant Washburn-Paramount now in the making under the direction of Walter Edwards. Wanda Hawley will be Washburn's leading woman.

THE first Dorothy Gish subject being filmed at the Sunset studios under the direction of Elmer Clifton will be ready for the final editing this week. The film has been titled "Battling Jane," and gives Miss Gish a lot of speedy action which characterized her work in "Hearts of the World." Pomery Cannon, Jr., plays the leading man role, Bert Grassby is the heavy, Kathrine McDonald takes the second feminine lead and George Nichols will be seen in the leading character part.

WILL M. RITCHEY, for the past year scenario editor at the American studios, Santa Barbara, has recently completed his contract there, and has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Ritchey has moved from Santa Barbara to his Pasadena home, and has taken up his new work.

THE late in September release of Roscoe Arbuckle on the Paramount is to be another satire, in some respects similar to previous releases of this nature. Arbuckle takes the name role, the sheriff officer of a Mexican border county, whose idol he has seen on the screen only—a western hero who does all manner of stunts in horsemanship and general western ways. No sooner does he see these stunts on the screen than he imitates them in real life, and Arbuckle's impersonation of the western hero of the screen promises to be spectacular and thrilling in addition to laugh provoking.

"THE BRASS BULLET" serial was completed this week, and members of the company tendered a dinner to Director Ben Wilson Saturday evening, August 17, at one of the well-known Los Angeles cafes.

HARRY CAREY AND COMPANY are celebrating the showing of the company's recent production "Hell Bent," which opens at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, August 19, by a parade through the downtown district. Monday night is lightless night on Los Angeles streets, and no signs or unnecessary illumination in show windows or on sidewalks are permitted. The parade will be staged shortly after dark, and novel illuminating plans have been worked out by the use of flares and torches. All the western paraphernalia on wheels or hoofs used by the Carey Company, together with practically all of the cowboys, will be seen in this parade.

THE mountain country in the vicinity of Pine Crest is to be used for exteriors of the next Louise Glaum Paralta subject at present titled "The Goddess of Lost Lake," in which Miss Glaum appears as a quarter-breed Indian girl. Wallace Worsley will direct this film.

BESSIE BARRISCALE has been adopted as God-mother of the boys at the Naval Training Station at Point Loma, San Diego. Miss Barriscale, accompanied by Howard Hickman, Robert Brunton, Jane Holly, Grace Travers, and a number of others, went to the Section Naval Base, where the formal adoption by Capt. J. C. Rhenburg, commander of the Naval Base took place. Miss Barriscale has just completed work in "The Heart of Rachael."

It has also been booked at the People's theatre, Portland. Booking for this picture has been so great that the management has been compelled to order two extra prints.

HARRY LUSTIG, special Western representative, has recently returned from a trip to New York, and says that "To Hell With the Kaiser" is also booking very strong in the East.

MIKE LYONS, formerly manager of the Palace, Seattle, has taken a trip to California in his car. It broke down near Centralia, Wash., so he went to Centralia and looked at a movie while mechanics fixed it. It couldn't be fixed the way he wanted it to be so he sold it and bought a new one.

Ogden Theatres Prepare for Busy Fall

AFTER a comparative quiet summer among the theatres of Ogden, the managers, now outlining their programs for the fall, believe they will have programs which cannot but help to please their patrons. All the houses have secured some of the big pictures issued and those that are in the making.

The Ogden theatre (L. H. Peery manager) has signed up contracts for the Goldwyn and the Select, which will give his house such stars as Norma and Constance Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Fredericks, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, and others in addition to his regular program. He has also secured the Allied War Reviews, the Outing-Chester travelogues and Keystone comedies for the regular program. During the summer Mr. Peery gave his patrons "Over the Top," "Pershing's Crusaders" and others.

The Alhambra theatre (H. E. Skinner manager) and the Utah theatre (August Fyhn manager) have issued the announcement of their fall program, which includes the entire output of the Artcraft and Paramount pictures, with the James Montgomery Flagg specials, the Burton Holmes travelogues and Mack Sennett Comedies, together with the big specials which will come out from the studios of the two companies. It is planned to give the movie fans of Ogden the entire program of Artcraft and Paramount between the two theatres.

The Orpheum theatre (Joseph Goss manager), which shows the Pantages vaudeville circuit three nights a week, road shows and motion pictures, will open the season with D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," which comes here from a three weeks' run at the Orpheum theatre in Salt Lake City. Mr. Goss said that he will have the pictures of the First National as well as a large list of the big specials.

The Cozy (S. B. Stack manager) will have the Triangles and other releases, which will be announced later. Manager Stack, who also operates the Lyceum and Rex theatres, both five-cent houses, is arranging attractive programs for the winter. The Cozy theatre has become the most popular house in the city for the children. Every Saturday afternoon a special program is given for the children. It consists of good educationals and a western cowboy picture.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

WALTER RAND, new special western representative for General Film, has arrived in Los Angeles after covering the northwest territory, and has found it necessary to step in and serve as manager of the Los Angeles exchange for the present, at least, owing to the resignation of F. R. Durand, who left to take up over-sea Y. M. C. A. work. This is the second man to leave the Los Angeles general office within two weeks, W. H. Cree, predecessor of Rand, having enlisted in the navy.

THE Western States Vaudeville Circuit, which conducts Hippodrome theatres in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and a number of other West Coast cities, has let the contract for the erection of a theatre of 1,400 seats to be built at Douglas, Arizona, a city of about twenty thousand population.

REGULATION mailing cards furnished soldiers brings the information that Lieut. Wm. C. Riter, formerly connected with Los Angeles exchanges, has arrived in France, and his address is Company 9, Camp Cody, June Automatic Replacement Draft, A. E. F.

FRANK HUDSON, All Star salesman, is just back from a three weeks' trip over the Arizona territory, where he found plans being made for an unusually busy Fall by the exhibitors.. A number of theatres have been closed in Arizona for the past month or more, but all owners are now making arrangements for an early reopening of their houses. As the result of this, Arizona is excellent territory for salesmen, and Hudson came home with a big number of contracts.

HERMAN FOWLER, formerly owner of a theatre at Aberdeen, Washington, who enlisted in the army more than a year ago, where he is now serving as Sergeant, spent a short time in Los Angeles this week while en route from Kelly Field to San Francisco on an errand for the army. Fowler sacrificed his well established theatre business in Washington to enter the government service.

ARIZONA theatre owners in many instances will pay considerable more taxes as the result of a new assessment just made by the Arizona Board of Realization. Reports of the income tax were secured by the Board of Realization from the government and on these the new assessments effective for the 1919 taxes were made. The assessments, it is reported, were increased from twenty-five to six hundred per cent, according to the earning of the houses. In one instance the theatre formerly assessed at $4,000 will in the future be assessed at $11,000. Another house formerly rated at $600 is now rated at $4,000. The Board of Realization has served the exhibitors notice of this increased assessment, and a day has been set for the hearing of complaints.

MANAGER BENJAMIN FISH, of the Los Angeles Goldwyn Exchange, has during the past week made a number of important contracts. These provide that during the next year Goldwyn program will be shown for twenty weeks at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles. All subjects have been booked for showing at Jack Roots's Strand theatre in Pasadena, and more than 200 pictures will play seven of the Nick Diamos Circuit in Arizona. Mr. Fish has Harvey Gausman covering the California territory, and Bernard Fish is now making a trip over the northern and southern Arizona routes.

F. R. DURAND, well-known film exchangeman of the important exchange cities of the West Coast, has tendered his resignation as manager of the General in Los Angeles, and will leave shortly for France, where he will serve as athletic director in the Y. M. C. A. work among soldiers. Prior to becoming interested in the film business Mr. Durand was athletic director for the Y. M. C. A.'s in various parts of the country.

CHARLES KLOPOT, who has been identified with the film industry in the west for a number of years, most of the time associated with exchanges, has purchased the Regal theatre in Los Angeles.

THE All Star Feature Distributors Exchange has been receiving many complimentary statements from exhibitors on the manner in which the Gaumont Weekly handled the Fourth of July celebration in Paris. This Weekly contains this attractive section of film, and will no doubt create considerable booking as the result of placing it in this manner in preference to making it a special subject.

THE Los Angeles Universal Exchange will have three first-run theatres showing subjects next week. Lois Weber's most recent picture, "For

ROBERT AMADOR, salesman for the Vitagraph, has been unable to make his trips for the past three weeks owing to a very severe attack of inflamatory rheumatism.

G. H. ATWOOD, former film exchange manager in Los Angeles and other cities, has been employed by Nick Diamos as manager of the Los Angeles office of the Diamos Circuit in Arizona and Mexico, and will devote his time reviewing and booking pictures and proper shipment of the same for the eight houses under the management of Diamos. The circuit includes the Grand and Lyric at Bisbee; Grand and Lyric at Douglas; Nogales at Nogales, the Lyric and Pima at Tucson, and the Lyrico at Cananea Sanora. Diamos has two other houses now in construction.

E. H. SILCOCKS, manager of the Los Angeles George Kleine Exchange, has decided upon personally covering the entire territory of this exchange himself, and with this end in view has made trips on the San Diego and Santa Barbara routes booking "The Unchastened Woman" and other current releases. He will leave shortly for Arizona where he will go over both the norther and southern trips, which will require about two weeks.

PAUL FESSENBINDER, formerly booker for the Los Angeles Mutual Exchange, is now manager of the theatre opened by the Celite Products Company at Lompoc, California, and spent this week in Los Angeles booking subjects for this house opened a week ago.

THE LAUGHLIN THEATRE, owned by Homer Laughlin at Long Beach, California, has been sold to a newly organized company, the United States Realty Syndicate. The house will continue under the management of Anna M. Dwight. This is the first theatre built off the board walk in Long Beach, and is located in the business district. It has a seating capacity of 900.

C. G. LANGLEY, owner of the Hippodrome at Taft, California, was a visitor on film row, Los Angeles, this week.

THE FAMILY THEATRE in Los Angeles has been sold by Harry Fullerton to Joseph Lalone.

THE George Kleine subject, "The Unchastened Woman," starring Grace Valentine, is this week serving as the main feature of the bill at the Alhambra theatre. Added interest is given this picture as Miss Valentine is now playing in Los Angeles in the Oliver Morosco play, "Lombardi, Ltd.," at the Mason.

TWO important bookings have been made by Manager T. E. Hancock of the Los Angeles World exchange. One provides for the showing of the Bryne Brothers "Eight Bells," for showing at the Garrick the week of August 26, and the other is for the showing of the Lewis J. Stone film, "Inside the Lines," at Clune's Broadway, the week of September 7. Report from H. S. Merritt, who is now making the Arizona territory for the World, brings in many contracts for the showing of both of these films in that territory.

THE M. & R. Feature Film Company, with offices in San Francisco and Los Angeles, has purchased the rights for the Bernarr McFadden picture, "Zongar," made by the Physical Culture Photoplay Company, and the first-run bookings will be announced shortly.

CHARLES GROGG, owner of four theatres at Bakersfield, has just placed an order with Manager H. F. Charles of the Los Angeles American Photoplayer Company office, for a style forty-five photoplayer for the Pastime theatre. This is the fourth instrument of this make to be purchased by Mr. Grogg.

THE Essanay "Triple Trouble" Chaplin film will begin a two weeks' run at the Garrick theatre, September 1, contract for this showing having been made by E. H. Silcocks this week. At the same time Taylor Holmes' picture, "A Pair of Sixes," will begin the run of a week. These films will be given special advertising and it is possible the runs will be made even longer.

Condensed News of Ogden

W. FRED BOSSNER, formerly secretary of the Ogden Pictures corporation, later with the Salt Lake Herald-Republican as Ogden correspondent, has accepted a lucrative position with the Nevada Copper Company at Ruth, Nevada. Mr. Bossner was formerly with the Paramount company in New York and prior to that time was founder and manager of the Boz theatre in Boise, Idaho.

LOUIS H. PEERY, manager of the Ogden theatre, will probably go in the army, infantry unassigned division, about September 1. Mr. Peery, who spent three years in Germany, most of the time in Berlin, will go to the Third War Prison barracks at Salt Lake as an interpreter. Mr. Peery's brother, Herman W. Peery, who preceded him as manager of the Ogden theatre, enlisted in the navy last January and is at present stationed in Washington.

ALL the theatres in Ogden now have girl ushers and they are making good. The houses have all given up big quotas for the army, navy and marines. Manager Goss of the Orpheum theatre, who, together with the employes of his house, put in a war garden upon a large city lot owned by Manager L. H. Peery of the Ogden theatre, expects to harvest a thousand pounds of beans this fall. The product will be turned over to a local canning factory which has a large war contract.

ROBERT W. MAJOR, a local newspaper man, who appeared as an "extra" in the pictures produced by the Ogden Pictures Corporation, also "The Blot," produced by another concern, is the editor of "Jusque Au' Bout" (Until the End), the official newspaper of the Twentieth Engineers in France. Some of the recent issues have had short stories concerning many of the motion picture stars who are doing their "bit" in making the world a decent place to live.

In and Around Denver

THE Paris theatre at Santa Fe, which has been closed since its owner, "Jimmy" Provas, who also owned the Pastime theatre at Albuquerque, was called to the colors, will in all probability reopen within a few weeks. It is understood that George Papini, the present owner of the Pastime at Albuquerque, contemplates taking over the Santa Fe house and operate it jointly with his Albuquerque house, the same plan that Provas followed so successfully.

G. W. WHITNEY, local manager for General, has just returned from a successful New Mexico trip, and had a nice visit with Provas at Camp Cody, Deming. Provas is in charge of an ammunition corps and says he likes the army life fine. He says he gets more and better food than he did in civilian life, as he was always too busy to eat in those days. He is very anxious to get started for France.

MANAGER WHITNEY reports a good business on "Her Moment," starring Ann Luther in the new seven-reel special, which he booked for Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Trinidad and Walsenburg and several New Mexico houses, along with "The Italian Battle Front," the official Italian government war picture.

P. N. BRINK, assistant sales manager for W. W. Hodkins Incorporation, is in Denver placing new salesmen.

THE STRAND THEATRE, Denver, has lined up with General on a first-run contract for one year beginning September 1.

"IT'S a long, long way to Tipperary," and likewise a long way from Denver or Estes Park to Arizona, and the Universal associates of Miss Nancy Kentor are peeved because she told them she was leaving for Estes Park to spend her vacation and went to Arizona instead.

ROY CHURCHILL of Goldwyn is covering Montana, Salt Lake and Ogden on a visit with present and prospective contract holders. His reports indicate a fine business.

JOE YEAGER, who operates the Isis and Crystal at Trinidad and the Rex at Raton, New Mexico, is in Denver arranging fall bookings. He attended a recent meeting of the new board of trade.

THE Denver Film Exchange Board of Trade was recently organized for the protection of exhibitors and distributors in the intermountain territory against unscrupulous dealers and others. It has so far accomplished splendid results and is receiving the hearty cooperation of both branches of the industry.

ROY SAMPLE, owner of the Iris at Casper, one of the finest theatres in Wyoming, and Earl Nye, manager of the Amuse at Cheyenne, were recent visitors on Film Row.

J. S. KING, owner of the Empress at Laramie, passed through here last week en route to Glenwood Springs for a much-needed vacation.

F. W. NORMAN, the popular Fox salesman, recently returned from western Nebraska and Wyoming, and has now gone back to the same territory.

R. J. CHURCHILL, former local Fox manager, is visiting his former home in Hastings, Neb., before he leaves for his training camp.

"CLEOPATRA" is on at the Denver Isis for one week's return engagement. It started off to big crowds and has been drawing heavy since then. Six thousand saw the picture the first day, and the S. R. O. sign is usually out in half an hour after the opening of the doors every afternoon.

G. M. McKAY, brother-in-law of Roy Sample, Casper, has taken over full control of the Big Horn theatre at Greybull. His Denver friends say he is a real picture man.

What Butte Is Doing

"ARCHIE-BALD" MALOTTE, representing the Fox Film Corporation, out of Seattle branch, was in Butte for a few days looking after contracts for the new Fox productions. His report of business is favorable, indicating betterment during the coming month.

L. MARCUS, one of the deans of the silent drama business in the West, was a Butte visitor the past week, calling on Mel Wilson, of the local Famous Players-Lasky Exchange. Mr. Marcus had nothing particular to say about the picture game except that his company was going to have wonderful productions for the exhibitor the coming twelvemonth. He was enthusiastic about the national plan for Paramount-Artcraft week starting September 1. Mr. Marcus is district manager, his headquarters being at Salt Lake.

"THE STILL ALARM" went over big at the Rialto the past week. To add a little flavor to the publicity campaign, Manager Ruffner promoted to attract the crowds, he made special arrangements with the Butte fire department to give exhibition runs and to scale the Rialto block, this work attracting a lot of attention. It was a good practice for the fire laddies, and Butte theatregoers certainly knew that a big fire picture was the offering at Mr. Ruffner's house. Immense crowds witnessed the fire runs and hook and ladder work.

AN ADDED attraction at the Rialto the past week was the "movie" taken locally of first aid and safety first work on Miner's field day, held at Columbia Gardens, July 20. A number of the contests were pictured to excellent advantage. The event impressed on the spectators the importance and bigness of the work the Anaconda Copper Mining Company is doing to take care of life and limb, both in preventing accidents and in handling those that occur.

"MORAL SUICIDE" did good business at the American the past week. Special music was a feature, while some snappy and characteristic advertisements in the newspapers by Manager Frank Bailey helped at the box-office.

A. C. RALEIGH, formerly advertising manager for the Rialto, is new employed in this capacity at the American, succeeding Mr. Noble, who has gone to Portland to manage the Liberty theatre. Mr. Raleigh is a clever and resourceful publicity man. Not only has he ability to write "copy" for ads and to put out an attractive lobby display, but he is a cartoonist of merit. He is contributing to the Montana "American," Byron Cooney s Butte weekly.

THAT conditions are prosperous in Eastern Montana is the statement of Ben Collier, road man in Montana for Famous Players-Lasky. Many houses, he says, are booking Paramount solid.

RUMORS are current that Frank Bailey, of the American, is planning the erection of a 2,000-seat picture theatre in Butte. When asked regarding the report he would not commit himself definitely, but that plans are being considered, he admitted. It is understood that the plans, if finally carried out, would give Butte another of the finest theatres in the West.

WITH cooler weather prevailing in Butte, the local houses report better business. Butte has been having regular fall weather the past week.

Short News of Los Angeles

CONTRACT has been let by Mrs. Margaret Roche of Colusa, California, for the erection of a $10,000 theatre with a seating capacity of 750. The building will occupy a site 40 x 120 feet on Market street. This will have a balcony of reenforced concrete where smoking will be permitted. C. C. Kaufman, who conducts the Gem theatre at Colusa, has made a lease for the new house.

GEORGE MOCK, owner and general manager of the Columbia Amusement Company's circuit of eight theatres in Arizona, is in Los Angeles this week on a booking trip.

I. D. STAFFORD, who conducts the Liberty theatre at Maryville, Cal., and the Lyric at Chico, Cal., accompanied by his daughter, has been spending two weeks in Los Angeles, familiarizing himself with local made pictures. Mr. Stafford is building a new eight hundred seat house at Chico, which he will conduct in connection with the theatre he has there at present.

E. H. EMMICK, general manager of the Peerless Film exchanges, has spent the week in Los Angeles, returning Saturday to the home office of his organization at San Francisco by auto. While en route to San Francisco he called on theatres in the only town on the route not receiving service from his exchanges at the present time, and in making a contract there placed his exchanges on a 100 per cent efficiency basis for the territory, reached by the coast and inland state highways between Los Angeles and the bay cities. The Peerless exchange has been handling twenty-six reissues of Arbuckle Sennett Keystone Comedies, marketed by the W. H. Film Corporation, and reports most successful business on these. The Arbuckle Comedies, according to Mr. Emmick, are in greater demand throughout the California territory, which embraces Arizona and Nevada, than any other of the comedies he has handled, which includes practically all of the reissues put up by the W. H. Film Corporation.

NEW speed record for the News Weekly matter has been made by the Pathe organization, at least for the California territory. The film showing the celebration in Paris on the Fourth of July was completed and reached Los Angeles on August 8. It was immediately booked for showing at the Kinema theatre by Emil Kehrlein.

THE News Weekly continues to grow more interesting to Los Angeles and Southern California theatre-goers, now that a number of Liberty soldiers from this state are on the Western front. A section of the Allied Nations' Official War Review film, showing scenes of a parade in Paris, flashed a closeup on the screen of George W. Goldenhes, former employee of the Los Angeles Examiner, at Clune's Broadway this week, while his mother was in the audience. A section of the film was furnished to the Mother by Manager Tate of the Pathe Exchange, thereby making it possible to send an enlargement back to the Los Angeles soldier.

H. M. LENTZ, Arizona salesman for the Select, is back in Los Angeles from a three weeks' trip through the territory. While Lentz is very optimistic concerning the fall business for the theatre men in Arizona, he reports the hot weather has caused a number of other theatres to be closed. The Empress, at Phoenix, conducted by John Barncord; the Electric, at Winslow, and the Royal, at Clifton, are among the houses closed for the remainder of the summer.

Simplex

A large telephone company says:

"The voice with the smile wins."

How true that is!

Let us apply that to your business:

"The screen with the smile wins."

Equally true, isn't it?

War prices have made discriminating buyers, and people won't continue to bring you their money if you make your screen scowl by pictures that quiver or jump or in other ways offend the eye.

But in the best, the most successful Houses, you'll find the Simplex Twins on the job——

——making the screen smile, a smile that is reflected in the faces and hearts of the audience, a smile of satisfaction that makes the House win.

Therefore we say:

"LET THE Simplex TWINS MAKE YOUR SCREEN SMILE"

The Simplex Twins turn a scowling screen into a smiling one—to your profit
